Commissioners air lawsuit verdict in closed session

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

Gray County Commissioners Court took no action following an executive session Monday regarding the Lynn Brown racial discrimination lawsuit verdict.

The Commissioners Court met in closed session for about 1 1/2 hours with Amarillo attorney Dan Burrows and Sheriff Jim Free.

Earlier in the regular meeting of the Commissioners Court, County Judge Carl Kennedy said the group would review the verdict and talk about whether to appeal the case.

Kennedy said following the executive session that Burrows had advised the group that a motion for a new trial, filed on behalf of the county, was denied last week.

Burrows, in a telephone interview today, said that both parties have 30 days from the date of ruling denying the motion for the new trial to appeal the judgment in the case.

Kennedy also said if the county decides to file an appeal it must be ordered by action of the Commissioners Court.

On Sept. 30, U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson ruled that Brown, who was the first and only black Gray County sheriff's deputy, had been discriminated against because of his race.

Robinson stated in her ruling that a racial discrimination complaint filed by Brown with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission "was a motivating factor in the decision of the Sheriff of Gray County and his agents to discriminate against Plaintiff in the form of demotion and salary reduction, suspension and later termination."

She also found that Brown had been subjected to racial slurs and was referred to by racially derogatory terms on more than one occasion. "On at least one occasion these slurs were made in the presence of Sheriff Free," her ruling states.

Robinson found that Free failed to "counsel his supervisors on relevant occasions for their failure to properly perform their duty to stop racial discrimination within the department."

She also stated, "These unlawful acts were done while Sheriff Free and his supervisors were purporting or pretending to act in the performance of their official duties. Further, the unlawful acts were of such a nature, and committed under such circumstances, that they would not have occurred but for the fact that the persons committing them were officials purporting to exercise their official powers."

Free and his supervisors gave "false or pretextual reasons" for Brown's termination, the federal judge stated.

The county contended that Free, the elected sheriff, had complete discretion in hiring and firing of employees. The county also contended that Brown's employment was at the pleasure of the sheriff and that Brown's termination were for legitimate personnel reasons.

The judgment by the federal judge was that Gray County pay Brown $200, plus some interest and costs in the action.

The issue of whether Brown's attorney's fees will have to be paid by the county has not been determined.

On Sept. 18, a motion for attorney's fees was filed by Paris attorney David Hamilton. Hamilton represented Brown in the June trial of the case.

Hamilton is seeking $32,725.75 in attorney's fees in the case, according to a six page itemized statement filed in the case.

Burrows said today that Hamilton's motion for attorney's fees was not in compliance with the rules of the court. He said he has not been notified if a new motion has been filed in the case.

The county has spent more than $40,000 defending the lawsuit, according to county records.

Election Day sprint begins

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Debates finished, President Bush and Bill Clinton today opened a two-week dash to Election Day, each asserting he had the right prescription for the nation's sick economy.

Both were on up early after Monday night's stormy final debate marked by clashes over trust and taxes and by Ross Perot's frequent, pointed attacks on Bush's foreign policy.

"I'm going to keep fighting," front-runner Clinton said as he headed this morning from snowy Michigan to Illinois and Wisconsin. "I have the best economic plan. That's what I'll hammer home these last two weeks."

Bush, answering voters' questions in Atlanta today, said that his Agenda for American Renewal, emphasizing incentives to create jobs, was the best way to revive the slumbering economy but that he hadn't made the case for it well enough.

"I've got to get that in focus," he said.

Bush's last debate performance was his best, repeatedly criticizing Clinton for a "dangerous" pattern of waffling on issues ranging from trade with Mexico to war with Iraq.

Bush was more focused and aggressive than in the first two encounters, yet instant polls showed voters viewed Clinton a narrow winner, suggesting Bush had not done much to loosen Clinton's tenacious grip on a double-digit lead.

With the election two weeks away, Bush needs a hasty and historic turnaround if he is to win a second term and extend the Republican grip on the White House to 16 years.

Their debate series over, Clinton and Bush today began what promises to be a heated and hectic campaign finish. For all the post-debate bragging of the campaigns, the schedules best illustrated the state of the race.

Bush headed South, for a train tour of Georgia and South Carolina, trying to rebuild a crumbling Republican base. Clinton looked to solidify leads in Illinois and Wisconsin before a swing through Western states that were once thought solid Republican.

Clinton provoked few fights during the third debate in eight days, but he returned Bush's volleys, mocking Bush's trust argument with a recitation of the president's "read my lips" tax promise, his pledge to create 30 million jobs and his support of what he once called "voodoo economics."

To Bush's charge that Clinton was a failed governor, Clinton countered that Arkansas was heading in the right direction under his leadership while the country floundered under Bush.

For his part, Perot said neither of his opponents' economic plans added up and that he would spend more than $60 million of his own money on his campaign. Perot again left the specifics to his TV ads, turning in another colorful debate performance.

"We'll be down in the trenches under the hood working on fixing the old car to get it back on the road," he said. Perot said voters worried about jobs should support a businessman who has created thousands — and ignore "these folks in the press telling you you're throwing your vote away."

Perot's sharpest volleys were aimed squarely at Bush, whom Perot said needed wars to remove Saddam Hussein and Manuel Noriega from power only because he had built up their regimes. And Perot's mere presence complicated Bush's attempts to land a knockout punch on Clinton.

"I thought the most surprising thing about the debate was the intensity of the attacks of Perot on Bush, on Iraq and the Republican dirty tricks," Clinton said today. "He was really mad and to me that was the really new and different element of the debate."

The fights Monday night were on familiar issues, but spiced at times with the tension and intensity befitting a final clash.

On taxes, Bush argued that Clinton couldn't be trusted to keep his pledge to raise taxes only on the rich. "Mr. and Mrs. America ... watch your wallet because his figures don't add up and he's going to sock it right to the middle-class taxpayer."

Clinton said Bush had zero credibility on the tax issue and said Bush was wrong to promise never to raise taxes. But in implementing his campaign promises, Clinton vowed: "If the money does not come in to pay for these programs we will cut other government spending or we will slow down the phase in of the programs. I am not going to raise taxes on the middle class to pay for these programs." Perot said generally that he would raise taxes, asking voters "to take fair, shared sacrifice."

Housing starts up in September

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing starts unexpectedly rose 1.4 percent in September to their highest level in six months, the government said today. It was the second straight monthly advance.

The increase was paced by the sharpest gain in the Northeast in 15 months. Starts also rose in the South, but fell in both the Midwest and West.

The Commerce Department said construction of new single-family homes and apartments totaled 1.26 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, up from 1.24 million in August. The September total was the highest since 1.34 million last March.

The report also showed that starts jumped 12.6 percent in August, even more than the 10.4 percent initial estimate. That was the steepest increase since new construction surged 19 percent in February, 1991.

The economic consensus had called for a decline in September to about 1.20 million. Analysts had said the August advance, the first in three months, could not be sustained and that construction probably would level off for the remainder of the year.

The September increase accompanied a continuing decline in mortgage rates, which dropped to 7.84 percent during the week ended Sept. 11, according to a survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. It was the lowest since 7.76 percent in June 1973.

Starts totaled 1.20 million at an annual rate during the July-September quarter, up from a 1.14 million rate in the second quarter, when wet weather delayed construction in some areas and before mortgage rates began to fall sharply.

For the first nine months of the year, total starts were 20.5 percent above the same period of 1991.

The report also suggested further improvement in the months ahead. Building permits, often a barometer of future activity, rose 3.7 percent, to a 1.12 million annual rate.

Single-family starts increased 1.2 percent, to a 1.07 million rate, after jumping 10.7 percent in August. Apartment construction advanced 2.2 percent, to a 185,000 rate, on top of a 25.7 percent jump a month earlier.

Lockridge faces Roberts in Precinct 2 constable race

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Staff Writer

Republican Chris Lockridge and Democrat Wayne Roberts are vying for the post of Gray County Precinct 2 constable in the Nov. 3 general election.

Lockridge, 33, is the incumbent to the position. Roberts, 38 is an equipment operator and reserve deputy for Gray County.

"I like working for the people of Gray County. The constable's office deals with a lot of different people. I think by doing my job well I can help a lot of people," Lockridge said about the position he holds.

Roberts said he enjoyed working with and for the people of Gray County in the past and would like to continue to do so.

"I want to do my part to keep Gray County a safe community to live in," Roberts said.

Lockridge said that honesty and professionalism, plus an attempt to deal with people fairly qualify him for the job.

Honesty, impartiality, concern for others and willingness to work qualify Roberts for the job, he said. He said a background of working in and around law enforcement add to his qualifications.

"I think drug intervention and crime prevention are important programs, I have been working with law publications in bringing the most up-to-date materials to our schools and the public. The new material should be in some time in October," Lockridge said about re-election. "County government is one of the most basic forms of government. The people's vote has more of an impact on how they want their county run."

About county programs, Roberts said he would continue all programs involving drug and crime prevention. He plans to stay involved with the community.

County government is important, he said. "Because it allows people to deal with concerns of their community on a local level because I believe since we are the ones to live here we can see our needs better."

Lockridge is a graduate of Denison High School and served in the U.S. Army where he attended the military police academy. He moved to Gray County in 1982. He attended the Texoma Regional Police Academy and completed 25 hours at Frank Phillips College. He has earned 40 hours in basic and advanced civil process schools and over 200 hours of in-service training. He went to Texas Department of Criminal Justice guard school at Gatesville.

He is married to Jamie Lockridge and is the father of Lori and Christopher. He attends Central Baptist Church.

Roberts was raised in the Hall County area and moved to Gray County in 1980. He served as Gray County justice of the peace for four years and two months.

He attended Panhandle Regional Law Enforcement Academy in Amarillo where he earned a certification for a Texas peace officer. He studied basic jail operations for 40 hours and took 120 hours of justice of the peace court training. He holds a general equivalency diploma.

He is married to Glenda Roberts and is the father of Julie Maness, Tony Freelen and Leslie Roberts.

He is the grandfather of four. Roberts served on Pampa 2000 Committee and as coordinator of Teen Court for Gray County. He attends Briarwood Full Gospel Church and is a member and past-president of Top O' Texas Kiwanis Club.

4-H Ambassador group speaks during Gray County commissioners meeting

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

Gray County Commissioners Court was treated to a presentation Monday by four 4-Hers who are members of a newly formed 4-H Ambassador group in the county.

The four Pampa High School students — Kirk McDonald, Richard Williams, Amanda Kludt and David Kludt — talked about the 4-H program and its benefits.

McDonald serves as the District 1 4-H Council president. He said there are 14 districts in the state. The Gray County group is the only one in District 1 which has formed the Ambassadors.

Williams explained that the Ambassador program is designed to promote 4-H and give 4-H a newer image.

"In all aspects of life, 4-H helps you be a better individual," Williams said.

Amanda Kludt spoke of her experiences during the last year in 4-H. She said she served as a teen leader and helped lead a group of 12 girls in a clothing project, teaching girls the basics.

"It was very challenging," she said. "I never knew how hard it was to get up and teach someone when they don't know anything," she said.

She also earned a trip to the state 4-H roundup competition and is striving to win a trip to Chicago.

Her brother, David Kludt, attended the 4-H mission in space in Huntsville, Ala., where he learned about space suits, worked on simulators and learned about other space tasks.

Kludt said he learned to do a one-hour mission in space. He said space suits have 36 layers to protect the wearer from the heat or cold. He said he also learned that exercise is necessary in space to keep up a person's muscle strength so he will not be weak when he returns to Earth.

The 4-Hers also presented the Commissioners Court with baked goods.

In unrelated business, the Commissioners Court unanimously approved paying a $7,260 bill to the city of Groom for fire runs along Interstate 40. The Commissioners Court is also planning to check into state and federal programs which may call for reimbursement of fire runs along the interstate.

In other action, the Commissioners Court:

- unanimously authorized the county judge to sign a contract for computer equipment at the new sheriff's office. The new equipment will include seven devices — two printers and five terminals — at a cost of $1,750 per month. The county will not be billed from January through March, according to the agreement.
- unanimously approved the draft of a letter by Kennedy stating that a $100,000 bequest from an estate will be earmarked for the White Deer Land Museum.
- voted 4-1, with Precinct 2 Commissioner Jim Greene voting against, to approve the plat of Red Deer Creek Acres, northeast of Pampa, subject to approval by the city of Pampa.

- unanimously approved Ruth McBride to serve as Precinct 8 election judge.
- unanimously approved a request by Hugoton Energy Corp. to cross a county road in Precinct 4 with a pipeline.
- unanimously approved the sale of delinquent tax property at 904 Brunow, 743 Albert and 328 N. Dwight.
- unanimously approved the transfer of $150 from travel and expense to conference and training, and $150 from equipment repair to mileage in the Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace budget.
- unanimously approved the payment of $364,907.70 in salaries and bills.
- unanimously approved the following transfers: $48,803 from the general to the salary fund; $9,845 from FM&LR to Precinct 1 R&B; $15,342 from FM&LR to Precinct 2 R&B; $11,396 from FM&LR to Precinct 3 R&B; $9,161 from FM&LR to Precinct 4 R&B; $113,216 from Highland General Hospital fund to courthouse and jail; and $12,221 from Indigent Health Care to general (to repay loan).
- unanimously approved the treasurer's report.
- discussed medical and life insurance.

U.S. officials report finding photographs of dead soldiers taken by Vietnamese

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials discovered a secret cache of Vietnamese-made photographs reported to contain more than 4,000 pictures of the remains of Americans who died in military action or captivity, The Washington Post reported today.

The photographic archive "was discovered by means that officials refused to disclose," the Post said in a story attributed to unidentified official sources.

Some of the Americans pictured are still listed as missing in action because Vietnam has never acknowledged having any information about them or having their remains, the story said.

The official Vietnamese News Agency said Monday that Vietnam will expand its help in determining the fate of Americans missing from the Vietnam War by letting U.S. experts study military archives.

Members of the Pentagon's task force searching for missing servicemen previously described the lack of access to the archives as a serious hindrance to their work. The U.S. group conducts joint searches and excavations with the Vietnamese, looking for the remains of missing Americans.

The agreement was announced at the conclusion of a three-day visit to Hanoi by a U.S. delegation led by retired Gen. John Vessey Jr. He was accompanied by Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a former prisoner of war in Vietnam, and other U.S. officials.

A joint U.S.-Vietnamese statement transmitted by the Vietnam News Agency said the agreement was "an important new step which should accelerate results on the POW-MIA issue."

The United States has not had diplomatic relations with Vietnam since the Communist takeover of the South in 1975 and has maintained an economic embargo against Hanoi. U.S. officials have said relations will not be normalized until Hanoi provides a satisfactory accounting of missing Americans.

"The government of Vietnam informed General Vessey it has been conducting a country-wide search of all of its archives for documents, photographs and other material related to American POW-MIA cases and will make all such material available to the United States at its military museums," according to the joint statement issued in Hanoi Monday.

In Washington, the State Department spokesman, Richard Boucher, said preliminary reports of the Vessey mission were encouraging.

State Department officials, however, cautioned that while Vessey had made "important progress," that progress did not meet the criteria that the United States has set for normalizing relations.

Vessey is to brief President Bush on his trip Thursday.

There are 2,266 American servicemen still unaccounted for from the Vietnam War, which ended 17 years ago. Some 1,658 were lost in Vietnam, while the others were lost in the neighboring countries of Cambodia and Laos.

Police investigate reported armed robbery

A 49-year-old Pampa man and his brother were held at gunpoint and robbed Monday night in the 100 block of North Gillespie, according to a police report.

Dock Allen Parker, 110 N. Gillespie, called the police department after the armed robbery at his residence, said Lt. Allan Smith. "The suspect forcibly entered the residence and held the victims at gunpoint," Smith said.

The suspect fled the residence on foot, he said.

"Parker said he saw the suspect later in a car," Smith said.

Items reported to be stolen included $80 and personal clothes. No injuries were reported in the 9 p.m. incident, according to a police report.

The robbery is still under investigation and police plan to issue a warrant for a suspect, officials said.

Pampa Sheltered Workshop serves 25 adults

Following is a story featuring one of 16 agencies which receives part of its operating budget from the United Way. The United Way drive is under way.

The Pampa Sheltered Workshop and Activity Center provides services for approximately 25 adults with various levels of mental disabilities. The program includes study, social activities, help with grooming, and a supervised workshop.

The agency is budgeted to receive $14,550 next year from United Way.

One man's story is typical of the dedication and support of the workshop's staff and volunteers. Before this man's family enrolled him in the Sheltered Workshop, he had nothing to do while his mother worked to support the two of them.

With the free time on his hands, he sometimes wandered into bars where he drank and behaved badly. Then he would be disorderly and fight with his mother.

Just as the family had given up on knowing how to handle the man, they learned about the Sheltered Workshop, which was then located in the First Presbyterian Church Sunday School Building.

After undergoing several tests by the Amarillo State Center for Human Development to determine his abilities and his needs, he was enrolled in the Pampa Sheltered Workshop.

Since that time, the man and the Workshop have both made great progress. The man has been in the program for over 10 years, and now has a place to go to spend his time in a constructive manner, while earning money for the job that he does. He often says "I love my work here (at the Sheltered Workshop)."

He is now a kind-hearted man, who never touches alcohol. He is loving, helpful, and kind to his mother. He can always be seen opening doors for people, carrying boxes, and giving a helping hand.

He tells anyone who will listen: "I love everybody."

The Pampa Workshop has also made progress in those 10 years. The workshop has moved to 1301 W. Somerville. The staff has increased from two to five (one salary is paid by Pampa United Way.) The number of people who are served by the workshop continues to increase.

Success stories like this man's are due to the dedicated staff, families, and community support like United Way.

Analysts, campaigns say Bush didn't deliver debate knockout

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — After three presidential debates in eight days, Samuel Freeman, an associate professor of political science at UT-Pan American in Edinburg said, "I'm getting tired of debates. I'm glad they're over."

But frustrated though he claimed to be, Freeman admitted that Monday night's 90-minute debate among President Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot evoked some chuckles from him.

"All three candidates were quick on their feet at times. I got good laughs from each one," Freeman said.

The two biggest laughs were at Clinton's expense. When he said he himself would be in charge of getting the economy going again, Bush quipped: "That's what I'm afraid of."

Perot said Clinton's record as governor of Arkansas "is irrelevant" because it has such a small population. Just because someone does a good job of running a small grocery store doesn't mean he's equipped to run a Wal-Mart store, Perot said. More laughter.

However, campaign officials and other political observers across Texas didn't feel Bush delivered the knockout punch that most people felt the president needed to erase Clinton's wide lead in the polls, just two weeks before Election Day.

Predictably, Republican officials said they felt Bush won the debate. Democratic leaders said Clinton did the best, and Perot backers sided with their man.

Jim Oberwetter, chairman of the Bush-Quayle campaign in Texas, said it wasn't crucial that the president overwhelm Clinton in the final debate.

"You don't need a knockout punch. You just need to show the public that you're a fighter and willing to fight for that job, and that's what the president did. Clearly the president had his best evening in the debates," Oberwetter said.

About 100 Ross Perot volunteers watched the debate in the phone bank at his Dallas headquarters. They cheered when Perot jabbed Bush or Clinton and when he promised a big push in the last two weeks of the campaign.

"I think he was the only true element," said Maria Altholz. "He was the only one addressing issues."

"He's got to stay on TV. He's got to have those town hall meetings," said John Diremiggio. "That's where he's best."

Ken Molberg, chairman of the Clinton-Gore campaign in Dallas County, said Bush clearly fell short of turning momentum around.

"George Bush struck out. Clinton hit Bush on the flip-flops of his administration, and to the extent that he didn't, Ross Perot did," Molberg added.

"I think in the president's closing statement, when he said, 'Who can you trust to do this?' right after they got through with all the read-my-lips and flip-flops, I saw people just kind of recoil in silence," Molberg said.

Jerry Polinard, another political science professor at UT-Pan American, called Bush's performance his best of the three debates.

"He appeared aggressive. He was able to control the tone of the debate in the first half much the way Clinton had in past debates," Polinard said.

However, in the second half of the 90-minute debate, Perot delivered a succession of shots, particularly toward the president that kept Bush from winning the debate outright, Polinard said.

Perot criticized the president's position that Bush took with Iraq up until the time that hostilities commenced in the Persian Gulf and portrayed Bush as a central figure in efforts to hush up the costly savings and loan problem until after the election.

Bobbie Sue Holbrook, co-chairman of the Clinton-Gore campaign in Dallas, said she felt Bush "was well-coached for his debate, but he tended to put much of the blame on Congress, as usual. I think his description of Arkansas as 'the lowest of the low' says more about him than about our good neighbors."

Muscovites pass McDonald's restaurant early today.

Bomb blast injures eight near Moscow McDonald's

By THOMAS GINSBERG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — A bomb thrown at a police station exploded near a McDonald's restaurant and injured at least eight people, including a 5-year-old girl, police said today.

Police said the Monday night attack was not aimed at McDonald's or its customers but at the police precinct adjacent to the restaurant on central Pushkin Square, a popular tourist spot.

Officials said three of the injured were Afghan citizens, including the girl. The other victims were Russian, officials said.

Two men were arrested, including one with a record of clashing with police, said police Col. Yuri Fedoseyev.

Initially, police had not ruled out a link with the restaurant. There had been past protests at the restaurant by a small group condemning McDonald's as "defiler of Russia," although both police and a restaurant spokeswoman doubted a connection with the group.

The attack, however, was a sign of soaring crime in Russia in recent years. Violent crimes have increased 23 percent this year over last, police say. Moscow, although still safer than many world capitals, has borne the brunt of the increase.

The site of the blast was several yards from the entrance to the McDonald's and along the route of the queue leading to the restaurant.

The explosion shattered two windows of the precinct No. 108 and three windows in the apartment block directly above it. Fragments of a detonating fuse injured eight passers-by, mostly in the legs, Fedoseyev said.

The girl, an Afghan citizen, was wounded in the head and remains in serious condition, although there is no threat to her life, Fedoseyev said.

One of the eight injured people was released from a hospital shortly after being examined Monday night. But the rest, including the girl and two other Afghan citizens, stayed overnight, Fedoseyev said.

A hospital duty nurse said earlier that two of the injured were treated and released. The discrepancy could not immediately be clarified.

The Moscow daily Moskovsky Komsomolets said a ninth person was injured only slightly and not taken to the hospital.

"We are shocked ... and saddened," restaurant spokeswoman Marina Tulupnikova told The Associated Press. She said restaurant employees had given shelter and first aid to the victims and had called the ambulance.

The explosion occurred shortly before 7 p.m. Officials and media reports said many people were on the square, but Tulupnikova said very few McDonald's customers were in line outside at the time.

McDonald's sustained no damage, Tulupnikova said. The restaurant appeared to be operating as usual today.

Fedoseyev described the attack as a "regular criminal act" against the police station in central Moscow. He said the same post was attacked in 1988 — before McDonald's was built — with an incendiary device. Nobody was caught.

Two alleged attackers were arrested on the spot, Fedoseyev said.

Valery Zakharenkov, 34, has been convicted twice for rape and theft. The second, in his thirties, refused to identify himself.

Both were intoxicated at the time, Fedoseyev added.

Although the suspects initially gave no reason for the actions, they later accused police of failing to help Russians caught in ethnic unrest in other parts of the former Soviet Union, Fedoseyev said.

Chrysler posts high earnings

By ALAN L. ADLER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. said today that it earned $202 million or 62 cents a share in the third quarter, surpassing analysts' most optimistic predictions.

Chrysler lost $82 million, or 36 cents a share, in last year's third quarter. Analysts had predicted the company would post up to 55 cents a share in earnings today.

The earnings for the No. 3 automaker, which also posted unexpectedly strong earnings three months ago, may be the only positive financial news lately for U.S. automakers.

The other Big Three automakers — General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. — are expected to report third-quarter losses next week.

The automobile market is sluggish, but Chrysler's new Jeep Grand Cherokee is so popular the factory is working overtime to meet demand; its new midsize cars are selling briskly; and its Dakota pickup already has set a sales record with 2 1/2 months to go in the year.

The third-quarter results included a $101 million charge for restructuring Chrysler's car rental operations.

Third-quarter sales of $9.2 billion were 22 percent higher than last year and a record for any third quarter, Chrysler said.

Chrysler earned $178 million, or 54 cents a share, in the second quarter, far exceeding analysts' estimates.

"Reporting profitable quarters back-to-back while in the midst of the slowest economic recovery in decades makes today's announcement especially satisfying," Chairman Lee Iacocca said in a written statement.

Chrysler stock rose 62 1/2 cents Monday on the New York Stock Exchange to $24.87 1/2, a 52-week high, in part because of the earnings projections.

GM estimates it will lose $845 million. The company has lost market share in the United States this year and been challenged by the United Auto Workers several times in its attempts to cut 74,000 jobs and close 21 plants by 1995.

Ford has said it, too, lost money in the third quarter, but it didn't say how much. Zack's forecast a loss of $102.1 million, or 21 cents a share.

The No. 2 automaker recorded double-digit gains in sales this year in North America, but it is being hurt by the recession in Britain.

Rebels deny responsibility in massacre

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The Tamil Tiger rebels today denied responsibility for massacring 166 people and said the military was to blame. A military spokesman called the rebel denial "stupid and absurd."

About 500 students at Colombo University today demonstrated against Thursday's massacre, in which 146 Muslim civilians and 20 soldiers were shot and hacked to death in northeastern villages.

It was the worst carnage in a single day since Tamil rebels began their insurrection in 1983 for a separate homeland in the northern and eastern sectors of the island off India's southern coast.

At least 7,000 people have been killed since June 1990 when the Tigers resumed their separatist war that they say is the result of economic and cultural discrimination by the Sinhalese.

The demonstrators today burned an effigy of Velupillai Prabhakaran, leader of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam.

"We are demonstrating today so that the government gives more security for Muslims and takes action against the barbaric activities of the Tigers," said Anwar Ismail, a student organizer.

Muslims are 7 percent of Sri Lanka's 17 million people and are known to side with the Sinhalese-dominated government in its war against Tamil separatists.

The government blames the Tigers for Monday's attack on Muslims in four villages about 105 miles northeast of Colombo.

The Tigers, in a statement faxed from London to The Associated Press in Colombo, claimed the attack was "a carefully orchestrated retaliatory campaign" against the Tigers by the military.

Col. Sarath Munasinghe, an army spokesman, said it was "stupid and absurd" for the Tigers to deny involvement.

Sinhalese, who make up 75 percent of the population, are mainly Buddhists, while Tamils, who constitute 18 percent of the population, are predominantly Hindu.

Opinion

Bush's policies squandered jobs

Over the four years of President Bush's misadministration, federal spending has risen 50 percent, to $1.5 trillion. The economy has stalled. No wonder.

So, what have a group of economists and investors said we should do? Why, increase spending even more. If these guys were medical doctors, for lung problems they'd recommend you take up smoking.

Reports The New York Times: "Slowly, with many misgivings, federal spending on public works is gaining a new respectability among economists, Wall Street traders and some corporate executives as a last-resort formula for generating jobs and ending the nation's economic stagnation." Richard B. Hoey, chief economist at Dreyfus Inc., explained, "The basic view that is emerging is, 'don't just stand there, do something.'"

Well, something does need to be done: the reversal of all the bad policies of the past four years.

We should repeal in to the 1990 tax increase of $166 billion, the Civil "Rights" Act (the jobs-killing quota bill), the Americans with Disabilities act (which cost jobs, hurting everyone, including the handicapped), the Clean Air Act (which a $100 million congressional study said wouldn't reduce pollution) and the increase in the minimum wage (which cut teen-age employment).

Those are five major burdens imposed on our economy in less than four years. Really, it's a wonder that unemployment isn't 15 percent instead of 7.5 percent.

A lot of politicians, including Bill Clinton, continue blaming the "Bush-Reagan" policies of the past 12 years for the economic malaise. That's a fraud. Reagan presided over prosperity that was snuffed out by Bush. Reagan believed in, and enacted, free-market policies that reduced regulation and taxation. Bush has practiced what Nobel economics laureate Milton Friedman has called "reverse Reaganomics." Reagan knew and understood free-market economics. Bush absorbed without resistance the Keynesian big-government mumbo-jumbo popular at Yale in the 1940s.

One thing should dampen this wild talk of wild new spending: the federal deficit, now climbing to near $400 billion a year. If enacted, Clinton's proposals would push the deficit to $600 billion. And if such proposals sank the economy, as they probably would, the deficit could zoom to $800 billion or more, risking government bankruptcy.

The economy suffers economic asthma because its productive lungs are filled with the thick, clotted blood of high taxation and spending. Adding more clotted blood — even higher taxes and spending — would make things worse. The accurate prescription for recovery is to clear out the blood clots with tax and spending cuts.

Perot's absolutely useless candidacy

Move over, P.T. Barnum, Elmer Gantry and the Wizard of Oz. Fold your con-artistry tents and fade away. The sweetest, sneakiest and most impish con artist of them all is once again putting us through our political paces as if we were a herd of award-winning Lippizaner stallions.

In Ross Perot's resurrected but doomed candidacy, neither his sycophantic followers nor his media flacks have any shame.

A new eponym has already been added to the English lexicon of quisling, McCarthyism, Comstockery and bowdlerize: Pe-rot (puh-row) n. a slick person; a con artist. (In the carnival where people were conned out of their dreams, he was the best perot of them all); v. (He could perot an Eskimo into buying an air-conditioned igloo with an ice-making refrigerator.)

Boredom is the only reason the media mandarins have flocked to over Perot's shameless re-entry into the presidential race. The Bush-Clinton matchup simply hasn't caught fire the way Kennedy-Nixon did 32 years ago. That campaign was the high-water mark of voter turnout. It has been downhill ever since.

But somebody in this profession of daily exe-geses must tell you the truth. Herewith, Political Science 101:

Q. Can Ross Perot be elected president?
A. Absolutely not. The arithmetic is starkly simple. In no state does Perot lead in the polls. In no state can he win. The only influence he could exert might be in the presidential debates with water-muddying journalists asking Bush and Clinton to respond to Perot's untested economic proposals.

Q. If he can't win the necessary 270 electoral votes, what are his chances of winning enough votes to prevent either candidate from winning a majority, thus throwing the election into the House of Representatives?

A. Slim and none — and Slim is in the hospital's intensive-care unit and not expected to recover.

Q. But "man's reach should exceed his grasp, else what's a heaven for?" If by some quirk of fate on the magnitude of the southern half of California gently sliding into the Pacific Ocean Perot did win enough votes to deny Bush or Clinton victory and throw the election into House, couldn't he be chosen president?

A. Indeed he could — just as Slim could get out of his intensive-care bed and win the New York City marathon the very next day.

Again, the arithmetic of politics is overpowering. In the House of Representatives, each state delegation probably will vote for the candidate with the highest number of votes in their state. Otherwise, the vote will break down along party lines. Can you imagine the immoral idiocy of a state delegation voting for Perot after he has come in third?

Q. But political miracles do happen. Suppose, through another quirk of fate similar to Boston Harbor separating and drifting off toward Newfoundland, the House momentarily loses its sanity and chooses Perot. What then?

A. A political disaster, rivaling the combined California earthquake and the Florida hurricane, would occur. Even if Perot were somehow elected ("and the world turned upside down"), we would suffer government by paralysis.

The current makeup of the House is 267 Democrats, 167 Republicans and one Independent. There is no Perot Party. And neither party would introduce or argue for "President" (gag) Perot's legislation.

After a year of frustrated rejections, the humiliated Lilliputian Texan with the Broddingnagian ego would have to do the same thing he did this past July. Quit. And thus would end the pipe dreams of those who smoked it and did inhale.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 20, the 294th day of 1992. There are 72 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
One hundred years ago, on Oct. 20, 1892, the city of Chicago held an elaborate ceremony to dedicate the World's Columbian Exposition, celebrating the 400th anniversary of the arrival of Christopher Columbus. (However, the exposition did not officially open until the following May.)

On this date:
In 1803, the U.S. Senate ratified the Louisiana Purchase.

In 1944, during World War II, Gen. Douglas MacArthur stepped ashore at Leyte in the Philippines, declaring, "I have returned."

In 1947, Hollywood came under scrutiny as the House Un-American Activities Committee opened hearings into alleged Communist influence and infiltration in the movie industry.

In 1964, the 31st president of the United States, Herbert Hoover, died in New York at age 90.

"I'm Larry King. The subject is suspenders. President Bush flexes his, Ross Perot snaps back and Gov. Clinton keeps up his pants."

A Tim dandy story

Approximately every eight seconds during a baseball playoff game, somebody comes to your seat in the press box and hands you sheets of information.

It's mostly numbers, more than there are in the federal deficit, if you can believe that. Did you know, for instance, Atlanta's centerfielder Otis Nixon this year became the first Brave this century to produce back-to-back 40-plus steal seasons?

That's a long time, but he did it. It was on one of the information sheets they gave me during one of the Braves-Pirates playoff games.

And, if he signs a reported $60 million contract, Barry Bonds of Pittsburgh can afford enough weight in gold earrings to sink a battleship. And pitcher John Smoltz of the Braves blinked his eyes 1,427 times during his defeat of the Pirates in Game One of the playoffs.

Also in Game One, the ball bounced exactly 683 times.

It's all on those information sheets. I asked a sports columnist next to me, "Why do they pass all this stuff out?"

"A lot of people write about that stuff," he answered.

But I wanted more than numbers. Aren't there any human stories in all this — the Braves playing the Pirates to see who goes to the World Series? Is it all just RBI's, ERA's, AB's, HR's, AVG's, and IP's?

Lewis Grizzard

The information sheets kept coming as Steve Avery was retiring the Pirates in the first inning of Game Two. I'm not sure how many pitches it took him to do so, but I'm sure I'll find out before the game's over.

So I kept perusing each information sheet as it was handed me and, finally, it came.

It was deep into a sheet with quotes from a press conference with the Pirates' pitcher Tim Wakefield. It was a story about a little boy and his dad. Little boys and their daddies and baseball is a family value.

Tim Wakefield is a knuckleball pitcher. Not a knucklehead pitcher, like the Braves of old use to have.

A knuckleball dips down, rises up, weaves, bob, floats like a butterfly, and a good one can sting you right in the batting average.

How did Tim Wakefield learn to throw a knuckleball? His daddy taught him. It was on that information sheet.

"I learned it from my father in the back yard," the sheet quoted him as saying.

"Dad would come home from work and we would play catch in the back yard. He would get tired and start throwing the knuckler, probably to get me tired because I'd miss the pitch and have to run back and chase it to the fence. I think he figured I would get so tired I'd want to go inside and eat dinner."

How about that?
Not every little boy who plays catch with his daddy in the back yard is going to grow up and be a major league pitcher, of course, but I was wondering if more dads tossed a baseball with their little boys who would grow up and not know their hind parts from a fungo bat, and wind up gumming up their lives.

Family values again.
A boy child needs that sort of help from his father. If your dad doesn't show you how to throw a baseball by the time you start school, the other boys will notice you throw like a girl, and will call you names ("sissy," "mommy's boy") and throw rocks at you.

For a boy in grammar school it's learn to throw a baseball macho or be branded and get large lumps on your head.

And that's what's called quality time in this day of labels.

By the way, who will play catch with Murphy Brown's little boy?
Just asking.

Why does U.S. pay to export jobs?

Bill Clinton made some political hay recently from a "60 Minutes" story that sent me scurrying for a blank videotape after the first few sentences. I couldn't believe what I was hearing on the CBS-TV show and knew I'd have to listen again before it sunk in.

The story was about how the U.S. government attracts — if not downright lures — American manufacturers into moving their operations to Central America. How? By giving them low-interest loans for which businesses operating in the United States aren't eligible, by subsidizing training of the Central American workers, and with tax laws that give companies tax breaks they can't get in the United States.

The information CBS got from folks who didn't know they were being taped was nauseating: One U.S. Agency for International Development representative was taped in a telephone conversation telling a "60 Minutes" plant posing as a businessman that Honduran workers would probably surpass the quality and output of American workers.

Another official was caught in hidden camera telling the plant that he needn't worry about union problems, because any Central American worker with a history of union interest would be screened out by managers of industrial parks. CBS reports said half a dozen other businessmen and U.S. officials told them that any workers trying to unionize could be fired on the spot and blackballed, despite U.S. trade laws that protect these workers' rights to collectively bargain and organize.

Sarah Overstreet

AID officials didn't deny we're openly trying to solicit businesses to operate in Central America — slick, government-funded ads that introduce a Salvadoran woman named Rosa and brag, "You can hire her for 57 cents an hour" are hard to deny. Yet they say the activity is justified. "Growth in Latin America creates jobs in the U.S.," the deputy director told "60 Minutes." Our ink gets blacker, he says, because now all those employed Central Americans can buy the products we export to them.

Just how many of our products Rosa can buy with her whopping $4.56 a day will have to be left up to greater economic minds than mine, but I admit I am fairly doubtful. Former U.S. Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall is just as dubious. He told "60 Minutes" there isn't enough buying power in Central America to offset American job loss to these practices and subsidies, and that as a by-product, American wages are being driven down.

For 15 years, I've interviewed economists who have insisted that business in the "global economy" demands we manufacture where the worker works cheapest. This impartial, neutral, free market is seeking its natural course and changing the United States from a manufacturing economy to a service and retail-trade economy. Nothing personal, just business.

That arrangement would be easier to swallow if the average wage of the service and retail-trade jobs that replaced the dwindling manufacturing jobs in the last two decades wasn't HALF the average wage of the manufacturing jobs that were lost.

How far is a country of conscience supposed to allow "just business" to tear apart its communities? If I'm a manufacturer employing 500 people in my community and making a reasonable profit, why should I want to throw the middle-aged and older workers — workers who've given me 20 and 30 years of their lives, in some cases — onto a job market that won't hire them at near the same wage I can pay, or possibly at all?

And if I do throw 500 people in my community into economic upheaval for the greater profit dear Rosa could supply me while she lives in squalor, what's the proper etiquette afterward? Is it still OK to go to Rotary every Thursday noon, or do I turn in my pin, give back my Sertoma plaque and try not to make eye contact with anyone while I drive to the country club? Does charity still begin at home, and just how close to home is the community I live in?

Five years later: Business running as usual after crash on Wall Street

By STEFAN FATIS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — So the stock market crashed five years ago. What's the big deal?

Wall Street issued a collective yawn Monday on the anniversary of its worst day ever: Black Monday, Oct. 19, 1987, when the Dow Jones average fell 508 points, or 22.6 percent.

No ceremonies were held to commemorate the crash. The market didn't tumble at the memory. In fact, most of the reminding about the anniversary was done by reporters writing stories like this.

"Those things tend to fade into oblivion except when you pull them out for historical discussion," said James J. Maguire, chairman of Henderson Brothers Inc. "It's a non-event."

To be sure, the nation's markets were chastened by the crash, which evoked memories of 1929 and the Depression.

"It was the most frightening day I have ever spent in the business," said John E. Herzog, chairman of Herzog, Heine, Geduld Inc. He said the crash helped him decide to open the Museum of Financial History in Manhattan.

"It was scary to see things just melt away," he said. "That's something I felt we should try to remember and avoid."

In the years after the crash — which some Wall Streeters still euphemistically call "the market break" — recession-wracked brokerages laid off more than 50,000 people, investors fled in fear and Congress held sober hearings and enacted legislation to strengthen the markets.

The consensus is that the changes in market operations and regulation — especially "circuit breakers" that slow or halt trading during big sell-offs — have made Wall Street safer today. Various speed bumps kick in when the Dow is off 50 points, 96 points, 250 points and 400 points.

Still, on the floor and around the neoclassical New York Stock Exchange building at the corner of Wall and Broad streets, Monday's anniversary elicited barely a whisper.

There were no anarchist groups urging traders to jump, as in 1987. And a sampling of the hundreds of tourists who got a glimpse of the action from behind bulletproof glass in the NYSE visitors' gallery found few who knew Monday's significance, and none who made a pilgrimage because of it.

On the walls of educational materials about the 200-year-old NYSE, there is no special display about the crash. Four photos and two sentences explain the day when "the world's attention was riveted on the NYSE."

For the record, a few crash numbers: The NYSE handled a then-record 604 million shares. A day later, 608 million shares were traded, and 449 million the following day. The most since then has been 416 million on Oct. 16, 1989, the day after the Dow's second-biggest decline, 190 points.

The crash dropped the Dow from 2,246 to 1,738. The index began a gradual recovery that brought it above the pre-crash level in 15 months and on to a record 3,413 in June 1992. The active," NYSE President Richard A. Grasso said. "What a difference five years makes."

Richard Grasso, executive vice chairman and president of the New York Stock Exchange, poses above the floor of the exchange. The stock market crash of 1987 is still a vivid memory on Wall Street.

Dow on Monday rose 14.04 points to 3,188.45. "Fortunately the market is up ...

United Nations lodges protest against Serbs as leaders resume talks today

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The United Nations lodged a protest today with Serb leaders after their fighters blocked Sarajevo's main aid delivery route and forced the U.N. commander to submit to an inspection.

In Geneva, some of the key players in the Bosnia-Herzegovina war resumed talks today, and the embattled country's president agreed to a potentially important compromise.

But any agreements may amount to little because some of the most belligerent parties are not involved.

Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, was relatively quiet today. The U.N. sent technicians to inspect the damage at the city's flour mill, where Serb artillery shells destroyed production machinery during the weekend.

U.N. officials said 50 tons of flour were scheduled to arrive today for the city's 400,000 residents — many of whom are subsisting on bread and pasta — to help make up the flour shortfall. They said 50 tons were delivered Monday by land and air.

Bosnian officials discounted rumors that a Bosnian paramilitary commander had recently attempted to seize control of the army defending Sarajevo. The rumors were fueled by the reported arrest of a Bosnian paramilitary commander.

A Western reporter was detained temporarily today at gunpoint by Serb fighters who were blocking the road between the airport and the city, said Mik Magnusson, the senior U.N. political affairs officer in Sarajevo.

On Monday, the Serbs also forced Brig. Gen. Hussein Aly Abdul Razeq, the Egyptian commanding U.N. peacekeepers in Sarajevo, to submit to an inspection of his armored personnel carrier, Magnusson said. He said the Serbs had guns and anti-tank weapons and were backed by an armored personnel carrier.

He said a protest was lodged with the Bosnian Serb command.

Bosnian government troops removed their own roadblock from the artery on Sunday, after receiving U.N. assurances of stepped up patrols to prevent any Serb advances along it.

The Geneva talks, sponsored by the United Nations and the European Community, include Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, Croatian President Franjo Tudjman and Yugoslav President Dobrica Cosic, Tudjman and Izetbegovic met privately today.

The war broke out after Bosnia's Muslims and ethnic Croats voted in February to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. Bosnian Serbs oppose the secession and have seized much of the country's territory, intent on annexing it and Serb-held regions of Croatia to Yugoslavia.

The Croats are nominal allies of the Bosnian Muslims but Izetbegovic and others fear the Croats eventually want to annex parts of Bosnia as well.

Izetbegovic and Cosic pledged late Monday to work to lift the Serb siege of Sarajevo, disband paramilitary units and normalize relations. But it is unclear how effective such efforts would be without the support of Serbia's powerful president, Slobodan Milosevic, or of Bosnian Serb

Nun to give $1 million from lottery to her order

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — Sister Josephine Contris took a vow of poverty 54 years ago, but that wasn't why she turned down $40,000.

She was after higher stakes — and won. A cool $1 million California lottery jackpot that she called "a first-class miracle."

"It was a shock, but a beautiful shock," she said Monday.

Sister Josephine, cheered on by other nuns from the Mount Alverno Convent in Redwood City, a San Francisco suburb, won the big prize Saturday night.

She hit the jackpot after deciding to take a chance in the Big Spin game rather than accepting the lesser, though certain, amount.

"And I'm ending up a millionaire — I mean the community is," she said. "It's not my money, it's the community's."

Sister Josephine's winnings will go to her order, the Sisters of St. Francis. She is asking that the money go to help support retired Franciscan nuns and sisters working for the poor.

"We weren't getting much of a salary years ago — nothing to put aside for retirement. The sisters need to be taken care of now they're in advanced years," said Sister Josephine, who at 71 hopes to retire in a few years.

Among the nuns who could benefit are those who live at the order's Marian Residence in San Maria.

Sister Monica, a nun at Mount Alverno, said: "It's an answer to a prayer."

"It couldn't have come at a better time," she said.

Sister Josephine, originally from Aberdeen, Wash., has been a nun for 54 years. Most of that time she was a grammar school teacher and principal in Montana, Washington, Oregon and California. In 1979 she became the Sister of St. Francis' provincial treasurer, handling the order's finances for the West Coast.

She advanced to the Big Spin game with a scratch-off card she bought at a delicatessen. She scratched off two numbers that gave her a choice of accepting $40,000 or trying for more by spinning a wheel on which prizes ranged from $30,000 to $1 million. Members of her order urged her to take the chance.

"They said, 'You're always lucky, so go for it,' and I did," she said.

The little ball first landed in a slot marked $30,000, then bounced out and lodged in one marked $1 million.

"As someone said to me, 'God gave it a little push down to the million,'" Sister Josephine said.

Chicago stepping up security in projects

By PATRICK O'TOOLE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — For thousands of Chicago's poor, getting to their homes will seem like entering a top-secret government installation. Under measures spurred by the sniper slaying of a 7-year-old boy, tenants of the city's high-rise public housing projects will be given ID cards to get past turnstiles and will have to walk through metal detectors, past armed guards.

The ground floors will be cleared out and the tenants moved.

Many of the ideas have been used in some of the buildings before, but beginning today they will be adopted in all 160 high-rise complexes in a public housing authority that ranks among the nation's largest with 200,000 tenants.

Mayor Richard M. Daley also ordered more frequent police sweeps of the buildings to crack down on drug dealers and gang members.

"If we don't do those, we're going to have war," he said.

Daley announced the measures on Monday, six days after 7-year-old Dantrell Davis was killed as his mother walked him to school in Cabrini-Green, a violence-ridden, 70-acre project with 33 high-rises.

The mayor ordered four nearby empty buildings sealed at Cabrini-Green, including the one allegedly used by the sniper, who police said was aiming at teen-agers. A man has been charged in the slaying.

The 50 to 75 tenants of the four buildings will be moved. There was no immediate estimate of how many people will be affected when ground-floor apartments are emptied. Each high-rise has about 150 apartments.

Betty Minor, a 20-year tenant at Cabrini-Green, was upset at having to move.

"They give you a box and tell you to move, but they haven't assigned us a new apartment," she said. "Where are me and my two children supposed to live?"

The mayor said $500,000 will be spent for 270 off-duty police officers to sweep Cabrini-Green for weapons.

Daley was criticized as slow to react to the 7-year-old's death, the city's 782nd slaying this year. Last week, Vincent Lane, head of the housing authority since 1989, called for National Guardsmen to patrol buildings.

Daley ruled that out on Monday, saying they could not be trained quickly enough.

Cabrini-Green tenant Antoinette Mitchell said of the mayor's plan, "I don't think it's going to work because what they have done in the past has not worked."

Some tenants complained that gang members learn of the sweeps in advance and clear out before police arrive, only to return later. And the sweeps do nothing to stop drive-by shootings.

Lane said 100 sweeps have been conducted over the past 18 months. Even so, police counted 35 firearm murders last year in the projects.

In the past eight months, three children, including Davis, have been shot and killed at the elementary school in Cabrini-Green.

Officials have the authority to search apartments based on reports a tenant has a gun, and gun owners can be evicted, even if they have a gun permit, under a 20-year-old policy that has been enforced for only the past three years.

Mother of five fighting tardy penalties at work

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Lesbia Morones says her employer shouldn't force her to shirk her responsibility to her five young children by docking her pay when she's late.

So Morones is fighting the state Department of Motor Vehicles' decision to cut her pay by 10 percent for six months for being tardy too many times. "Give me some breathing room," she said.

So far, she's gotten at least one favorable ruling, from Administrative Law Judge Ruth Friedman, who proposed revoking the penalties and allowing Morones to start her workday at 8:45 a.m. instead of 8:30 a.m.

"The general problems of inadequate child care and inadequate public transportation are more properly characterized as social problems than personal problems," Friedman wrote in her ruling last month.

State officials, who declined comment while the case is pending, rejected Friedman's ruling, sending the case to the Personnel Board for another hearing.

Meanwhile, Morones case is getting a lot of attention, her lawyer, Robert Mueller, said Monday.

"This issue and this case has rung a very large bell," he said.

Morones said she thought about other working mothers when she decided to fight.

"I know that there are mothers out there who are probably in worse situations than I am and that was really the reason I went ahead," Morones said.

Judsen Culbreth, editor-in-chief of the magazine Working Mother, said many companies are solving the problem by providing flexible hours, something that pays off in lower absenteeism and less turnover.

"We're all on these time line treadmills and we all have to give some kind of slack," she said. "We have to look at larger issues than just these nickel-and-dime, 9-to-5 mentalities."

According to Friedman's ruling, Morones says she must get her five children, ages 7 to 11, off to school alone because her husband works the overnight shift at a San Francisco bakery and doesn't get home in time.

The earliest she can drop her children off for supervised care is 8 a.m., which gives her only 30 minutes to make the cross-town trip to work, a challenge given traffic and the vagaries of her 13-year-old car.

She doesn't always make it. According to the ruling, Morones was late 45 times between March and October 1991, which resulted in her losing 10.1 hours of pay as absent without leave.

Between December 1991 and May 1992, she was late 54 times, although Friedman noted that 41 of those times Morones was late five minutes or less.

DMV officials told Friedman they already allowed Morones to change her start time from 8 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. and if they allow her to come in late, other employees will do the same.

"They don't want to face the prospect of 10,000 mothers asking for a few minutes here and there," said Mueller, an attorney with the California State Employees Association.

CIA dismissed Cuban reports of flatbed trailers, huge tubes in 1962

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The flatbed trailers were so long, the Cuban informant said, that mailboxes and lampposts had to be removed so the vehicles could negotiate corners in the road.

Another informant in September 1962 described seeing a convoy of 16 trucks and eight trailers, seven of which were carrying "what looked like huge tubes extending over the entire length of the flatbed and completely covered with canvas." The eighth was carrying what looked like radar equipment, he said.

These were among dozens of reports the CIA received from informants in Cuba in the weeks leading up to the defining moment of the Cold War: the Cuban missile crisis. The agency dismissed all but a handful.

This intelligence failure, which brought the world the closest it ever has been to nuclear war, was the topic of a historical seminar Monday at CIA headquarters to mark the 30th anniversary of the crisis.

Panelists and participants shared memories of those tense days, and more than 100 secret documents were declassified for the occasion, some of them with heavy black erasures.

Many of the documents were memoranda by then-CIA Director John McCone, and documents coded Ironbark — meaning they were based on information from one of the most valuable Soviet spies of the Cold War, Col. Oleg Penkovsky.

The documents contained no significant revelations, said the CIA's chief historian, Kenneth McDonald. But they "throw light on how and why the CIA missed" the Soviet deployment in Cuba of offensive missiles capable of hitting Washington — until they were nearly operational, he said.

As it was, the deployment became known only when a U-2 spy plane photographed launch pads and missiles in western Cuba on Oct. 14, 1962 — more than a month after the Soviet weapons began arriving on the island.

Until then all but eight human sightings of massive, missile-like cargoes were dismissed by intelligence analysts in Washington as unreliable.

Warren Frank, then with the agency's foreign intelligence branch, said much of the informants' reporting was collected in Miami at what became the largest CIA station in the world.

The 300-member station, located in what is now Miami's zoo, collected reports from some 25 agents on the island, interviewed Cuban refugees and talked to emigres in regular touch with their families.

One report declassified Monday was made Sept. 17, 1962, by a 47-year-old Cuban described as a businessman with four years of schooling and of average intelligence. He described the convoy of 16 trucks and eight trailers.

But analysts were doubtful, saying they could not understand why the Soviets would want to deploy medium-range missiles in Cuba.

A landmark analysis on Sept. 19, 1962, also declassified Monday, said the Soviets were only deploying anti-aircraft missiles in Cuba to deter a possible U.S. invasion in the wake of the botched Bay of Pigs landing the year before.

"Not one of us thought the Soviets would move MRBMs (medium-range ballistic missiles) to Cuba. This was a real estimation failure," said Roger Hillsman, then director of the State Department's bureau of intelligence and research.

So skeptical were analysts at CIA headquarters that at one point they told the Miami station to stop submitting Cuban agent reports, Frank said. In another cable, headquarters dismissed a Cuban agent report of a tube as long as a palm tree, saying palm trees come in different sizes.

At the same time, U-2 reconnaissance planes and lower-flying spy aircraft were providing photos of Soviet ships — sometimes two a day — docking in Cuba with crates of military materiel.

"In view of the fact that the Soviet move came dangerously close to success in an area less than 90 miles from our shores, the absence of useful early warning of the enemy's intention must be stressed," said a post-mortem report by the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board.

For example, U-2 flights were suspended for a month because the State Department was worried about a diplomatic crisis if a plane was downed by the Soviets, as several already had been.

Analysts who pressed for a resumption said they were told cloud cover was too heavy, said Sidney Graybeal, then with the CIA's office of scientific intelligence.

And the biggest question about the crisis wasn't answered until it was over.

The CIA did not discover that the Soviets had nuclear warheads — although it had strong suspicions — until the crisis was defused at the end of November, said Dino Brugioni, a senior photo interpreter.

The warheads were detected when the nuclear containment vans arrived at the loading dock for the return journey to the Soviet Union, he said.

Doc's Mrs. wishes patients wouldn't call him at home

DEAR ABBY: My husband has practiced medicine in a fairly large city for more than 30 years. Why do patients call him at home? He has an answering service to handle his telephone calls on weekends and after office hours.

When a patient calls our home, I have to call the answering service and have him paged. He has patients calling him at home in the evenings who say they didn't want to bother him during office hours! Abby, he has a receptionist to answer calls, and his patient charts are at his office. There were times when he had to go back to his office to review the patient's chart.

Friends and relatives "don't want to bother him at his office," so they call him during dinner time at home. These are not emergency calls — they want a prescription, or think they are coming down with whatever is "going around."

We have an unlisted number; we can't keep on changing it. You would be doing a lot of physicians a big favor if you printed this.

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE
DEAR WIFE: Most physicians do not give their home numbers to their patients. Nor should

Dear Abby

they — with few exceptions. Perhaps it's time your husband worked out an agreement with another doctor (or two) to handle each other's calls on a rotating basis so they can all enjoy some free time.

DEAR ABBY: I just got my One Gallon Club pin from my local blood bank. My peers are in awe, but it was easy!

Several times a year (not more than every two months), I go to my blood bank, take some routine medical tests, and then I go to the donation section.

There they paint my arm with disinfectant, jab me with a needle, and hand me a rubber ball to squeeze while I sit like a couch potato watching television. After 15 or 20 minutes, the needle is painlessly removed, my arm is bandaged, and I go to the "goody table" where I'm stuffed with cookies, candy and orange drink. Then I'm given a pin saying, "I gave blood."

I'm made to feel like a philanthropist even though I haven't donated a dime in cash. What could be easier?

DAVID RUBIN,
STATEN ISLAND, N.Y.

DEAR DAVID: You are a philanthropist. There is a crucial need for blood and you care enough to routinely donate it, which is the ultimate lifesaving gift to the person who needs it.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." ## Octogenarian can still make them dance

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press Writer

BECKETT, Mass. (AP) — Jess Meeker complains about his asthma, puts on reading glasses, and sits heavily at the piano. But when those fingers, knobby with arthritis, touch the keyboard, oh, how they dance!

Few other musicians have made so many dances for so long. The 80-year-old Meeker has played at the Jacob's Pillow dance festival for the better part of 60 years, since its founding.

A modest man with white hair and youthful humor, Meeker has laid to rest his envy of conductor Leonard Bernstein and his dreams of fame as a composer. He is satisfied with life in the background.

"If I were a player in a string trio, I think I'd have to have more finesse," he said. "I'd have to be more accurate."

It takes coaxing to bring Meeker even to acknowledge his considerable talent and reputation as a leading accompanist for dancers. "Not only is it a talent for movement, but being able to get along with people," he finally allows. "You've got to put yourself in their hands."

He spoke shortly after a rehearsal for Jacob's Pillow revival of the all-male troupe, known simply as the Men Dancers, that inaugurated the festival in 1932. The show on July 21-25 underscored the strides of male dancers, the festival's own growth into a prestigious showcase of dance ranging from ballet to experimental, and Meeker's personal journey.

Ted Shawn, the late dance pioneer who founded the summer festival in the Berkshire Mountain town of Becket, discovered Meeker at a concert in his hometown of Arkansas City, Kan.

Meeker, whose father worked in the milling business, had turned to music when his parents bought a piano. They were not musicians and may have considered it an attractive furnishing, but Meeker had other ideas.

"I can remember my mother saying, 'If you don't get away from that piano, I'll kill you!'"

With help from some teachers, Meeker eventually learned enough

Jess Meeker takes a break from playing the piano for a rehearsal of the Jacob's Pillow dance festival's revival of the Men Dancers in Beckett, Mass., earlier this year. The 80-year-old Meeker has played at the dance festival for the better part of 60 years, since its founding.

to play the organ for silent movies in a theater. "It must have been pretty bad," he said. "I sort of improvised."

He still recalls the surprise and thrill when Shawn asked him to come to Becket for the opening of the festival. He was pulling in up to $100 a week — big money in those days — and "didn't even know what dancing was."

But Meeker figured it out quickly. He was asked to return every summer and left only when the original Men Dancers disbanded in 1940.

He came back in 1955 and has played piano for various groups at the festival ever since.

At the July revival, Meeker played the music he composed for "Kinetic Molpai," a dance choreographed by Shawn.

Meeker has also worked behind the scenes on several Broadway productions and as music director at a dance school — honing his sense of how to enhance human movement with sound. He even studied music for a year at the high-brow Juilliard School in New York but says he was "a miserable failure" there.

Most of his learning came instead from watching, listening and doing, and it has apparently worked. "There's a certain kind of propulsion in his playing," said John Sauer, another pianist at the festival. "You can sort of see the note as a little spot on the floor."

"He doesn't put himself first," said Gary Lund, the rehearsal director of the revived Men Dancers. "He sees that the dancers are what he composed the music for."

Barton Mumaw, one of the original troupe, describes Meeker as the ultimate player piano for dancers.

"Shawn said it was like putting a nickel in a slot machine and out comes the music — after explaining what you want," recalled the 79-year-old Mumaw, who was at the festival coaching the new dancers of the revived company.

Meeker, who spends the rest of his time at home in Toledo, Ohio, likes to take in the local symphony from time to time. But he avoids contemporary classical fare with its jagged chords and percussive lines. "I'm 80 years old, and I don't have to like that crap," he says.

He plans to come back to Jacob's Pillow "as long as I feel myself that I don't make a mess of it — and as long as they ask."

Genetic researchers explore inborn cancer risks

By DR. AARON R. RAUSEN
New York University School of Medicine

Medical scientists are probing the mysteries of the human gene to discover whether some people are predisposed to cancer.

Conversations about inherited characteristics that parents pass on to their children usually concern why a child has "his father's eyes" or "her mother's hair."

Now, talk about heredity may turn to cancer prevention as genetic researchers come closer to explaining why some families and some individuals may have an inborn risk of developing certain types of cancer.

For each characteristic in the body, everyone has a pair of genes. The millions of cells that make up the body's tissues and organ systems all operate in response to instructions that are encoded on the genes at birth.

Genes give the cells information about such inherited characteristics as eye color, height, and blood type, as well as disorders or disease.

One gene — known as the p53 gene — works to protect the body by letting a cell know when it should stop dividing. When both of the p53 genes are not functioning properly in any of the body's cells, its ability to regulate its uncontrolled growth to a cancer cell is diminished.

Researchers investigated this flaw in the p53 gene by studying a small group of families with a very high incidence of certain kinds of cancer — especially tumors of the bone, eye, breast, and the body's soft tissues.

Studies of these families as well as of other people with cancer have turned up new information that shows that inherited defects in the p53 gene may be more common in the general population.

In fact, the defective or "lost" gene has been found to turn up in cancer patients who have no family history of cancer.

Knowing that the p53 gene is a powerful deterrent to cancer, researchers are working to develop a screening test that can identify people with a defect or absence of expression of this gene.

This knowledge may make it possible to prevent cancer in susceptible people, or at least detect it early enough so that it can be more successfully treated.

Inheriting a defective anti-cancer gene is thought to make a person more likely to develop cancerous changes when exposed to environmental toxins, radiation, or carcinogens, than someone without this genetic flaw.

If a screening test becomes available, however, it still won't take the place of things that can be done now to possibly prevent cancer by changes in lifestyle habits.

White Ribbon Campaign promotes Pornography Awareness Week

Pornography Awareness Week is set for Oct. 25-Nov. 1 and Pampa residents will participate in the White Ribbon Against Pornography campaign set for that time.

The campaign is sponsored by the New York-based Morality in Media, and will be coordinated by the local chapter of the American Family Association.

The main purposes of the campaign, according to information from AFA, are to urge obscenity law enforcement, to increase public awareness about the effects of pornography; and to request that local merchants discontinue the sale of pornography.

Janey Hopson, AFA spokesman, coordinator of the upcoming White Ribbon campaign, is organizing the distribution of white ribbons to local churches and businesses who wish to let the community know they are concerned about pornography in the community. Those who wish to participate may contact the group by calling 665-1459, 669-9501 or 665-0726.

"We sincerely hope our efforts will help checkmate the illegal pornographers in order to protect decent community standards," Hopson said.

Morality in Media is a national, interfaith organization opposed to pornography.

Winners announced in children's literature awards

BOSTON (AP) — Authors Cynthia Rylant, Pat Cummings and Ed Young have won the 1992 Boston Globe-Horn Book Awards for Excellence in Children's Literature. The awards are presented to authors and illustrators of outstanding titles in fiction, non-fiction and picture book.

Rylant won in the fiction category with her book, "Missing May" (Orchard Books). Cummings, winner in the non-fiction category, is editor of "Talking with Artists" (Bradbury Press). Young, reteller and illustrator of "Seven Blind Mice" (Philomel Books), won in the picture book category. The winners receive a $500 cash prize from The Boston Globe.

A committee of three judges evaluated thousands of submissions from United States publishers. The judges also named several honor books: "Nothing but the Truth" by Avi (Orchard Books) and "Somewhere in the Darkness" by Walter Dean Myers (Scholastic Books), fiction; "Red Leaf, Yellow Leaf," written and illustrated by Lois Ehlert (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich), and "The Handmade Alphabet," written and illustrated by Laura Rankin (Dial Books), non-fiction; "In the Tall, Tall Grass," written and illustrated by Denise Fleming (Holt), picture book.

This is the 26th year for the awards.

Mystery men rise to occasion in World Series

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

TORONTO (AP) — It happens almost every fall, a mystery man slips out of the shadows and into the brilliant light of the World Series, capturing not only the moment but recreating an enduring legend that is the essence of baseball.

He lives the fantasy of anyone who ever swung a bat or pitched a ball or breathlessly raced over the outfield grass to snare a drive that saved the game.

It is the stuff of Hollywood, the chemistry professor who suddenly becomes a pitcher, a kid from Brooklyn who takes over as manager, a farm boy who crushes a ball with his lightning-bolt emblazoned bat, a milk maid who catches a pop-up behind her back and makes the Hall of Fame.

In the World Series, baseball at its highest level, we are reminded by the likes of Toronto's Ed Sprague and Atlanta's Damon Berryhill that the game thrives on extraordinary efforts by ordinary men as much as it does on the heroics of its stars.

There is a rich tradition of such happenings, and true baseball fans savor the details of all of them as if they were personal triumphs. And in a way they are — affirmations that normal-sized mortals can achieve a degree of immortality in baseball that is denied them in sports like football and basketball.

The pinch-hit, ninth-inning homer by Sprague, a third-string catcher, that won Game 2 for the Blue Jays shocked more than the homer by Berryhill that carried the Braves to victory in Game 1.

Both, though, became linked in World Series history with men who rose from obscurity to fame in dramatic fashion and are still remembered mainly for those brief moments of glory.

A year ago such a man was Mark Lemke, a 5-foot-9 backup second baseman for Atlanta who hit .226 his first season and .234 his second. Suddenly in the World Series, he hit .417 in six games, including a 12th-inning single to win Game 3 and a triple that led to the winning run in Game 4.

"I play better under pressure situations because I like being in them; I want to be in them," said Lemke, who has two hits so far this series after returning to mediocrity during the season. "Sometimes you can prove things to yourself, like, 'Hey, you're able to come through in those situations.'"

"I don't have any fear about not coming through. I just love to have that opportunity where you can be the decisive run or knock in the decisive run. You think about it as a kid."

Long before Lemke was born, there was Dusty Rhodes doing the same kind of thing for the 1954 New York Giants against Cleveland. He played only 82 games that year, but was a master of pinch-hitting as he went 15-for-45. In the World Series, he batted 3-for-3 as a pinch-hitter, 4-for-6 overall, with two homers and seven RBIs.

In the first game of that Series, Willie Mays made his most memorable catch, back to the plate and sprinting out to center field to haul in Vic Wertz's shot with two on in the eighth. That preserved a 2-2 tie. Rhodes won the game in the 10th with a pinch-hit, three-run homer.

In Game 2, Rhodes hit a pinch-single in the fifth to tie the game and homered in the seventh in a 3-1 Giants victory. In Game 3, Rhodes pinch-hit in the third inning with the bases loaded, driving in two runs for a 3-0 lead en route to a 6-2 win. Rhodes rested in Game 4, but Cleveland had seen enough and collapsed anyway.

Two years later, a New York Yankees pitcher who had gone 11-5 with a 3.26 ERA during a rather undistinguished season suddenly became the most celebrated man in baseball.

Don Larsen, knocked out of Game 2 of the World Series after giving up a hit and four walks in 1 2-3 innings, took the mound in Game 5 and pitched the only perfect game in Series history. No hits, no walks, no errors, nothing but Brooklyn Dodgers going to the plate and returning to the dugout, and Larsen looking like a combination of Cy Young and Bob Feller for one glorious day.

Al Weiss had a taste of that celebrity when he hit .455 in five Series games for the 1969 Miracle Mets after hitting .215 during the regular season.

Gene Tenace, now a Toronto coach, batted .225 with just five homers in the 1972 season for Oakland, then turned around to tie Babe Ruth's record of four homers in the World Series while hitting .348. In Game 1, he became the only player to homer in his first two Series at-bats as he knocked in all of Oakland's runs in a 3-2 victory over Cincinnati.

There are plenty of other World Series wonders — Boston's Bernie

SCOREBOARD

Atlanta at Toronto (7:29 CDT) in Game 3 of the World Series. Atlanta left-hander Steve Avery faces right-hander Juan Guzman in the first World Series game outside the United States. The series is tied 1-1.

STARS

Ed Sprague, Blue Jays, hit a two-run, pinch-homer in the ninth inning to give Toronto a 5-4 victory over Atlanta in Game 2 on Sunday night. His game-winning homer came on his first career at-bat, only the 23rd player to accomplish that feat in 89 World Series.

STATS

Atlanta hit .155 with 10 walks in the first two games, while Toronto hit .203 with four walks. ... Toronto catcher Pat Borders is 3 for 6 in the World Series.

STREAKS

Toronto baseman Kelly Gruber is hitless in 22 at-bats. The streak matches the all-time record for consecutive hitless at-bats in the postseason. Dal Maxvill of St. Louis was 0 for 22 in the 1968 World Series and Gruber's teammate, Dave Winfield, had the same mark with the New York Yankees in the 1981 AL playoffs and Series.

SALES

A Toronto store sold more than 6,000 U.S. flags Monday, one day after a Marine color guard mistakenly displayed the Canadian flag upside-down before Game 2 in Atlanta. "I know they're planning to wave the American flags upside-down at the baseball game," said Janis Zealand, manager of the All Nations Flags Co. Ltd.

Atlanta reliever Mike Stanton and Toronto reliever Michael Timlin are both from the West Texas city of Midland and played at Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas.

Steelers blank Bengals, 20-0, in icy-slick conditions

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The calendar said October, the weather felt like December. Pittsburgh got its earliest snowfall in 20 years, the temperature dipped into the 20s and the Three Rivers Stadium playing field turned icy slick.

Maybe that's why the Cincinnati Bengals' offense went into the deep freeze.

Boomer Esiason has had four 300-yard games and a 409-yard game in his career against the Steelers, but he couldn't manage even 100 yards on a miserably cold Monday night. And miserably described Cincinnati's offense in a 20-0 loss to the tied-for-first place Steelers.

The Steelers had just enough offense and plenty of defense. The Bengals had nothing — no points, no momentum, no big plays, no offense, no defense, no rushing, no passing. No mas.

"We were pathetic," Esiason said after throwing for 86 yards, or about a normal quarter's worth of work against Pittsburgh. "We were inept."

Cincinnati's David Shula is the NFL's youngest head coach, but he probably feels about as old as papa Don. The Bengals are 2-4 after a 2-0 start and, what's even more discouraging, they must be wondering if any NFL team can play as badly as they did in this one.

The Bengals (2-4) entered the game with the NFL's lowest-ranked defense, but their offense was even worse. They managed only 118 yards — or only 10 more than Pittsburgh's Barry Foster ran for — and totaled only 14 yards in the second half.

Esiason played with a bruised right arm, but his ego was even more bruised.

"To get as few yards as we did is pathetic," he said. "I can't remember playing in a game where we had so few yards. I don't have any answers. ... If you stop believing you can win, you can't."

For a while, the Steelers (4-2) acted like they had stopped believing they could score. After an 3-0 start, they were held without a touchdown in losses to Green Bay (17-3) and Cleveland (17-9), two teams that will never be compared to the NFL's great defenses of all time.

The Steelers' nine-quarter streak without a touchdown finally ended on Dwight Stone's 24-yard touchdown catch late in the first half, two plays after his own 30-yard run on a reverse. He scored again in the fourth quarter on a 5-yard throw from Neil O'Donnell, following Jerrol Williams' recovery of an Esiason fumble at the Steelers' 20.

"Finally getting into the end zone gave us a lot of confidence," Stone said. "You keep wondering how long it's going to go on."

Gary Anderson added field goals of 21 and 27 yards as O'Donnell finished 23 of 37 for 287 yards and no interceptions.

The NFL's leading rusher also emerged from the game, and while his first name is Barry, it's not Sanders. Foster's fourth 100-yard game of the season gave him 642 yards for the season and moved him past Emmitt Smith of Dallas (581) and Ricky Watters (576) of San Francisco into the NFL rushing lead.

Even more surprisingly, the Steelers' 4-2 record tied them with Houston for the AFC Central Division lead. They'll get a better idea of exactly how good they are in the next month, when they play Kansas City, Houston, Buffalo and Detroit.

"It was a great feeling (scoring a touchdown)," Greg Lloyd said. "Something like that should have happened three weeks ago. We should be sitting on a 6-0 right now." "If we can get past this month ..." Foster said.

The Bengals don't know if they'll get over this night. They were shut out for the first time since a 34-0 loss to Cleveland in a 1987 strike game. Their last previous shutout defeat in a non-strike game was 14-0 to Buffalo in 1980.

The only time the Bengals seriously threatened, wide receiver Carl Pickens fumbled after an 18-yard gain to the Steelers' 21 and Pittsburgh's Sammy Walker recovered with just over a minute left in the first half.

"We just got nothing going," Shula said.

The shutout ended Bengals kicker Jim Breech's NFL record streak of scoring in 186 consecutive games. Breech, who kicked for Cal-Berkeley in the mid-1970s, said he had never before failed to score in a college or pro game.

"It's been neat. It's been fun," he said. "It's the first time I've ever seen a goose egg in a regular-season game. I don't think it's that huge a deal. ... I really feel blessed it's gone on as long as it has."

Shula probably hopes this doesn't go on much longer.

The Bengals are 5-17 the last two seasons and are already being booed at home, with more than half a season still remaining. Shula plans to rethink his team's offensive and defensive schemes, but he said massive change — either in personnel or the playbook — isn't likely.

"That's not the answer," he said. "You have the players you have. You have to look at what you're doing scheme-wise and what you're doing execution-wise. I'm fairly confident what we're doing is right. You just can't scrap the offense and bring in a whole new team."

NFL owners to discuss labor agreement

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — It seems to come up every few years — a problem that NFL owners can't solve.

Three years ago, it was picking a commissioner.

This year, it's getting some sort of labor agreement that will allow the league to go on with expansion, the draft and the rest of its future.

And it starts again today as the owners come together for their annual fall meeting, one that was expected a year ago to perhaps produce the names of the two new cities to which the league will expand.

But the September jury verdict which invalidated the league's limited free agent system — Plan B — has made expansion a lower priority than labor.

Judge David Doty, who heard the lawsuit that invalidated Plan B, has set Nov. 12 for motions on that verdict, and the NFL would like to have in place some sort of free agency plan of its own by then — assuming there will be no agreement with the players.

"I think we're moving toward a consensus on our plan," Jerry Jones, owner of the Dallas Cowboys, said Tuesday. "I don't know that we'll have something to announce from these meetings, but I think we'll make progress."

In addition, the owners are under increased pressure from more lawsuits, including one filed by Reggie White of the Philadelphia Eagles and two others that could mean complete free agency for the nearly 300 players who become nominal free agents on Feb. 1.

Normally, these meetings are formalities, designed to review the season's on-field progress, its finances and to set up the next season's exhibition schedule.

But this year, there had been plans to announce the two new expansion cities — the five finalists are Baltimore, St. Louis, Jacksonville, Memphis and Charlotte. However, at a meeting in Dallas last month, the owners put off that announcement pending a labor settlement, meaning that the 1994 expansion date is likely in jeopardy.

The new plan for player movement could include one that would allow players free agency after five years — what the owners have proposed in bargaining with lawyers for the players. However, it also would be likely to retain some system of compensation to a team losing a player, something the players have refused to accept.

Under the invalidated Plan B, each team protected 37 players each season with the rest — under contract or not — becoming unrestricted free agents. The jury did find, however, that the league had the right to keep some sort of system intact to retain players.

Mackovic anticipates Houston

AUSTIN (AP) — Saturday's game against Houston is important to more than just the Texas players, Longhorns coach John Mackovic says.

"Houston is one of those teams that can really whip you unless you're playing your best football, and they have done well against Texas in the past," Mackovic said.

Twice in recent years, the Cougars have rolled up 60 or more points against Texas. Houston won 60-40 in 1987 and 66-15 in 1988.

"Not many teams have scored 60 points on the University of Texas but Houston has done it twice in the past five years. This game is important for the Texas alumni, as well as the Texas players," Mackovic said Monday.

To prevent a repeat, he said, the Longhorns will need a well-rounded effort from the defense.

"We have to shore up our total defense," Mackovic said. "We can't stop just the running game or just the passing game. We have to be able to stop both if we are going to be successful."

The Longhorns (3-2 overall and 1-0 in the Southwest Conference) will play host to Houston (2-3, 0-1) at noon Saturday.

Mackovic said Houston's two-player quarterback rotation of junior Donald Douglas and sophomore Jimmy Klingler will keep the Texas defense on its toes.

"Houston tries to run the same offense with either quarterback in there but each of their quarterbacks are dangerous in their own way," he said.

"Klingler will stay in the pocket and make some throws while Douglas is quicker to pull the ball down and run with it. Our defense needs to be aware of which one is in the game so it can watch for those tendencies."

Cowboys go from worst to first

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — First place. All alone. Rarefied atmosphere for a Dallas Cowboys program in shambles just three short years ago.

"It's too early to get excited by the standings, but I like where we are," said Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson. "When I was at (the University of) Miami, we were always in first place."

Not since Tom Landry was coach, Tony Dorsett the running back and Danny White the quarterback have the Cowboys been alone in first place in the NFC East.

Until Sunday. The Cowboys beat the New York Giants 28-21 on Dec. 15, 1985, at Texas Stadium to capture a 13th NFC East division championship. The next year, Dallas' streak of 20 consecutive winning seasons ended with a 7-9 record and the Tex Schram-Landry regime began its slowfall.

Dallas used a late interception from Ray Horton Sunday to nip Kansas City 17-10 and move ahead of Philadelphia into first place in the NFC East for the first time in seven years with a 5-1 record.

"Our division will probably be decided on the 14th, 15th or 16th week of the season," Johnson said.

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman, still remembering a 31-7 Monday night loss to Philadelphia earlier in the season, said, "We're happy, but it's too early in the season to get caught up about who's in first."

Philadelphia and Washington each have two losses and trail Dallas by a game.

Dallas plays at the Los Angeles Raiders on Sunday, then returns to Texas Stadium for a rematch with Philadelphia on Nov. 1.

The Eagles lost to Washington 16-12 Sunday, and some of the Cowboys were scoreboard watchers.

"We really don't look at the other teams that much," Johnson said. "The more you do, the more apt you are to be upset yourself."

"It was terrific," guard John Gesek said of the Washington victory. "Hopefully, we can stay up there on top for awhile now."

It was the 10th consecutive home victory for the Cowboys, and Emmitt Smith at 23 became the youngest player in NFL history to reach the 3,000-yard plateau.

Aikman said he believes the Cowboys will be in the race to the end because of a balanced offense.

"We pride ourselves on the fact we can run and throw the ball," Aikman said. "But if we are going to stay atop the NFC East, we've got to quit killing ourselves with penalties. We had too many against the Chiefs, that's for sure."

Tackle Tony Casillas said the Cowboys are a threat to go all the way because the defense has started to jell.

"It's really coming around," Casillas said. "We shut them down to 10 points. When we needed to make a big play, we made one. When we needed to be physical, we did it."

Jordan sparks hurricane relief effort

MIAMI (AP) — Basketball's greatest scorer concentrated on rebounding Monday.

Michael Jordan and his Chicago Bulls teammates visited Miami seeking to raise money and spirits in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew. The trip was Jordan's idea.

The Bulls and Miami Heat conducted a 30-minute midday clinic at Miami Arena for 12,000 schoolchildren from hurricane-ravaged south Dade County. The teams returned several hours later for a charity exhibition game added to the schedule after Andrew hit Aug. 24.

Students ages 8 to 15, delighted to be hanging out with Jordan rather than sitting in a classroom, cheered his every move during the clinic.

"He can teach me how to dunk," said 14-year-old Dexter Roberts, who might stand 4-foot-6 in Air Jordans.

"He's shorter than I thought he'd be," said 10-year-old Kelvin Edwards, referring to Michael Jordan, not Dexter Roberts.

In warmups, every layup Jordan made brought a frenzied shriek from the crowd. He participated in shooting contests between the two teams, and when the Heat outscored the Bulls 20-18 in free throws, some youngsters bood.

Jordan spoke briefly over the public address system. "Being millionaires," he said, eyeing teammates with a smile,

"we felt a sense of obligation to come and help people who mean so much to us. We consider Miami part of our family — the NBA family. Hopefully the money raised will give you a little more determination to rebuild."

At a time when Jordan is making news for things other than basketball heroics, he clearly enjoyed hearing the children's cheers. The Bulls' star was confronted last week with a published report that he paid off a $57,000 gambling debt, and there was speculation he would miss the Miami trip because he must testify this week in the trial of a convicted drug dealer.

"No matter what you heard," Heat managing partner Lewis Schaffel said, "Michael was going to be here."

Ticket sales, which grossed about $400,000, will be donated to the recovery effort. The TNT network solicited donations from viewers nationwide during its telecast of the game, which Chicago won 111-94. Jordan scored 15 points.

"The kids are why we're here," he told reporters. "The game is a way to come together and reach out to try to help someone. I think we should do more of that."

Jordan was a unifying force for South Florida once before. In 1989, when downtown riots forced the postponement of a Heat game, Jordan and the Bulls played in Miami two nights later and helped to restore a sense of normalcy.

Monday's visit resulted from a conversation Jordan had with Heat partner Billy Cunningham while they were playing golf in North Carolina two days after Andrew hit.

"Michael said to Billy, 'What can I do? It looked terrible on television,'" Schaffel said. "All of this today came from those words."

The game drew a sellout crowd of 15,008. The Heat gave 700 seats on the floor to children.

"Instead of them going to the bigwigs in town," Schaffel said, "we let the kids who lost their homes — kids who are living in tents — sit in the best seats."

UIL wraps up meeting

AUSTIN (AP) — The governing body for academic and athletic competition among Texas' state public schools saved for today's wrap-up of a three-day meeting the controversy of whether high school football should continue to be a boys-only sport.

Approval by the University Interscholastic League's 24-member legislative council would pave the way for high school girls to play on varsity football teams next fall.

The UIL council, in its annual meeting at the Omni Hotel, also had before it a recommendation that girls be allowed to compete for a state championship in softball, beginning next spring.
