U.N. inspectors maintain watch outside barred ministry

by NABILA MEGALLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAMA, Bahrain — U.N. chemical weapons inspectors maintained a round-the-clock watch Monday on Iraq's Agriculture Ministry for a second day in the latest confrontation between the United Nations and Baghdad.

The 16-member team was staking out the ministry to prevent the possible removal of weapons-related documents or other materials after being barred entrance to the building the day before.

On Monday, the official Iraqi News Agency quoted Foreign Ministry Undersecretary Saadoun al-Zubaidi as saying the team's main goal was to collect intelligence information.

The agency claimed the U.N. team headed by Maj. Karen Jansen, a chemical weapons specialist, had tried to break into the building on Sunday and "besieged" it ever since.

A similar standoff last year left another United Nations' team, also led by an American, in another Baghdad parking lot for four days before it got what it wanted: documents concerning Iraq's nuclear weapons program.

At the United Nations, officials of the U.N. Special Commission set up to oversee the elimination of Iraq's weapons after the Gulf War said Monday they would ask the Security Council to help end the standoff.

Commission chief Rolf Ekeus planned to brief the 15-member council on the situation Monday afternoon.

Tim Trevan, a spokesman for the Special Commission, declined to say why inspectors wanted access to the Agriculture Ministry.

Being prevented access by the Iraqis represents the first open Iraqi challenge to the council since a March ultimatum given to Deputy Premier Tariq Aziz because of Baghdad's foot-dragging and concealment of information related to its weapons of mass destruction.

Under United Nations cease-fire terms, Iraq is required to allow the inspectors to eliminate its nuclear, chemical and biological weapons potential as well as its long-range missiles.

Voyles faces possible indictment

Lubbock resident James Kevin Voyles, 36, faces a possible grand jury indictment this week for the shooting deaths of two Lubbock men last month at the Moonflower Apartment complex.

The grand jury will meet in Lubbock this week, and the Voyles case is scheduled to be presented Friday on the second floor of the Lubbock County Courthouse.

Voyles was charged last month with the murder of Mental Health and Mental Retardation case worker James Haliburton Jr., and capital murder for the death of Lubbock police officer Kenneth Fowler.

It is believed that Voyles is under the care of MHMR, and at the time of the shootings, there were reports that Voyles was also a Vietnam War veteran. However, the Veteran's Administration office in Waco has no record of Voyles serving during the Vietnam conflict.

The district attorney's office in Lubbock reports that Voyles has been arrested previously for a non-assaultive offense.

Thousands celebrate holiday Broadway style

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Despite Saturday's sweltering temperature, an estimated 50,000 to 70,000 Lubbockites and people from surrounding towns joined in the day-long 4th On Broadway celebration.

Organizers of the second annual event said they feel that the street fair, parade and evening concert and fireworks show proved to be successful.

"It's our goal and intent to provide entertainment and activities for South Plains residents to celebrate our nation's independence," said Morris Wilkes, the 4th On Broadway publicity chairman.

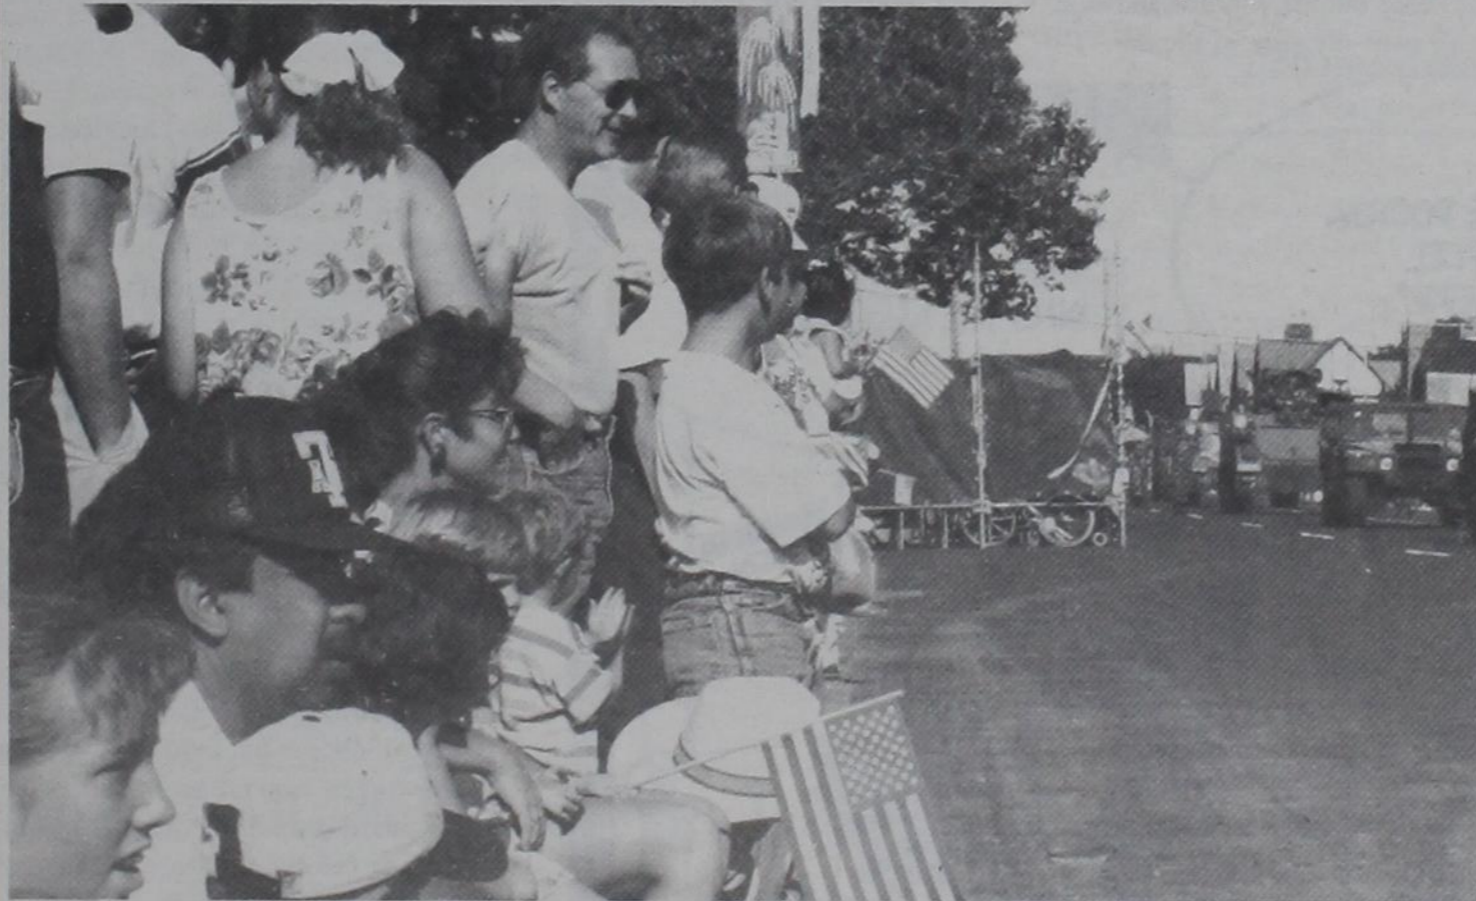

The Hub City's Independence Day activities began with a parade through downtown followed by an all-day street fair with entertainment by bands and musicians on seven separate stages along the street and a large number of food booths sponsored by area merchants and organizations.

For evening entertainment, the city hosted the traditional fireworks show in the park north of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

Don Caldwell, organizer of the evening festivities, said a number of changes were made to this year's program.

Among the changes made for the audience's benefit was the placement of the concert stage at a different site in the park so concert-goers would not be facing the sun. Celebration organizers also moved the fireworks display closer to the stage.

"We placed a sound system in the park to accommodate the crowd and to fill the entire park with sound," Caldwell said.

Parade-goers watch lines of tanks, floats and estimated 50,000 to 70,000 people attended the day-long 4th on Broadway celebration, while about 20,000 turned out for the evening fireworks display.

Legislature budgets extra lottery cash

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans may be spending $110 a second on lottery tickets, but the proceeds likely won't leave piles of extra cash sitting around the state Treasury. The Legislature already has spent it.

"The money's already been budgeted," said Andy Welch, a spokesman for the comptroller's office.

Lottery proceeds are lumped into the state's main checking account, the general revenue fund, along with the revenue from most of the major state taxes.

How it is spent is up to lawmakers. In this budget, lottery profits are being spent just like the other tax money — on schools, services and operations of state government agencies.

"If they wanted to spend an extra $461 million on highways or some other services, that would be a legislative decision," Welch said.

Some states dedicate all their lottery profits to one purpose, such as schools.

But Texas lawmakers rejected that plan, noting that lottery income can fluctuate widely.

The comptroller's official estimate of lottery profits is $461 million during the current two-year budget period, which ends Aug. 31, 1993.

Pet bricks?

Are pet owners sane, law-abiding citizens?

RACHELLE CAMERON

I have a question for pet lovers out there. And I ask this because I'm genuinely baffled, and a little worried when it comes to pet owners. What is it about having a pet that causes owners to do things normal, rational, non-animal owners never understand?

For instance, calling your cat. Now, I'm not making this up, I swear. You could call my friend Stacy and ask, but she's probably on the phone with her cat. Stacy is a normal, law-abiding, tax paying, clinically sane participant in society. She knows the world is round, how to balance her checkbook, and to change her toothbrush every three months, but she does not know her cat can't talk on the phone.

She'll call her cat T.J. from work and wait for the answering machine to come one and say, "T.J., it's Mommy...What are you doing, sweetie?"

As if that dumb cat is going to be doing anything else but sleeping or scratching up the new couch!

She continues, "I miss you...I'll be home by five..."

She also bought a "cat leash" the other day and tried to force T.J. to go for a walk, on his leash - outside. Yeah right, have you ever tried to force a cat to do anything it didn't want to? It's a sure fire way to get hurt. In fact, I think I read somewhere it was one of the leading causes of death among cat owners.

Just ask Stacy, she took the leash back the next day, on her way to the doctor's office.

My parents are the same way. They have two boxers named Brandy and Judge Roy Bean (Judge, for short.) Judge is retarded. I say that because it's true. However, my mom is in a deep state of denial about the whole thing and tries to tell me he walks bent almost in half with his butt right next to his head because he likes it.

Mom says he's an eccentric dog with a disdain for societal norm, and a high regard for personal satisfaction. I say he's retarded.

My parents also have now become dog chauffeurs. All the dogs have to do is stand by the front door and whine and my parents will stop whatever they're doing at any hour, night or day, and drive them around and around the block just to let them hang their heads out the window and slobber all over the side of the car. I'll never understand it.

Why do they allow Judge and Brandy to run through the house with muddy paws, but tell me to get my feet off the couch? The very couch on which the dogs play and slobber.

And why does my mom spend more time reading the labels on their dog food, than on what she buys for herself? She won't give them anything but canned, non-liver, non-cheese, proven-to-be-good-for-you dog food, but her and my dad ignore the health dangers of Cheese Doodles, Oreos, and your-arteries-will-never-be-the-same-again Ho Ho's. I won't even tell you how they take the dogs to Dairy Queen once a week to eat ice cream, it's too embarrassing.

It has gotten to the point that every time I go home, I expect to see my parents, Judge and Brandy laughing and talking around the dinner table, while I sit on the back porch scratching at the door hoping somebody drops some food on the floor.

You know, I tried to call Stacy to talk about these feelings, but I couldn't get through. Maybe the cat needs a separate line.

Olympus speaks out on 1992 presidential race

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Let me set down by muckrake for a moment to don Olympian robes and deliver a thumbsucker: Whither the presidential campaign of 1992?

Clear the palate: What is the campaign mainly about? Contrary to what you have been told, it is not primarily about vague themes like "character" or "leadership" or "change," nor ideological differences, nor health plans or abortion rights or deficit reduction, nor fears of endless recession.

This campaign is, first, about your assessment of George Bush's presidency — whether you trust his old-shoe experience to keep the nation out of major trouble.

Second, it is about your willingness to risk the alternative. (Political scientists use the Henny Youngman formulation: "How's your wife?" "Compared to what?") This is a personal choice, in which personalities count heavily, but your central decision is whether to accept or reject George Bush.

Ignore all polls, which at this stage are only misleading. Scorn all other pundits who see this as a close three-way race, titillating each other with visions of an Electoral College dropout into the House; it's fun as a civics lesson but it won't happen.

What will happen to the three campaigns is this:

Bush will not really bottom out until he returns from Europe and the Democratic Convention ends in mid-July. He faces further downward pressure from the coming call for an Iraqgate special prosecutor and from sluggish economic growth, but like Rommel in retreat, he gathers strength for a counterattack.

As the novelty wears off, as summer wears on, and as more troubling facts emerge about Ross Perot's manipulations, Perotmania will ebb. The outrage groupies from the Buchanan and Brown camps will continue to lionize their latest protest vehicle, but his expensive midnight-in-America ad campaign will fizzle, and the large "I'm-only-looking" element of his support will remain only tentatively committed.

Bill Clinton's convention in New York will be adjudged a success, compared with the 1988 debacle; his acceptance speech will also shine by comparison with his speech then. Blacks will be on board, with or without Jesse Jackson, but women and ethnics and flags will predominate.

Come the fall, polls, debates and the competition-loving media may preserve the illusion of a three-way race. But let us keep our eye on the central dynamic of the campaign — yes or no to Bush — which will ultimately force anti-Bush voters to dump the weaker anti-Bush candidate.

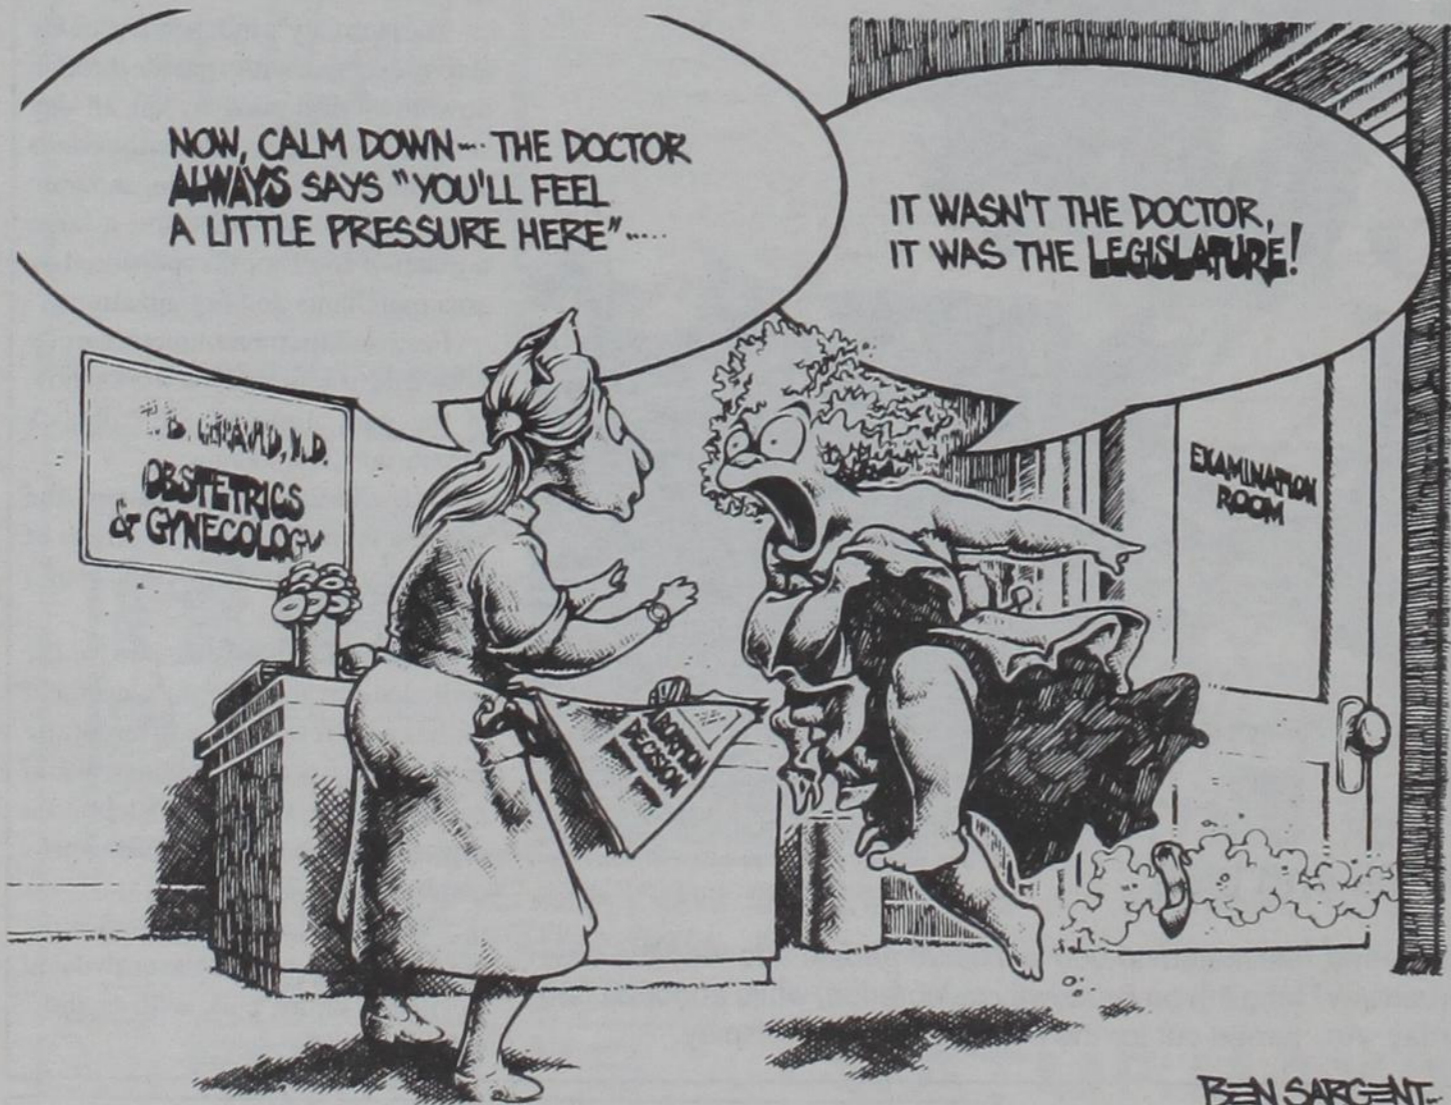

Added urgency will be given them to switch to the strongest by the Bush comeback in the finally significant polls. By picking up a good portion of the undecided-about-Bush vote, the president will draw ahead of the second and third candidates, who at first split the undecideds-about-Bush.

Conservative women who feel strongly about abortion rights will also have to decide "most likely to beat Bush: and will choose pro-choice Clinton over pro-choice-but Perot; they will far outnumber Democratic or independent women who are anti-abortion enough to switch to Bush.

Toward the end, with Bush leading, the third man's vote will "break," much as George Wallace's 24 percent in polls broke to 14 percent on Election Day in 1968.

The way the Perot protest support breaks will decide the election. This means that the early pace between Clinton and Perot, as both pound Bush, will turn into a furious don't-waste-your-vote altercation at the end, as Bush's opponents pound each other.

Departments awarded three-year grants

by RACHELLE CAMERON
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's chemistry and physics departments recently were awarded 17 three-year grants totaling more than $538,000 for the first year.

The grants were awarded by the Robert A. Welch Foundation which supports chemistry and related sciences basic research programs in universities throughout Texas every year, said David Knaff, chairman of the chemistry and biochemistry department.

"The Welch Foundation's main goal is to put Texas chemistry on the map and set up endowed chemistry research programs," Knaff said.

Each of the 17 programs will receive $30,000 each year for three years, which makes up a large portion of the chemistry department's funding.

"Last year we brought in about $2.6 million in grants, so the Welch Foundation is providing around 15 percent of our total money for research," Knaff said.

The funds received will help pay for scientific equipment, supplies, chemicals, and the summer salaries of the doctoral student researchers. Although funds are provided by the federal and state governments as well as Tech, money is not provided to pay summer salaries for researchers, therefore, it must come from grants.

"While $30,000 may seem like a great deal of money, it doesn't go very far when you have to buy $100,000 worth of equipment," Knaff said.

The equipment, chemicals and salaries are all part of building an international reputation for Tech, he said.

"The better your programs and research are, the better your reputation and recognition. This, of course, is essential in attracting the brighter students to the scientific field which gives us the edge in competition," Knaff said.

The number of American students earning bachelor or doctorate degrees in science is decreasing every year, making it more difficult for the United States to be internationally competitive in the research field, he said.

"Although research is intellectually stimulating in its own right, the rewards also include building a first rate chemistry program that can compete at a national level and bring Tech the recognition it deserves," Knaff said.

In an attempt to interest students in science at a younger age, the Welch Foundation awards scholarships to high school juniors and seniors. Fourteen Welch scholarship winners are attending special programs.

Adopt-a-Brick program helping restore Broadway

by RACHELLE CAMERON
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Although thousands of Lubbockites enjoyed the 4th on Broadway Independence Day celebration, organizers of the event said they were disappointed in the success of their Adopt-a-Brick program.

The program was intended to raise money to replace the patches of asphalt on Broadway with red brick. For two dollars, festival-goers could buy a brick, and receive a certificate recognizing their contribution. One dollar would go to the 4th on Broadway fund and the other would go toward replacing the asphalt.

However, by late Saturday afternoon, volunteers who had expected the program to be a huge success, reported selling only one brick.

"We're a little disappointed with the response, but hopefully the public will hear more about it if we advertise more," said Dena Kellogg, a 4th on Broadway volunteer.

Kellogg blamed a lack of advertisement and a difficulty in finding the booth among the thousands of people and number of different stands for the small public response.

Kellogg said she was not sure if the program would be available to the public after the Fourth of July.

Although their expectations for the Adopt-a-Brick program were not met, festival volunteers reported selling more T-shirts, bags, and visors with the 4th on Broadway slogan than they had hoped.

"Well, we're real happy about selling the shirts and I have to keep putting more out. I'm just glad everyone is having a good time," Kellogg said.

Sludge on its way to West Texas ranch

by SUZANNE GAMBOA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PECOS — A federal judge cleared the way Monday for New York City sludge to be spread in West Texas this month.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton denied the state's request for a temporary injunction halting MERCO Joint Venture's plans to spread sludge on a 128,000-acre ranch.

The state attorney general sued MERCO and the Environmental Protection Agency last week alleging the EPA did not follow its own permitting procedures and MERCO was not complying with regulations to preserve documented archaeological sites on the ranch.

"We're pleased with the ruling and hope that because we are an environmentally-sound project, if any appeals are made we'll win on the merits," said Marc Sybert, MERCO spokeswoman.

Bunton did not immediately give his reasons for denying the injunction and will file them later. He set a Sept. 14 trial date and gave attorneys until July 15 to argue whether the case belongs in federal court.

MERCO's $168 million contract to begin shipping sludge, a wastewater treatment plant byproduct, from New York City to Texas went into effect July 1.

"Obviously we are disappointed with the judge's decision," said Assistant Attorney General Gregg A. Cooke.

"We think it's ludicrous to allow the EPA to follow requirements in other states yet when it comes to Texas to fail to comply with proper state agency regulations as clearly required by state law."

Bailiffs return to courthouse

FORT WORTH (AP) — Some Tarrant County Courthouse bailiffs carried metal detectors Monday as work resumed for the first time since a gunman killed two and wounded three in a courtroom shootout last week.

The 32 hand-held detectors had been in storage Wednesday when attorney George Lott, 45, stood from the back row of an appellate courtroom and opened fire. The devices are only used when specifically requested, according to the head of security at the courthouse.

"When requested, we use them," Capt. Tony Wise said Monday. "Some of the judges requested it today."

For those judges who asked for the security, every person who stepped into their courtrooms first passed through a detector.

Judge David Farris, who sat in the courtroom when Lott went on his shooting rampage, said a bailiff had been assigned to his courtroom for the first time. The judge said he is considering carrying a gun for additional safety.

Public schools may get additional aid, says Richards

by PEGGY FIKAC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — Only days after Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said public schools would get at least $650 million more state aid next legislative session, Gov. Ann Richards said Monday she doesn't know if that's the case.

"We all know that there's going to be growth in the economy, and we feel good about that. How much of it's going to go to the public schools, I don't know yet," Richards said.

Bullock last week said the increase would come from economic growth and improvement. He said it might be as much as $1 billion for the budget period encompassing the 1993-94 and 1994-95 school years.

Richards said she didn't want her statements to be painted as a disagreement with Bullock, adding, "I hope he's right."

The governor said she hadn't talked to Bullock because the lieutenant governor was preparing to have back and knee surgery.

But she told reporters, "I'd say you can't be definitive about exactly how much is going to go to public schools ... Don't set that up as some kind of disagreement or quarrel or something because it really isn't. I mean there's going to be extra money there, and there are going to be a lot of competing things for that money."

Bullock's earlier statement came after he, Richards and House Speaker Gib Lewis told school superintendents in a June letter, "There will be no new state money for public education next biennium and you can expect per pupil state aid to remain, at best, constant."

Mary Jane Wardlow, a spokeswoman for the lieutenant governor, characterized the statement as a "clarification" of the previous letter.

Ms. Wardlow said Bullock wanted to emphasize that growth in the budget would provide money for additional students, even though school districts could not count on a funding increase per student.

In figuring the projected public education increase, Ms. Wardlow said, Bullock's staff took Legislative Budget Board staff estimates for the coming budget cycle and pulled out the percentage that normally goes to education. That is about 38 percent of general revenue money, she said.

State within Bosnia deemed treasonous

by TERRY LEONARD
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The declaration of an independent Croatian state within Bosnia was termed treasonous Monday by the Muslim-led Bosnian leadership.

The ethnic mosaic of newly independent Bosnia was fractured further with the proclamation of "Herzeg-Bosnia," a Croatian enclave covering more than 20 percent of the former Yugoslav republic.

Bosnia was already carved up by the April proclamation of a Serbian state from nearly two-thirds of the republic at the start of the bloody civil war.

If the Croatian declaration becomes a reality, that would leave the Bosnian government in control of only the capital city of Sarajevo and a few provincial towns.

Although the political solution is deteriorating and the neighborhoods around the airport are still battlegrounds, the international airlift to Sarajevo is "a small miracle" going better than expected, said U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard.

Twenty-eight relief flights arrived over the weekend.

That was well above U.N. projections of eight a day when the airport was opened June 29.

The United States on Monday endorsed a German proposal to pry open a land corridor from Croatia to Sarajevo while leaders of the world's seven richest countries meeting in Munich, Germany, considered providing military protection for the relief effort.

The French revived a proposal to hold an international conference on Yugoslavia that would be attended by the 15 members of the U.N. Security Council and some of Yugoslavia's neighbors, Italian Foreign Minister Vincenzo Scotti said.

About 465 tons of aid has reached the capital, but relief workers are having trouble getting rations to neighborhoods where supply stocks are down to bread and beans.

Only 42 of the 102 communities in the greater Sarajevo area had received shipments by Monday, U.N. officials said.

The state of Herzeg-Bosnia, with a capital in the war-battered town of Mostar, was outlined Saturday by Mate Boban, a Croat leader with a force of about 30,000 soldiers controlling southwestern Bosnia.

State Department spokesman Margaret Tutweiler said Monday that the United States "has consistently opposed any forcible changes in borders. We repeat our basic policy: it is for the people of the area to resolve questions about their future peacefully and through negotiations."

The creation of Herzeg-Bosnia appears to further jeopardize any hope of creating an independent multi-ethnic Bosnia from the former Yugoslav republic of 4.3 million people.

"This is treason," said Stjepan Kljuic, a Croat who serves on Bosnia's collective presidency and opposes close alignment with Croatia, another former Yugoslav state.

"This attempt to break our unity is a knife in the back," said Bosnian deputy military commander, Col. Jovan Djivak.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman said Monday his government recognizes Bosnia's independence.

In a letter to Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, Tudjman said the Croats had to organize against "Serbian aggression" and certain "tendencies" of the Muslim leadership of Bosnia.

Without taking the Bosnian Croats to task, Tudjman said their state is viewed as "an initiative within the republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and only as such, we support them."

Tudjman also declared, "the war in Croatia is definitely over."

U.N. peacekeepers had assumed control of four disputed regions and Yugoslav army troops and Serb irregulars were withdrawing from Croatia, he said.

Democrats contemplating when to reveal running mate

by KAREN BALL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — When should Bill Clinton announce his running mate? The campaign is debating whether to deliver the big news this week or hold off to create "high combustion" at next week's convention in New York.

Aides even toyed briefly with the idea of postponing the announcement until next Tuesday, so newscasters would break into baseball's All-Star game and its guaranteed audience of millions.

The timing of Clinton's announcement still depends mainly on when the Democratic presidential candidate makes up his mind, and that hasn't happened yet, aides report.

Clinton decided to travel to Washington late Monday, a day earlier than originally planned, allowing time for possible meetings with those under consideration.

The Arkansas governor, just a week away from the start of the Democratic National Convention, spent much of the holiday weekend mulling his choices while aides reviewed "a tremendous amount of background research" on potential candidates, one campaign aide said Monday.

Campaign spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said the announcement would likely come sometime between Wednesday and next Monday.

Debating the exact timing is "like debating how many angels are dancing on the head of a pin," Myers said. "It's not productive, because Clinton's going to make up his mind and we're going to announce it. You're going to get a bounce out of it no matter when it happens."

So far, Clinton has successfully kept his favorite choices under wraps to heighten suspense. Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey and Pennsylvania Sen. Harris Wofford are widely mentioned as among those under serious consideration.

But aides said Clinton also was looking at other prominent Democrats, and a "surprise" pick was possible.

Speculation that Mario Cuomo might still be an option subsided with the campaign's announcement Monday that the New York governor will give the nominating speech for Clinton at the convention.

Arc Angels show influence of late Stevie Ray Vaughan

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

With only one cut from their self-titled debut on the airwaves, the Austin-based band Arc Angels is out on the road to support its new album release.

The band will make a stop in the Hub City tonight taking the stage at 9:30 p.m. at the Depot's 19th St. Warehouse.

Doors open at 7 p.m. and tickets are $10.

It may not take much touring to summon support for the Texas musicians, all of whom can claim the state capital as the home of their musical beginnings.

Arc Angels host the voice, guitar and song writing talents of 23-year-olds Charlie Sexton and Doyle Bramhall II as well as drummer Chris Layton and bassist Tommy Shannon, former members of the rhythm section of Stevie Ray Vaughan's Double Trouble.

Each of the Arc Angels boasts an influence by the late Vaughan, which seems to provide a shared experience among the band members.

The band's debut album features music reminiscent of Vaughan and other Austin blues musicians, but combines equally the talents of the four band members.

Sexton began performing on guitar when he was 11 years old and joined Joe Ely as his lead guitarist when he was 13.

In 1985, at age 17, Sexton produced his debut solo album "Pictures for Pleasure" containing his first chart hit, "Beat's So Lonely."

Bramhall also had an early start in the Austin music scene on the heels of his father Doyle Bramhall Sr. who also played with Jimmy and Stevie Ray Vaughan.

Sexton's vocal style with the Arc Angels abandoned the pop variety that made "Pictures for Pleasure" uniquely his own.

"The music didn't really turn out like anything any one of us would have done on our own," Layton said.

He said the idea for the group's formation became a reality after Vaughan's death in 1990.

Layton added that he is looking forward to returning to Lubbock to perform after having played here regularly with Double Trouble.

Judd says going solo has downside

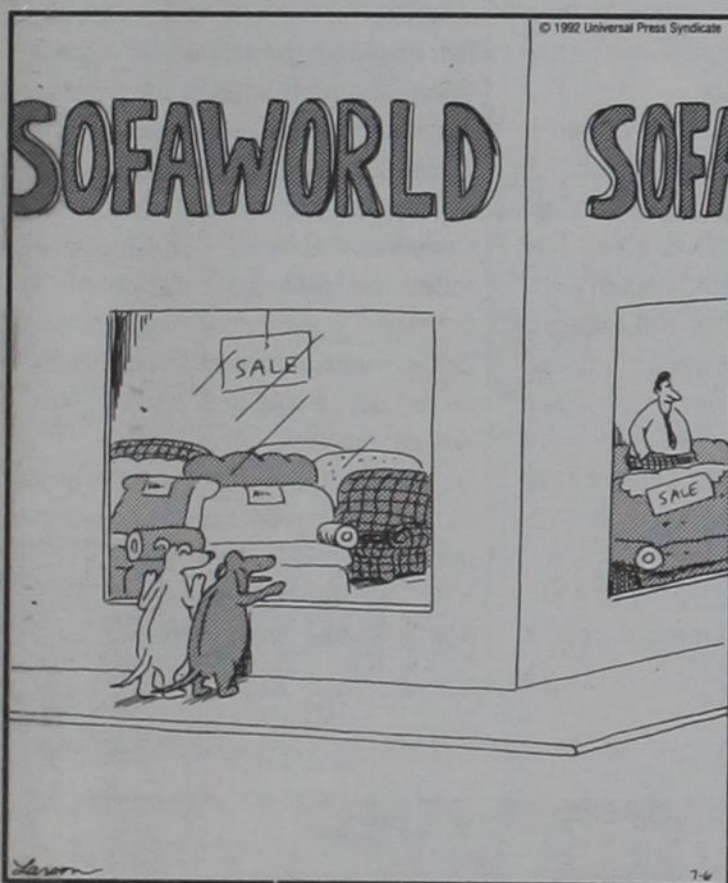

NEW YORK (AP) — Country singer Wynonna Judd says going solo has its downside — especially when your former partner in The Judds was your mom.

"I go between one minute feeling like I can conquer the world, and the next minute wanting to call my mom and have her come get me," she said in this week's People magazine.

Naomi Judd, 46, dropped out of the duo seven months ago when she developed chronic active hepatitis.

'Don't Tell Her It's Me' worth video rental

by FRANCISCO RODRIGUEZ
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

So a friend of mine — whom I'll call "Pepe" — and I go to Hastings to rent a movie, rather than spending our parent's hard-earned cash on lottery tickets.

And I rarely ever rent any movies I've never heard of before, but "Pepe" insisted on watching a movie titled "Don't Tell Her It's Me," starring Steve Guttenberg, Shelley Long and Jamie Gertz. The cover didn't look too promising.

One of those wacky made-up photos for the big cover of a never-heard-of-before film. And since I hadn't heard of either Guttenberg or Long making any movies recently, I thought it would be a dog.

Jamie Gertz — well, I saw her in "Sibling Rivalry," but I won't get into that.

"Don't Tell Her It's Me" is the story of Gus (Guttenberg), a cartoonist that due to a serious illness has had to endure a year of chemotherapy, losing all the hair on his body, along with his self-esteem.

Gus is a good-looking guy, or so his sister Lizzie (Long) says, and tries to convince him of that fact after his radiation treatments stop. She fails, as all he has to do is look in the mirror, where a puffy, sad and hairless Gus pulls him into reality, and makes his misery a little heavier.

Gus rejects any match-making offers his sister presents to him, until he gives in just to humor her and to show her how wrong she is. Lizzie, a harlequin-novel writer, sets him up on a dinner date at her house with a writer for a magazine, who just happens to be another writer, only she is doing a story on harlequin-novel writers.

Elaine, the writer (Gertz), is not exactly charmed by Gus and his ill-fitting wig (a present from Lizzie). And especially after her dress (and her appetite) are ruined by Piglet, Gus's niece, and an awful dinner, she decided it is best not to run into that family again.

Lizzie, however, believes that Elaine and Gus were meant for each other, so she meddles in their affairs further. Lizzie visits Elaine using the excuse that they never finished their interview about harlequin novels — which they both agree is "porn for housewives."

Elaine, being the journalist she is, tells Lizzie that she doesn't understand how women could ever go for the idiotic stories and unbelievable characters in those novels, and tells her she would never read one. Lizzie, of course, loans her her entire collection. In the meantime, poor Gus — who fell in love with Elaine at first sight — agrees to do whatever Lizzie tells him to do to get Elaine to notice him.

So Lizzie opts to achieve two objectives with one stroke: She will get Elaine not only to notice her brother, but also to realize that harlequin characters do exist in the real world. After all, she knows what women want.

So she models Gus after one of her characters. His name is Lobo ("I am Lobo. I am alone. I need no one," he grunts). He is from New Zealand and has an immigration problem.

After working out and growing out his hair, Gus prepares to meet Elaine, but not as himself — rather as Lobo.

He follows her to a gas station, where coincidentally would have it, a robbery is taking place. Gus — or rather, Lobo — gets enough courage to save the day, stopping the robbery and saving the damsel in distress.

Jamie Gertz — well, I saw her in 'Sibling Rivalry,' but I won't get into that.

Needless to say, she falls in love with him, he has problems accepting that she loves him for Lobo and not Gus, and so on.

True, a simple premise, but don't be discouraged. The movie is filled with funny moments. Lots of them.

After a slow start, the guffaws in the scenes increase, some of them matching the opening scenes in "Raising Arizona" and that scene on "Defending Your Life" where Albert Brooks shows all the screw-ups he had in his life in 30 seconds.

At any rate, this is a movie that is well worth the video rental price. If you missed it at the theaters, and more than likely you did, "Don't Tell Her It's Me" is a light-hearted comedy that won't upset your lunch, and makes a great follow-up to any other depressing movie you might have rented that night.

On the regular movie scale of 1-10 this is a 6, but in my own little perverted scale it rates a big "HA-HA," which is a pretty good rating.

Remember, it's on video, not movie theaters.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Comedian Bobcat Goldthwait said his act may be as annoying as Andrew Dice Clay's, but at least he believes in what he's saying.

"It's always annoying to me when someone hides behind a persona," Goldthwait said in an interview published Monday in the Nashville Banner.

"Dice is always 'Oh, it's just an act.' Well, so what, if Hitler had had a character he would have been OK? That drives me nuts."

Goldthwait screams his punch lines in a shrill, hoarse voice that has become his signature.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles, far from the cold, unfaithful husband portrayed in recent books about his wife, is "miserable and lonely" because Princess Diana is mentally unstable, an author says.

Charles' friends say Diana is "seriously unbalanced" and has distorted the truth about the couple's marriage because of her illness, Penny Junor, author of several books on royalty, wrote in Monday's Today newspaper.

"The fact is he has spent the past 11 years living with a seriously unbalanced wife," she wrote.

"The princess is not the only one who has been miserable and lonely."

McEnroe, Stich grab doubles title

by ROBERT MILLWARD
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — John McEnroe turned overtime at Wimbledon into a carnival Monday when he won his fifth doubles title before a packed crowd.

The fans were allowed in free as Wimbledon was forced to play an extra day to finish matches delayed by bad weather.

McEnroe gave them a show, as he and partner Michael Stich won the longest Wimbledon doubles final ever.

The unseeded duo beat fourth-seeded Americans Jim Grabb and Richie Reneberg 5-7, 7-6 (7-5), 3-6, 7-6 (7-5), 19-17 in five hours, one minute.

The match was suspended by darkness Sunday night at 13-13 in the fifth set.

The match was 13 games longer than the previous record, set in 1968 — before tiebreakers — when John Newcombe and Tony Roche downed fellow Australians Ken Rosewall and Fred Stolle 3-6, 8-6, 5-7, 14-12, 6-3.

McEnroe, winner of singles titles in 1981 '83 and '84, also had won doubles championships with Peter Fleming in 1970, 1981, 1983 and 1984.

But he lost to Andre Agassi in the singles semifinals last week, while Stich surrendered the title he won last year.

"Winning the doubles is the best way possible to get over losing the singles," McEnroe said.

"This is not what I had in mind. But to win a Grand Slam title is incredible. I'm very happy."

McEnroe suggested he and Stich should go for two straight Grand Slam doubles titles.

"I think it would be appropriate ... to play the (U.S.) Open," he said. "To stop now would be crazy."

McEnroe and Stich had saved two match points at 6-7 Sunday.

The set went to 17-17 before there was a service break.

Rec Center to host tennis camp

Registration began Monday and will run through July 16 for a five-day Tennis Stroke Improvement Clinic for fourth through 12th-graders sponsored by Texas Tech's recreational sports department.

The clinic, scheduled for July 20-24, will host fourth through eighth-grade students from 8 a.m. to 9:50 a.m. Ninth and 12th-grade students will attend classes from 10 a.m. to noon.

All sessions are slated to be held at the campus tennis court complex on Main Street west of Flint Avenue.

Registration will be conducted at the Student Recreation Center from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. A $25 clinic fee includes tennis balls and video instruction. Students must provide their own rackets.

Instruction in basic tennis strokes will be geared to each student's skill level.

Clinic participants will be skill tested and grouped for instruction according to ability. Video tape analysis will be used for each individual student to provide more complete evaluation by clinic instructors.

The clinic director will be John Winters, assistant director of recreational sports at Texas Tech. Winters has coached nine Oklahoma high school all-state players and has served as head men's tennis coach at Phillips University in Enid, Okla., and as an assistant coach at Colorado State.

For more information about the clinic, contact Winters at the recreational sports office at 742-3351 or go by the Rec Center.
