Sidelights As Big Entrada Arrived Here

Over 1,000 cars drove to Recreation park Sunday and watched the Coronado Entrada set mount skyward. Harley Hixon, chief steel man had local laborers in high and before nightfall most of it was up. They finished the rest of it today.

Entrada horses were ridden down town yesterday and met a few people. They were out for exercise, said Major Broughton who looks like a General on his trick paint horse. Patches. They rode up in front of a local drug store and enjoyed curb service. Not satisfied with that they then visited the bus station and rode in to pay their respects to Jimmy Dodge, co-chairman of the Entrada.

Perhaps the polo players yesterday on the field near the Entrada grounds had had another rider with them yesterday they would have formed a polo team and challenged the local squad. The horses with Coronado have played plenty of polo in rough and tough matches.

Yesterday the sound cast took over the basement of the Schneider hotel and practiced their lines as arranged by Director Hamilton. John Ruff chief sound man, reported things moving smoothly afterwards.

Travis Lively, Jr., came to the rescue of the prop department of the Entrada and fixed them up with an electric buffing machine. The armor will now be bright and gleam like the real business. Of course it's made out of old newspapers pressed hard and painted with aluminum paint.

For his aid the prop department permitted him to bring and look over all of its equipment.

Herman Cherry who made all the props and who presides over the Coronado Entrada prop department couldn't wait Sunday to get his tent up at the grounds so he did it himself. "That tent won't come down now," said Cherry as he backed off and took

Heavy Showers Dot Texas Areas Monday

Heavy summer thunderstorms dotted Texas Monday, bringing needed moisture for corn and other growing crops.

The Fort Worth-Dallas pike was blocked at Village creek because of high water, but highway department officials expected it to be opened soon if there is no more heavy rain. Lake Worth was rising.

A heavy rain began falling in Dallas at mid-morning, following yesterday's half inch that gave the city nearly an inch over normal rainfall to date. Fort Worth had 1.29 inches and some local flooding due to a blocked storm sewer.

The Trinity at Dallas was bank-full, but not at flood stage. Gainesville, in North Texas, had a total of 1.82 inches in 30 hours, with threatening clouds. Sherman had 2.34 in 24 hours and it was still raining. The Grayson county grain harvest was one-third finished.

In South and Southwest Texas, there were scattered rains. Laredo Sunday had heavy precipitation and Corpus Christi reported rains throughout that section were of great benefit to crops and ranges. Downtown at Corpus Christi the total was 1.82 inches, and at the airport it was 2.57.

Fascist Legions March Into France As Nazis Near Paris

(By The Associated Press)
BERLIN, June 10 (AP)—Italian forces marched into French territory through the Riviera at approximately 6:30 p. m. tonight (10:30 a. m., C. S. T.)

This information was given reporters by authorized sources at a conference at the Berlin foreign office called by Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.

ROME, June 10—Italy joined the war tonight at the side of the German Nazi legions which are pressing down perilously on France and Paris itself.

(In Berlin it was announced that Italian troops already had entered France through the Riviera.)

Notice of the plunge into hostilities, after months of teetering on the brink, was made in a wildly cheered, bombastic speech by Premier Mussolini from the balcony of the Palazzo Venezia.

His announced war aims called chiefly for recovered control of the Mediterranean.

He declared for preservation of peace in the Balkans and in Turkey and Egypt, all factors in Mediterranean control.

"Our will," he said, "is that Italy does not intend to bring other people into the conflict."

"Yugoslavia, Greece, Turkey and Egypt will take notice of this fact." He also mentioned Switzerland in this connection.

Speaking from the balcony to fascist blackshirts crowded by the thousands in the square below and in other squares throughout the kingdom where loudspeakers were rigged up at his urgent request to "listen!" the Premier declared.

Nazi Armies Closing In, Say Germans

(By The Associated Press)
BERLIN, June 10—Deeper German inroads in the drive toward Paris, with the Allies in retreat at several places, was reported today by the high command.

Halling a new victory in Norway and steady progress in the great western front offensive, its communiqué declared that "great successes already have been won but bigger ones are in the making."

Informed Germans expressed belief that the drive across northern France was reaching a decisive phase and that the Nazi armies were closing in the blades of pincers around Paris.

(The closest German approach to Paris reported by the French was an armored car wedge about 35 miles from the capital.)

The high command said the Nazis were charging along the entire front from the coast at Abbeville eastward beyond Sedan, apparently clear to the "hinge."

The fighting front with the Maginot line.

Germans said their heaviest pressure was southward on the coastal flank toward Cherbourg and Le Havre. French ports still accessible for British reinforcements and American supplies, and in the Champagne district toward Reims.

Besides aiming at important harbors, the coastal drive also holds the possibility of throwing a loop southward of Paris that might bottle up

Machine-Age Cowgirls Ride Horse, But Aboard Gas-Buggy--Yippee!

Ride 'em cowgirl! But they can't ride any but mechanical steeds—like this. The girls are Jacqueline Boddie, of Texarkana, Tex., left, and Betty Middleton of Brooklyn, N. Y., who ride bucking autos in the Jimmie Lynch Death Dodgers troupe.

Two of the prettiest cowgirls in wild and woolly New York can't ride and don't even own a horse. But boy, they can wrangle a bucking, snorting automobile in a way that makes visitors to Jimmie Lynch's show in the Goodrich arena at the World's Fair sit up and take notice.

These machine-age cowgirls are Jacqueline Boddie of Texarkana, Tex., who is 17-going-on-18, and Betty Middleton of Brooklyn, who at 18 is beginning her fourth career.

Betty has been a secretary, has sung with an orchestra, and still takes modeling jobs on her day off from "dodging death."

She says that jumping an automobile off a ramp beats all the other jobs she has tried for lack of dullness.

TALKED HERSELF INTO THE JOB

Jacqueline can't compare dodging death with any more sedate work, for this is her first job after getting out of high school. She had been "applying" for the job for years, for her uncle is the man who runs the show.

He never thought much of having girls doing stunt driving and never hired any until his ambitious niece talked him into it.

Now that he has two feminine "death dodgers" he doesn't see why he was so prejudiced before.

"They girls can't explain why they love doing their far-from-routine job. But love it they do.

So much so the two of them are trying to persuade their boss to let them go on the road in a show of their own when the Fair closes this fall.

"The reason it is so much fun" they finally explained, "is because you never know what is going to happen. A wheel might come off or the car might roll over. You have to be on your toes every minute, and that is exciting. Then, too, as soon as you manage one trick, you start right in learning another. We're working on two new ones right now."

McCullough WMS Concludes Lessons Of Study Book

At the meeting of Woman's Missionary society of McCullough Memorial Methodist church, the latest lesson "Home Land Harvest," entitled "The Strongest Link," was given by Mrs. J. A. Orton with Mrs. C. T. Nicholson and Mrs. A. D. Hastens assisting.

Mrs. A. N. Rogers led the group in prayer.

Present were Mrs. A. N. Rogers, Otis Smith, Edna Andrews, Chester Williams, C. T. Nicholson, C. R. Vernon, A. D. Hastens, and three visitors, Mrs. Mary Davenport, Mrs. Orville Johnson and Mrs. A. L. Noble.

UNCORCHED PRESERVES

The high sugar content in jellies and preserves causes easy scorching. Placing an asbestos pad under the kettle while it is over the fire reduces danger of burning.

The dog-fish, a species of the shark family, gets its name from the fact that it hunts in packs.

New York had an experimental block-long subway in the 1890s, and passengers paid a quarter to ride it.

Following a contest, two gifts were presented to Mrs. John Lawler and Mrs. Leo Smith from the club.

Concluding the program Mrs. W. D. Stockstill read "The Word We Might Have Said."

Refreshments of cake, ice cream, punch, and mints were served to Mrs. W. D. Benton, George Dyer, C. C. Stockstill, W. D. Stockstill, J. Stroope, Guy Farrington, Maye Skaggs, W. E. Tolbert, E. A. ### British Troops Land In France, Leave Narvik

(By The Associated Press) LONDON, June 10—Fresh British forces have been landed in France, it was disclosed today, as the Allies abandoned Narvik and northern Norway to pour all their strength into the crucial battle of France.

"Further extensive reinforcements" of the B. E. F. will be available shortly, Prime Minister Winston Churchill informed French Premier Reynaud, assuring him of Britain's "maximum possible support."

Churchill's message and official announcement of the Allied withdrawal from northern Norway came as British military circles acknowledged that the situation in France is of "increasing difficulty."

A spokesman warned against undue optimism and said German tanks had reached the Sein. British troops, fighting shoulder to shoulder with the French on the left end of the line, he said, are in the thick of some of the fiercest fighting.

Of three main German thrusts toward Rouen to the south of Slonson and a new drive on both sides of Rechel—the most advanced and apparently the most menacing was the one to Rouen.

King Haakon of Norway and his government, which capitulated last night after just two months of resistance against overwhelming Nazi power, already have arrived in London.

The Narvik withdrawal announcement said: "The king of Norway and the Norwegian government are now in Great Britain and a portion of the Norwegian armed forces have been withdrawn from Norway in order to be reformed for action on other fronts."

"The capture of Narvik enabled action to be taken to prevent the Germans using it for the export of iron ore for a considerable time. Troops and material from northern Norway can now be used to greater advantage elsewhere in the main struggle to defeat German attempts at domination, upon the outcome of which Norwegian independence finally depends."

With the violence of the gunfire across the channel rattling windows on the English south coast, Britain pressed forward her efforts to insure her own security.

While British bombers roared on new forays behind the German lines, the government made arrangements for the removal of 120,000 children from London to safer areas in the west.

The massed transfer, which will begin Thursday, was made imperative by the recent activity of German bombers over England, the air ministry said.

Akron Expands Derby Downs For 1940 Race

Expansion of facilities for accommodation of both a record crowd and the greatest number of participants ever to enter the All-American Soap Box Derby was announced at Detroit today by J. P. Gormley, national director of the race for Chevrolet Motor division, co-sponsor with leading newspapers of the country.

The national derby is to be held August 11 at Derby Downs, Akron, Ohio. Winner of the Pampa News-Lions Club Soap Box Derby to be held here July 18-19 will be among the contestants.

Already more than 125 newspapers have arranged to sponsor local races.

For the Pampa derby the number of entrants is now 108.

Improvements underway at Akron's Derby Downs include a new grandstand, doubling the reserve seat capacity. (In the past, 100,000 persons have witnessed the race); painting finish strip near the reserved seat section; operating areas for radio and newsreel reporters on the all-steel double-deck judges bridge; and a photographic device to speed the judging of closely contested heats.

Fourth-Inch Shower Falls In Pampa Area

The fourth rainfall of the month fell in Pampa Sunday night as a part of scattered thundershowers coupled with a high pressure area that moved in from the south to give moisture at scattered points over the Panhandle.

In Pampa, precipitation amounted to .26 inch, the heaviest rainfall of the month, and the greatest amount of moisture since May 23 when a .56-inch rainfall was recorded.

Sunday night's shower, accompanied by lightning and a minor dust storm, made a monthly precipitation total 30 inch, yearly, 6.72.

More than four inches of rain fell at Meigs in half an hour. Precipitation there totaled four inches. A sp-lark fell at White Deer.

South and east of Pampa the rainfall was heavier than here. Dalhart had a heavy rain, which was general between the North Panhandle town and Tascosa.

Ford Ponders Plan On Plane Production

DETROIT, June 10 (AP)—Henry Ford, genius of mass production who periodically startles the industrial world with some undertaking seemingly impossible of achievement, expected to learn today precisely what may be involved in placing airplane manufacture on a volume output basis.

The 76-year-old Ford, offering his aid to the government in its defensive armament program, has said that under certain conditions, he would get airplane production up to 1,000 units a day within six months after an order to go ahead had been given.

Ford and a group of his engineers planned to examine at the Ford airport in nearby Dearborn the type of pursuit plane the United States war department believes would be most needed "in an emergency."

Ford asked that the plane be sent "as soon as possible," and the war department responded immediately that the ship would be delivered to Ford today.

Ford has not the slightest doubt of his ability to build 1,000 planes a day. He has stipulated there must be no "meddling by governmental agencies," and no changes in specifications once production is started.

Dallas May Get Air Corps Training Base

DALLAS, June 10 (AP)—The Dallas News says a training base for the United States Army Air Corps may be located in Dallas county if army officers approve one of several sites inspected today.

A survey board sent out by Col. A. W. Robins, air corps training center commander at Randolph Field, spent most of the day viewing sites in the eastern and northern part of the county. A definite decision is expected on the location in a few days.

A tract of 1,200 acres, with a railroad siding, and with public utility services available within reasonable distances, is wanted by the army.

Two sites, one near Mesquite, were reported to have impressed the board of flying officers favorably. An investment of up to $2,000,000 or more for hangars, barracks, runways and other improvements will be made by the army at the projected advance training unit.

Ultra-Violet Light Will Aid Soldiers

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK, June 10—Ultra-violet light, something never before used in war, is under consideration to protect the health of fighting men in the U. S. army and navy and the British army.

This new step in war medicine was described briefly today for the American Medical association by W. F. Wells, director of the laboratory for study of air-borne diseases of the University of Pennsylvania.

He said inquiries had come from all three services. In the U. S. army it is proposed to use mild ultra-violet lights in barracks to prevent spread of contagion. The U. S. navy wants to try them in ships.

The British inquiry is for their use in hospitals crowded with wounded to prevent spread of air-borne infections which in the past have killed many wounded who would have recovered from their military injuries.

The light used, Mr. Wells said, is a form of ultra-violet which does not appear in sunshine. It is much milder to the human skin, taking several hours to do as much burning as three minutes of direct summer sun.

However, he showed by exhibits, this mild ultra-violet is highly lethal to bacteria.

Building Also For Peace

The United States has committed itself to a vast program of building to meet any war that may come. But it is not neglecting to build also for peace. During the first three months of this year just short of 100,000 new housing units in non-farm areas were completed. Only about 10 per cent were built under the USHA's low-rent program. That is a 5 per cent increase over last year, and of the total, 75,000 were one-family dwellings.

Behind The News

BY BRUCE CATTON, Pampa News Washington Correspondent. WASHINGTON, June 10—Unless the United States soon prepares and puts into operation a broad-gauge program for new world defense and economic cooperation, the Republic of Cuba will presently be wholly dominated by Fascist-Nazi interests bitterly opposed to everything the United States stands for.

This, at any rate, is the warning given by a distinguished Cuban scientist who is now visiting in Washington. Since he is about to return to Cuba, he asked that his name not be used. He is, however, a man of standing who is in an excellent position to know what he is talking about.

His size-up of the Cuban picture—which has been brought to the attention of government officials here—is of interest not only because of Cuba's nearness to the United States, but also because, to a certain extent, what is going on in Cuba is symptomatic of many other Latin-American nations.

SPANISH FASCIST PRO-FASCIST: According to this source, then, here is the picture: All of the old conservative, Spanish-descent families in Cuba are deeply Fascist and anti-American in spirit. Their link with the overseas dictatorships is principally through the Spanish Phalange and General Franco; the Phalange itself is very strong in Cuba.

General Batista, the boss-man in Cuba, wants to solidify his own personal powers and does not bother much about any ideologies. A few years ago he was playing ball with the Fascists; when the U. S. State Department frowned he swung more to the left, and today draws support both from liberals and conservatives. In the end, he is likely to string along with whatever side looks like the winner, be it American democracy or European totalitarianism.

MILITARY MISSION FIRST STEP: What should that stimulus be? According to this Cuban, it should begin with the dispatch of a high-power U. S. military and naval mission to Cuba to reorganize the Cuban defense system. Immediately following this there should be an economic mission to reorganize the country's economy. By tying both moves in together, he believes, overwhelming popular support could be gained—particularly if at the same time Batista could be persuaded to clean house politically, throw a few grafters and extremists in jail, and demonstrate to all Cubans that politics were to be honest henceforth.

"This would be intervention, of course," says this Cuban scientist. "But it would be intervention in the interests of the people of Cuba, and they would recognize it as such. It would be an intervention of democratic diplomacy instead of dollar diplomacy. If something of this sort is not done soon, Cuba will drift into the Fascist camp."

The Nation's Press

THE KNUDSEN COMMITTEE (Chicago Tribune)

A number of things need to be said about the appointment by the President of a committee of seven to "correlate all civilian phases of the 3 1/2 billion dollar national defense program." The first is that some of the men selected have been well chosen. Mr. Knudsen, who has been assigned to industrial production, is certainly a top-notch. Mr. Stettinius of the Steel corporation is also a man of ability. Some of the others including Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Ralph Budd of the Burlington railroad are men of proved competence in their special fields.

The second thing to be noted is that the committee has no authority to do anything. It is an advisory committee to the council on national defense. This council consists of Secretary Woodring, Secretary Edison, Secretary Ickes, Secretary Wallace, Secretary Perkins, and Secretary Hopkins. As before, the decisions rest with this group of persons of limited competence. The first-raters of the advisory committee can do nothing more than recommend to the fifth-raters of the cabinet. Mr. Morgenthau, who is in charge of airplane procurement, is not even a member of the council. The third point to be noted is that the make-up of the committee, with its representatives of agriculture, consumer protection, price stabilization, and transportation, is a clear indication that the attention of the committee is not to be concentrated upon the pressing problem of acquiring the tools of modern war which this country lacks.

Common Ground

By R. O. BOILES. This column contends there can be no satisfactory progress until we measure the shares of each man by the common yardstick of the God-given equal right to create and enjoy anything anyone else has a right to create and enjoy.

COLLECTIVE, EMOTIONAL SYMPATHY

Individual sympathy, governed by reason rather than emotion, is a great blessing to mankind. On the other hand, emotional, collective sympathy is a most dangerous thing. Few people realize how difficult it is to collectively assist people whom they regard as unfortunate. The attempt has been made many times and always resulted in doing infinitely more harm to the unfortunate and to the rest of society than if the attempt had never been made. What people fail to understand is that there is only one way by which people can really be helped by the government—that is to guard each man's rights to use his faculties and to trade the product of his faculties on the world market.

During the fore part of last century, England had what was known as the Corn Laws in order to protect the farmers. But, instead of helping the farmers, as intended, it only worsened their plight. One of the most important speeches ever made in the history of parliament government was made by Sir Richard Cobden in 1843, in which he persuaded Prime Minister Robert Peel that the Corn Laws, instead of benefitting the farmers, were doing them injury. In this great speech, he pointed out that the unnatural condition and the fear of the change of the laws had prevented capital from being directed in farm enterprise and the result was lower production and a lower standard of living.

This speech caused Peel to help repeal the Corn Laws and for sixty or seventy years, the policy of the English Empire was laissez faire, or let different enterprises seek their natural levels without assistance from the government.

In our own country, we have made many attempts to have government assist certain groups. Some 25 or 30 years ago, we established farm banks to help the farmers; we established agricultural stations to help the farmer but the results have been anything but satisfactory. The plight of the farmer with all the assistance, with these laws and the many laws passed since then, to assist him in various ways has only aggravated his condition.

Just so, we have attempted to make minimum wage laws to protect the unskilled laborer. The result is that the unskilled and untrained laborer has a much harder time to get a job, instead of helping him, it has harmed him, put him on the dole and lowered the standard of living of every honest worker.

The fact of the matter is there seems to be absolutely no way of collectively assisting any group. Every time it has been tried, it has been negative in the place of positive. We are now doing more to assist different groups than we ever dreamed of doing in this country and the business men and those who are being assisted and not on the dole are more discouraged than ever.

The sooner we learn the lesson of the difficulty of emotionally and collectively assisting any group and devote our energies as a government to keeping the highways and byways open so that any man may produce anything in any quantity and at any price that any other man has a right to produce, the sooner we will be really giving real assistance not only to the unfortunate but to every man in the country.

FAITH IN YOUTH

The way we treat our youths, we must think they are all as wise as Solomon not to be misled and confused on fundamentals. We send them to school and to college and permit them to do nothing constructive or of service to humanity year after year; then we think they will automatically switch and become great producers. Now we have even made a law that those engaged in interstate commerce are obliged to pay the inexperienced youth a great deal more per unit of production in order to comply with the law than efficient, experienced workers receive.

And when they are paid more than they produce when they begin, when they get more efficient, they naturally expect their total wages to be raised and their compensation to be at the same rate per unit of production as at the start. If the youths of the land are not spoiled by the absurd and ridiculous treatment they receive from their parents and from the government, they deserve the greatest admiration for their foresight and commonsense not to permit themselves to be spoiled by such unfair treatment.

Despite the billions which have been spent on the army and navy in recent years. If we are to engage in a war in Europe, we must, of course, arrange to increase the productivity of our farms and solve the immense transportation problems arising from the movement of men and supplies to the eastern ports. Likewise we must take steps to prevent an undue rise in the cost of living. But none of these questions need arise in connection with a speeding up of our procurement of equipment to resist a blitzkrieg. The railroads can readily move all the supplies needed without a committee to tell them how, and there is no conceivable reason for calling in Mr. Chester Davis to supervise farm production so that supplies will be available for domestic consumption and export unless we are going to go to war. Incidentally, Mr. Davis' task is an easy one. To obtain adequate supplies of farm products he need only recommend the repealing of all the restrictions on production and marketing introduced by Secretary Wallace.

If Mr. Roosevelt had been interested solely or even primarily in speeding up the production of tanks, airplanes, aircraft carriers, etc., he would have chosen one man—and he could not have found a better one than Mr. Knudsen—to undertake the job. As Mr. Hoover suggested the other night, the way to get things done is to entrust them to a single responsible person and not to a committee, a notoriously inefficient method of accomplishing any executive task as any one who has sat on a committee knows. Mr. Roosevelt's contribution is a committee to advise a committee.

A useful purpose may be served by the appointments, however. It may be assumed that Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, the full-time members, mean to do a job. They expect to procure the desired equipment as rapidly and as cheaply as possible. If they find themselves blocked by underhanded in the army and navy who can't make up their minds what they want, if the pace of production is retarded by the Walsh-Healey act, government red tape, or something else, Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius can be expected to request the removal of the obstructions. If that fails, these men can be expected to resign and to tell the country why.

TRAVELOGUE

Around Hollywood

By PAUL HARRISON, NEA Service Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD, June 10—Whenever a movie comes along with an all-women or predominantly female cast, you can depend on hearing the story that the gals are a-fueled-in. The star is trying to kill the ingenue's best scenes; the second lead is sulking because she got bad costumes, and the villainess is trying to slit somebody's throat.

Such stories, I should add, are generally true. That's why Director John Auer, a mild gent with a pretty blond wife, figured he was in for trouble when he had to direct "Women in War."

He had seven principals, eight bit players and 100 extras—all women. A few gents briefly employed in a few scenes couldn't help much. Besides, he had five hairdressers, makeup and wardrobe women and a script girl.

His greatest difficulty, he figured, would be with Elsie Janis. The studio had used a lot of persuasion to get her into the picture. Her last movie was made in 1917, at the height of her stage success and just before she went to France as head of the Overseas Theater Entertainment Division. Brick and independent, she'd probably behave like a star and perform like a vaudeville scene-stealer.

EXPECTED BIG LIGHT, GOT CO-OPERATION: Then there was Wendy Barrie, a spirited youngster with a flinty tongue and a lingering suspicion that her years of hard work have entitled her to a little better than mediocre success. Miss Barrie's attitude was not to be split the billing honors.

Auer was pretty shaky when he introduced them at luncheon. Figuratively, he held his ears and waited for the by-in-off. The studio patted Miss Barrie's hand and said, "My dear, I hope I can help to make this picture something really good for you." Miss Barrie gulped, did a doubletake, and said, "Thank you." They got along fine.

Besides worrying that she'd overplay scenes and argue about rehearsals, the director was somewhat awed by Miss Janis' new-found religious fervor. If you don't remember, she had a couple of close squeaks with death in recent years and credited God for her escape from it. In a breezy but unquestionably devout attitude, she calls Him "The Boss" and says she gets her guidance right from Headquarters.

I talked with Miss Janis, and she told me a little more about it. Figuring that she's living on borrowed time, with the clock turned back apparently by special dispensation of Providence, the actress decided she would spend her remaining years—and judging from her appearance, there'll be a lot of them—in "the Boss's" service.

"BOSS" TELLS HER HOW TO ACT: Auer was alarmed when Miss Janis assured him that "the Boss" would tell her when a scene was right or wrong. He doubts that he was granted Divine guidance for the occasion, but whatever the reason, he had no arguments with the former stage star. She turned out to be a good sport, too; refused a double in action scenes where she had to struggle through shell-holes and time her progress with explosions from buried charges.

Even in peacetime, street lamps of Great Missenden, Bucks, England, are turned out to save expense on moonlight nights.

People You Know

By Archer Fullingim

Do you remember big, jovial Mel Marshall who was an announcer over KI DN two or three years ago? Remember that radio serial called "El Tigre"? Well, Mel was El Tigre, the Mexican bandit, and Mel's accent was heavenly villainous. Mel's voice can be villainous in any dialect, and in the Entrada Mel will be the voice of those two deep-dyed 1940 villains, El Turco, the Indian known as the Turk, and Garcia Lopez de Cardenas, Coronado's right-hand man. Cardenas was the outstanding male actor in both the Albuquerque and Clovis shows, and if Mel Marshall's voice has anything to do with it Cardenas will be in the spotlight in the Pampa show. Mel was working for a radio station in Albuquerque when the Coronado commission signed up his voice. Mel makes the Turk a villain and a scoundrel of the most scheming, deceitful type, and you will fairly hate the Turk before the show is over with. His voice makes Cardenas a brutal, burly, domineering captain, cruel and inhuman.

To farmers and ranchers in this country: This corner has the dispatch from Wash that really knows farm work; in fact, he came here from a farm, and he can drive a tractor, caterpillar, truck, and do any kind of farm work, including the milking of cows. This boy sure needs a job. He's no smart alec either. He would like a farm job; if you are going to need a hand in the wheat or plowing, you might put this boy on.

Confirmation was awaited here of a dispatch from Wash stating that a rehearsing had been granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Burlington-Prisco fight for the Pampa-Childress railroad.

The News learned that there was to be a competitive examination to fill the vacancy in the position of postmaster of Pampa.

A meeting of much importance was scheduled at the city auditorium where Mr. Kyle of the Fort Worth office of the Federal Housing Administration, was to address everyone connected with the building industry.

JOBS for JUNE GRADUATES

WANT TO BE A RADIO ACTOR? HERE'S HOW TO START OFF

By EARLE MCGILL, Casting Director, Columbia Broadcasting System

There are two simple rules I give a youngster aspiring to a radio acting career. First, learn your business. Second, know the markets for your wares. Both are more complex than they seem.

Your business is acting, so learn how to act. As in any other business, you need training. Where should you get it? If possible, I advise an American university. In the past few years many universities have built up magnificent courses in the theater, where any young actor can receive training from talented directors.

The University of Iowa, for example, has a stage which rivals any New York stage, excepting Radio City Music Hall. Many of these large universities operate radio stations, too. An even larger number have courses in radio. So, if you are lucky, your first acting training may be of two varieties—stage and radio.

The acting profession used to offer a valuable rough-and-tumble training for the youngest in the stock companies almost every fair-sized city boasted. Today stock is almost dead, and summer stock is still too scattered and casual to provide an adequate substitute.

Little theaters are valuable, however. The young actor should interest himself in a good little theater group. I believe that whether you seek a career on the stage, radio, or in the films, the theater is your best preliminary training. There you feel an audience; you learn how to play to it.

You learn ensemble work, integrating your portrayal with the rest of the cast. You learn the million and one general tricks of the stage. After that, it's not too hard to pick up the specialized techniques you need for radio and film.

By now, we'll say you're an adequate actor. So you study the markets for your talents. One serious defect among youngsters coming to New York for a radio career is their complete lack of knowledge of the structural set-up of radio. They don't understand that a network is concerned with producing only that percentage of basic commercial programs are produced by the advertising agency handling a manufacturer's product.

They go to the networks and ask for bids without bothering to cover the many advertising agencies producing radio programs. If you have gone to a network for an acting job, here is the process you will be following. I give general auditions for new actors twice a week at Columbia. In three hours of auditions a week I hear 14 to 16 newcomers—both youngsters and experienced stage actors who want to break into radio. The actor uses his own material, and I sit in the control room as he reads before the microphone.

In the material you use, there's one simple hazard to avoid—don't try too much. Several weeks ago a young ingenue auditioned before me, and swung with bewildering speed from a portrayal of an 80-year-old woman to a dramatic bit from "Anna Christie." Both of them were obviously beyond her range.

NEXT: Civil Service Opportunities.

TEX'S TOPIX BY TEX DEWEES. THE people of the United States seem to be suffering from a sort of mental shell-shock as the tragedy of Europe unrolls swiftly before their eyes. There is greater panic in certain American circles than even in England and France, which lie directly under the guns of the Nazi invader. It is not fear—it is simply shock at seeing the anchors of civilization tossed overboard, one by one. This is true right here in Pampa. It is horror at seeing an orderly world descend to chaos.

Little Luxembourg Is Victim of Blitzkrieg

HISTORY repeats for Luxembourg. Overrun by German forces in 1914, the tiny duchy is again caught in the advance of warring armies, occupied by Hitler's invaders. Luxembourg's army of 250 could offer no resistance. German militarists dominate the municipal palace, pictured on the duchy's 1935 stamp above, commemorating the 11th Congress of the International Federation of Philately.

Guarantees of Luxembourg's neutrality and independence, given first by the treaty of London in 1867, and again by the peace treaty of 1919, become "scraps of paper." REFORM NEEDED TO ELIMINATE OUR DANGERS

By WALTER E. SPAHR, Professor of Economics, New York University

Can and will our Federal government meet the armament and rearmament with which it is now faced? Up to the time that this is written, there are no indications that the Federal government intends to mend its ways in any important manner. It seems clear that the essentials of New Deal capitalism are to continue. There is yet no convincing evidence that all policies are to be weighed first with respect to their bearing upon the national welfare, and only secondly as to their supposed possible effects upon the political fortunes of the New Deal Administration. Furthermore, it is an open question whether pressure groups and those who have been living out of the public trough have learned sufficient about the dangers into which this country has found itself to be willing to put government economy and the general welfare above their own predatory appetites.

Considering the fact that this country has in recent years had the politics of New Dealism ranked consistently above considerations of national welfare, with results that are not exceedingly reassuring for the nation, it is difficult to believe that the Administration will bring to an abrupt end this method of trifling with the national well-being. The Administration does not do it, Congress should. If Congress fails on this score, then it is up to the newspapers and the public to set up a clamor that will bring about its reform. The principal things that must be done now are these:

Experienced and responsible men must be taken into the government and placed in charge of key activities; the experienced, impractical, business-hating radicals must be seen home; and the harassing and hamstringing of business must be stopped. Cooperation of the government with business is an imperative need.

Obstructive laws and regulations, particularly in the field of capital flotation and labor, must be amended. It needs to return our currency to the gold standard, repeal our dangerous monetary laws, and grant the Board of Governors of our Federal Reserve System more power over our huge surplus reserves in our commercial banking structure. Of course the debt limit will now have to be raised.

It is doubtful that the New Deal Administration can or will do these things, considering its past record. It has, with rare exceptions, never surrounded itself with the best men available; it has been afraid of them, and they have not respected it. Can and will this be changed now? Radicals have never been sent home, no matter how undesirable they have been demonstrated to be; instead, promotion and coddling have kept the regular tactics in play, to keep these unsavory elements in positions of power. Can and will this be changed? The New Dealers have been hostile toward business and businessmen; they have abolished labor racketeering and have embraced socialists and communists; above all, they have driven wedges between groups of people, and have fostered class strife and class hatred. How can these things be undone?

Since there is ample room for doubt as to whether the necessary reforms can or will be made by the New Dealers, we probably can expect at the best, little more than the minimum of improvement. The indications are that in this great emergency we are to get far less than we should have in the way of good government, and that the danger our nation faces of being and safety will continue to be inordinately great. Indeed, there is a very strong probability that our national emergency will be used for even more socialism, will be more authoritarian government.

Malvica missed a third strike, for breaking curve ball and went to first, for the pitch hit the plate and Catcher Ratliff had no chance to block it.

SERIAL STORY

AN EYE FOR A GAL BY HARRY HARRISON KROLL

COPYRIGHT 1940, NEA SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY, Steve Hogg tells Rosy that the Tollivers drew lots to decide who was to kill Jay Mc-Afee, and Sock Tolliver was chosen. He insists he has proof, but Rosy is unconvinced. Rosy is puzzled, too, as how Hogg can control the situation. Hogg has been Rosy's "walking in the darkness, Hogg meets Hannah."

CHAPTER VII

THROUGH Rosy McAfee said the words under his breath, Hannah, hurrying along the path toward the starlight, had not heard or seen him. She must have known Rosy was coming home for a visit, and had arranged to follow almost immediately. It was egotistical to think this, but surely she went to all the trouble because she hoped to revive their love by returning to the scene where it had grown into being. Then she caught sight of his dark shape by the fence, missed a step, and stifled a cry. "Rosy!" she cried, knowing him almost instantly.

"How come you're here?" he demanded, and in spite of himself he was rough with her. She came up and faced him. "None of your business! But if you think I followed you, you're off your kazip!"

"That don't leave much of anybody but Cousin Steve." "You wouldn't think of maw and paw and my folks, would you?" A trace of bitterness came into her voice. "I'm not like you—blood for me is thicker than water!"

"What do you mean by that crack?" he wanted to know. "You're one of these here college students that when they look at a-b-c's they've got to have teacher say, 'Them's the facts!' So I'll play teacher and tell you, I came home because I knew you'd be seeing Steve Hogg and he would be telling you about Dr. Tolliver and how your pappy was killed that time. And I knew you'd not believe it, because in no time at all they had you wrapped around their little fingers down there at the school."

"Ah, I know—I haven't been watching you, but I've seen, just the same. So you would tell Steve he was a liar, and you'd go back and lay up what they fed you, and that would be the end of a second-hand job of doing the right thing. Well, all I got to say to you, Rosy, is now you know. I hope you're satisfied."

FOR a moment Rosy breathed heavily, saying nothing. "I told Steve he was a liar, all right. Well, I haven't heard any thing yet to make me change my mind about him."

"I reckon you wouldn't believe a word I said." "You mout say it and let me see if it's a word that my judgment told me could be believed." "All right!" she cried. "Then here's the word. What Steve was telling you about the Tollivers having a meeting one night just before that Fourth of July game was so. They had such a meeting, and Sock Tolliver—Dr. Tolliver to you—was there, and they drew lots, and Sock got the call to kill your pappy. You see, it was Steve himself that seen it and overheard the whole thing!"

"But how do you know it was Steve?" "That night Steve was following one of the Tollivers. He had a gun and he aimed to kill him a man. His first man. But instead of ambushing him, he just followed, and came to the house where they were all meeting, and he got in the chimney corner and listened through a hole in the chimney. He seen it all, every bit; and heard the whole plan."

"Well, I reckon that'll make a good boy out of you! Now what you aim to do about it?" "Looks like I've got to kill me a man."

In her temper she was panting. "If there's a speck of manhood in you, that's about all that's left!" For a moment they stood there with a sense of embarrassment. Rosy wanted to escape and did not know how to manage it. He realized that she, too, wanted to get away and was waiting some kind of consent from him. It dawned upon him all at once that she was not really on her way to visit him—their meeting here had been as much a surprise to her as to him; the one she was really hunting was Cousin Steve Hogg, whom she must have expected along the trail.

"I'll be seeing you," he said, and moved quickly away in the darkness. She could go where she would, for all of him.

Steve Hogg was getting out timber from the ridge, he was in a region where someone had been timbering. The cutter was heavy second-growth hickory for bolts and handle lengths. The bolts were stacked in a symmetrical pile, and the handle stuff was gone. Sold, likely.

from this high vantage. Rosy sat down again, running his fingers through his hair. He began to get excited. Hogg was in too big a hurry about selling off this timber. He had been too anxious to follow Rosy down to Lincoln College, check up with him there, make a full report to Hannah.

Anyway, why had Hannah trailed him so quickly? All on Rosy's account? All because of love? "Rats!" Rosy scoffed to himself. Steve Hogg put her up to it; now he was trying to prove something on Dr. Tolliver, trying to get Rosy involved in a killing scrap. For family honor. For the sake of an oath made when Rosy was just a child, to get his eye for eye. And on the most powerful argument of all, the alleged accidental murder of his father.

Rosy leaped erect with gleaming eyes; he began to pant; his fists were clenched. "I've got to find out something! I've got to get away from here!"

STILL running, Rosy came into the village and went straight for Jesse Leverage's cabin. It was of logs and lost in garden and yard trees. Rosy beat on the door.

"Come! called a cracked voice. Rosy went in. Uncle Jesse was a smallish man, and his years, white upon his thatch, had never mattered to any one. And almost everybody in Hell-n-Damnation had made good use of his wisdom and profited by it, or failed to make use of it and had suffered in consequence.

"Wy, howdy, bub! That you, Rosy McAfee?" "It's me, Judge. I come to ask you something. Sometime I've got to know, or find out quick." "Set. What you want to know?" "Well, I want to know something about how come Steve Hogg, who's my cousin, has all the old land up on Wind Cat Ridge, when there was a time it belonged to my father. What I want to know is, how did it happen after daddy was killed that this land and timber all turned up in the possession of my cousin? How did my father lose it? When did he sell it, if he sold it at all? Just what is back of all this?"

"I've just come from the ridge, and somebody's timbering out all the first class stuff, all the prime hickory, and poplar and white oak. And I know who it is, it's Steve."

"Well, how come? Don't you reckon that might be mine after all? There's something stinking up the creek and I come to you find out what it is." (To Be Continued)

Scientist Sees Wet Years Ahead For 'Dust Bowl'

NORMAN, Okla., June 10 (AP)—Somewhere among the crags and valleys of the graphs that chart the rise and fall of sunspots may lie the clue to whether the high plains are emerging from the drought cycle.

Through the Southwest dust bowl country—soaked by winter snow and recent rains—flows a vague feeling that wet years are ahead and will chase away the dust clouds. A rainfall-sunspot student, Prof. C. J. Bollinger, of the University of Oklahoma's geography staff, looking up from a desk cluttered with graphs of sunspot cycles and charts of rainfall, says there may be scientific basis for the belief.

His theory: Drought occurs when there are too many, or too few spots on the sun, because sunspots—believed—regulate solar radiation. When the average number of spots falls below 11, there is a drop in solar radiation, hence a drop in evaporation, hence a drop in the amount of moisture in the air for precipitation.

When the average number rises above 70 for some reason radiation again falls off (the suspects interference from the great calcium clouds that boil up from the sun's surface on such occasions).

Sunspots in the last six drought years reached a peak average of 114 for hot and dry 1937, Bollinger ventures. "We are in a transition period between dry and wet phases of the solar hemisphere and the drought, if not broken, is in the process of being broken."

"On the basis of solar radiation as correlated with the rainfall from 1920 to 1930, I would say we could expect two out of three, and probably three out of the four coming summers to be wet."

But before some scientist colleague might say off any limb the professor of geography might be out on, he hastens to add: "This expectation should be appraised as little more than a scientific guess."

SIDELIGHTS

A look at his handy work. This morning the tent was flat on the ground. Herman evidently had never seen a West Texas wind storm in action before. He is going to try his hand at tent-fixing again today.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rust will ramrod the sound used in the Coronado Entrada spent their first night in their trailer in a vacant lot here in Pampa. They said it was late when they arrived and are not sure who they owe "thanks" to for the parking privilege.

New music for the Entrada will be used here, the water screen has had its first try out and everything points to a great show at very low prices. Get your tickets Monday while you have the opportunity to save 50 cents on every three tickets you purchase.

With Clint Anderson and Bill Colvert both Rotarians no doubt they will attend Rotary meeting Wednesday. Anderson is past International President, and Colvert is past conference secretary.

Pampa people will see a new arrangement of the Entrada lighting system at the opening of Thursday night. Director Hamilton, who has put on more big shows than the average man has hair on his head arranged it and Jack Marriott lighting expert with the show has it installed. It will make the Entrada here better than ever.

The Entrada horses are in for new shoes today. Twenty pairs came in yesterday so if you see the horses sticking their "dogs" up in the air think nothing of it. The rubber shoes are needed to keep the valuable horse flesh from sliding from the high narrow ramps they travel over in the show.

Local horsemen who wish to practice taking their horse over the ramps may use them each day at 10 a. m. and at 5 p. m. It may sound and look easy but the boys will find it somewhat tricky and they better be careful of some nice horse will have a broken leg.

The playing of polo immediately back of the Entrada grounds will no doubt be over for the week as extra tents for use of the show have to be erected and will take up much of the south end of the polo field. It's a good cause though and the polo boys will no doubt be glad to give up their sport for a few days for the good of the community.

Today, the Germans were reported only 35 miles from Paris. That's about the distance from Pampa to Panhandle. The Jaycees said today if Hitler's range of women killers were that close they would have to be stopped because they will let nothing stop the magnificent Entrada presentation.

If anyone wants to know the price of admission to the Entrada (it's not high) they are invited to phone Jimmy Dodge, Joe Key, and D. L. Parker. Midnight calls are especially requested. The boys give out better prices at that hour.

It was so cold in Pampa last night that one of the Coronado staff hopped out of bed and covered himself with some Coronado decorations to keep warm.

Some comment has been made today that the whisker contest was not on the up and up. It is claimed the beautiful judges were bought off with promises of candy, flowers and other things close to their heart. It's a debatable subject.

Mel Marshall who used to live here and who now provides one of the grand voices in the Entrada sound box is said to be able to imitate Roosevelt's voice so well that radio big shots in the east have ruled him from the air on that score. It seems that Marshall gave a "fireside-chat" one time and had half the nation on edge hearing about the affairs of state.

Director Hamilton said today he wanted every member of the Entrada cast at Recreation park promptly at 8 p. m. tonight and the didn't mean to be. He plans to put everyone through their paces on the huge set so they will know what to do Thursday night.

Louisa Carrion, of the costume department had Jimmy Dodge running about after a sewing machine today to make a few new repairs to the beautiful costumes. Louisa has been with the Coronado costume department since it started last January and knows the costumes forward and backward. She is Bill Swindell's chief aid. The little Spanish girl can act in case anyone wants to know.

Newspaper and radio people of Pampa, Dalhart and Amarillo will feast tonight at the Herring hotel, Amarillo, as guests of the United States Coronado commission. It's in appreciation of the cooperation they have received.

OPEN HOUSE

An ironical twist of fate left the door intact when this house in a French village was almost completely demolished by German bombing planes, according to French caption on this photo.

Elizabeth Arnet, Lamesa, Texas, beauty with the Entrada also helps in the costume department when not using her voice in the show. Today she was running about in the costume room with a handkerchief over the lower half of her face looking like a bank bandit. "It's to keep the dust out of my nose and throat," she said.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rust (John sings and the Mrs. plays the piano) will delight Kivans club members Friday with two songs from the Coronado Entrada. They have been in demand by all civic clubs where the Entrada has shown. You can tell who John is as he is the man who leads a cute little pooch about town. He does have a grand voice.

Today the sound box was constructed right in front of the grandstand. You won't hear the actual voice, but if a Hitler or Italian bomb should drop on the sound box during the show the show would be over in a rush. It is the "heart" of the entire show.

Ed Tracy, advertising manager of the News, says everyone in the country will want a copy of the special Coronado Entrada edition that will be out tomorrow. What it won't have in it about the Fiesta will not be worth anything. It's complete, says chief advertising man Tracy.

Don't go nosing about the Entrada grounds after dark. Two watchmen are on duty and they don't like nosey people after dark. They are watching just about $100,000 worth of equipment that belongs to the United States government. In the daytime they invite you to come out and look to your heart's content.

MACKENZIE

er in an effort to open up this valley route to Paris.
Over on the French right wing the German attack in the Argonne region with fresh troops appears to be for the purpose of trying to hammer down to the Marne river and follow this historic stream through to the capital.

Of these main thrusts, the most dangerous to date has been that along the coast, since it threatens to turn the French wing, put the Germans in possession of Le Havre and Rouen and swing a great claw about Paris from the west. It is in this drive that the Germans have reached one point some 35 miles from Paris. In itself this doesn't necessarily mean disaster, for the old Kaiser came nearer the capital than that in 1914.

To me even more dramatic than the unparalleled immensity of this bloody clash at arms is the time element involved.

The comparatively short period—maybe a mere fortnight or so—in which Hitler must win the war or likely lose.

The mere fortnight which the Allies must hold the savage rush of the German hordes in order to establish a good chance for victory.

All this is premised on facts which you and I have discussed more than once before because of my insistence of their importance.

On the one hand we have Hitler, equipped with the most powerful war-machine ever constructed, not certainly threatening quick annihilation of anything crossing its path, but with virtually no resources of any kind with which to maintain its wonder-machine.

On the other hand the Allies, unprepared to stand up against this avalanche, but possessing between their wealth and resources beyond dream—if they can only hold the Nazi onslaught long enough to draw on those resources.

French Premier Reynaud May 22 declared that if France could "hold out for one month—and we will hold out for whatever time is necessary—we will have traveled three fourths of the road to victory."

Against German aerial successes, including destruction of 91 Allied planes—88 of them in air fights—the communique said new night raids on north and western Germany failed to cause military damage and only "five of our planes were missing."

The situation of the French is worsening hourly, Germans said. They asserted that official French announcements no longer concealed that fact.

These Germans said the movement of fast German units along the English Channel toward Le Havre and south of the Somme were proceeding "according to program."

While the air force was reported lending support to the army's ground work in France, Germans said England was not being neglected in German plans.

This was interpreted to indicate increased air activity against the British Isles to hamper to the utmost any possible attempt of the British materially supporting their ally on the continent.

A high command announcement that German troops had penetrated Allied rear lines on the lower Seine and crossed the Aisne both east and west of Soissons indicated that in some places the Nazi vanguards are within 50 miles of Paris.

(Paris dispatches said the nearest Nazi units were 35 miles from the French capital.)
It was the first time in five days of intense fighting that the high command had mentioned specific places, and the announcement was received eagerly by a news-hungry public which has had to content itself with non-committal reports that "progress is being made."

The high command said "strong enemy forces" had been destroyed and that reinforcements thrown in to the battle by the French had been hurled back.
"The attempt of the enemy to halt the German attack at any price has been shattered," the communique added.

ed appeals to all unemployed citizens in Paris to aid in "work under way for the defense of the region of Paris."

Hurling what military experts considered their full force into a gigantic battle of men and machines, the Nazis battered ahead with planes, tanks and guns and followed up with waves of fresh infantry along a meandering front over 200 miles long from the English Channel east to the Maginot line.

With the Allied defenders reported sacrificing ground only when it was covered with the German dead under Generalissimo Maxime Weygand's orders to "hold tight" in "the last quarter of an hour," the titanic battle of France blazed fiercely in three major sectors:

1—On the Allies' western flank, nearest the sea, where advance guards of German mechanized divisions, some 200 tanks, entered the suburbs of Rouen, rumbled into Pont de L'Arche, and drove into Glisors, only 35 miles northwest of Paris.

2—In the center, where the surviving units of Nazi shock troops, after suffering tremendous losses, established two new bridgeheads across the river Aisne on either side of Soissons and carried the battle to the flat plain of Tardenois, about 10 miles south of the river and some 60 miles northeast of the capital.

3—Farther east, in the region of Yverdon, they struck on the edge of the plains of Champagne and behind the lines of the nearest conflict, German planes dropped "massive" detachments of parachute troops. The French said they promptly surrounded them and either dispatched the enemy aerial infantry or took them prisoner.

At one other point the Nazis drove to a region south of Montdidier and east of Beauvais. Since Beauvais itself is 40 miles airline from the outskirts of Paris, that would bring this thrust to between 30 and 40 miles from the outer edge of the capital.

But it also was in this sector that the Nazis, according to the French high command, had suffered "a serious setback and considerable losses" on Saturday.

The French were heartened somewhat by Gen. Weygand's declaration that "the enemy has suffered heavy losses. Soon he will come to the end of his effort," and they read with interest the statement of United States Ambassador William C. Bullitt that "from one end of this earth to the other every civilized man is praying, after his fashion, for the victory of France."

With the battle already stretched over 200 miles of northern France, Gen. Weygand in his order of the day to his armies yesterday proclaimed that "it will extend tomorrow as far as Switzerland." Havas, French news agency, interpreted this statement as referring to the Rhine front, where the French Maginot line faces the German west wall.

From Basel, Switzerland, came reports this morning of a barrage from the French forts that was the heaviest of the war along the Rhine. The French fired for an hour before the German forts responded, with the entire artillery action lasting almost an hour and a half.

The Basel report said three huge fires blazed in German villages after the bombardment which apparently scored hits on three separate military oil and gasoline storage tanks in the German fortified zone.

German shells in turn apparently set on fire some building in the French Alsace village of Burgfelden.

Army Of 400,000 Favored For U. S.

WASHINGTON, June 10. (AP) — The house military committee approved legislation today increasing the authorized strength of the regular army from 280,000 to 400,000.

The measure also would permit the president to call out the national guard, during the recess of congress, for "use or training" within the United States or its possessions.

Before voting, 16 to 8, to approve the national guard permit, the committee defeated, 14 to 10, an amendment which would have permitted use of the guard anywhere within the western hemisphere. The vote on increasing the strength of the regular army was said to have been unanimous.

As now drafted, the guard measure would provide that the troops "shall not be ordered beyond the continental United States, its island possessions and the Panama Canal zone."
