Summer jobs provide learning experiences

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

Many of the students at Pampa High School found this summer to be more work than play.

The students aren't complaining, however, because they earned some money from their summer jobs and learned a lot in the process — perhaps the most frequently-cited topic of their on-the-job education being how to conduct themselves responsibly in the workaday world.

"It made me grow up," said Heather Morgan, 16, an 11th grader at Pampa High School who worked part-time this summer as a sales clerk at Anthony's. "There are people depending upon me to be there at a certain time, and Mom and Dad depending on me to help support my car payments."

Morgan noted that her parents made a down payment on a 1990 Pontiac Grand Am that allowed her to have the vehicle in February and that she took over monthly car payments on the car in June.

Morgan has found that holding a job often implies postponing her social life. "You've got to get (to work) on time," the teenager observed, "and there's a lot of times when you want to go out with friends. Your priorities have to be straight. You've got to know what you want to do."

To be sure, Morgan's part-time job as a sales clerk affords her numerous opportunities to talk with high school peers. Because she works in the men's department of a clothing store, many of her customers are boys who attend Pampa High School, she noted.

Morgan said she has learned from the job that males are "pickier than women. When they're deadset on one item, they don't want anything else except that particular item. Women bend more easily" and are not as attached to any particular style and brand of apparel when they buy clothes, Morgan suggested.

Morgan also said she has learned that men and boys hate trying on clothes at the store before they make a decision on which items to buy.

Although the job has made Morgan more aware of how people dress, she noted, "I don't pick my friends by the way they look. I pick my friends by the inside. Just because a person doesn't have nice clothing doesn't mean that they're not the greatest friend ever."

Matt Weatherly, 16, a sophomore at PHS, also waxes philosophical when asked about what he learned from his summer job. Weatherly, who held a part-time groundskeeping job at Fairview Cemetery, said he learned to appreciate life more — an appreciation that grew deeper for Weatherly, he said, after a cousin of his died this summer.

"You never know when someone's going to die," Weatherly reflected. "They can die quickly. You better have fun while you're here. Don't be afraid to do things. Go ahead and be outgoing."

Weatherly said he has made several friends since the funeral of his cousin by talking with new acquaintances.

Another educational benefit for Weatherly from the cemetery job has centered on the value of education itself.

"Mainly I learned to go to college so I wouldn't end up (in a cemetery job) like the other guys working there," the Pampa youth said, adding that he was not aware of any employees at his cemetery job who were college graduates. Weatherly said he plans to pursue a career in chemical engineering.

Stefan Bressler, 17, a senior at Pampa High School who has worked at Chicken Express fast-food restaurant since May 1992, also found that holding a part-time job can enhance interest in other people.

"You learn to get along with people," Bressler commented, adding that he has become more patient because of his job. "I've learned how to be nice to people."

Among the practical skills that Bressler has learned are how to cook a greater variety of foods and how to count change from the cash register. Bressler has also developed a flair for memorizing prices at his restaurant job: without consulting a menu, he quoted the price for one item with apparent ease.

Pampa High School student Josh Rupert, 16, who this summer held his first job of any sort — as a part-time dishwasher and occasional cook at Coronado Inn — said he learned how to earn and save money from the experience.

With the approximately $500 that Rupert saved from his summer job, he took his first long trip unaccompanied by his parents — a July bus journey to Arizona, where he attended a church camp and visited relatives before returning 3 1/2 weeks later.

"It was pretty uplifting experience, especially for me," reflected Rupert, a 10th grader at Pampa High. "It felt like I was living on my own for a while."

Inmates conduct graduation ceremony for those earning their GED diplomas

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

It could have been anyone's high school graduation, because the elements were all there — beaming families, a hot gymnasium, thunderous chords of "Pomp and Circumstance" and proud graduates.

There was one big difference, however. These graduates didn't wear caps and gowns, but prison whites issued especially for the occasion.

Twenty-three men earned general equivalency diplomas Saturday at the Rufe Jordan Unit located east of Pampa. They are the first class of graduates of the Windham School located inside the unit.

Graduates were addressed by Dr. Dawson Orr, superintendent of Pampa Independent School District.

"I'm here to congratulate you for the work you've done at a different stage of your life," Orr said.

He noted that the new graduates had taken a step to overcome failure and they joined the ranks of such famous Americans as Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Edison and Albert Einstein, all of whom had less than auspicious beginnings.

Following the ceremony, which recognized class valedictorian Allan Harvey and class salutatorian Carlton Barney, the graduates and their families were treated to extra visiting time and refreshments.

During the reception period several inmates were willing to visit about their educational experiences and hopes for the future.

Inmate Randy Goolsby sat surrounded by his wife Terry and daughters, Jacy, 6, Jennifer, 17, Cami, 10, and Ami, 14, of Lamesa. "I feel good about (earning my GED)," he said enjoying the inmate-decorated cake provided for the occasion.

He expects to be released about November and hopes return to work in the oilfield where he spent most of his life. He is enrolled in the prison electrical school and plans to finish in September.

Mrs. Goolsby explained that she and her daughters drive from Lamesa once a month to see Mr. Goolsby. She described coping with her husband's incarceration like this: "We're a strong Christian family, that's the main thing."

drove six hours to see their brother and son, Denny Humphries, earn the diploma.

Inmate Humphries expects to return to truck driving when he leaves the Jordan Unit, but wants to study major appliance repair first. Maybe, he said a little wistfully, he could have his own business.

"That's what I'd like to see you do," Mrs. Humphries told her son.

Humphries explained that he never failed a grade in school, and liked it "okay," but quit anyway in ninth grade for no particular reason.

"Let me tell you what I think. I think he got too smart," explained Mrs. Humphries.

"I'm glad I got my GED," he responded, "But I'd rather it'd been a parole."

Harvey, class valedictorian, and Barney, class salutatorian, weren't joined by their families for the occasion. Harvey said he had only one living relative and Barney's nine children and their mom are in San Antonio.

Both men said that military service and family obligations interrupted their high school careers.

Harvey, a Vietnam veteran and Baytown native, said that rather than take his chances with the draft, he quit school to enlist so he could choose his branch of service.

Barney dropped out of school to care for his siblings when they were abandoned by their parents, then married young and began to raise his own kids. It seems that there just wasn't time to go back to school, he said.

With 172 days left, Harvey said he's looking forward to freedom. He expects to go back to his job as an instrument technician, where he once earned $40,000 a year and traveled coast to coast working in construction.

When the day of freedom comes for Barney, he wants to return to his work as a chef, maybe even own his own restaurant.

Should that not work out, Barney has a back up plan: he is enrolled in electrical trades vocational training and, time permitting, he wants to study auto repair. He believes that free-world demand for those jobs will help him make a living for his family.

The hardest part of earning a GED was maintaining concentration, he said. He noted that one prison teacher in particular, Terry Ferguson, is unfailingly enthusiastic and "treats him like a person."

"I wanted something better in my life," said another inmate.

David Ramirez wants his four kids in Tacoma, Wash., to be proud of him. The determination to succeed — to get a GED, to be chemical free, comes from inside the person, the man said.

When speaking, Ramirez refers frequently to the role of Christianity in his life and he doesn't regret going to prison.

"The penitentiary gave me a chance to get my life straightened out," he said.

Training school challenges skills of Pampa firefighters

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Four representatives of the Pampa Fire Department recently returned from College Station after participating in a week's worth of training at the state's, and perhaps the world's, best fire fighting school.

Fire Chief Claudie Phillips, Capt. Paul Jenkins, Equipment Operator Ricky Stout and Firefighter Tom Hoover participated in last month's 64th Annual Municipal Texas Firemen's Training School held at Texas A&M University.

Training at the five-day school covered a wide range of topics necessary for firefighters to perform a job that is becoming ever more challenging.

One such topic covered in classes was the structure of building. Phillips said, "We actually covered a good bit on structure collapse. There are just so many people that get caught in a collapsed building. They go in and it comes down."

While many people might think a building built in the past few years is superior to older buildings in safety, that is not necessarily true, according to Phillips, who has 30-years of experience in fire fighting and occasionally teaches at the Texas A&M training school.

"What most people don't realize is that an old structure like this (Fire Station #1) will hold up pretty good because it's concrete and steel, pretty good old steel," Phillips said. "The newer buildings, these little strip shopping centers and some of these big supermarkets ... can collapse in as little as seven minutes."

Another problem firefighters have to face are the complex plastics in other building materials that are used today.

Even products like storm windows and other forms of insulation can be potential problems for firefighters.

"Now you have all your plastics and everything and it burns hotter," Phillips said. "Back then (in years past) most of the houses ... (had) lots of cracks and you didn't have storm windows and it would let the heat out. Nowadays, we are so closed up and so insulated that the heat builds up quicker."

Jenkins, who has taught at the school for two years, instructed other firefighters in proper ventilation techniques, specifically positive pressure ventilation. The idea behind positive pressure ventilation is to force the smoke and fumes from the house with the help of a powerful gas-fueled fan.

"These fans, you set them back 5- or 6-feet, depending on the door, and you tilt it so you can get a cone over that door and you'll pressurize that house."

Before turning the fan on, a window or door is opened as close to the fire as possible. When the fan is turned on, the windy draft in the house in turn removes the smoke, which makes it easier and safer for firefighters to work.

While Phillips and Jenkins were teaching at the school, Stout and Hoover attended the pump maintenance class. The class involved pump operation theory, maintenance and repair, testing, drafting and proper pumping procedure.

Each year, the Pampa Fire Department sends firefighters to the training school, which accommodates between 2,000 and 2,500 firefighters from Texas, the United States and other countries.

Next month, training for area fire departments will be conducted in Canyon over a two-day period. Phillips said Pampa firefighters might participate in that training as well.

Minimum wage loses its value for Mexico's workers

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's minimum wage lost 64 percent of its value between 1976 and 1992, a study by the country's leading federation of labor union says.

The study, reported Saturday by newspaper La Jornada, cites the loss of purchasing power and growing unemployment as two of the most serious problems facing Mexican workers.

During that same period the Mexican economy has suffered rampant inflation and devaluations of the peso, which went from 12 pesos to $1 in 1976, to just over 3,000 in 1992.

The Confederation of Mexican Workers estimates that 29 percent of the work force, or 7.25 million people, earn the minimum wage, currently just under $5 per day.

Fort Worth suburb stops prosecuting DWI cases

FORT WORTH (AP) — Authorities of one suburb have stopped charging suspected drunken drivers with driving while intoxicated, saying they can no longer afford alcohol breath tests that have also caused concern in other cities.

Sansom Park Police Chief Ron Mackey said the department stopped filing DWI charges months ago to protest a $20 fee for testing a suspect's blood alcohol level on an instrument called an Intoxilyzer 5000.

Instead, police in Sansom Park, which has a population of about 4,000, are charging suspected drunken drivers with public intoxication. Public intoxication is a lesser offense that requires no alcohol breath tests, Mackey said.

"I haven't filed a DWI (charge) in six months," he said.

Police in two other Fort Worth suburbs, Lake Worth and River Oaks, said they are now less aggressive in filing drunken driving charges, due to a shortage of funds and personnel.

Fort Worth-based Forensic Consultant Services, which certifies all Intoxilyzer tests in Tarrant County, began charging departments a fee for each test in February.

The company's owner, Max Courtney, said he was losing money on the breath testing services. He said he regrets that the fee was discouraging tests, but added that it is not his company's role to subsidize DWIs.

Because other small cities also cannot afford the fees, Mackey said he is worried that DWI enforcement will be endangered all over Tarrant County.

WCD adopts budget

Following a budget hearing last week, the board of directors of Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District adopted a budget of $153,700 for 1993-94.

The tax rate for 1993 was set at $.0085 per $100 valuation at the Wednesday meeting. This is the same tax rate the district has had the last two years.

Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District includes all of Gray, Carson and Donley counties and portions of Armstrong, Potter, Roberts and Hutchinson counties.

Pope remains strong on church principles

DENVER (AP) — Pope John Paul II issued an uncompromising declaration of church principles Saturday, summoning American Catholics to shun artificial birth control and battle abortion.

Wading into issues that have caused strains between U.S. Catholics and the Vatican, the pope also said that "polarization and destructive criticism have no place" within the church.

"Building an authentic civilization of love must include a massive effort to educate consciences in the moral truths which sustain respect for life in the face of every threat against it," he said in a speech at a sports arena.

He said Roman Catholic Church teaching on moral questions is more relevant than ever, especially "relating to the transmission of life and to the inalienable right to life of the unborn."

The pope also raised the issue of sexual abuse by priests, acknowledging that the U.S. church has been tainted by scandals.

He said he shared the concerns of U.S. bishops for the "pain and suffering" caused by the sins of some priests, though he stopped short of endorsing specific punishment.

Critics have attacked the church for failing to expel offenders from the priesthood. The pope has appointed a panel of Vatican and U.S. church officials to study the problem amid reports of at least 400 cases of sexual abuse by U.S. priests.

"While every human means for responding to this evil must be implemented, we cannot forget that the first and most important means is prayer: ardent, humble, confident prayer," the pontiff said.

"America needs much prayer — lest it lose its soul."

The pope, in the third day of a four-day U.S. visit, made the remarks at McNichols Sports Arena to an audience of Denver Catholics and representatives of other churches.

On the issue of birth control, where surveys have shown that church teachings are widely ignored, the pontiff pointed to the 1968 encyclical Humanae Vitae that banned artificial contraception and endorsed what the church calls natural family planning, based on avoiding sex during periods of fertility.

He said more efforts must be made to educate couples in "this form of conjugal chastity."

He also decried urban violence. "The whole society must work to change the structural conditions which lead people, especially the young, to the lack of vision, the loss of esteem for themselves and for others which lead to violence," he said.

Special Olympians ready for softball team action

The Pampa Go-Getters take on the Fritch Achievers Tuesday night at Hobart Street Park in Special Olympics softball.

"This is a unified softball team," said Go-Getter coach Lorri Marcellus. "Each team consists of five Special Olympians and five sports partners."

The teams play by American Softball Association rules.

"This is the first year for Pampa to participate, and it's proving to be quite an experience," she said. "If it weren't for a lot of kind-hearted organizations and friends, this wouldn't even have become reality. It would still just be a dream."

Marcellus said they are on the ball field for the fun of playing softball.

"We are out there first and foremost to have fun," she said. "If by chance we win, great. If we don't, well, we'll get them next time."

The Pampa team is scheduled to play Fritch at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Hobart Street Park softball field.

Special Olympian players include Steve Counts, Mark McMinn, David Wagner, Jennifer Roden, Sheila Coble and Donald Stuart. Dicky Don Henricks is the bat boy.

Sports partners include Tamara Dreher, Sandy McCoy, Sheila Scheutze, Stephanie Cooper, Wil Winborne, Dena Brasier, Keri Brasier, Lora Carlisle and Jason Dyer.

Marcellus is the coach. Rey Cardenas is the assistant coach.

Jurors acquit Altman of BCCI fraud

NEW YORK (AP) — A jury acquitted Washington lawyer Robert Altman on Saturday of all charges in the BCCI-bank fraud trial, capping a highly publicized, marathon case.

Jurors found Altman, 46, was innocent of four felony counts that alleged he engaged in a scheme to defraud bank regulators and submitted false records for filing with regulators.

Prosecutors had charged the deceit allowed the outlaw Bank of Credit and Commerce International, a bank to dictators and drug barons, to secretly gain control of a major U.S. bank, First American Bankshares Inc. of Washington.

Five other counts had been dismissed earlier that alleged Altman received bribes from and engaged in a conspiracy with BCCI and falsified business records.

The acquittal comes after some five months of testimony, which included 45 witnesses and hundreds of documents describing in painstaking detail BCCI's role in the 1982 takeover of First American Bankshares Inc. by a group of wealthy Middle Eastern investors.

Rancher to air views on state of the nation

A Pampa native and Carson County rancher will air his views in Panhandle Tuesday and Pampa Wednesday concerning the state of the nation.

Lee Cockrell, former world champion calf roper, will speak at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the War Memorial Building in Panhandle and at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Lovett Memorial Library about what he perceives as the greatest threat to the country.

"It is time for voters to take back their country," he said. "The biggest threat to America is not a foreign power. It comes from within. The number one problem facing the United States today is lack of competent people willing to serve their country for a time as lawmakers."

A Carson County resident who ranches next to Pantex, the nation's nuclear weapons assembly and disassembly plant, Cockrell claims he's not affiliated with a political party. He said he is simply a concerned citizen.

"The first step to correct the existing problems is to replace the lawmakers who have created the problems," Cockrell said. "Throw the rascals out and get good qualified businessmen."

"Here is the problem. It is next to impossible to get good people to run for a law-making office. People have to be encouraged to run. When an elected lawmaker votes against the wishes of 80 percent to 90 percent of the voters in his district, that district no longer has representation."

"That happened in several states this month when congressmen voted for the largest tax increase in the history of the world against the will of the people they were elected to represent. That happened to the people of the Panhandle," he claimed.

Cockrell said Congressman Larry Combest, who represents the southern part of the Texas Panhandle and Lubbock, took a poll of more than 2,000 citizens in his district. The results from his office on the poll were 4.8 percent for a tax increase and 95.2 percent against a tax increase.

"He voted the will of his people; however, the Amarillo congressman voted against the will of his district and killed the Combest vote," Cockrell claimed.

"What Amarillo got was taxation without representation. Our founders fought and died because of taxation without representation. What can you do to protect your rights, your freedom, insure majority rule, and save the free enterprise system? Get involved in electing a representative who you can trust to vote the will of the majority," Cockrell said.

The rancher said the poor voter turnout at elections is "a disgrace to the country."

"Don't let the American way die because of neglect while liberals try to turn the United States into a socialist state. Stand up and be counted and, more important, demand your count be adhered to," he said.

Cockrell, who grew up on the family ranch outside Pampa, now farms and ranches near Panhandle and has business interests in Amarillo. He is perhaps best known for his roping exploits, winning the World Championship in 1966 and finishing second in 1968 and 1974. He is the only roper to win the so-called Grand Slam — rodeos at Madison Square Garden, Cheyenne, Calgary and the Cow Palace in San Francisco.

The 60-year-old Cockrell is still active on the senior roping circuit.

Latest Braun trial begins Wednesday

ARDMORE, Okla. — Jury selection begins Wednesday in the capital murder trial of Gregg Francis Braun for the July 1989 murder of flower shop clerk Gwen Miller.

District Attorney Fred Collins said he "absolutely" intends to press for the death penalty if a conviction of Braun is secured. He said the incident for which Braun is charged includes a series of aggravating circumstances which makes such a sentence applicable.

Collins said the trial could begin as early as Thursday and should last three to five days once it is under way.

Braun allegedly shot Miller during an armed robbery of the floral shop. Another female clerk and a customer were wounded in the incident.

He faces one count of first degree murder, two counts of shooting with the intent to kill and two counts of robbery with a firearm.

Braun stands convicted and sentenced to life prison terms for similar incidents in Kansas and New Mexico. He is also charged in Texas for the 1989 attempted robbery and murder of Pampa businessman Edley Perry "Pete" Spurrier.

Determining which state Braun will go to prison in will be done after he is tried on all the charges he currently faces.

According to Collins, sentencing a convicted killer to capital punishment in Oklahoma partly depends on whether a reasonable risk of death existed for more than one person in the incident or if the subject poses the threat of future violence.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Let's strike out the striker bill

With consumer confidence dropping, unemployment rising and new taxes about to dig in, the last thing businesses and citizens need is another assault. But that's just what could happen if the Striker Replacement Bill becomes law. The bill already has passed the House of Representatives; President Clinton announced he would sign the bill. Fortunately, the bill remains stuck in the Senate—for now.

Under existing law, workers can strike against a company. But the company can hire new workers. The Striker Replacement Bill would alter that balance, banning companies from hiring permanent workers at the wage-level paid to the striking workers. Once the strike was settled, the company would be forced to re-hire all the striking workers and to fire all the replacement workers.

Perhaps most egregiously, even non-union companies could be shut down this way. Suppose 40 percent of the workers at a non-union company went on strike, shut down the company and idled the other 60 percent of the workers who didn't want to strike. Only temporary, lower-wage workers could be hired to replace the strikers. To get the company back in production the company would have to deal with the union representing the striking workers. In effect, 100 percent of the workers would become hostage to the union's demands even though 60 percent of the workers (and the management) opposed the union.

The bill was proposed by those brontosaurus of the Senate, Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio. The bill is a last gasp by labor unions and their supporters to halt the inexorable decline in union membership, from 36 percent of the workforce in 1955 to just 16 percent today.

The irony of the Striker Replacement Bill is that it would hurt everybody, including union workers. As described by Peter J. Ferrera in a study for the Heritage Foundation, "Employers cannot compete for long in the market if they pay above-market wages. Consequently, union jobs will be lost until their compensation is brought into line with the market. Along the way, however, many employers and other workers also will be brought down, resulting in job losses and slower economic growth."

It only makes sense that if government coerces companies into accepting exorbitant union demands, those companies will produce less. And reduced production means fewer jobs. The Senate should strike a match to the Striker Replacement Bill.

Big lies — and junk science

Hitler said, "The broad mass of a nation ... will more easily fall victim to a big lie than to a small one." That's the spirit behind the junk science of today that Congress uses to gain greater control over our lives.

What we're being told about AIDS is a good example of junk science. Rethinking AIDS, a publication of the San Francisco-based Group for the Scientific Reappraisal of the HIV/AIDS Hypothesis, points out that female prostitutes often have 200 to 300 partners per year. You'd naturally assume they would have much higher exposure to HIV/AIDS than the vast majority of heterosexuals and contribute to an explosion of the disease.

Paradoxically, according to the March edition of Rethinking AIDS, no heterosexual epidemic has occurred, and no evidence of female prostitutes transmitting HIV/AIDS into the heterosexual community exists for any Western nation. Prominent researchers in the United States, Germany, Spain, Italy and Britain conclude that the acquisition of HIV by men from female prostitutes is almost always drug-related.

The near absence of HIV among non-drug-using prostitutes is not due to safer sex. Studies have reported that 5 percent to 50 percent of prostitutes were seropositive for syphilis and hepatitis B virus. Antibodies to chlamydia, herpes and gonorrhea were present in 95 percent to 100 percent. While politicians and the medical profession don't have the guts to say it, much of the AIDS plague is a result of the drug-using, indiscriminate homosexual lifestyle sanctioned and advocated by liberals. If you don't live that lifestyle, you run little risk of HIV/AIDS infection.

The bulk of junk science comes from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). It puts out breathless lies like: Kitchen appliances and cellular telephones cause cancer. It's now investigating the possibility that showers are linked to cancer because chemicals in tap water are more fully released in the spray of a shower. Then there's the EPA-sponsored hoax that secondhand or passive smoke is a class-A carcinogenic along with asbestos and benzene.

The February 1993 edition of the Washington-based Complete magazine reports that Yale University epidemiologist Alvan Feinstein, writing in the Toxicological Pathology journal, reported he heard a prominent leader in epidemiology support EPA's work on passive smoking, saying, "Yes, it's rotten science, but it's a worthy cause. It will help us to get rid of cigarettes and to become a smoke-free society." That's it in a nutshell: Scientific lies are being used as a means to control us.

Then there are "scientific" predictions. Dr. Paul Ehrlich, environmentalist guru and mentor to Vice President Al Gore, told Britain's Institute of Biology in 1969, "If I were a gambler, I would take even money that England will not exist in the year 2000." And we thought British Prime Minister John Major only had to worry about his economy.

Junk science has penetrated and captured some of our most prestigious institutions, like the National Academy of Sciences. Back in 1977, it warned of a new ice age. Evidence it gave was, "Duration of the snow cover, animal migration, sea surface temperatures and microfossils on the ocean floor, not to mention declining average global temperatures." Now, it has switched tunes, telling us that the earth is warming.

Here's the plot as Sen. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., confessed, as reported in Michael Fumento's Science Under Siege, "We've got to ride the global warming issue. Even if the theory of global warming is wrong, we'll be doing the right thing, in terms of economic policy and environmental policy."

Remembering Reggie Lewis

Denial is the first reaction. How can I have a heart problem? I'm young, I'm strong, I'm an athlete, and I don't hurt anywhere.

The doctor has made a mistake. Mama would have done anything to save a dollar in 1962. That's because she was a rural elementary schoolteacher in Georgia and didn't make many of them.

I was 15 and needed a physical in order to play in a state baseball tournament, and she had heard of a new doctor who had a little practice in the little town of Grantville, a few miles south of Moreland, Georgia.

He had to be cheaper, she reasoned, than the lordly doctors in the county seat of Newnan.

The Grantville doctor, just out of medical school, said I had a heart murmur. He said I might grow out of it, but I ought to keep it checked.

Next, I thought, he's going to say I can't play in the baseball tournament. He's going to say I can't ever play ball again, and I'll wind up one of those mama's boys who plays piano and belongs to the Spanish Club.

My mother had brought me to some discount doctor who's going to ruin my entire life, and there's no question he's wrong. Denial.

He didn't do that, however; he gave me the go-ahead for the tournament, and I played sports through high school and mostly forgot about having a heart problem.

But then came 1968. The army didn't want me because of my heart, and somebody suggested I'd better go see a first-rate cardiologist to get to the bottom of this thing once and for all.

Lewis Grizzard

That somebody was my wife. So I did. He didn't call it a heart murmur anymore. He called it an aortic insufficiency.

"So what's going to happen?" I asked him. "You'll have to have that valve replaced eventually," he said.

"When?" "Oh," he replied, "in about 15 years."

I'm certain Reggie Lewis of the Boston Celtics professional basketball team had the same reaction as I did when he first learned he might have a heart problem. Denial.

There's something wrong with my heart? Man, I can go one-on-one with Michael. I can jump out of the gym. I'm young, I'm strong, I'm a professional basketball player, and I don't hurt anywhere.

And I'm making all this money. I'm living my dream. Some doctor's going to tell me I should quit basketball!

So Reggie Lewis found himself a doctor who said he could play basketball. That's what second opinions are for, right?

I likely would have tried to do the same thing in 1962 had that doctor said I couldn't play ball anymore. I wasn't making any money at it, of course, but it was the biggest thing in my life at the time.

Coming off my own brush with death after my third heart surgery in March, I couldn't help attaching a personal angle when the news broke that Reggie Lewis had collapsed on the basketball court and had died a few hours later.

Did you read that awful note about how Reggie Lewis's widow got the news? A family friend called to tell her. He was leaving a message on the answering machine when she broke in and said, "I'm going to be a mommy."

She had just learned she was pregnant with the couple's second child.

I don't think you can go around trying to blame doctors for this. Reggie Lewis had collapsed during a game earlier and had been told that continuing to play basketball was risky.

And this was no 15-year-old kid. This was a 27-year-old man with a family.

And physicians can't force patients to do anything.

I probably should have had the dreaded heart catheterization test before my recent surgery, but I flatly refused. It might have alerted doctors I was in worse shape than originally expected.

The doctor who said I would probably need heart surgery in 15 years missed by two months.

For the record, these people have very few bad shooting nights.

Will voters OK affirmative action?

My adopted home state of California seems destined to be the lead-dog of the American sled in everything from cuisine to tax and term limitations. So it is no great cause for surprise that what may well prove the next great battle over the future of American society is taking the form of a popular initiative designed to appear on the California ballot in November 1994.

It is called the California Civil Rights Initiative, and the current proposed form of the full text reads as follows:

"The People of the State of California find and declare that race, ethnicity, national origin, sex, or religion are not legitimate criteria for conferring or denying preferential treatment to any student or prospective student in any matter in this State's public educational system; any individual or firm in any matter concerning public contracting; or any employee or prospective employee in any matter concerning public employment or the terms and conditions of public employment.

"Use of the prohibited criteria in any of the foregoing ways shall constitute a violation of the California Constitution and shall be actionable in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"Nothing in this section shall be construed as prohibiting the enforcement of, or conflicting with, federal statutes of the United States Constitution.

"If any part or parts of this section are found to be in conflict with federal law, the amendment shall be implemented to the maximum extent permitted by federal law. Any provision held invalid shall be severable from the remaining portions of this section."

At first, the casual reader may see nothing controversial about this proposal. After all, it just outlaws the commonest types of discrimination in public education, public contracting and public employment, doesn't it? Who could object to that?

But in recent decades radical liberals in the White House, Congress, the state legislatures and the courts have been edging us ever closer to discrimination in all of these categories. In its most blatant form, this process has resulted in fixed quotas for various minorities, and is rightly called "reverse discrimination." More subtly, it is promoted under the rubric of "affirmative action."

Whatever it is called, however, the American people are overwhelmingly against it. Most Americans favor genuinely non-discriminatory policies — which, you will note, are exactly what the CCRI mandates. But virtually every scientific survey of public opinion shows that less than 30 percent of Americans support racial and sexual preferences, which the CCRI would outlaw. What's more, the opposition is remarkably bipartisan: A 1987 Gallup Times-Mirror poll found that, nationwide, two-thirds of identified Democrats and over four-fifths of identified Republicans are opposed to preferences.

And yet, political and judicial ideologies have kept right on shoving "affirmative action" down the throats of the American people. At last, voters in California will get a chance to have a say in the matter. If the CCRI wins, we can expect similar drives in the 22 other states that allow voters to express their will directly, through the initiative process.

We must expect that the CCRI will be fought tooth and claw by the entrenched interests that are busy imposing reverse discrimination on ever wider areas of Americans society. But they are vastly outnumbered, and they know it. The CCRI will strike something very like terror in their hearts.

The small group of Californians who have drafted and are promoting the CCRI need all the help and advice they can get: It will take 615,958 valid signatures just to put the initiative on the ballot. Their address is P.O. Box 11795, Berkeley, Calif. 94701-2795, or messages will be taken at 1-510-644-4256. Don't be deceived by that Berkeley address! This is a mainstream proposal, and will have tremendous conservative support.

Letters to the editor

He's not that Gattis

To the editor:

My name is Gary Gattis. I am 6 feet 5 inches tall, weigh 200 pounds. 41 years is my age and I have blue eyes. I do own and operate GATTIS APPLIANCE & ELECTRONICS at 207 N. Cuyler in Pampa, Texas. I call Pampa my home now just because I graduated from High School here but also because of the people and their spirit to succeed. I love Pampa.

But I have a big problem that I have to straighten out. I am not the Gattis that is promoting the smoking ordinance. In fact, I am not, as far as I can tell, even related to this gentleman. So I will appreciate if people who are calling, making statements and hanging up without an answer will stop. Also I would appreciate it if the letter writers would also sign their letters so I will know who not to turn my back on. I opened this store to be able to supply products and service to this area at Amarillo prices and I feel like in most cases I have succeeded, so please allow me to continue this.

So there will not be any questions, I stopped smoking over 6 months ago so I understand that it is a disease. But when does discrimination begin? I have always believed in the personal rights of individuals and business, the inherent right of being able to make your own decisions within the confines of your own property.

Because of this belief I am adamantly opposed to the government coming into my place of business and telling me how to run it. I believe that each individual will have the intelligence to make their own decision based on the circumstances presented to them. I am a businessman and I respect what my customers think.

In closing, I hope people know that I do have the best interests of Pampa in my heart and I hope they will continue to give myself and other Pampa merchants a chance to succeed. Because your personal opinions do count with me.

Gary Gattis

No need to hire a helper

To the editor:

I read with amusement The Pampa News article dated Aug. 3 about the hiring of a reserve officer for the constable of Precinct 1. Of course, there are political overtones here, but let's just look at each of these positions for now.

The Gray County veterans officer was appointed by our commissioners court. The salary of this part time position is $1753.76 per month. Being a veteran of Gray County, I asked several veteran friends if they had ever used these services of this office. They, as well as myself, couldn't understand why we even have the office. Who would turn down a gift of this caliber each month for part time work and no supervision? There are also benefits and retirement as well.

When the constable in question solicited my vote prior to his election my question was, "Are you quitting your full-time employment with IRI?" He assured me this was his plan immediately after being elected. Nearly a year has lapsed since that statement, and he is still employed full time with other sideline incomes as well. According to county treasure records, in addition to his salary and benefits he is charging us simple taxpayers a whopping mileage of 80 plus miles a day seven days a week. Quite a feat for a man with so many jobs.

Our gifts to this part time employee is in excess of $1800 per month plus benefits. If any county job can be handled by working part time, we either need to adjust the pay accordingly or eliminate the position entirely. The last thing we should do is hire a helper.

Tax increases cause debt

To the editor:

"Cut spending before additional taxes," so said over 60 percent of the voters in the country. I suspect there was the same percentage in the 13th Congressional District. This request went unheeded by our representative, Bill Sarpaulis, who apparently was more concerned with his party's leaders than his constituents in the 13th District.

In the past 50 years, deficits have never been reduced by tax increases. In fact, tax increases have caused greater debt, since Congress always find boondoggle projects on which to spend the additional revenue.

When "reduced government spending" is mentioned we are told there are only two places to cut — "Defense and Social Security." I have a summary of the Grace Commission report listing over 600 specific items of waste that should be cut; this amounts to over $50 billion per year in savings.

Included in this list are unwarranted subsidy payments, congressional perks, duplication of services by several departments, reduction of staffs of various agencies, elimination of no-longer-needed bureaus, collection of debts on money "loaned" to students and others (who are in arrears), curtailment of waste and graft in the Food Stamp program, revamping the material procurement in all agencies of the government, reviewing and revamping the Federal Employees pension system, and many many more areas to reduce "wasteful" spending.

There is nothing quite as irritating, to me, to hear "we have cut everywhere possible." This indicates our elected officials do not have the intestinal fortitude to make cuts for fear they might lose a vote. It is time the voters flexed their muscles and made some changes in the congressional make-up.

It has been interesting to read Bill Sarpaulis' "apology" for voting for a "deficit reduction budget" that has $2 spending for $1 budget reduction. How does this result in a "deficit reduction"? Remember 1994 — congressional representatives' terms end, and 1996 — the presidential term ends. We the people, Republican and Democrat, have an opportunity to reclaim our government and reward those who have ignored us.

Voicing concerns gets results

To the editor:

Christian Leaders for Responsible Television (Clear-TV) called for a boycott of S.C. Johnson Wax Co. in March of this year. After monitoring their television advertising for more than two years, Clear-TV found their record did not confirm the company's claim of "living up to its high ethical standards." Donald Wildmon, executive director, and the 1000 Christian leaders asked that the public write or call S.C. Johnson & Son, on Aug. 9, 1993. Clear-TV has canceled the boycott. S.C. Johnson stated that after reviewing the observations of Clear-TV, they would be tightening their policies.

Donald Wildmon stated that the reason for the change of heart was because of the many phone calls and letters written by pro-family consumers.

The ABC Television Network plans to show soft-core pornography in September of this year with their new program NYPD Blue. American Family Association of Pampa was informed by Jim McCormick of KVII-Channel 7 that he has asked the network for permission to delay broadcasting of this new series until late night viewing (after 10:30) and if he does not get permission, he will not be showing the series.

Voicing our concerns does get results! Please be encouraged by these reports. Remember we are practicing our First Amendment rights by speaking out. As Christians we have the right to voice what we feel is "Christianly correct." Advertisers need to know that we do not appreciate their sponsoring TV programs that attack our values and families. Our freedom of choice is to be wise stewards with selective purchasing of products from companies that do not sponsor sex, violence, perversion and anti-Christian values.

We appreciate C.S. Johnson & Son for listening and Jim McCormick, program manager of KVII-TV, for the stand that he has taken.

Minding your own Business

By Don Taylor

Climbing the ladder

One of my wise friends defines success as having as much money when you retire as your friends wish they had. He tells a little story about a farm implement dealer who retired with a million dollars in the bank. That, my friend said, was real success.

My friend went on to say that he asked that John Deere man what factors he attributed his success. The retired dealer said it was due to 35 years of hard work, paying strict attention to costs and expenditures, dealing with integrity, and to the recent death of a great uncle who left him $994,000.

That is a success story if I've ever heard one. Most of us are not fortunate enough to have a rich relative who leaves us so well off.

I realize that some of you may not agree with my wise friend's definition of success. I'm not sure that I agree with a description of success that equates the worth of an individual with the size of their bank account. Personally, I've known some "no accounts" that had a lot of money.

However, I've never met anyone who would choose poverty and failure over success. Most folks I know would prefer wealth, success and respect from their peers. Be that as it may, I'm certain we all have differences in how we define success.

Defining Success

Roy L. Smith said, "Success isn't measured by money earned but by service rendered." Elbert Hubbard wrote, "Some men succeed by what they know; some what they do; and a few by what they are." Ben Sweetland said, "Success is a journey, not a destination."

Even wise philosophers have different definitions of success. However, we probably can agree on one point: We should not base our level of success solely on the end result. The true measure of success should consider how much progress we make in our journey toward our destination.

Perhaps I can illustrate this point with an example or two. Take, for instance, a physically disabled person who overcomes adversity to live a reasonably normal life and support a family. This person may be a much greater success than a physically gifted athlete who earns millions from tennis shoe endorsements. Another example might be a poor person who through hard work rises above that poverty to become completely self-sufficient. That individual's success may soar above the rich son's rise to become president of his father's company.

Success, when considered in this light, is personal. It is a process of striving for what you really want to achieve. It is climbing the ladder to a point where you can enjoy thoroughly what you are doing and are compensated adequately for doing it.

Success is to reach a point of fulfillment with one's own life. Will Rogers said, "All there is to success is satisfaction."

One Rung at a Time

What about those of us who are not satisfied with our position in life? How do we climb the ladder of success? What can we do to attain the respect, wealth, honor, fame or whatever we feel would satisfy our innermost longings? How do we achieve the fulfillment of our dreams?

We climb the ladder of success one rung at a time. And, as the old English Proverb says, "He who would climb the ladder must begin at the bottom." While this answer may appear simplistic, it is accurate.

Next week we will share how some very successful people view success. We will show you how to set your ladder on a firm foundation. We will give you five common rungs found on every successful person's ladder. Don't miss "Climbing the Ladder," Part II.

Bauer Financial Reports Inc., of Coral Gables, Florida, a bank research and rating firm, has announced that Lefors Credit Union, Lefors, Texas, has once again been awarded Bauer Financial Reports' five-star rating.

This is the sixth consecutive semi-annual period that Lefors Federal Credit Union has earned this nationally recognized award ranking it superior for safety, strength and performance.

The rating is based on the analysis of Dec. 31, 1992 financial data as filed with federal regulators.

A five-star rating, for the safest credit unions in the country, indicates that the credit union's deposits are federally insured up to $100,000 per account, that its regulatory capital exceeds 8.0 percent of assets, that there are no excessive delinquent loans or repossessed assets and that the credit union was profitable for the six-month period ending Dec. 31, 1992.

"Lefors Federal Credit Union has displayed uninterrupted excellence. It is a well capitalized credit union that comes highly recommended. The community of Lefors Federal Credit Union's members and neighbors should be particularly proud of its continued ability to merit our highest rating, five-stars," said Paul A. Bauer, president of the research firm.

Norman has 1-stroke lead

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — The sweetest victory Greg Norman could imagine is in his grasp going into the final round of the PGA Championship at Inverness, the scene of one of his most heart-breaking losses.

Norman's 67 Saturday gave him a 1-stroke lead over six players as he bids to become the first player since Tom Watson in 1982 to win back-to-back major titles and the first to win the British Open and PGA in the same year since Walter Flagen in 1924.

PGA championship

Watson, seeking to complete a career Grand Slam a month before he turns 44, is one of those standing between Norman, history and his revenge at Inverness.

It was here in 1986 that Bob Tway holed a bunker shot on the 72nd hole to steal the PGA Championship from Norman, who led Tway by 4 strokes going into the final day. Norman shot 76 that day and the shocking loss sent his career into a tailspin that didn't end until his brilliant British Open victory last month.

At the start this week everyone figured Watson would be too preoccupied with making his final choices for the U.S. Ryder Cup team to make a serious run for the one major title he doesn't own. Not so.

"I'm ready to make my picks," he smiled mischievously, "but I'm more ready to win the PGA. I turned a 75 into a 70 today with some good putting and a couple of chip-ins."

Watson — trying to become only the fifth player in history to win the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open and PGA — chipped in to save par on the 7th, and chipped in a second time for a birdie at 14 to go 9-under.

"I don't have too many years of playing the type of golf I'm playing right now," he said. "Tomorrow may be my last chance. I don't know. I hope it isn't. I know one thing: I'm there, I'm playing well. You'll see Tom Watson trying his damndest tomorrow to win."

Hale Irwin, Lanny Wadkins, Paul Azinger, Bob Estes and second-round leader Vijay Singh all are grouped with Watson, a stroke behind Norman's 10-under-par 203.

Nick Faldo, Scott Simpson, Dudley Hart and Brad Faxon, who shot 65 Saturday, lurk just another stroke back.

Tougher pin placements and faster greens took their toll as scores rose and produced a free-for-all round during which eight players held or shared the lead. As in the British Open, the leader board is filled with champions of majors.

"I think everybody up there has performed well recently or in the past in their careers," Norman said. "I've said right from the beginning that this is a golf course where nobody is really going to distance himself during the whole week. It's going to be a bunched-up tournament and that's exactly what we've got going into Sunday."

"This golf tournament is like the British Open — nobody's going to give it to you. You've got to go out and earn it because there's so many great players within 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5 shots of the lead."

If Norman is right, all 20 players within five strokes of him have a shot at the title.

Norman's hoarse voice cracked from a bout of flu he's been fighting for a couple of days that he said has weakened him. He sure didn't look ill on the course.

Norman was looking at a bogey on the 10th, his ball sitting in a swale 45 feet from the pin. But he pitched it into the hole from there for a birdie and a share of the lead at 8-under. Then he separated himself from the pack with birdies at the 13th and 14th.

His crowning moment came on the 18th, after he drove through the fairway and landed in thick rough on the side of a hill. Standing off balance, he lofted his approach directly over the flag and the ball spun to the fringe. From there, he barely missed a birdie putt, and tapped in for a lead-saving par.

Azinger, chasing his first major title, had a chance to catch Norman on the 18th with a 6-foot birdie putt. But he hit it too softly and the ball broke off left and finished short of the hole. Azinger stormed away, raised his putter over his head and swung it down as if it smash it to pieces. He thought better of that, and stopped just in time to leave it undamaged for the final round.

Buddy Epperson tees off in the Men's division Saturday in the first round of The Pampa News City Championship at Hidden Hills. Joan Terrell, also pictured, is the Ladies division leader.

Terrell, McCullough tied for lead in Pampa News City Championship

Barry Terrell and Frank McCullough are tied for the lead at 74 after Saturday's first round of the fourth annual Pampa News City Championship at Hidden Hills.

Terrell had to rally on the back nine after trailing McCullough by two strokes in the Men's championship flight. McCullough had three birdies and just one bogey on the first nine holes, but double bogies on No. 11 and No. 13 helped Terrell catch up. Terrell has won the tournament two of the past three years.

Cory Stone is just one back at 75, followed by Mark Wood at 76 and Mike Handley, 81.

In the Senior Men's division, Bob McGinnis is atop the leaderboard at 73 while Elmer Wilson is two strokes back at 75. Next are Jimmy Cantrell and John Darby tied at 79.

Joan Terrell leads the Ladies division with an 84, followed by Sharon Crosier at 86, and Linnie Schneider, 91.

Bucks close out two-a-days with annual watermelon race

At White Deer, there's a football tradition that could be a little unique, even by Lone Star standards.

To celebrate the end of two-a-day practices, the White Deer players conduct the annual "watermelon run," where freshmen and newcomers run four blocks to Freeman Brothers Grocery to fetch watermelons for the upperclassmen. That's the easy part. The younger players then must tote the melons back to the football field, running all the way.

"Whoever wins the race gets the least harassment, but it's a fun deal. It's a matter of being accepted for the younger players. Everybody gets to eat watermelon after it's over with," said Bucks' head coach Stan Caffey. "After the eating is over with the players might put the rinds on and wear them like hats. It's something special."

Winning this year's event was freshman Torey Craig, who opened up a big lead down the

Rangers fall to Indians, 6-3

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Indians think Jim Thome is ready to prove he's in Cleveland to stay.

"The last thing we wanted to do was set Jim back by bringing him up too quick," said Indians manager Mike Hargrove after Thome's two-run home run capped a three-run eighth inning in Cleveland's 6-3 victory over the Texas Rangers on Friday night.

"That's why he stayed down (in the minors) so long," Hargrove said. "We know he can play. We're not idiots."

Paul Sorrento, who hit one of Cleveland's four home runs, singled home Albert Belle to break a 3-3 tie in the eighth. Thome followed two batters later with his fourth career homer off reliever Craig Lefferts (3-8).

Thome, 22, was recalled Thursday from Class AAA Charlotte.

Eagles notch exhibition win over Jets

By BARRY WILNER
AP Football Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — With all of those high-priced veterans flying away from the Eagles, what could be better than some fresh-faced rookies making major contributions?

Philadelphia, which lost Reggie White, Keith Jackson and Keith Byars to free agency — and probably will see Clyde Simmons and Seth Joyner depart the same way after this season — was sparked by the work of Victor Bailey and Vaughn Hebron in a 24-13 victory over the New York Jets on Friday night.

Bailey, a second-round pick from Missouri, caught a 42-yard touchdown pass from Randall Cunningham off a fleaflipper. He had 90 yards on four receptions.

Hebron, a free agent running back from Virginia Tech, rushed for 67 yards on six carries; broke free past linebacker Mo Lewis for a 41-yard reception that set up James Joseph's 3-yard TD run; and has 153 yards on 22 carries (a 6.9 average) in exhibition games.

"He did some amazing things," coach Rich Kotite said of Hebron. "I think he's for real."

Toward the end of the game, Kotite felt somebody tap him on the shoulder. It was Hebron, who said, "Thanks for the opportunity, coach."

Hebron lost a fumble early in the second quarter. He didn't let it bother him for long.

"I didn't want to end on that note. I was really down," he said. "I can't afford to make those mistakes. But my teammates were really behind me and the coaches had confidence in me."

Cunningham, who looked sharp in one half of action — he was 9-for-13 for 181 yards and two scores — said he has lots of confidence in Bailey. As does Kotite.

"Victor Bailey is dangerous once he gets the ball," Kotite said. "The best thing about him is he's got the ability to turn a little play into a big one."

The biggest one was the fleafliper, which gave Philadelphia a 14-6 lead.

"I told him to just stick with his route and I'd get the ball to him," Cunningham said. "Before he even had time to think about making a move, the ball was in his hands."

Cunningham also got the ball to veteran Herschel Walker's hands and Walker made a nice spinning catch between defenders for the Eagles' other TD. Roger Ruzek added a 32-yard field goal.

But Philadelphia was sloppy, with 10 penalties — five by defensive tackle Keith Millard for offside. The Eagles also lost linebackers Byron Evans (fractured right hand) and William Thomas (sprained right knee), running backs Siran Stacy (sprained right shoulder) and Joseph (pulled right hamstring).

The defense frazzled Jets quarterback Browning Nagle in the first half. Nagle was 4-for-15 for 45 yards and threw a weak pass that William Frizzell intercepted in the end zone.

"We blitzed quite a bit tonight," Joyner said, "and I was able to break through their blockers quite often and stay in his face. At times, he was somewhat rattled and it threw him off his game."

Boomer Esiason had more success in the second half. The veteran, who is likely to be named the Jets' starter very soon, was 6-for-8 for 67 yards and guided the Jets 88 yards to Scottie Graham's 4-yard run for their only touchdown.

"Physically, I feel fine," Nagle said. "I was able to take the lumps they gave. I got myself in situations where I try to do too much and I've got to work on that.

"I made a poor decision on the interception by not waiting on my guy to shake free and I forced it."

The Jets did have some nice runs, especially by newcomers Adrian Murrell, a rookie, and Johnny Johnson. They also saw top pick Marvin Jones do well, if not spectacularly, in his debut after a contract holdout.

And defensive end Jeff Lageman, New York's best defender until he tore up his knee 11 months ago, returned.

"I'd like to have been in on more plays, but it's preseason," said Lageman, who saw action for the first two series. "I just have to get more plays and get ready to play an actual game. I was a little more rusty than usual."

Palmer wins discus at National Masters meet

Pampa schoolteacher Wendell Palmer added another discus championship medal to his collection by winning the event Friday at the TAC National Masters meet in Provo, Utah.

Palmer, who competes in the 60-64 age division, had a winning throw of 185.9 in the 1-kilo discus. Merleer finished a distant second at 165.5, while Stewart Thompson was third (158.5), Harry Hawk, fourth (154.2) and Len Olson, fifth (149.9).

"Wendell was so excited about winning. He saves all his energy for the discus. He tries to send it to the moon," Palmer's wife, Barbara, said.

Palmer is the Masters world record best in 189-0 which he set last year at the Oil Capitol meet in Andrews.

Three years ago, Palmer won both the discus and shot at the National Masters, which was held in San Diego, Calif. Earlier that same year had won the discus at the World Games in Eugene, Ore.

Palmer competed in the javelin throw late Saturday to wind up the meet. He placed second in both the shot and hammer throw earlier in the week.

BASEBALL

KOHLER, Wis. (AP) — Baseball players want owners to put their no-lockout pledge in writing.

"Until you get on the altar and get the old marriage license signed and delivered, it's nothing. People walk away from the altar all the time," Detroit Tigers player representative Mike Henneman said Friday, a day after owners announced their move. "But it's very encouraging."

After owners failed to agree on a revenue-sharing plan after approximately 30 hours of meetings in a 36-hour span, management negotiator Richard Ravitch announced the lockout decision along with a promise not to change work rules before opening day. The two promises virtually eliminate the chance of a work stoppage prior to the middle of next season.

Donald Fehr, head of the Major League Baseball Players Association, was in Colorado on Friday and Ravitch said he hadn't spoken with him since the meeting concluded. "Until we hear from Ravitch and the owners, we're not going to comment," union lawyer Lauren Rich said in New York.

Players sounded relieved that a possible confrontation was put off. "It's definitely a positive step," Milwaukee Brewers player representative B.J. Surhoff said.

"I think it's a good sign. It means we'll have baseball next year. I think there are some things that have to be ironed out and it's not a guarantee. But it looks good," Colorado player rep Joe Girardi said.

"We don't want to sit out. We want to play. I'm happy for the fans. I doesn't seem that the owners are unified on what they want to do. It looks like this will stay the same for another year and then we'll see what happens."

Ravitch said Thursday night that he didn't understand the necessity of a formal document.

"Normally in 60 years of life, when I made a commitment like that on behalf of a group I represent, people don't ask me to put it in writing," he said.

Field day to highlight ag technology

ETTER — The cost of fuel and agricultural chemicals are among the major expenses in crop production for today's farmer. While costs for these inputs continue escalating, farmers continue looking for ways to reduce fuel consumption and the amount of chemicals used in farming operations.

On Wednesday, Aug. 18, during the annual field day events hosted by Texas A&M's Agricultural Experiment Station and Agricultural Extension Service at the North Plains Research Field Station near Etter, farmers will be able to see some graphic examples of new technology developed to cut operating costs while protecting the environment.

Field day activities begin at 9 a.m. with free coffee and donuts followed by a tour of turfgrass research plots.

At 9:30 a.m., Harold Wiedemann, agricultural engineer with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Vernon, will conduct a demonstration on machine efficiency and fuel consumption. Data will be relayed directly to a viewing screen from a tractor specially outfitted with computers while it operates in the field. Wiedemann also will show new operating techniques, such as "shift-up, throttle back" (SUTB) which fosters a reduction in fuel consumption as much as one-fourth.

At 10 a.m., Brent Bean, Extension agronomist, Amarillo, and field day chairman, will be joined by Clay Salisbury, Amarillo Experiment Station agronomist, for a discussion of current cropping systems research.

Moore County Extension Agent Robert Harris will discuss results obtained in varietal tests on grain sorghum and corn followed by a report from Bean on what's being done to isolate and identify what may be a new type of corn virus.

John Sweeten, Extension agricultural engineer from College Station, will review the environmental impact of manure applications to cropland.

A computerized field spot sprayer will be demonstrated by Clay Salisbury, TAES agronomist, Amarillo, who will discuss the economic and environmental benefits associated with this new technology. The sprayer, manufactured in Australia and marketed in the U.S. by a company in North Dakota, enables the farmer to target pesticide treatments to small or large weed infestations, causing a significant reduction in the amount of chemicals released into the environment.

Jerry Michels, TAES entomologist, Amarillo, will provide an update on greenbug resistance to insecticide and current research with biotype 1 greenbug.

Field day events conclude with a noon lunch sponsored by the North Plains Ground Water District No. 2. Meal reservations can be made by calling (806) 935-6401. Several area legislative officials are expected to be on hand for much of the morning's activities.

The North Plains Research Field Station is located 9 miles north of Dumas on Highway 287. For more information, contact Brent Bean at (806) 359-5401 or your local county agent.

Monday is deadline for delayed tax forms

DALLAS — Most taxpayers have already filed their 1992 Federal Income tax returns. But for the 219,000 Dallas District (northern half of Texas) taxpayers who opted for automatic extensions of time to file, the deadline is approaching. Monday, Aug. 16, is the due date for these taxpayers to file their tax returns.

According to Gary Booth, Dallas District director, "It is important for taxpayers who have not yet filed to do so by Aug. 16 to avoid penalties. Relief is available for people who cannot file the return or pay the tax due."

Taxpayers with special circumstances, such as hardship, that prevent them from preparing and filing their tax forms may request an additional two-month extension that will give them until Oct. 15 to file. These taxpayers will be granted the extension even if they cannot send in payment of outstanding 1992 taxes with their extension request.

Taxpayers granted the additional time to file will not be penalized for late payment of tax if they pay the balance of their 1992 tax when they file the tax return by Oct. 15 and if 90 percent of their total tax for 1992 was paid by April 15.

To request the additional time to file, taxpayers must send Form 2688 to the IRS by Aug. 16. IRS will advise them in writing if their requests are granted or not. Those who are not granted the additional time must file within ten days of the denial letter. Form 2688 is available from all IRS offices. Last year, 1.4 million additional two-month filing extensions were granted by IRS.

Taxpayers who do not request the additional extension should be certain to file their tax returns by Aug. 16 even if they are unable to pay the tax they owe. Filing the tax return will avoid the late filing penalty, which is 5 percent per month of unpaid tax.

Those who file but cannot pay may request a monthly payment plan by attaching Form 9465, Installment Agreement Request, to the front of their tax returns. Outstanding tax balances are subject to interest charges, currently at a rate of 7 percent a year, and the late payment penalty of one-half percent a month.

Form 9465 is available from all IRS offices or by calling 1-800-TAX-FORM. A taxpayer who is unable to obtain the form may instead attach to the front of the return a handwritten request for a monthly payment plan. The request needs to include name, Social Security Number, the amount of tax outstanding and the number and amount of monthly payments the taxpayer will pay.

Since January of this year, approximately 24,000 Dallas District taxpayers have requested monthly payment plans.

Death toll climbs in Thailand hotel collapse

KORAT, Thailand (AP) — Guided by cries for help, workers burrowed into the suffocating wreckage of a collapsed six-story hotel Saturday to try to reach survivors. Sixty-two people, including a U.S. Air Force officer, have died.

But the death toll was certain to mount.

Police Maj. Suchin Mitpanich said at least 100 people were buried under the debris, although search teams put the number at 30. No one knew how many were still alive.

The stench of death spread across the site. But workers could hear people calling out for help from beneath the wreckage and held out hope of finding them before they succumbed to injuries and exhaustion.

The Royal Plaza Hotel, advertised as the finest in this provincial capital 130 miles northeast of Bangkok, crashed down on Friday into a pile of concrete and twisted steel. About 350 people were injured, most of them seriously. The hotel collapsed as about 200 people attended meetings, one for provincial teachers and the other for employees of the Shell (Thailand) Co. Ltd.

Police suspect the collapse was related to the addition of the three top floors in 1990. They were holding for questioning the hotel owner, architect and an engineer who worked on the project.

Wittaya Wongwacharakarn, the hotel's general manager, denied that shoddy construction was to blame. He said the hotel's shareholders met Saturday and agreed to pay $2,800 to relatives of those who died, $400 to the seriously injured and $200 to those who were slightly injured.

Searchers tunneled out a cave at the building's base, trying to reach a woman trapped in the hotel coffee shop.

"I have talked to her over the last two hours," said Budin Intaratanon, a volunteer worker. "She can't speak, she just doesn't have the strength."

Workers emerged from the tunnel caked with dirt, gasping for air. Others rushed to pour water over them from plastic bottles.

"It's dark and hot down there. You can't stay down there for very long without oxygen," Budin said.

A man standing on a heap of debris above the coffee shop said: "There is a man down there who keeps asking for water, but we can't locate him."

According to police, three foreigners were killed: Janet Monsley of Finland, a Japanese woman and Master Sgt. Lamont Canda, a Filipino-American. He was caught under the falling building when he stopped at the hotel to send a fax.

Lady Bird suffers small stroke

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson was released from the hospital Saturday after being treated for a minor stroke.

Mrs. Johnson, 80, was admitted to Georgetown University Medical Center on Thursday after becoming ill while on an East Coast trip, said Betty Tilson, assistant to the former first lady.

"She did suffer a small stroke, and the doctors have firmly advised her to forgo all activities for awhile and then to strictly limit them from then on," Ms. Tilson said.

Mrs. Johnson left the hospital Saturday morning, said Sara Bernstein, a medical center spokeswoman.

The former first lady will stay with her daughter, Lynda Johnson Robb, and son-in-law, Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., in their Virginia home, Ms. Tilson said.

Mrs. Johnson is the widow of former President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Observations and advice from those who've done it

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

Just last spring three Pampa young people were at the zenith of their high school careers. They tasted the sweet, sweet flavor of success in academics, music and athletics which bred a spirit of optimism and confidence carrying them right into college.

But entering college was different — no name recognition, no instant respect — but instead, an unfamiliar environment to be met and mastered.

Troy Avendanio, Joy Cambern and Shelley Vinson lived through that rite of passage. Recently the trio gathered at Lovett Library to visit about their experiences as college freshmen. They arrived primed to tell about what happened to them, what they saw and what they thought about it.

Among the stories about eating at Taco Cabana at 2 a.m. and roommates who vacuumed every day, were some words of advice from three who were closest to what the Class of 1993 is about to experience — going to college.

"It's no joy ride," said Joy Cambern, who spent her freshman year at Texas Tech. "If you pass — great."

and an in-dorm Bible study.

Vinson made friends on the job, as well as the dorm. Actually, Vinson held down two jobs while she went to school, as well as participating in Collegiate Choir and Baylor 21, a music group which performs contemporary Christian music.

Making friends, Cambern said, had a lot to do with one's value system. She said she discovered that one could be friends with people who are very different.

"It lets you know your values are not the only ones out there," she said.

The three emphasized that young people should get out to know and experience different things during their college career.

Emotional aspects of leaving home, invoked some personal responses from the young people.

Avendanio admitted to missing his family and friends.

"I talked to my best friend two times a week from there," said Vinson.

Vinson said she wanted to be in touch with her friend's life, and besides which, they can talk about anything.

Cambren went to school with her best friend, Tanya Elms, but she talked to her mother at least daily.

Having her best friend nearby was a great support.

"If we needed to talk, we'd talk," Cambern explained.

Newly made friends became a "family away from home," Vinson explained, and Cambern agreed that it was easier to buddy with on-campus kids who are going through the same things.

Avendanio's experience making friends was a little different. Guys, he said, don't open up as much as girls, though near the end of the school year, openness among his suitemates was higher.

"My attitude is ... I'm their friend and I care how they feel," he said.

Guys, however, don't press the issue of their friends' feelings, like girls do. He agreed that girls seem to talk an issue to death.

If leaving is one issue, then returning home is another.

"One of the very hardest things is coming home this summer," Cambern said. "You are a totally different person, honestly."

Vinson said her parents were "cool" about her homecoming. As for Avendanio, he said his mom worries no matter what and his dad reinstated his high school curfew.

Questions about alcohol and drug use on campus, brought near polar responses. Cambern said that at Texas Tech "alcohol was everywhere" but it is not allowed in dormitories. Sorority pledges are not allowed to drink. At Baylor, Vinson said, the alcohol policy is "strict."

She noted that she had friends who drank and friends who didn't. On the campus, students may be reprimanded for alcohol consumption, whether they are under or over 17-years old.

She noted that to pass required ever so much more than the professor said. Vinson and Avendanio agreed that studying efficiently became a priority item in their lives.

"If kids want to party ... don't expect to pass," said Vinson, shaking her head.

The three attended different universities of varying sizes and traditions. Cambern attended state-funded Texas Tech in Lubbock, with nearly 30,000 students. Vinson spent her freshman year at 12,000-student Baylor University, a Baptist-affiliated school in Waco. Avendanio attended Trinity University, with about 2,500 other students, in San Antonio.

Avendanio made friends through dormitory life. He participated on an intramural sports team call Deekwich and an intramural soccer team. He joined the Trinity Wind Symphony and Catholic Student Group.

When asked if his fellow students shared similar values he responded: "Values? Not all of them. In general, they were good people."

Cambren, on the other hand, made friends through Kappa Kappa Gamma. Thirty young women were in her pledge class, and from that group came the majority of her friendships, she said. Another source of friends was the Baptist Student Union Trinity University takes a different approach, Avendanio said. Two dorms allow alcohol for those over 21-years old.

An amazement to Cambern was how open she found some students to be about using illegal drugs. The extent of illegal sports gambling really surprised her.

Avendanio said on the Trinity campus, drug use was "uncommon."

"I never felt pressured to take drugs. You seemed to have a choice," he said.

Vinson was adamant: "I never saw it. I don't want to be around it."

She said that lack of parental accountability encouraged some students to experiment with drugs and alcohol in new ways.

"I think when you get away from your parents and you don't have to face your parents, you can come in drunk and not face your parents."

Academically, the three admitted that they were not prepared for the level of studying required. Or as Avendanio explained, he used his old high school study habits for about three weeks and they worked fine, but he discovered pretty quickly he was going to have to bear down to do the work. He realized he needed to study weeks in advance of a quiz or final not the night or even week before. The legendary "all nighter" they advise against because of the ensuing fatigue.

"If you do everything in college that your teachers in high school told you, you'd do fine," Vinson said.

Sometimes, she said, she studied to the point of nausea.

suitemate given to early morning warbling, however, created a problem for the other three young men in the suite.

Getting along is not a given. Vinson said, though she believes both parties sharing a room really do want to compromise and live compatibly. Cambern said that students need to be willing Baylor fraternities and sororities do not have black members, nor many minorities of any background. Some black students, she said, have their own Greek groups.

Avendanio found it odd that Trinity is about 80 percent Caucasian, even though San Antonio is about 70 percent Hispanic.

The discussion ended with a list of admonitions for Pampa students to help them get along on their campuses: "They need to learn about other cultures." "Be considerate. Apply the Golden Rule to eliminate a lot of problems." "Don't take your grades, your social life and money too seriously." "Put mistakes behind you."

Vinson's final sighing comment as the three young people gathered up their things to go was: "It's just so much fun."

"It's just so much fun." Shelley Vinson student at Baylor University

In agreement, Cambern said, "They better get their priorities straight before they get there."

Roommates were another topic. Vinson roomed with a camp friend she had known for seven years. She described herself as busy and messy, while her roommate was a studious neatnik. Vinson allowed as how a little more privacy might have made the difference in compatibility. The pair decided to remain friends, though not roommates, this fall.

Cambren on the other hand, had the perfect roommate in a PHS classmate. Avendanio's roommate was a Muslim from Pakistan, with whom he discovered he had much in common. They got along great, he said. A to talk about their differences and Avendanio urges a respect for one another's property and privacy.

Vinson advises against bringing all that one owns, because she discovered that she wanted new clothes when she arrived at Baylor. Her first purchase was a braided belt. There is a definite Baylor style, she admitted — Dooney and Bourke purses, and an upscale look, even for class. Teva and Birkenstock sandals are in at both Baylor and Texas Tech.

Finally, the students discussed racism, which has been a hot issue on many American campuses. By their lights, on Texas campuses, racism is not a problem. Vinson acknowledged that

UNFULFILLED INTENTIONS

One of the most frequently used excuses for disobedience by both saint and sinner, is, "I know I should and I intend to, someday, but..." To be able to choose the most convenient of days or times to serve God faithfully certainly would fit in with the ease to which we are accustomed in this day and time. It seems that many are reluctant to put forth any great amount of effort to serve God. Jesus taught that following Him was a daily responsibility (Lk. 9:23). Whether it is easy or difficult, convenient or inconvenient is not considered. Whatever is required, under any and all circumstances, one is to faithfully follow Christ if he is to receive the eternal reward.

It seems that the frequent excuse of intending to follow Christ someday, is in order to do other things which are of more interest to the individual. Studying God's word, worshipping Him in spirit and in truth, living unspotted from the world are all responsibilities which require time and effort. These things do not accidentally happen. They happen because of a desire to make them happen.

In the parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25), we see, in contrast, those who made some preparation and those who made additional preparation in order to be absolutely sure they made it into the marriage feast with the bridegroom. It is obvious that the five wise virgins had given thought to the occasion, planned things accordingly, and then put forth the effort necessary in order to be ready when the bridegroom came.

If a person truly believes the word of God, then he will realize spiritual perfection in adequate preparation. Certainly one has to have the intent in order to realize any completion of service, but intentions, alone, will not attain it.

The apostle Paul exhorted the Ephesians to "redeem the time" which means to "buy up the opportunity" (Eph. 5:16.) Time is running out for all of us. When our sojourn on this earth is over, then we must give an account of ourselves to God (2 Cor. 5:10; Rom. 14:10-12.) Therefore, intentions must be fulfilled.

NAMELESS IN CHICAGO

DEAR NAMELESS: It doesn't take very long to say, "How lovely!" And there's an outside chance that some people DO care.

The reasons for the gallery display are varied. Some are there because the executive himself (or herself) likes to look at them. Others are there because the spouse has put them there. Some want to crow a little. And some are there for "protection." (I am told that some people need a subtle reminder that the doctor, dentist or lawyer is a family person.)

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a 55-year-old mama's boy who gave his girlfriend an engagement ring in 1970 but does not allow her to show it to anybody because he doesn't want his mother to find out?

Well, I am the girlfriend. I have gone with Arthur for 10 years, and I am pretty sick of this setup. I met his mother just once, when Arthur brought her to the eye doctor. He let me go along for the ride. He never told her I was his girlfriend, though. The problem is, Arthur's mother has money, and she says if he marries, she will leave it all to the church.

He was so confused two years ago he wrote to you, and you told him to talk to his pastor. He said he did, and the pastor told him he was lucky to have such a wonderful mother.

What am I supposed to do now? I am 48 and not getting any younger.

Service contracts: What do they mean for consumers?

If you plan a major purchase this summer—a new car, an air conditioner, refrigerator or the latest in CD players—there are some things you should know about service contracts.

Consumers need to know what to say when a salesperson asks if you would like to buy a service contract to cover your purchase if it needs repairs. But just what does a service contract pay for, and do you need one when you have a warranty?

A service contract, also called an extended warranty or a service agreement, is a kind of insurance you can buy to cover your purchase if repairs should be necessary. It is not the same as a warranty. A warranty is a guarantee from the manufacturer period. But a service contract may be purchased with, and in effect during a warranty to cover repairs the warranty does not. Be sure to avoid duplicate coverage by comparing your warranty with the service contract you're considering.

Auto service contracts are generally more complicated than appliance contracts. They may be managed by dealer, manufacturer or an independent company known as an administrator. Find out which you'll be dealing with before you buy, and check their record with your local consumer protection office. Prices range from a few hundred dollars to more than $1,000 for the contract. In some cases, you must also pay a deductible every time your car is serviced. Some contracts may also limit how much they'll pay for expenses like towing, so you may have to pay the difference.

Whether you choose to purchase a service contract or not, sooner or later your appliance or car will need repairs. Find an authorized repair center by calling the number listed in the warranty or service contract, if either is in effect, or in the product manual. Going to an unauthorized shop may void the warranty or may not be covered by your service contract.

Before you leave your appliance or car with a service center, ask if there is a charge for an estimate or diagnosis. Find out if they charge for labor by the hour or charge a flat fee. And be sure you're given a written estimate with a clear description of what repair will be done, a claim check with the date, the shop's name and phone number, and a description of your appliance or car by brand, model and serial number. The counter or repair person should sign the claim check. If the repairs are covered under your warranty, "no charge" should be written on the slip.

When you are making a purchase, don't let yourself be pressured into buying the service contract. Make sure you know what the warranty covers and how long it is in effect. While most products will eventually require repair, carefully compare the cost of the service contract with the probability and cost of any future repairs. You will want to avoid expensive service contracts on products that are not likely to require repair or whose repair costs will not be costly.

Kids' asthma may be confused

By DR. PAMELA KWITTKEN
New York University School of Medicine

Asthma may be difficult to diagnose in children because it is often confused with a cold or pneumonia.

Contrary to common belief, asthma is not only an episodic illness but also a chronic lung disease typified by constant inflammation with episodic tightening of the airways known as bronchospasms.

Red flags that signal an asthmatic attack may include chest rumbling, difficulty in inhaling, slow recovery from colds and shortness of breath.

Triggers of asthma attacks vary widely, depending on the individual. Common causes include colds, allergies, weather changes, furry or feathered pets, dust mites, mold, cockroaches and smoke.

A family medical history may yield clues because some children whose parents have allergies or asthma have a tendency to develop the disease.

Environmental factors that touch off asthma attacks often cannot be changed. But following household routines such as covering pillows, vacuuming weekly and cleaning damp areas can help in preventing attacks.

In most cases, children with asthma can participate in all school activities, including gym. But they may have to take certain medications before beginning any strenuous physical activities. And if they feel tired after an exercise routine, they should be permitted to sit down and rest for a few minutes.

Parents should alert the school nurse and teachers to their child's condition, and inform them of what to do in case of an emergency.

Children should be told to alert a responsible adult at the first signs of an attack, such as coughing, scratchy throat or tightness in the chest.

Controlling the disease often requires the use of two medications, a daily anti-inflammatory to prevent attacks and a bronchodilator for symptomatic relief.

Using a small tubular device known as a peak flow meter twice daily can monitor breathing and indicate the onset of an attack. If the flow drops to 75 percent of the normal level of breathing, medical attention may be necessary.

Children may be given long tubes called spacer tubes that ease the delivery of medicine. Use of spacer tubes helps ensure that the medication reaches the lungs.

Clint Black hangs tough

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Oh, the woes of a mainstream, nice-guy, country music superstar. Your tours are sponsored by a beer company, so you do "Don't Drink & Drive" commercials for balance.

You grew up on James Taylor and Jimmy Buffett, and fantasize of making a blues album blowing the harmonica, but your career depends on staying "decidedly country."

A lawsuit with your former manager probably will be resolved in front of the world, courtesy of cable's Court TV.

You marry a beautiful TV star — Will your adoring female fans understand?

Yet Clint Black hasn't lost his public composure or his ever-present grin. He has the "What, me worry?" serenity of Mad magazine mascot Alfred E. Newman.

Even in a quick phone call before a recent Los Angeles benefit performance, Black, 31, seems unrushed, accommodating.

"I'm a very compartmentalizing person," Black said. "I can say, 'This is the way it is and I can live with it.'"

Black puts his new album, "No Time To Kill," in one of the good compartments. His goal for it is modest, yet demanding on him.

"I want to be on country radio," Black said. "I see a lot of people benefiting from the new audience that country music has, and I'm really fighting the urge to exercise some of the freedom we have now."

"I decided when I made 'Killin' Time' (his first album) that I was a country artist. I have everything Steely Dan ever made, Stevie Ray Vaughan, Merle Haggard, George Strait. I really run the gamut musically, but I want to be decidedly country.

"I'm not trying to walk a line. I think there's a place for everything out there. I feel like I'm now in my place."

Black wrote one song, "Happiness Alone," on the new album with his hero, Jimmy Buffett.

A Buffett recording of a Mac McAnally song called "It's My Job" buoyed Black through eight years as a struggling club artist in Houston.

"It used to really bring tears to my eyes when I was trying to make it," Black says, "and I used to ask myself, 'Why do I have to work this?' So his music has really meant a lot to me over the years."

Black says he has tried to incorporate some of Buffett's approach to songwriting into his own work.

"He has a way of taking a serious subject and making his point, but at the same time you can't help but smile a little. It's gravity with mercy."

"I wish more people would enjoy his music. It's the same with James Taylor. His last three albums are his best. Great stuff, and so many people are missing out is the way I look at it."

Black's fans don't seem to be missing him, having handed him three platinum albums and pushed "No Time to Kill" into the Top 20 on the Billboard album chart.

Is it art? Is it science? SRL blurs the lines

By KIRA L. BILLIK
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Huge, multibarreled cannon belch gasoline-fueled shock waves with thundering velocity. Giant machines lurch into each other with gears screaming, engines roaring.

One machine walks precariously along on stiltlike legs; it teeters and falls, its legs still moving. Another, shaped like a giant screw, furiously rotates like a bug turned over on its back.

A war zone? The set of "Terminator 3?" Some futuristic nightmare?

No. Just another Strategic Research Laboratories performance. SRL, based in San Francisco and conceived in 1979, is the brainchild of 39-year-old Mark Pauline, an industrial performance artist, technology junkie and sociopolitical satirist.

He builds what he calls "junk sculpture" — totally impractical, vicious-looking, bizarre-acting machines powered by robotics and artificial intelligence.

His artwork stars in his performances titled "Infestation of Peculiar Irregularities," "The Deliberate Evolution of a War Zone" and "Machine Sex." SRL basically amounts to a techno-performance art troupe, consisting of Pauline, his machines and volunteers who help build and operate them.

All told, he's done 46 such shows in the United States and Europe.

A video highlighting SRL performances in Amsterdam and Copenhagen, titled "The Will to Provoke: An Account of Fantastic Schemes for Initiating Social Improvements," has been released on Def American Visuals; a second, "The Pleasures of Uninhibited Excess," is coming out later this summer.

Pauline graduated from Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Fla., with a degree in visual arts. He worked as a journeyman engineer, toiling in metal fabrication trades, robotics and oil fields.

He wasn't interested in a specific career; nor did he want to become an artist.

"I stopped before I really got too far into it," Pauline said in an interview. "I liked doing both of them (art and mechanics), but I didn't want to be in the gallery scene and I certainly didn't want to work as an engineer."

"Out of desperation, I said, 'Well, what do I really want to do?' I decided that ... you can do these performances with machines (and) you could call it an organization and thereby hide behind some of the corporate facade that companies use to go about their business in an unloved fashion."

SRL gets its financing from foreign grants and donations, among other sources. Pauline makes money by trading and selling parts and equipment and lecturing. SRL's overhead is low, since he owns most of the equipment and waits until he gets money for a show before buying anything he can't make himself.

Pauline fully exploits the wealth of machine parts and computer and robotics equipment thrown away each week in the technological treasure chest that is the Silicon Valley.

"The level of junk in the world right now is just incredibly high, specifically in places like California," he said.

Things quickly become obsolete, he said, adding, "the turnover in companies is really fast, the turnover in technology's fast — that leaves a lot of stuff."

"Some guy called me ... out at the Hunter's Point Naval Base and they tried to auction off a bunch of this equipment, but they couldn't even find people to buy it. I'm buying these machine tools, which I can use here or I can trade to other companies, that originally maybe cost $100,000 and are in very good condition. I'm buying them for a couple hundred dollars."

"There's not enough of an industrial base to even absorb that equipment anymore. I can literally just go out and just scrounge around and find a thousand or several thousand pounds of good equipment every week."

Once you've got the parts, a machine can come together in several ways, Pauline said.

"You just get an idea and you want to figure out some way to do it, so you'll just do research or look at other machines that may be similar, ... (or) talk with scientists in the field who are familiar with these things, and figure out a way to do it," he said.

"Sometimes you just see some kind of weird machine and go, wow, that's really bad to see such a misuse of a fine mechanism or device, and you think up a variant of its intended purpose. And then sometimes it's just accidental — you really think you did one thing, but all along you were doing something completely different."

To prepare for a show, Pauline gathers some 100 volunteers to build and operate the machines.

Each show is customized to the location in which it's being presented. The show titled "The Deliberate Evolution of a War Zone" took place in Graz, Austria, about 50 miles from northern Bosnia.

Each performance has a script, no matter how disorganized it appears.

"I believe in expressing the cultural background that I live in, where there is just so much stuff and so much confusion," he said. "I believe in addressing it directly by creating situations that are equally complicated or that mirror it in some way."

Each performance also teeters just on the edge of danger. That's Pauline's statement on what he calls the sanitization of technology, which he says started in the '50s.

"The idea that technology is our friend — well, technology is no more our friend than hurricanes are our friend," he said. "These are things that are useful, but they're also very dangerous and very destructive. You wouldn't look at a hurricane or a tornado as a friendly little thing. Why should you look at the space shuttle as a friendly little item? ... They're very dangerous, complex, and potentially uncontrollable systems."

"The people who are designing it (technology), try to soft-pedal certain aspects of it, the darker side of it, let's say. I don't think there's anything wrong with the darker side ... if you divorce it from actual destruction and death."

However dangerous technology may be, Pauline says SRL's message is optimistic.

"Technology's here," he said, "and we'd better learn to look at it realistically, which is to say in terms of the full spectrum of its possibilities — the good and the bad, the dangerous and the entertaining — or else ... it'll get the better of us. It's very arrogant to think that just because you made something, you have control over it."

Floods expected to reduce Midwestern corn, soybean harvests

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Harvests of Midwestern corn and soybeans will be down sharply this fall, but food prices shouldn't rise much, the federal government said as it quantified the damage from the summer's record rain and floods.

Crops that survived spring and summer soakings are so far behind schedule that they are especially vulnerable to an early frost, analysts and farmers said.

But with ample stockpiles from last year's record harvest, food prices shouldn't rise significantly and overall inflation should barely tick higher, government officials said.

"As painful as the weather's impact is to the individuals involved, in the national macroeconomic sense, the U.S. agricultural economy will handle this disaster," Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy said in Washington.

The Agriculture Department, in its first projections based on field inspections, projected:

— Production of corn, the nation's most important source of feed for livestock producers who put beef, pork, poultry and dairy products on the table, is expected to be 7.42 billion bushels. That's down 5 percent from last month's projection and down 22 percent from last year's record crop.

— The 1993-94 soybean crop is forecast at 1.9 billion bushels, 4 percent below last month's indication and 13 percent below the 1992-93 harvest.

— Wheat production is forecast at 2.56 billion bushels, down 2 percent from July projections but up 4 percent from 1992.

— Sugar production is projected at 7.55 million short tons, down 50,000 tons from last month's estimate. Beet sugar accounts for all of the reduction, largely because of losses caused by flooding in Minnesota.

— Cotton production is pegged at 18.5 million bales, up 14 percent from last year and the second highest on record.

Espy estimated the value of corn and soybean production lost to floods and relentless rains in the Midwest and to drought in the Southeast is about $2.5 billion.

"There are vast areas in sad condition," said economist Neil Harl of Iowa State University. But he added, "We must remember the country is comprised of a large geographic area, and that's certainly true for corn and soybeans."

Harl is among economists who estimate the weather-related crop losses will have little impact on food prices or inflation.

"I don't think it will be as much as two-tenths of 1 percent" on the Consumer Price Index, he said. "The percentage of the supermarket price actually paid to farmers is quite modest."

A bigger worry is the danger still facing crops that survived the floods. In many areas, wet weather delayed planting and damp, cool conditions slowed crop development.

"If we get a normal frost there probably will be some minor crop damage. If we get a two-week early frost we're going to get a major crop loss," said Dennis Berger, who farms 1,000 acres near the southeast Iowa community of Wellman and already has lost 15 percent of his crops to English River flooding.

But if the frost holds off two weeks past normal, he still could get average yields on his corn and soybeans.

"We're probably more vulnerable to frost since any time I've farmed," said Berger, 56, a farmer for 35 years.

Farm Credit reports strong performance

AUSTIN — Strong earnings highlighted the Tenth Farm Credit District's first six months of 1993, according to financial results released this month.

The district comprises the Austin-based Farm Credit Bank of Texas, 48 Federal Land Bank Associations in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas, and 17 Production Credit Associations in New Mexico and Texas.

The bank and its affiliated associations reported net income of $58.8 million for the six-month period, up from $6.1 million for the first six months of 1992.

Of the increase, $20 million was due to a one-time charge incurred in 1992 to comply with changes in the way in which postretirement benefits are reported. Discounting the one-time charge, the district's income was up $32.7 million over the same period last year.

Lower funding costs, a reduction in nonearning assets, gains on the sale of bank-owned properties and the cumulative effect of a change in accounting for income taxes also contributed to the district's earnings.

"We are particularly pleased about the trends we are seeing in the rural real estate markets," said Bank Chief Executive Officer Arnold R. Henson. "We are observing continuing signs of improving real estate markets in the district, as evidenced by our $5.2 million increase in net gains on the sale of bank-owned properties during the last six months. The strong movement of our properties, we believe, indicates a growing confidence in investing in rural real estate."

Non-accrual loan volume also showed significant improvement during the period. A top district priority, the reduction in non-accrual volume was 18 percent, or $21.6 million, in the first half of the year.

During the second quarter, the district made its first Fannie Mae loan, a new program aimed at broadening the financing options for rural home buyers through Federal Land Bank Associations. Also, district Production Credit Associations announced a fixed-rate equipment financing program, with options for three-year or five-year terms.

Combined loan volume at June 30, 1993, was $3.5 billion and district assets totaled $4.2 billion.

Nationally, the Farm Credit System reported combined net income of $288 million and $686 million for the second quarter and first six months of 1993, respectively, as compared with combined net income of $201 million and restated combined net income of $444 million for the same periods of the prior year.

Deadline draws near for heritage program

This month is the deadline for applications in the Texas Department of Agriculture's Family Land Heritage Program.

The deadline has been extended to Aug. 21, according to agriculture department officials. The program recognizes farms and ranches that have been in continuous production by the same family for at least 100 years.

"We don't want any qualified applicants to miss out on the opportunity to be recognized in this program because they missed the deadline, so we encourage people to get their applications in as soon as possible," said Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry.

More than 2,000 farms and ranches have been noted in the program, Perry said. They will all be invited to Austin next year for a ceremony marking the 20th anniversary of the Family Land Heritage Program.

Perry said applications for the program are available through county judges and historical commissions as well as the Texas Department of Agriculture. In order to qualify, he said, a farm or ranch must be at least 10 acres and take in receipts of at least $250 year.

Golden Spread Chapter gains SCS award

FORT WORTH — The Soil and Water Conservation Society (SWCS) has named winners of its annual Chapter Achievement Awards.

The awards were presented by SWCS President Ron Hicks of Edmonton, Alberta, at a reception during the Society's 48th annual meeting. The Chapter Achievement Award recipients include:

All-Ohio, Michigan and Hoosier (Indiana) chapters were recognized for their tri-state conference on "Partnerships for Clean Water." The conference assembled government, industry, nonprofit leaders, and students to exchange information and ideas that will have direct applicability to their work in working for clean water.

The Golden Spread (Texas) Chapter, headquartered in Amarillo, organized a very successful conference on residue management, reaching over 300 farmers and landowners from five states.

The Montana Chapter organized a symposium on the Conservation Reserve Program which provided timely interaction among state and federal agencies, as well as private interests, on the success and the future of the Conservation Reserve Program.

The New Hampshire-Vermont Chapter and the Empire State (New York) Chapter held a highly acclaimed two-day conference on the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act. The conference included five field trips, and the 125 participants heard several distinguished speakers, including the Vermont Secretary of Natural Resources and the New York Commissioner of Agriculture.

The Alberta (Canada) Chapter developed and promoted a conservation puppet kit that included scripts on soil and water conservation for use in the classroom. The chapter had 46 bookings for their puppet show in 1992, exposing 4,600 children to conservation concepts.

SWCS is a nonprofit membership association that advocates the conservation of soil, water, and related natural resources. The organization has about 11,000 members in the United States, Canada, and 90 other countries.

AGRICULTURE BRIEFS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department researchers have discovered a harder and more productive soybean breeding line.

It produces soybeans that are resistant to the Mexican bean beetle, which USDA calls the most destructive insect to soybean crops in the southern Midwest.

In field tests, scientists found that the new line, called HC83-193, also produced about eight bushels of semi-dwarf beans more per acre than a similar line released six years ago. The beans matured up to nine days earlier than those from other pest-resistant lines.

Seed loss from pods before harvest was also lower with HC83-193, said the line's developers, USDA agronomist Richard Cooper and Ohio State University entomologist Ronald B. Hammond.

The new soybean breeder was found to resist other pests besides the Mexican bean beetle, which feeds on the plants' leaves.

Cooper said on HC83-193 beans tested in greenhouses, none of the beetle larvae survived. On other popular semi-dwarf varieties, between 76 percent and 84 percent of the beetle larvae survived.

Cooper, who works with the Agricultural Research Service in Wooster, Ohio, and Hammond said that at least one HC83-193 test site yielded nearly 80 bushels per acre.

Trapping Mediterranean fruit flies may be easier once the acidity of the bait is lowered.

By increasing the pH of NuLure, a commercial bait, from 4.5 to 8.8, Agriculture Department scientists in a Gainesville, Fla., lab found that almost twice as many female medflies were attracted into traps.

Lower-acid bait also does less damage to paint on cars and other surfaces when it is sprayed from the air, said Robert Heath, a chemist at the Agricultural Research Service's Insect Attractants, Behavior and Basic Biology Research Laboratory.

Heath said California began considering using the new bait a year ago during a medfly outbreak. Citrus-producing areas have spent millions of dollars to eradicate the medfly so that fruit can be exported to other countries.

Scientists from the Agriculture Department and Michigan State University have discovered markers — pieces of genetic material called DNA — for three genes that fight rust disease in bean plants.

"Greater resistance to rust disease will help reduce the need for applying chemical fungicides to protect bean plants," said Phillip N. Miklas of the Agricultural Research Service.

He pointed out that the Environmental Protection Agency has banned the use of some chemical fungicides and is expected to restrict others.

Miklas is a plant geneticist at the agency's Tropical Agriculture Research Station in Mayaguez, Puerto Rico. He and other scientists discovered the markers for rust-fighting genes in a series of lab and greenhouse studies from 1991 to this year.

The markers will give breeders a clear-cut way to "pyramid" the genes into new varieties that will be naturally resistant to the rust fungus. In pyramiding, several genes can be bred into a plant to give it more durable disease resistance.

"It's more difficult for the fungus to overcome several genes than to overcome one," Miklas said.

Breeders traditionally have combined single resistance genes through a lengthy process of crossing and test-crossing several generations of plants and then exposing them to the fungus.

"This can take up to two or more years, because it's difficult to transfer several resistance genes, since often one gene will mask the presence of another. Using the markers, scientists can determine the presence of each resistance gene within two weeks."

Exports of U.S. horticultural products were 10 percent higher this May than last, but their total value for the first eight months of the year rose only 3 percent, according to the Agriculture Department.

The USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service reported that horticultural exports in May totaled $678 million. Exports of fresh and preserved vegetables, tree nuts and miscellaneous products saw the largest increases. Exports of prepared fruit and hops declined.

From October to May of fiscal 1993, the United States exported $4.8 billion worth of horticultural products.

In 1992, the European Community's horticultural imports from the United States were 16 percent higher than in 1991 — at $1.43 billion.

Estimates up for corn, cotton

DALLAS (AP) — The year's first statewide production estimates for cotton and corn showed little effects from the dry, hot summer, with cotton and corn figures both up from last year.

Texas agricultural officials say the estimates were as of Aug. 1, and may not reflect the extent of the prolonged dry spell.

But production estimates so far show an all-time record crop for corn this year. And cotton production is expected to be second-highest on record.

Grain sorghum production is expected to be down considerably.

Production of Upland cotton, the most common variety produced, is expected to reach 5.8 million bales in Texas.

That number is up 78 percent from last year's disastrous harvest, and 23 percent more than 1991 production.

The state's corn production is forecast at a record 229.9 million bushels, breaking last year's record 202.5 million bushels.

However, sorghum is expected to produce 110.88 million hundredweight, down 29 percent from last year. Harvested acreage is projected to decline 27 percent.

In the parched Blacklands region of the state, from the Red River to just north of Austin, cotton production was projected to be down only slightly to 190,000 bales from 197,000 bales last year.

Corn production in the region was expected to rise to 28.6 million bushels, from 25.7 million bushels in 1992.

Crop disasters forecast quicker with polling system

WASHINGTON (AP) — The corn earworms are coming! An onion fungus is among us!

Warnings of these impending disasters and others are coming to the attention of Colorado farmers overnight through a new computer database. The creator of the system, which gathers information from the state's weather stations, says it can be adapted for use in other states.

Harold R. Duke, with the Agriculture Department's Agricultural Research Service in Fort Collins, Colo., said this is the first time that crop forecasters are getting information from all the state's stations.

The data allows labs at Colorado State University and USDA to forecast insect invasions, disease outbreaks and irrigation needs.

Until last year, when the program began, Duke said, scientists had to use data that was several days old, inconsistent and coming from about a third of the stations.

"What's critical is that the computer system gets a wealth of uniform data on a steady basis from weather stations statewide," Duke said.

Weather stations feed the data — like the previous day's high and low temperatures, wind speed, precipitation, soil temperature and humidity levels — over phone lines into a computer in Duke's office between 2 a.m. and 4 a.m. every night. From there the information is passed on to the two labs.

The analyses and forecasts developed at USDA and Colorado State are made available to farmers through computer subscriber services. About 1,000 farmers and 200 agribusinesses currently are subscribing to such services in Colorado, USDA said.

Besides alerting growers to potential pest hazards, the system has the potential to help irrigators reduce water use by up to 30 percent, Duke said.

How Cable Rate Changes Will Affect You

Beginning September 1 Sammons will institute rate changes so that we will be in compliance with the Cable Act of 1992 and subsequent FCC regulations. Any changes these new rates may have on your overall bill will be reflected in your September statement on a pro-rated basis, as of September 1.

Under the law, cable television companies must adjust their rates so that the average customer's bill for service meets the benchmarks that have been established by the FCC.

Under the new rate structure, some customers will benefit from reduced rates while others may see their rates for service rise. In general customers with a single TV set will experience an increase, whereas customers with more than one set may have a decrease in their monthly charges. However, the average customer's bill will not increase.

The following information breaks down and highlights the changes that will be taking place September 1.

Rate Changes

Lifeline (Borger)	11.50	9.35	Non-addressable converter	----- 2.00

Explanation of Changes

Additional outlets
We will no longer charge monthly for additional outlets. Customers can install their own additional outlets, or have Sammons or the contractor of their choice install the outlets. However, customers will have to abide by the FCC technical regulations as established for the wiring. Instructions for wiring additional outlets are available at our offices.

Converters
A charge for every converter issued on an account, including the first converter, is being instituted per FCC regulations that say cable companies must "unbundle" equipment charges. Sammons can no longer provide the primary outlet converter free of charge. Addressable converters will be $2.50 and non-addressable converters $2.00 each.

Remote controls
Remote controls will be decreasing to .50 per month.

Premium services on additional outlets
A single household charge of $2.00 monthly allows all premiums on all additional outlets in the home.

Computerized service charges
Services such as an upgrade, downgrade, change or reconnect handled in the computer will be $2.00.

Labor charge per hour
Sammons will institute an actual cost method of installation charge of $40.00 per hour for new installs, additional outlets, reconnects, and other labor related items within the next two months.

Accord reached on free trade side agreements

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trade negotiators for the United States, Mexico and Canada Friday announced agreement on environmental and labor issues that had delayed approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Conclusion of the side deal negotiations, which began months ago, ends an impasse with Canada over trade sanctions that had stymied negotiators in recent weeks.

The breakthroughs on the environmental and labor accords clear the way for the Clinton administration to submit the entire NAFTA pact to Congress when it returns from its summer recess next month.

Although the agreement provides for different treatment for Canada on sanctions, Clinton administration officials said Canada would bear the same burdens under the NAFTA side deals as the United States and Mexico.

President Clinton, speaking to state and community leaders in California, said the agreement "gives specific assurances to the American community that this will generate more jobs."

He commended Mexican President Salinas for tying minimum wage standards into the trade pact. "Nothing like this has ever occurred," he said. "The minimum wage agreement coupled with an agreement to ensure high environmental standards makes it a good pact."

The trade pact, to take effect Jan. 1 if ratified by Congress, would phase out barriers to the free movement of goods, services and investment between the three nations over a 15-year period. It would create the world's largest free-trade zone, with 360 million consumers and an annual production of $6.4 trillion.

The accords announced Friday are viewed as crucial to passage of the agreement in Congress, where many have raised concerns that NAFTA would spur job flight to Mexico and further damage an already-polluted U.S.-Mexico border.

Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner said the agreement "has teeth. ... It makes it harder to pollute in all three countries."

But a coalition of farm, labor, environment and consumer groups opposed the side agreements, saying Clinton fell short of his promise to protect the environment, food safety and American jobs.

"The enforcement provisions that have been unveiled are convoluted, unworkable and will not be successful," said Jim Jontz, director of the coalition called Citizens Trade Campaign.

The agreement was announced in simultaneous news conferences in Washington, Ottawa and Mexico City. The Mexican stock market took an immediate upturn, rising more than 3.5 percent shortly after the deal's announcement.

Canadians had balked at a U.S. demand for trade sanctions in the event that their country did not comply with environmental or labor laws. As of late Thursday, it appeared that Canada's outright objection to the sanctions would delay conclusion of the talks.

"Our position is that they're quite unnecessary," Canadian Prime Minister Kim Campbell said Thursday. "We have the provisions in our own courts if there were to be any judgments or any fines levied as a result of failing to observe our own laws."

Following hours of talks between U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor and his Mexican and Canadian counterparts, a deal was hammered out late Thursday night that would provide for different treatment for Canada.

While the United States and Mexico would be liable for trade sanctions in the event of non-compliance, Canada's court system would impose any fines recommended by an arbitration panel.

"If Canada doesn't comply ... this has the same teeth as trade sanctions," Kantor said. "Mexico and the U.S. would not have agreed if their courts could not enforce."

"It wasn't easy, but we prevailed," Canadian Trade Minister Tom Hockin said in Ottawa.

"This is a good day for the environment, a good day for labor, a good day for international trade and a great day for Canada because there will be no trade sanctions in these accords," Hockin said.

1 Card of Thanks

Joseph L. (Buster) Dull
We would like to express our sincere gratitude and appreciation to everyone who came to our aid during our time of sorrow and loss of our beloved "Buster". Words alone seem inadequate to say what we feel in our hearts for all the people who brought food, called, sent cards, flowers, donations and answered our needs in so many different ways. Your thoughtfulness and prayers have given us strength to carry on. We ask that you continue to pray for us as we face the days ahead. Buster was loved by so many and will be missed by everyone and again, we say "Thank you" for all you have done. May God bless each and everyone.

The Joseph L. (Buster) Dull Family

Virginia Louise King
The Family of Virginia Louise King would like to thank everyone for the flowers, phone calls, cards, also to the Home bound class of the First Baptist Church who faithfully visited her, also to Carmichael Whitley and to Don Turner for the lovely service.

Forest Service concerned about plant, animal loss

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Forest Service is worried about the death of whole species of plants and animals in national forests and about its own ignorance of the consequences of those losses.

The concerns are expressed in an report on two national forests in Wisconsin. The report recommends changes in logging practices and a greater government effort to complete inventories of plants and wildlife.

Herb Evans, a spokesman for the Nicolet National Forest in Rhinelander, Wis., one of the two studied, said some of the recommended actions are under way. Chequamegon National Forest was the other study subject.

"We have cut old-growth forests and favored younger, more rapidly growing forests, reducing those species tied to the unique processes of old-growth," said the report, prepared by an independent panel for the Forest Service.

"We have drained wetlands, constructed roads, converted mixed forests to plantations and developed most lake shores, all with the aim of more fully utilizing our natural resources, but with an unknown cost to the diversity of the forests."

The researchers also argue that past agency policies unwisely suppressed forest fires.

"We now know that fire (along with wind and perhaps insect epidemics) was a natural process in the forests of northern Wisconsin without which species may be lost," they said.

The report also recommends that the Forest Service:

- Establish wide buffer zones along streams to avoid polluting the water and provide corridors for animals to travel.
- Minimize the breakup of forests.
- Limit road-building in some areas.

- Leave more coarse woody debris after cutting down trees.
- Leave some dead trees standing.
- Cut trees less often.

- Survey potential logging areas for plants that might be harmed and schedule tree-cutting in winter.

A Forest Service spokesman said officials at the agency's headquarters had not yet seen the report.

Environmentalists praised the report.

"This report gives the Forest Service the blueprint they need to protect invaluable biological diversity for future generations," said Rodger Schlickeisen, head of Defenders of Wildlife.

The National Forest Management Act of 1976 requires the Forest Service to maintain viable populations of all species in any national forest.

The authors were Thomas Crow, research ecologist at the Forest Service's North Central Forest Experiment Station in Rhinelander; Alan Haney, dean of the University of Wisconsin's School of Natural Resources at Stevens Point, Wis., and Donald Waller, botany professor at the University of Wisconsin in Madison.

SA offers booklet on making wills

Salvation Army is offering a free booklet to assist the seven-out-of-eight people who have not prepared a will.

With this booklet, the Salvation Army is offering information to help control the distribution of an estate to family, friends and charitable organizations. With an up-to-date will, an estate is distributed by one's own wishes rather than legal formulas, SA officials said.

SA officials noted that some think only wealthy people need a will, or that drawing a will is too expensive or complicated. The Salvation Army wants people to know that, without a will, the state will determine the disposition of assets, the welfare of one's spouse, and the guardianship of one's children.

For this free booklet write: The Salvation Army, Planned Giving, P.O. Box 2785, Lubbock, TX 79408.
