PAMPA SCHOOLS ARE ONE OF HER PRIME ASSETS—and comprise a public activity which the district cannot afford to neglect. While it may seem to some that a very large fleet of buses is required to bring the children to the excellent schools in the city, a large enrollment is not different from a small one in many respects.

There should be a teacher for every 30 or 40 pupils—in fact must be if the school's affiliation is to be held up to standard. Every such group necessitates a classroom, of course. The buses cannot be too crowded without discomfort and danger.

Free schooling, as we call it, is about the only tangible benefit which is bestowed upon its juveniles by the state, and the state by so doing best safeguards its perpetuity and its own efficiency.

Judging from some of the holes which develop about the city in this swampish weather, we need a street-inspector-of-holes and a repair man thereof.

Recently a man killed himself because he considered himself a failure. Come to think of it, we don't know anybody even remotely likely to do the same thing.

Lots of people would grow old gracefully if nature would cooperate a little better. It's a funny world when a man can call his wife goofy and get away with it.

Kisses overtax the heart and shorten life by three minutes each, opines the Lubbock Avalanche. And those addicted to osculation will ask what is longevity of that kind worth, anyway.

Airplanes are going to be equipped with rubber landing gear. And we pedestrians will have to dodge just so many more bounces. They are able to make diamonds out of sugar in laboratories. Our first associating of the two subjects came during the war when we were vainly trying to sweeten coffee with molasses.

An investigation of the acts of manufacturers of war materials is not out of place. It will help to define the proper and legitimate activity along this line, and will tend to prevent meddling in international affairs. Bringing of pressure to bear upon government officials, and proper representation of the army and navy in the policy making of the nation, are essential to safety, of course. In fact, the aviation branch is going to have to work long and diligently to secure separate status. Airplane corporations, unless they merge with war munition manufacturing groups, may be expected to exert much of this influence. Development of aviation, with demonstration of its possibilities, is certain to be the most effective proof that it should be recognized as a federal department.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE is growing at the rate of a new, recognized word every 24 hours. This rate of development is likely to confound those teachers of English who urge their pupils not to be the first by whom the new is tried, nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

But language is a living thing, while age-proved words are apt to be the possession of the people long before they are accepted by textbook writers. Slang is the strength of a literature in some instances, although when it is current it is likely to be barred from acceptable theme usage.

Much slang however, is like jazz music or popular songs; it is on every tongue one year and "worn out" the next. But some expressions live on and on, the family of decent words in Webster, while others slowly return to favor as creditable authors adopt them. The study of words and idioms gets close to the thought, ambitions, ideals, and emotions of a people.

More about this business about airplanes flying low: A farmer swears a big ship flew so close to his windmill the other day that the wheel started turning furiously and dumped a barrel of water before it stopped.

The Arab delegation to Washington quoted the first article of the British-Arab agreement, binding Britain to "help in the formation of an Arab Empire completely independent in its internal and foreign affairs" and including Palestine within its stipulated boundaries.

But in 1917, still at war, England made a bid for the support of Jews all over the world when Balfour publicly promised them a national home in Palestine. The League of Nations later granted her a mandate providing for British co-operation with the Zionist movement in Jewish colonization. In the last 10 years the Jewish population has tripled and there are now about 150,000 Jews in Palestine. Agriculture has been developed and with schools, hospitals and other systems the foundation of a Jewish nation has been laid.

Nevertheless, this Jewish colony has been planted in the midst of a land of hostile Arabs, whose bitterness at the British repudiation increased as the Jews spread out. The Arabs fear the day when the Jew may have a majority of the population and edge them out of the territory they have occupied for many centuries. They demand revocation of the Balfour proclamation, restriction of Jewish immigration and establishment of a representative government.

The Zionist, meanwhile, protest that the British have failed to support the colonization movement with any enthusiasm and have limited immigration unreasonably. They accuse the recent British administration in Palestine of openly favoring the Arabs and protest bitterly because adequate precautions were not taken to save them from the recent massacres.

England appears to have her eye primarily on the rich oil fields of Mosul, where American oil companies have a 25 per cent interest. The proposed pipe line system from these fields to the Mediterranean would go through the French mandate of Syria if it took the shortest course, but the British want the pipe line to run out through Iraq and Palestine under her own control.

War-time expediency and postwar acquisitiveness have produced a situation where Jews and Arabs are found hating each other and where both have some ground for complaint against the British. The complications seem due to the fact that Britain has in past time promised Palestine both to the Arabs and the Jews and meanwhile has sought to attain certain definite ends of her own. She has been unwilling to repudiate either set of promises and has tried unsuccessfully to keep peace while playing ball with both sides.

Promised an Arab State. After Turkey entered the war the British began to spread revolt among the Arabs under her control. They appear to have promised King Hussein ruler of the Hedjaz and leader of the Arab movement, that they would recognize the independence of Arabs settled over a wide area, including Palestine, where the population was at least five-sixths Arab. So the Arabs revolted against the Turks in 1916 and joyously aided the British conquest.

No Peace Between Russia and China Seen by Observers

MOSCOW, Sept. 18. (AP)—Prospects for peace in the controversy between Russia and China in Manchuria are dim today, after many attempts at negotiations and exchanges of notes, to be even less bright than at the signing of the dispute over the Chinese eastern railway seizure.

Six different attacks by Chinese on Soviet soil were reported to-day from the Russian centers of Chita, Khabarovsk and Vladivostok.

Fans Won't Believe Series Tickets Sold

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 18. (AP)—Any request now for world series tickets for the Athletics-Cubs contest, is just so much fodder for the old sugar barrel. Officials of the Philadelphia club keep announcing loudly all tickets are gone, but hopeful fans keep on mailing requests for reservations.

"Not a chance now," said Secretary Schroeder as he directed an extra helper to drop another batch of orders into the old sugar barrel at the end of a 20-foot table. "We were over-subscribed more than twice our capacity a few hours after opening for business Monday."

If Grapes Are Half as Sweet—

SUNDOWN STORIES

Turning the Clock By Mary Graham Bonner The little black clock, with its white face and gull black hands, had stood on top of the desk in the back hall for many years, and for many years it had not run.

The hands pointed to the fact that at a certain 7 o'clock years and years before it had stopped. But it was such a pretty, quaint little clock that it was a favorite even if it couldn't keep time.

It was late one evening when Peggy, who was 5, had gone to bed and John, her brother, three years older, was about to go that he suddenly noticed the little black clock grinning. Its hands were stretched out. No longer did they point to 7 o'clock.

"Hello, hello, hello," came a whisper from the black clock. John went and stood before it.

"Did you speak, by any chance?" he asked.

"I certainly did. I've been waiting for ages and ages for you to notice me at bedtime. Do you want to come with me? You may call Peggy if you like. But, mind you, no one else! No one else may share my secret."

"You have a secret?" John asked.

"Then that's what makes you look nice—why we all like you."

"Of course, I've a secret," said the little black clock. "Get Peggy first and I'll tell you."

John went and quietly woke Peggy. The rest of the family was downstairs.

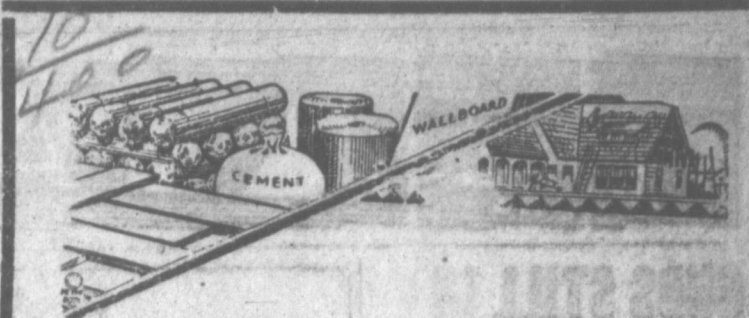

"Years and years ago I decided to stop telling the ordinary time," the little black clock explained. "I was allowed to use some magic which let me turn myself backward or forward to any time at all except the correct time. So for the rest of the world I must be 7 o'clock. Come! We must be off. How far shall I turn back to-night?"

"Oh, when the Indians used to own the country," said John.

"All right. The Indians it shall be, then."

So the clock turned round and round and round until the whole scene changed and it was several hundred years earlier—and they were at an Indian tepee.

Seen and Heard

"It would be well, I believe, for all of us, as we do our fall flower-planting, to give a thought to the annual convention of the Seventh district Federation of Women's club, bringing several hundred women to Pampa next spring. Bulbs planted now would be in bloom in April when the convention is held, and the flowers not only would add immensely to the attractiveness of the city, but they would be useful in decorating for the social gatherings incident to the meeting."

One young lady, cheerfully—"Day by day, I grow fatter and fatter." Second young lady, in same tone—"At that, you're lucky. I don't wait for day, but grow fatter and fatter the clock around."

Interviews sometimes may be silent—seen, rather than heard. For instance there was the one seen the other day on Frost street in which a friendship was formed, without a word, and in a third the time it takes to tell it.

A big, rather ugly dog stood on the sidewalk in front of a small cafe, attracted there, perhaps, by the odor of food. A nondescript dog, of no special breed or blood, whose once black and white coat was stained with dirt and smoke and soot. Hardly one's idea of a pet or even an attractive chance acquaintance.

But as he stood there, gazing into space with that vacant expression peculiar to dogs and men who have nowhere to go and are in no particular hurry to get there, a man clad in grease stained overalls walked out of the cafe.

Pausing a moment with his back to the door, he let his eyes rest on the fat from beautiful dog. Then, without a word, he knelt down and patted the animal's dirty head, ruffled the grimy hair, and gently twisted the longish ears. Their faces almost on a level, the two looked into each other's eyes with the confident gaze of fast friends.

A few seconds more, and the man went back into the lunch room to return with a handful of food for his new acquaintance. He knelt again to give it to the dog, patted the head once more, let the happy creature lick his hands, then walked away. The dog's tail wagged slowly in sheer joy of a friendship that needed so very little expression.

Topeka Liquor Charges Admitted to Be False

TOPEKA, Kas., Sept. 18. (P)—The storm of public discussion and official investigation aroused in this capital of the first prohibition state by a statement of Jay E. House, Philadelphia newspaper columnist, that he was served liquor in 13 or 14 Topeka homes visited by him last winter and that an average of four drinking parties to the city block was maintained nightly, appeared today to have been a tempest in a teapot.

In a letter to A. J. Carruth, Jr., managing editor of the Topeka State Journal, read before a group of investigating state officials yesterday House, a former mayor of Topeka, termed his statements "fol-de-rol."

The charges which so stirred the city and the state were made by the Philadelphia writer in a letter to the Rev. J. A. McClellan, superintendent of the Kansas Anti-Saloon League. McClellan published the letter, and Governor Clyde M. Reed ordered Attorney General William A. Smith and Shawnee county officials to ascertain whether anything in House's charges warranted criminal prosecution.

Four of six witnesses questioned denied there was any liquor, to their knowledge, at social functions which House attended here last winter. The fifth witness was non-committal, and the sixth said there was some liquor. All denied any liquor was served by the hosts. The witnesses included hosts and guests at some of the functions at which House was entertained.

After listening to their contradictions of the Philadelphia account of his entertainment here and hearing House's own letter read, Smith indicated the investigation would be dropped.

Carruth termed House "a great big bluffer."

HAGENBECK-WALLACE CIRCUS TO ENTERTAIN THOUSANDS AT BIG AMARILLO TRI-STATE FAIR

Little Junior or Mary at Amarillo will not need any extra effort to slip from their beds the morning of Sept. 23. With the first call they will spring to the floor, dress hurriedly, swallow their breakfasts, and hustle toward the tracks of the railroad. The one important reason for all this activity is Circus week—Hagenbeck-Wallace week. And youngsters from all over the Plains are expected to be on hand before the big aggregation of people and animals leave. Performances will start at 2 p. m. and 8 o'clock every afternoon and evening of the fair, with the menagerie doors opening one full hour in advance. Thousands of visitors will "kill two birds with one stone" by going to Amarillo Sept. 23 to 28th and seeing both the circus and the Tri-State fair.

Funeral services for Mrs. Luttrell will be held this afternoon at 4:30 in Mobeetie, with the Rev. Tom Brabham conducting the services. Malnos' Funeral home is in charge of funeral arrangements.

Sport Slants

There are at least a half dozen names that cannot justifiably be left off any selection of all-star major league team this season. Hornsby at second, Traynor at third, Ruth and Simmons in the outfield, Cochrane behind the bat, Grove and Guy Bush on the mound, belong on anybody's list.

There can be an argument at first base, between Terry and Fox, but the Giant star's experience and fielding ability should give him the nod. On sheer hitting, Babe Herman of Brooklyn deserves an outfield post but O'Doul of the Phillies is on his heels and Lloyd Waner, more versatile than either, is having a great year. If two other pitchers are needed, Burleigh Grimes and Red Lucas of the Cincinnati Reds will do. Lucas has had a wonderful year with a second division club.

In a day and age when the alibi is so often heard in sports, it was refreshing at Pebble Beach to see so fine a display of sportsmanship as that of Bobby Jones being eliminated by Johnny Goodman in the opening round of the golf championship. Jones took it as part of the game, giving all credit to Goodman, and later refused to play off with Gene Homans for the qualifying medal, as an added attraction, because he desired to avoid any appearance of seeking the spotlight or detracting otherwise from the main events, for the sake of the "gate."

One of the most interesting features of the baseball season has been the trick work of Wallace Walters, commonly known around the Pacific Coast league as the "fat man" of Portland. Walters has played the outfield, shortstop, backstop and done a regular turn on the mound. When Walters takes the mound, Ed Tomlin, ordinarily a pitcher by trade, goes behind the bat and the combination is famous up and down the big slope as the "pretzel battery." It won five games in a row while the Portland club was making its big spurge in August. To make it all the more noteworthy, Walters took on his new lease of versatility at Portland after being cast adrift by the San Francisco Seals.

Attorney Asserts Waggoner Loses Mind Over Bank

DENVER, Colo., Sept. 18. (P)—S. D. Crump of Denver, attorney for C. D. Waggoner, president of the Bank of Telluride, Colo., under arrest on a charge of defrauding six New York banks of $500,000, said today his client, obsessed with but one idea—to protect his friends and neighbors—had become "a confirmed paranoiac" as the result of worry over the condition of his bank. The attorney, who gave his version of Waggoner's condition after questioning him for many hours, said the banker still believes he did the right thing.

Truck and Boy Sought Vainly by Robstown Father

SAN ANTONIO, Sept. 18. (P)—The trail of a motor truck thief who took the baby son of his victim along with the machine had grown warmer today, but the accident which led to its being picked up caused mingled relief and concern to his father.

It developed yesterday that the child, Juan Raymond, four, and his abductor, had been taken from the wrecked machine 55 miles from here and brought into San Antonio for treatment. They were sought today. The truck, Juan in the back asleep, was stolen on Sept. 11 at Robstown.

Mrs. W. A. Taylor Still Very Ill

Little or no improvement is to be noted in the condition of Mrs. W. A. Taylor of this city, who has been a patient in Scott-White sanitarium at Temple since Aug. 6, according to the reports sent relatives here.

They Really Wore 'Em Long Ago

This is how the flapper of the "gay nineties" would look in comparison with the modern girl of 1929. California business women, when they met in annual convention at Pasadena, adopted the garb of the "gay nineties" for their meeting—and here is Miss Holly Halsted, the modern miss, examining the bustle costume of Miss Mabel Smith. Yes, they used to wear those things—years and years ago!

Municipal Bonds Are Made Ready for Official Sale

City Manager F. M. Gwin has worked out the transcript of the municipal bonds recently voted and has devised the schedule of maturities to provide virtually uniform installments.

The $238,000 bond election was on 5 1-2 per cent 30-year serials, and was voted as four separate issues—paying, city hall-auditorium, parks, and fire hall. The bond market, which has been upset by the high call money rate and other difficulties in recent months, is showing signs of recovery. Pampa's bonds, however, will not be "peddled" in a broken market, but will be sold at the first chance that a good opportunity presents itself. There are several current instances in which municipal bonds have been unsalable, but Pampa's credit has been built up rapidly in the last two or three years.

Whether any of the city's new projects will be carried to completion this winter is problematical, depending upon date of the sale of bonds, weather conditions, and other factors. The paving, however, can be started by about Dec. 1 if the weather permits. There are legalities which practically preclude actual work before that time. Meanwhile, plans for each of the projects are taking more definite form.

UNION WORKER BADLY WHIPPED

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 18. (AP)—Elzo Tessler, 24-year-old organizer for the National Textile Workers union, was taken from his home in Kings mountain early today, spirited by three men across the South Carolina line and beaten.

He was brought to Charlotte after reporting to Sheriff Wright of Gaffney, S. C.

His story, for the most part, was told for him here by Linton M. Oak, publicity director for the international labor defense. Oak informed newspapermen Tessler had been choked so badly his throat was sore.

Tessler said he could identify the men.

Tessler's story was that there was a knock at the door of his home about 1 a. m. and that when his wife went to see who it was she was informed by three men they had a warrant for Tessler's arrest.

They entered and ordered him to get out of bed. When he told them to read the warrant, he was grabbed and pulled from the house, he said, the men choking him.

They placed him in an automobile and kept his face so covered he had no idea where they were taking him. Once they stopped, and two of the men conferred while the other watched him. At the end of a long bridge, he said, they again halted, and this time forced him to accompany them to some dense woods.

Miss Hayes is the wife of Charles MacArthur, playwright.

What Somewhat Higher

CHICAGO, Sept. 18. (AP)—Reported need of more rain in Argentina, together with continued unfavorable crop advices from Australia, tended to make wheat prices here average higher early today.

Opening unchanged to 1-2 cent higher, Chicago wheat afterward reacted somewhat at times. With frost reports numerous, corn and oats showed relative firmness, corn starting at 3-8c to 7-8c advance, but subsequently sagging. Provisions likewise scored gains.
