McDonough announces district attorney bid

MOLLIE BRYANT mbryant@thepampanews.com

Yesterday, Franklin McDonough, Assistant District Attorney of the 84th District, announced his candidacy for 31st District Attorney.

"There are three things that are important in this candidacy: responsibility, discretion and a team effort," said McDonough during a brief speech outside the Gray County Courthouse.

"Some people have to go to prison, but prison isn't the place for everyone. There are a lot of people who make mistakes, and those mistakes have to be corrected, and correcting means sometimes giving a helping hand, and sometimes it means standing strong," he added.

McDonough studied political science at West Texas A&M before attending the Texas Tech University School of Law. He previously served as Assistant District Attorney for the 31st District for about two years, before becoming Assistant District Attorney of the 84th District in 2008.

For the thirteenth straight year, Travis Elementary's students are going to honor those who served their country when the school presents its Veterans Day program at 1:30 p.m. Friday at the M.K. Brown Civic Center.

Jill Faubion, principal of Travis Elementary, said the staff and students have been hard at work preparing what has become a genuine community event.

"They start from the very beginning of school," Faubion said. "It's something that has become very big, so they work really hard at it. They're ready.'

Kay Pittman, who has headed up the program for its 13-year existence, agreed.

"We usually start in about mid-August," she said. "I do stuff through the year, but we start preparing early. We do a lot of fundraising, and we've raised a

When it came to the 10 proposed amendments to the Texas Constitution, Gray County voters decided to be a bit selective.

Gray County voters gave their approval to four of the 10 amendments on the ballot. Propositions 1, 2, 5 and 10 received 83.4, 52.9, 62.8 and 60.8 percent of the local vote, respectively.

"The kids are so patriotic," Pittman said. "It's just incredible. They love getting ready for this. They love all the patriotic music. They love it when we put the Wall of Honor out in the hall, because (they get to put up) their relatives in the military. That's how they really relate to what Veterans Day is all about."

This year's program, Pittman said, includes participation from the Pampa High School band, as well as Pittman's son, 14-year Navy serviceman Scott Lovvorn, and husband, Army veteran Terry Pittman.

The kids will go through a final dress rehearsal today from 8:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. before the curtain rises on Friday's performance.

Pittman said that the program is more than just a show, because it instills a sense of patriotism among the kids involved, as well as in everyone in the Pampa community

Dallas-area Republican Rep. Joe Driver, who has already announced plans to retire when his term ends in January 2013, will enter the plea on a charge of official abuse of capacity at a Nov. 22 court hearing, said Gregg Cox, the director of the public integrity unit with the Travis County district attorney's office in Austin.

Driver, a 65-year-old Texas House veteran from Garland who was first elected in 1992, has acknowledged that for years he collected reimbursements from taxpayers for travel he already had paid for using donated campaign money. He bought airline tickets and ury hotel stays and conference registration fees with campaign funds ΓÇö then submitted receipts for those same expenses to the state.

Cox said he didn't know the details of the plea agreement. The punishment range for the thirddegree felony is two to 10 years in prison, but Cox said Driver could receive probation.

Driver's district office said Wednesday that he had no comment and would not be available to reporters. Driver's attorney didn't return phone calls seeking comment.

An information document filed in lieu of an indictment with Travis County says Driver admits to wrongdoing between September 2005 and August 2010, but does not list the exact amount of money involved.

It says Driver admits wrongdoing by "using his campaign/officer holder account to pay travel expenses related to his service as a member of the Legislature, and by then retaining reimbursement funds received from the State of Texas for said travel expenses in his personal bank account and failing to reimburse his campaign/officerholder account.'

Driver announced last month that has retiring and would not seek reelection. He was elected to a 10th term a few months after the AP revealed the double-dipping.

Driver could have owed more in taxpayer reimbursements, but House travel records before 2005 already had been destroyed, and Driver's campaign said he was unable to calculate the amount of any doublebilling that happened more than five years ago. Thought for Today: "Some men are born mediocre, some men achieve mediocrity, and some men have mediocrity thrust upon them. With Major Major it had been all three." - From "Catch-22" by Joseph Heller (1923-1999)

Don't just salute veterans, rally with them

ites really hate to see: Many members of the 1 percent are joining the 'We are the 99 percent" movement in various Occupy Wall Street pro-

I don't mean that corporate CEOs and hedge fund billionaires are suddenly in the streets to show solidarity with millions of Americans who're fed up with the systemic inequality and corruption infesting our economic and political systems. No. no -- those swells aren't about to dirty their Guccis with any street action. Rather, I'm talking about another, extra-special 1 percent of our society -- the soldiers who've been the "boots on the ground" in Washington's long misguided and bloody wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

This Veterans Day, thousands of vets from America's abused "war class" are not marching in little feelgood parades. Instead, they're rallying with the Occupy movement, expressing their anger at being used in two senseless wars that enriched corporate contractors while the troops lucky enough to come home alive can't find decent jobs and are shorted on the health and education programs they desperately need.

In New York last week, more than 100 of our nation's soldiers marched in uniform from the Vietnam Vets Plaza to Wall Street, where they stood in formation in front of the Stock Exchange. "Corporate profits on the rise," they chanted, "soldiers have to bleed and die." Far from offering the salutes they deserve (much less the help they've earned), the Powers That Be deployed a line of New York police to block these peaceful protesters from the financial manipulators inside and then deployed another line of police on horseback wielding nightsticks to threaten them.

This disgraceful show of force against those who've fought our wars exposes just how perverted and corrupt the power elites have become -and why all of us should support this democracy movement.

Here's some free advice for America's financial and political leaders who're eager to shut down the Occupy protests: If you want to woo the public, try to keep your riotclad police from shooting an Iraqi war veteran in the face and brutally beating another with clubs -- especially when the unprovoked assaults are being videoed, as recently happened in Oakland.

r ou re welcome. The increasing presence of war veterans in the Occupy protests makes it difficult for officialdom to claim that the movement is nothing but aimless, shiftless kids who pose a threat to decent society. Indeed, the real threat to "decent society" (by which the elite mean themselves and their plutocratic rule over our economy and politics) is their own disdainful treatment of America's workaday majority.

After all, even a dog knows the difference between being stumbled over and being kicked. Like millions of knocked down middle-classers and helddown poor people, a tidal wave of soldiers who've served three, five, seven or more tours in hellish war zones have been coming home to a jobless, lowwage, relentlessly grim economy.

So, what's the plan? What shall we do with them? After World War II, a more enlightened establishment created the GI Bill to absorb that surge of returning soldiers -- but our "leaders" today have nothing approaching that enlightenment, nor even a plan to have a plan. The penthouse swells can unleash their police to break up protests, but that only fuels the fury. Now they're cracking down on veterans -- people who know how to use guns. Utah drops charges against polygamist sect leader Jeffs

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - Utah prosecutors dropped charges Wednesday against a polygamist sect leader serving a life sentence in Texas in a separate case.

Warren Jeffs had been found guilty of rape by accomplice - a 2007 conviction that was overturned last year by the Utah Supreme Court, which cited improper jury instructions by the trial judge.

"As a result of the conviction in Texas, we decided not to bring him back to Utah for a re-trial," said Brian Filter, senior deputy attorney for Washington County.

Jeffs, 55, is the ecclesiastical head of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He was sentenced to life in prison in August on charges of sexually assaulting two of his underage brides.

The Utah case charged Jeffs with arranging an underaged marriage involving Elissa Wall, who wrote a book about her experience. Jeffs had been accused of presiding over the marriage, and the two felony charges of rape by accomplice involving Jeffs were the result of sexual encounters with a husband she said she didn't want to marry.

Allen Steed pleaded guilty in February to solemnization of a prohibited marriage - Wall was 14 at the time - and is serving 36 months' probation, Filter said.

Jeffs faces no other charges in Utah.

The decision to drop the case was made with the consent of the victim and Utah Attorney General Mark Shurtleff.

The Utah Supreme Court provided no guidance that would make another trial possible, Shurtleff spokesman Paul Murphy said. But given that Jeffs is serving a life sentence in Texas, there was little to gain by pursuing the Utah case, Murphy said.

Earlier this week in Texas, another high-ranking member of the church was convicted of presiding over Jeff's marriage to a 12-year-old girl.

Fredrick Merril Jessop, 75, received the maximum sentence from a West Texas jury. He was found guilty Monday of performing an illegal wedding ceremony.

That case grew out of a raid at the sect's Yearning for Zion ranch in 2008. Authorities gathered a trove of evidence they used to bring charges against Jessop, Jeffs and 10 other followers.

Jeffs was sentenced to life imprisonment in August after prosecutors used DNA evidence to show he fathered a child with a 15-year-old girl prosecutors say he took as one of his spiritual wives.

In September, Jeffs filed a handwritten motion seeking a new trial. He alleged that his religious freedoms were violated by the courts - an argument he also tried to make while defending himself during his trial.

Jeffs is scheduled to go on trial on bigamy charges in February in San Angelo.

He was initially assigned to a state prison about 100 miles southeast of Dallas to serve his life sentence for sexually assaulting underage girls. On Aug. 28, about three weeks after his conviction, he told corrections officers he had been fasting since the end of his trial and was ill. He then was taken to the Tyler hospital, about 45 miles from his prison before his transfer to the prison hospital.

That hospital shares quarters with the University of Texas Medical Branch, the Texas prison system's chief medical provider.

This was not the first time Jeffs has required hospitalization in the years since he first was locked up.

He tried to hang himself in January 2007 while awaiting trial on rape charges in Utah, according to court documents. He also threw himself against the walls of his cell and banged his head, although he later told a mental health expert he really wasn't trying to kill himself. Around the same time, he was hospitalized for dehydration and depression

In 2009, he was temporarily force-fed while in an Arizona jail.

Former church members have said Jeffs likely would continue to lead his Utah-based church from inside prison and that his followers likely still revere him as a prophet despite the considerable evidence at his trial showing he sexually assaulted young girls.

sidering a plan that would reroute the proposed Keystone XL oil pipeline from Canada away from environmentally sensitive areas of Nebraska, an action that could delay a final decision on the project until after the 2012 election. A U.S. official said told The Associated Press on Wednesday that rerouting the pipeline was a key issue

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department is con-

A U.S. official said told The Associated Press on Wednesday that rerouting the pipeline was a key issue that came up during public meetings and this fall in the six states through which the pipeline would run. The official asked not to be identified because no decision has been made.

Calgary-based TransCanada Corp. is seeking to build the $7 billion pipeline to carry oil derived from tar sands in Alberta, Canada, to refineries on the Texas Gulf Coast. A portion of the 1,700-mile pipeline would pass through Nebraska's Sandhills region and the massive Ogallala aquifer, which supplies water to eight states.

A State Department decision to reroute the pipeline would require an environmental review of the new section, a process that would likely push a final decision on the pipeline past the 2012 election.

The heavily contested project has become a political trap for President Barack Obama, who risks angering environmental supporters if he approves the pipeline and could face criticism from labor and business groups for thwarting jobs if he rejects it. Some liberal donors have threatened to cut off funds to Obama's reelection campaign if he approves the pipeline, which has become a major focal point of environmental groups who say it would bring "dirty oil" that requires huge amounts of energy to extract. They also worry that the pipeline could cause an ecological disaster in case of a spill.

Thousands of protesters gathered across from the White House on Sunday to oppose the pipeline. The crowd linked hands to surround the White House, keeping pressure on Obama as his administration decides whether to approve the project. The State Department has authority over the project because it crosses a U.S. border.

The Keystone XL pipeline would double the capacity of an existing pipeline operated by TransCanada, and supporters say it could significantly reduce U.S. dependence on Middle Eastern oil while providing thousands of jobs.

TransCanada has said any delay in the approval process could cost it millions of dollars and keep thousands of people of from getting jobs.

State Department spokesman Mark Toner said deliberation over whether to reroute the pipeline is part of a broad review of issues that include environmental concerns, energy security, jobs, economic impacts and foreign policy. "So all of these are blended together. It's not just one issue. It's a range of issues that we're looking at," Toner said

US mulls new route for Canada oil pipeline

Meanwhile, the department's inspector general has launched a review of the Obama administration's handling of the pipeline request. The review is being conducted in response to complaints from Democratic law-makers about possible conflicts of interest in the review process.

Deputy Inspector General Harold W. Geisel said the special review will center on whether the State Department "and all other parties involved" in the project followed federal laws and regulations related to the pipeline, which would travel through Montana, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma before reaching Texas.

Pirates, Tigers battle for spot in regional round

ANDREW GLOVER aglover@thepampanews.com

The last time the Lefors Pirates and the Groom Tigers played on October 7, it came down to the end, with the Pirates making the final stop in a 54-50 victory. Friday night in Groom, the stakes will be much higher as the teams meet again for a regional berth 7:30 p.m. in the bi-district

The No. 10 Pirates (8-2) advanced by winning their final game against Darrouzett on November 4. The No. 9 Tigers (8-2) won the Six-Man Division 2 District 2 title with a 53-8 victory over Stegall Hedley last Friday.

"The last couple of weeks, we got better at hitting and wrapping up," Stegall said. "We're a faster team than they are. Should be a good game and come down to the fourth quarter. Either they are going to win by a few points or we are going to win by a few points."

Head coach Joey Czubinski said both teams are familar with each other. "There's no secrets between us," Czubinski said. "We know what they have and they know what we have."

In the October game, Groom's offense was led by its running back, Taylor Fields, who rushed for 296 yards and scored two touchdowns. Stegall said the defense will have to limit him.

"We have to keep Taylor Fields from getting outside," Stegall said. "He has the speed to get away from us if he gets outside. We got to tackle him at the knees instead of up top."

The Tigers advanced to regionals last season. Lefors is seeking to advance for the first time since 2008, when it qualified for the state quarterfinals. Junior Gaitlin Reagan said the team just needs to execute. "We have to play hard," Reagan said. "It will be a good one.' The winner faces the winner of Motley County and Whitharral in regionals.

Keep an eye

OB/DB Seth Scully, Sr.

In the October matchup, Scully threw for 239 yards and five touchdowns. It will be key Friday for Scully to have a good night passing.

In Pampa foreign exchange student Ruben Zerbib's country, the Netherlands, football is played but isn't necessarily

"It's not as big as it is here," Zerbib said. "The biggest sport there is soccer." This year, Zerbib got introduced to football as he was the kicker on the junior varsity football team. Zerbib said he was amazed at how big the locker room was. "It's like what you see in the movies," Zerbib said. When he started practice, Zerbib said he had to get used to kicking a football. "I was used to kicking a soccer ball," Zerbib said. "I didn't know what (kicking a football) was like." Zerbib said the first day of practice was a little nerve-wracking.

"There was like 80 people in the locker room," Zerbib said. "I was a little scared." Senior Colten Adams, who kicked for the varsity team, worked with Zerbib during the season and said he had to help him adjust.

"(Kicking a football) is a lot different than kicking a soccer ball," Adams said. "It took him a while, but he got pretty good at it. He was a fun guy to be around."

During the season, Zerbib was used for extra points, field goals and kickoffs. In a September 1 game against Lubbock Estacado in Pampa, Zerbib scored his first points on an extra point and a 27-yard field goal.

The kicker said it was a cool moment.

"It felt good," Zerbib said. Off the field, Zerbib said Pampa was different than the school he went to in the Netherlands. "Sometimes, school started at one and ended at three," Zerbib said. "(Pampa) is harder.'

Zerbib said he enjoyed playing and getting to know his teammates.

"I've enjoyed everything so far," Zerbib said. "It's like one big family."

Pampa's McAnear, Truitt ready for state cross country meet

ANDREW GLOVER aglover@thepampanews.com

Pampa High School's senior Trent McAnear and junior Terra Truitt are on the road today for Round Rock as they will be competing in their first state cross country meet Saturday.

"I'm really excited," Truitt said. "I didn't think that I was going to make it that far. It's been fun."

"I've been looking forward to this since freshman year," McAnear said. "I've just been working hard and I'm glad I made it."

The girls will race at 1:20 p.m. and the boys at 1:40 p.m. Truitt started the season on the junior varsity and ran her first varsity race on September 24 in Lubbock. She has finished in the top ten in almost every meet.

Truitt said she is amazed at how well she worked really hard this summer, Truitt said. "It's still a surprise to me because I'm not used to being really good."

McAnear is the first male PHS runner to qualify for state since 1993. He was in the top five at several meets and was the top male runner this season. McAnear said he's had an unbelievable season.

"It feels pretty good," McAnear said. "It scared me at the regionals because I got 10th and got passed at the line."

Truitt said she is looking forward to the competition she will face Saturday.

"I'm really excited," Truitt said. "Going down to Austin, I haven't been in a long McAnear said it's a great way to finish his cross country career.

"It means so much," McAnear said. "I've been looking forward to this all year. This has been what I've trained for since the summer. I'm glad it's happened."

Volleyball seniors start new winning tradition for Pampa

Saturday marked the end in both of those of the 2011 volleyball season for the No. 12 Lady Harvesters, but there are no losers. Pampa's postseason run ended far too soon. This past Tuesday, seniors Kailyn Troxell, Caitlin Sieck, Kirsten Kuhn, Stephanie Allen and McKinlee Stokes shouldn't have been a part of the girls basketball home opener. They should have been competing against Borger in the regional quarterfinal.

What those seniors as well as seniors Alanna Stephens and Ramie Hutto, accomplished in their time as Lady Harvesters will always be remembered. Hopefully, the classes after them will continue to grow and expand on what they started.

When this group of seniors first stepped foot in McNeely Fieldhouse as freshmen in 2008, the volleyball team hadn't seen the postseason since 1999, when this year's seniors was in kindergarten. This senior class wasn't alive the last time the Lady Harvesters won district. Some of the senior classes that graduated before them had a different head coach every season. This group of seniors will be the first in a long time to say they played for one head coach, Libby Garza.

In the final weeks of their freshman and sophomore seasons, playoffs were in the picture. In fact, Pampa missed by only one game seasons. next season, this team looked the same with a nondistrict record barely above .500. Then they beat Canyon, the same team that knocked them out of the playoffs the last two seasons. That's when the Lady Harvesters' run began. Following that victory they won the River Road Tournament. Pampa went 16-4 on the court after the Canyon game. On October 23 against the Perryton Rangerettes, the Lady Harvesters brought home the district title. When the 2010 season ended, Pampa clinched an area championship, a regional quarterfinal berth 10th. The question entering the 2011 season was. could the Lady Harvesters repeat their previous season success? It didn't take long for that answer to be a resounding yes.

and was ranked as high as

Pampa won 20 games in non-district. Six of the eight losses were to ranked opponents, including top five ranked Randall and Dumas. In district play, Borger, Perryton or Dalhart didn't come close to tarnishing Pampa's perfect district record. Borger was the only one to win a game in a match.

Since volleyball began at Pampa High School until 2007, the Lady Harvesters only won three trophies. In the last four years, these seniors have equaled that total. In Garza's first four seasons, Pampa was 90-59.

Troxell, Sieck, Kuhn, Allen, Stokes, Stephens and Hutto have definitely raised the bar of achievement for the volleyball program. No longer is a winning record or a playoff berth going to be considered a good season. None of the future classes want to be the one that ends Pampa's reign as district champions.

The question entering the 2012 season is, can the Lady Harvesters reach the same heights with a younger team?

Current juniors Maddie Fatheree, Diamond Marrufo, Dakota Watson and Calli Brewer and sophomores Taylor Giles and Madison Joyce will have to lead a team of new faces. In the next few years, we will see if Pampa continues to have a winning tradition or if it becomes a distant mem-

Solving submissive wetting

MATTHEW "UNCLE MATTY" MARGOLIS Creator's Syndicate

It's happening every day in homes all over the world: fear tinkling.

The dog is so submissive and fearful that he piddles in an instant when triggered by something. What turns on the tinkle? Several things can cause this unwanted behavior, including a loud noise, a visitor reaching out toward the dog, or the dog's owner pointing and yelling.

By any other name, fear tinkling is called "submissive wetting," and it is common among shy and fearful dogs. Something frightens the dog, and he wets out of fear. So let's explore this behavior, see what causes it, and determine how to solve or minimize it.

We will start with the dog's temperament. What has caused the dog to be shy and fearful? It could be a number of things: bad breeding, lack of socialization or too much discipline. You may have adopted a dog and don't know his history. He may have been mistreated. And, of course, it's important to know that your dog hears five times better than you do, so if you raise your voice or point at him while saving something like, "You bad dog, you," that will only heighten the fear of your already-frightened dog. And this causes more fear tinkling.

The only way to solve or at least minimize the problem is to build up your dog's self-confidence. And the only way to do this is for you to be patient, kind and loving.

Start the process by socializing your dog. When he meets new people and dog-friendly logs, praise him and tell him what a good boy he is. Use only positive reinforcement. And be sure to train your dog. This is very important.

Dogs love to learn and to reach their potential. Submissive wetting is most common when you answer the door or when you come home after being gone for a while. For example, when the doorbell rings and your trained dog accompanies you to the door, you will be able to tell him to SIT and STAY. Then praise him and open the door. Your well-trained dog will remain in the sit position, and this makes it difficult for him to cower and tinkle out of fear.

Choose a trainer who does not teach by intimidation. Love, praise and affection are always required to educate and modify the behavior of any dog, especially one that is shy and fearful. When you work with your dog, always praise him as he learns the sit/ stay command and all the rest. In fact, praise him throughout the educational process, even if he is only able to partially accomplish a command. He's trying, and he will only get better if you reward him with loving praise.

Why does training help? First and foremost, it helps build his confidence. A confident dog is not ruled by fear or his bladder.

Woof!

Kahne, whose one-year ride with Team Red Bull will expire, perhaps along with that team, at season's end, has finished sixth or better in five of the past six races, including a runner-up finish in Kansas and a third in Texas Motor Speedway's AAA Texas 500. Next season Kahne will replace Mark Martin at Hepdrick Motorsports. Martin announced last week that he will compete in 25 races for Michael Waltrip Racing.

"The Red Bull team just keeps doing a good job," Kahne said. "They're working hard. It's pretty impressive for a lot of them, not knowing their future, not knowing what's going on there.'

KYLE BUSCH VS. RON HORNADAY JR.

Kyle Busch

This is one of the season's mo feuds. During the Camping World Truck Series race in Texas, the two bumped under green, but then Busch's Toyota rammed Hornaday's Chevy under caution, thus ending any flickering hopes of Hornaday winning the series championship, NASCAR officials then 'parked" Busch for both the Nationwide and Sprint Cup races on the following two days.

Busch issued a "sincere" note of apology ...

NASCAR This Week's Monte Dutton gives his take: "NASCAR officials had to act due to the admittedly intentional nature of the incident, its effect on the Truck title race and the fact that it occurred with the yellow flag iving. More action is likely. Busch may hability tablished just where the limits of 'boys, have at it' lie.

I am a new NASCAR fan this year and I

Dear NASCAR This Week

would like to know why I see the cars of Joe Nemechek, J.J. Yeley (when he isn't driving the No. 55), Michael McDowell, Kevin Conway, Mike Skinner, Travis Kvapil (when he is in the '55' and not the '38') and others run maybe 15-20 laps and then go behind the wall and not return to the race? Why don't they run the whole race like all the others? Garrett Schrade

The answer is that they can't afford to. By qualifying for the race and then not risking getting in a crash, they can continue their team and attempt to secure sponsorship that will enable them to continue to race another week. For instance, Yeley earned $89,561 for last place in Texas. Many don't like the "start-and-park" practice, but some teams consider it a matter of survival.

FORT WORTH, Texas - Kyle Busch fans who bought their tickets to the AAA Texas 500 well in advance were sorely disappointed.

The younger Busch brother wasn't in the field. Nor did he compete in the Nationwide Series' O'Reilly Auto Parts Challenge. Early on Saturday morning, NASCAR officials informed Busch and his team that he wouldn't be allowed to take part in the remainder of the weekend's activities.

The Busch ban occurred as a result of his infantile actions in Friday night's Camping World Truck Series race, won by Kevin Harvick. On the 13th lap, after a bumping incident with Ron Homaday, Busch's Toyota rammed Hornaday's Chevy under caution, eliminating both from the $50,000 and put on probation for the rest of the season. Further disciplinary action could be considered by Busch's team and sponsors.

No qualms — Owner Joe Gibbs expressed no dissent with NASCAR's decision on Saturday.

More on Mayfield

The sad saga of Jeremy Mayfield continued last week, with the ex-driver arrested on drug charges. Times were not always so bad for Mayfield, who won five Cup races, beginning in 1998 and ending in 2005. He qualified for the first two Chases (2004-05) while driving Dodges for Ray Evernham. His NASCAR caree effectively ended after the fifth race of 2009, when he was suspended for a positive drug test. Mayfield, 42, is from Owensboro, Ky., and made his Cup debut in 1993.

Martin, who will be 53 when the 2012 season begins, has won 40 times in his career. He has committed to two partial-schedule seasons, with an option for a third if Aaron's exercises an additional option for 2014.

Prehistoric animal bones found at Pantex

GARY CUNNINGHAM Public Affairs Specialist, Pantex

A sharp eye and a lot of luck led to an interesting discovery at Pantex last month.

Workers excavating at the construction site for the new High Explosives Pressing Facility uncovered the jawbone of an ancient peccary, a prehistoric pig related to modern javelinas, but the discovery was nearly lost amongst the giant piles of earth.

"If we'd taken have another bucket of dirt out of the wall of that pit, we'd have never known were they there," Don Lankford, contractor on the project, said of the bones. "We just happened to knock off for the day right there, and the next morning, the light was hitting the bones just right, and one of the workers spotted them.'

Lankford said the bones were imbedded about eight feet down in the walls of the excavation, with a color that nearly matched the surrounding dirt, so the proper light was crucial to the discovery. The bucket of the massive excavator would almost certainly have destroyed the bone fragments if it had taken another bite out of the wall of the pit, he said.

Plant Historian Monica Graham joined with plant wildlife biologist Jim Ray, geologist Mike Keck and other personnel to excavate the bones. Dr. Gerald Schultz from West Texas A&M University identified the bones as belonging to a Platygonus, an extinct genus of herbivorous peccary of the family Tayassuidae that roamed the area in ancient times. According to Ray, Platygonus were similar to modern species of peccaries (also known as javelinas) but were larger, likely reaching 290-360 pounds.

Platygonus became extinct at least 11,000 years ago, but the bones could be as old as 23 million years old.

Work crews were able to move to other areas of the HEPF site and continue excavation for the foundation and flooring of the facility for several days while the find was dug out and catalogued. Work on the HEPF was not delayed. "We were very fortu-broken on the HEPF in August, and construction is expected to take about two-and-a-half years.

Pantex has policies in place that govern the excavation of paleontology sites. Graham said plant personnel have quite a bit of experience with excavation, having previously recovered historical remains from a site located near Pantex Lake, a playa northeast of the site. The peccary bones will be preserved and stored along with other finds from the

"It's a win-win for everyone when we can learn about the ancient history of this site at the same time we are ensuring the future with this new facility.' GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

 Know that sometimes the less said the greater the impact you have. Knowing what you want and being willing to move forward and make it so are part of the recipe. Now the best move is to watch and check out where others are coming from. Tonight: Vanish.

Listen to what is being said between friends, then observe what is happening. You might be a little tired of a situation conversations. Tonight: Where the fun is.

★★★ Rethink a personal matter with the person involved. A discussion helps both of you bond more closely, no matter what. Anger will keep building if you don't but not necessarily peaceful relating. If you discuss the issue. Do it sooner rather than later. Tonight: Togetherness builds.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

* Defer to your significant other. No matter how you look at a situation, it is changeable. Try accepting and opening up. Your ability to deal with the impossible emerges. Legislative leaders urge tax reform in 2013

AUSTIN (AP) Legislative leaders are warning that steps must be taken to ensure Texas will be able to adequately fund roads, water supplies and schools in the future.

Republican Sen. Tommy Williams on Tuesday implored a tax policy association to "have an honest look in the mirror about" the challenges and tough choices the Legislature faces.

The state is running out of money and options to build new roads and maintain existing ones, he said. The state's water management plan also is without a Ogden says the state long-term funding source. The state's business tax and school finance system are facing legal chal- amendment propositions.

Any increase in taxes will face resistance from conservatives.

Historic S.P.R. steam locomotive part of N.M. statehood anniversary

(AP) - Train buffs got a chance to view an historic Southern Pacific Railroad locomotive over the weekend as it passed through southern New Mexico.

The locomotive, built in 1944 as the last steampowered locomotive purchased by the Union Pacific Railroad, is taking part in the celebration of New Mexico's 100th anniversary of statehood.

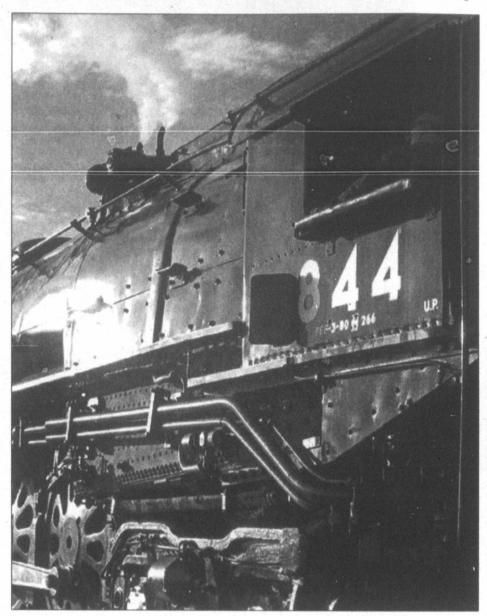

About 60 people met up with the train in Carrizozo and hitched a ride to Alamogordo on Saturday. Engine No. 844 was on display Sunday behind an Alamogordo park, and was scheduled to head to El Paso, Texas, on Monday before stopping in Santa Teresa, Deming and Lordsburg, N.M., on Wednesday, the Alamogordo Daily News reported.

It was set to travel to Arizona later in the week to help kick off that state's centennial celebration.

The train was mainly used as a passenger-hauler back when it was in regular use. It spent its final two years in regular service hauling freight after diesel-electric locomotives took over, before being saved from the scrap heap in 1960 and held for special service.

"I saw this train in 1991 at the Rail Fair in Sacramento, Calif.," said Carol Wilson of Bernalillo. "When I heard that it was coming to New Mexico I said, 'I have to take a ride on it.' I love locomotives. I've loved 'em all my life."

No. 844 now runs solely as the railroad's ambassador to special events around the West.

Engine N. 844, a steamer built in 1944, past through the area this week.

"This was arguably one of the finest passenger locomotives ever made,' engineer Ed Dickens said while switching tracks behind Alameda Park in Alamogordo. "Who would have thought that in 2011 we would have an opportunity to see something like this? It's not in a museum and it's not on some sort of ranch."

The train has never been retired, Union Pacific spokeswoman Zoe Richmond said.

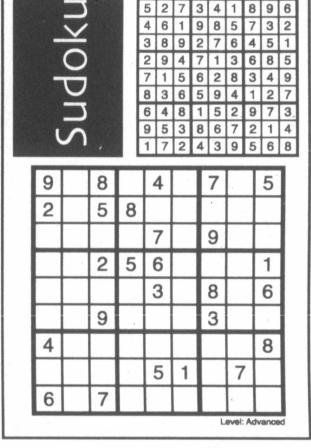

"It has continued to run since its inception in 1944," she said. "It has taken a tremendous amount of work by Union Pacific and many other individuals to maintain it and keep it running."

In addition to the usual

maintenance, machinists at Union Pacific must make whatever component is needed to keep the train running, since mechanical parts are no longer manufactured for the steam locomotive, Richmond

SISTERS IN SERVICE

Roberts, Hardy share familial, veteran bonds

mbryant@thepampanews.com

Rosa Roberts and Karon Hardy, two veteran sisters who grew up in Spearman, entered the military as young women to see the world and seek new opportunities.

Hardy entered the Women's Army Corps (WAC) in 1975, becoming a soldier at age 19.

"We have an older brother who went to (Texas) Tech. (Our parents) paid for him to go to school, and when it was my turn, there really wasn't the money for me to go," she said. "I wanted to travel and get out of Hansford County, and I had the opportunity to (enter) a two year program and see Europe with the Volunteer Army, and I thought, what a deal."

Roberts, on the other hand, sought out new opportunities with the military after being disillusioned with a year of college, serving from 1986

"I wanted to pay for school myself, so I joined the army, because Karon had joined the army, and we were really close and talked a lot," said Roberts. "The benefits were the main reason I went in."

Both Roberts and Hardy went through women-only basic training. Hardy did her basic training at Fort McClellan, and Roberts went through

"I thought I was going to die," said Roberts. "We went out on our first bivouac, which is where you go out and sleep in the field in a little tent, and it was like ten degrees with ten or fifteen inches of snow on the ground. They're hard on you in basic training...Their goal is to break you. My thing was, I wasn't going to cry.'

Hardy, who was eventually promoted to sergeant, was a regular teletype Morse code operator, running net control stations while stationed in Germany. Roberts became a combat medic, and was stationed in Tacoma, Washington and later spent eight weeks in South Korea during Team Spirit, a joint training effort.

"When I was recruited, they said I was going to be a medical specialist, and I would probably work in the hospital drawing blood and that kind of thing, and when I got to my training school at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, there was a big sign that said 'Combat Medic.' I was kind of in shock, because I had no idea I'd be in a unit out in the field. When you're in a field support unit, that means you constantly go out and train in the field," she said. "Every training we went on, we supported the field artillery, so it was like a MASH hospital, but a late 80s version. We supported them with supplies, the medical stuff, vehicles and the maintenance pool."

Serving about ten years apart, Roberts and Hardy saw different stages of women being more fully integrated into active duty. Hardy was eventually stationed in Germany, during a time when WACs were being merged with the regular army.

"It was challenging, because in the Women's Army Corps, we were women all the way up to the Battalion Commander, and then when I landed in Germany, the people who trained me had been in Vietnam a couple of times, and they were suffering. People didn't talk too much about PTSD (post-traumatic stress disorder) then, but I'm a new soldier coming in at 19, and so anyone who had any rank had been to Vietnam a couple of times, and they were career soldiers," said Hardy. "They were very, very hard on us...It wasn't like they were trying to be sexist. They basically explained it to me that if you were in Nam, you were a number, and if you went down, it was just a matter of your dogtags, and someone else was going to come replace you. So, to those guys, talking to me, the gender didn't make a difference to them, because they had been so traumatized by war that they understood war meant women and children getting killed."

For Roberts, serving as a combat medic was the closest that a woman could get to the front lines at the time.

"With women being the support battalions, we could only be a certain distance from the front lines. But at the time I was in, it was a big thing for women to be in support battalions, because that was the first time women had been that close to the front lines. and we carried weapons. We were authorized to fire if we were on guard duty and someone came up," she said.

On the other hand, when Hardy first entered the military, women weren't authorized to use firearms. As WACs became soldiers, however, they were trained to fire weapons.

"I had a drill sergeant who had been to Vietnam twice, and she carried a weapon. We were one of the last cycles of the Women's Army Corps, and she wanted all of us to fire our weapons and qualify, and we had one person that didn't want to do it. Everyone else wanted to do it," she said.

Hardy currently lives in Chesapeake, Virginia, with her husband of 36 years. They have two children, including a son who currently serves in the Coast Guard as a Marine Science Technician. Hardy works a civilian job at the Norfolk Naval Base.

Roberts lives in Pampa, and has three children. She currently works at Walmart.

Boyd looks back on 22-year communications career

ARNIE AURELLANO editor@thepampanews.com

Pampa's Dennis Boyd, a veteran of the Marine Corps, can tell you exactly how long he served in active duty.

"Twenty-two years, six months, 26 days," said the affable Boyd with a grin. "And I've got four days reserve. Sticks with you.

It was a heck of a ride for Boyd, 60, who joined the Marine Corps straight out of high school on April 30, 1969. Four days later, he was shipped off to boot camp in San Diego, which he finished and followed with a two-week stint at infantry training at nearby Camp Pendleton. After that, he was sent to communication electronics school, where he spent 38 weeks studying basic electronics, radio fundamentals and microwave technology.

After school, Boyd was assigned to a maintenance battalion at Las Pulgas Camp Pendleton before moving to the Marines base at Twentynine Palms, joining a battalion that had just returned from Vietnam. Afterward, he volunteered for overseas duty in 1970; he went to staging battalion a year later and was set to head to Vietnam before fate intervened.

"When I got to Okinawa, they pulled me off the plane," Boyd said. "I never made it to Vietnam. I got put at Camp Hague until I could get further orders. I ended up spending my tour in Okinawa for 13 months at Camp Schwab with 9th Marines regiment."

Boyd served as a mail clerk in Okinawa, directing mail to soldiers stationed in Vietnam. He returned stateside in 1972, landing in San Francisco and becoming a military policeman at Treasure Island.

Dennis Boyd in his Marine regalia at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Pampa's Dennis Boyd enlisted straight out of high school and Boyd's military story doesn't end there; he reenlisted in 1973 and went back to school for ground radio training, becoming a single side band radio instructor at Twentynine Palms, serving on the U.S.S. Charleston and working with NATO troops in Norway and Denmark. His career stretched through Operation: Desert Storm in the Middle East before he finally retired in 1991, bringing an end to over two decades of serving his country and earning a pair of Meritorious Commendations along the way.

Still, it was upon his return to California, Boyd said, that one of the stark realities of his career really struck him. It was when he set foot back on American soil that the volatile social climate in the country and the public's perception of the military at the time dawned on him.

"When I reported into San Francisco, I got off at the airport, and by the time I got to the exit, I had to take my uniform and throw it away," Boyd said. "People spit and throw things at you. (They call you) 'baby killer,' and just all kinds of degradation. My uniform was unserviceable by the time they were done.

"It was disheartening," he continued, "because you're doing that as your career. You almost have to go and hide. We did things like hide our haircut. People wouldn't talk to you, especially there in California. People shun you... I enjoyed my job, but we were labeled as baby killers and all of that. It was just a hard time."

Those images of contempt, Boyd said, have never left his mind. Even up through the later stages of his career, he always remembered what it was like to walk through that airport.

"When I came back from Desert Storm, my wife at the time was telling me that everybody's rooting," Boyd said. "I'm just kind of going, 'Yeah, OK.' I could remember the last time came from overseas, and it wasn't a pretty sight.

That's why the recognition that he and his peers receive now during Veterans Day makes such a big difference, Boyd said.

"It's a lot better than it used to be, because people recognize it now," he said. "People are starting to become more patriotic, I think. It's kind of hard to get used to, when you've been through a lot of rejection, like when I walked through that airport. But it's a good thing.

'You feel more free now. You can wear your pride. Back then, you couldn't. You had to hide the fact that you were even attached to the military. Now, you bring it out in the open, and it's almost like coming out of the closet - like you finally feel like the time you served, you have-(made a difference). I feel like I have."

Today, Boyd works as an instrument tech at Hunting-Titan, working with oilfield equipment with the same care and precision that he did servicing military communications gear for over 22 years. And while he did most of his work in the service fixing radios rather than firing guns, he said that he's just proud to have done his part to aid the American war effort and preserve our freedom with the rest of his colleagues and countrymen.

"I was mostly in the rear for support," Boyd. "Rarely did I go up to the front lines. When I did go up to the front lines, it was for support, for repairs... But if units can't communicate to where they're located and how they are going to advance, then you just have a mass mob.

"You have to coordinate somehow, and that's what we helped them to do. I'm proud to be a part of that, (to be) one of the guys that helped do that. There's only so many pieces of gear that they could have down at one time. When you had to get something fixed one way or another and have it operational, we did it, even if you had to use bubble gum and a chew stick. I've used bubble gum wrappers for fuses, just to be able to get a word out... I did all that stuff in the service of my country, and I'm proud of that."

SALUTE TO GRAY COUNTY'S VETERANS —

'BACK AGAINST THE WALL'

Vietnam vet Williams recalls hardships of wartime

RANDY PRIBBLE rpribble@thepampanews.com

"Disenchanted" is the word Dennis Williams brings to mind when he talks about his experience in the military.

The Vietnam veteran remembers coming through the San Francisco Airport on his way back from Victnam to Fort Bliss in El Paso, where he mustered out. He clearly remembers the epithets and people spitting on him.

"I literally had my back against the wall, just so I could make sure people weren't behind me," he said. "It was almost as scary as being in Vietnam. The people were crazy.

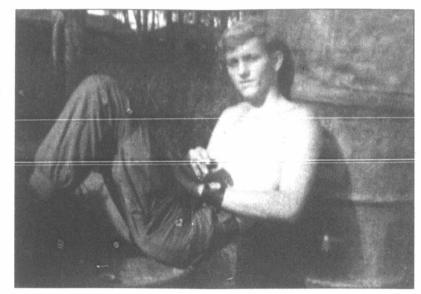

He was only 17 and living in Pampa when he decided to enlist in the Army rather than finish high school.

Although he managed to earn a GED and other training in the Army, his education is one thing he wishes he had pursued.

It was 1967. He received basic training at Fort Bliss, was trained Williams was a fresh-faced 17 when he first decided to enlist in the Army.

Dennis Williams was sent to Vietnam in 1968

as a field wire lineman (telephones and radios) at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and spent some time at Fort Benning, Ga., as an assistant instructor, teaching artillery tactics to Rangers, officer candidates and Special Forces.

"When I was at Fort Benning, they put me on burial details for guys coming back from Vietnam," he said. "Being in the south at that time, a lot of the African American guys were coming back in bags and we would go on buses and cars to these burial details.

"The black guys in the details could not go into some whitesonly restaurants. That always got me. I was raised around prejudice, but that got me. I wouldn't go into those restaurants either and wound up eating with them.'

In 1968, he was sent to Vietnam. At this point his memory becomes cloudy, perhaps out of self-preser-

"I was assigned to the First Air Calvary and I don't ... I've blocked so much of that out," he explained. "I've often thought about trying to remember what unit I was in over there, but I really don't want to find out anymore. I've not kept up with anyone over there. What I did over there, I was mostly by myself."

What he did over there was volunteer for just about anything except radio work, because other soldiers had told him radiomen get

"I was refueling helicopters with JP4," he said with a wry laugh, "which is about three times as dangerous as being on the radio.'

He was in-country — a place he describes alternately as "beautiful" and "a hellhole" — for one year. He doesn't have much to say about his unit or the soldiers with which he served.

"In this particular unit it was every guy for himself," Williams "No one had your back.

There was no camaraderie.

"Our commander was a major from San Antonio. During time he was there - probably 8 months -I saw him maybe three times. He stayed in his tent and drank beer most of the time.'

The unit was stationed in the Demilitarized Zone and soon was moved south of Saigon to Phouc

"They didn't like us much down there," he said. One day a rocket went off right beside his tent. It blew me into the bunker, got my right ear and separated my shoulder," he said. "I didn't catch any shrapnel, thank goodness.' The Army did not award him a Purple Heart, a fact he cannot explain and dismisses with, "I didn't want one. I was just happy to get out of that hellhole."

Even after he came back to the States and was honorably discharged, no one told him he was entitled to such things and medical care and counseling.

"Once they got us out the door, that was it," he said. They didn't tell you that you were entitled to anything. I didn't know anything about (veteran's benefits) until I joined the Veterans of Foreign Wars.'

Now the 61-year-old Williams has had his medical needs addressed by the VA and has joined the Patriotic Guard, a group of vets who attend military funerals and shield families from "religious kooks.

Williams is happy there seems to be a renewed sense of patriotism in the country and that men and women in uniform are treated better than they were in his era. Still, it hasn't been easy

"I still like my back against the wall when I'm in places," he noted. "I still have some bad dreams, but it is getting better."

More POWER To You

"Freedom is never more than one generation away from extinction. We didn't pass it to our children in the bloodstream. It must be fought for, protected, and handed on for them to do the same, or one day we will spend our sunset years telling our children and our children's children what it was once like in the United States where men were free."
