

THE GOLDTHWAITE EAGLE

GOLDTHWAITE, MILLS COUNTY, TEXAS, FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1939

NUMBER FORTY

Western Auto Store Opens Saturday

One of the outstanding events in Goldthwaite's business history is the opening of the new Western Auto Associate Store, owned and operated by V. C. Bradford.

Most car owners in this vicinity are familiar with the Western Auto Supply Company of Kansas City, Missouri, because this is the firm that used to send out so many of the little catalogs known as the "Auto Owners' Supply Book" offering attractive prices on practically everything needed for an automobile. It is the oldest and largest organization of its kind in the world, founded in 1909 and now operating more than 180 stores all over the United States.

This Company is now cooperating with more than 1000 individual merchants throughout the country to enable them to offer the public merchandise with an established reputation for quality at money-saving prices that would be impossible without this combined buying power.

The Western Auto Associate Store here in Goldthwaite will carry the same general line of supplies, accessories, and tools, including such well-known brands as Davis DeLuxe tires, Wizard batteries, Tru-tone radios, Rubber-Coat top dressing, etc., hitherto offered only at the big city stores.

It is stated that the new store offers the largest and most complete stocks of auto supplies and accessories in this city. Every item is of selected quality and backed by Western Auto's guarantee of "Satisfaction or Money Back."

Mr. Bradford is well known in Goldthwaite, having lived here for the past several years, and has a host of friends who wish him well in his new enterprise.

He explains that because of his favorable arrangements with the Western Auto Supply Company he will be able to offer the same merchandise at approximately the same prices as those in the big Company's main stores, thus bringing car owners of Goldthwaite and Mills county the benefits of that Company's big buying power and volume distribution.

The new store is now open for business, but Saturday, May 27, will be "Official Opening Day" and Mr. Bradford promises to have special prices on a number of popular items in honor of the occasion.

Outstanding 4-H Club Boys Of Mills County

The story of a 4-H Club Boy is not complete without mention of the whole family. Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Miller, Big Valley, their boys and girls, take high rank as a 4-H family. For 18 years the Miller boys and girls have been active members of the Big Valley Club.

In 1922, Gordon won first place with his shorthorn calf in the first Mills County Baby Beef show held on the courthouse lawn. Fifteen shorthorn calves were entered in this show. After the show the calves were shipped by rail to Fort Worth. Mr. Miller was selected to go along and attend to the marketing.

Gordon is now a college graduate and has been teaching in San Saba county for several years.

Three years ago Wayne Miller made one of the best 100 club records in the state by netting $68 on one acre of watermelons. This net profit on a 4-H project has never exceeded only once in Mills county.

All the Miller girls have been active club members. Maribeth and Estelle have in turn been secretary of the Big Valley club and have always been active in all 4-H activities.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller have cooperated in every way throughout the years, have attended all club functions and have attained highest rank as 4-H parents.

With Loan Fund Gone, FSA Gets More Requests

The Farm Security Administration made loans of $898,344 during April to 2,455 low-income farmers of Texas and has virtually exhausted the seven million dollar loan fund allotted the state for the fiscal year ending June 30, according to W. Roy Tisdale, county supervisor, Mills County, Texas.

"While it is almost two months until the probable allocation of more funds, we are having a large and steady stream of requests for loans," Mr. Tisdale said. "$1067.00 of this money loaned in April went to three county farmers."

"There are 1543 farmers in the county and probably 125 of them are eligible to use our loan service to bring about more profitable operations," he stated. "With our funds for this year, we have been able to assist only 40 of them. Many whom we are unable to reach are headed for the relief rolls where they will be expensive public charges. Others not in danger of actual destitution can build up much greater buying power with the aid which the FSA is set up to render."

Mr. Tisdale said that experience has indicated that more than 75 per cent of all the money the FSA has loaned will be repaid with interest. "Last year's repayments in the state almost equalled the money loaned, even though loan payments are spread over five years," he concluded.

Homecoming Picnic Is Postponed

Due to lack of sufficient time to make adequate preparations for the Mills County Homecoming Picnic for either June 4 or June 11, those in charge have regretfully decided to postpone the picnic indefinitely.

A great deal of interest and enthusiasm has been manifested in the idea, so much in fact, that it was felt that it would not be wise to try to hold it until complete preparations could be made.

As soon as a satisfactory date can be determined, an announcement will be made in time for all who are interested to plan to be here.

Friend In Need

Due to a breakdown of the Eagle newspaper press, this issue is being printed on the press of the San Saba Star through the kindness of its publisher, Mrs. A. Cowan.

The Eagle publisher is extremely grateful to Mrs. Cowan for her assistance in the emergency, and is confident that Eagle readers also will appreciate her making it possible for the paper to be printed on time.

Vacation Church School Makes Fine Start

The Vacation Church School which is being held at the Methodist church this week and next week started with a splendid enrollment. It promises to be larger than last year. A helpful program is being carried out with four groups of children and young people.

The beginners are under the direction of Mrs. Earl Summy, assisted by Mrs. Brucks and Mrs. T. C. Graves.

Mrs. Walter Summy has charge of the Primary group. The Junior group is being led by Mrs. McDuffy Kessler, while Mrs. Floyd Blair has charge of the Intermediates. The handwork is being directed by Mrs. Bill Stephen and Mr. John Patterson. Mrs. H. D. Schulze and Miss Lillian Summy are in charge of the music. Several other helpers are enrolled.

The school will close on Friday night, June 2, with a program and a social and a display of the handwork.

All children and young people who have not already enrolled are not only welcome but are urged to enroll for the remainder of the period.

HUGE EGG

Mrs. E. L. Pass brought in to the Eagle office Saturday one of the largest eggs we ever saw.

It measured 3 1-2 inches long and 6 3-4 inches in circumference. She also brought the Editor a basket of the largest dew berries grown. They were delicious.

Center City 4-H Club Girls Announce Program

The Center City girls' 4-H club was organized in October, 1938. We have 22 members, Miss Eureka Ware and Miss Von Dean Geeslin are our sponsors.

At our first meeting we discussed the selection of equipment for our sewing boxes. Then we selected materials for cup towels, learned how to make hemms and decorations appropriate for these towels. Miss Scott taught us how to make the different kind of stitches necessary to complete this project. Our next project was to make an apron. We learned how to estimate the amount of material needed for our aprons. We also learned how to cut simple apron patterns. Then we selected materials for the aprons, being careful to consider color harmony, suitability of material etc. Along with all of this, we learned to make attractive and simple finishes suitable for aprons.

The Center City 4-H club members have made 17 aprons, 48 cup towels, 2 pot holders, 2 vanity sets, 1 buffet set, 1 dresser scarf, 1 luncheon set, and 2 luncheon cloths. Our clothing exhibit won first place in the 4-H and F. F. A. Fair held in Goldthwaite in February, 1939. We won 17 places within the exhibit.

Besides our clothing work we are carrying on a garden demonstration. Our club members have grown and set out 3,000 tomato plants.

We do not neglect our social life, we have enjoyed three parties, one Hallowe'en party, an ice cream party, and a play party.

The 4-H club members attended the Fort Worth Stock show in a group this year. We got in the gates free of charge, saw the shows at half price. All of us enjoyed the rodeo immensely. Every girl has learned to do a number of projects and likes the work very much.

This is a report given before the Mills County Home Demonstration Council the first of May by Wilda Geeslin, president of the Center City 4-H club.

New Test For Oil To Be Drilled Here

New Bridge For Regency

The old suspension bridge which was recently torn down at the site of the new Colorado river bridge, proved unsuitable for erection at Regency. Consequently Mills and San Saba counties have contracted with the Austin Bridge Co. to build a new bridge there for $16,000. Mills county will pay $5,000 and San Saba county the remainder. The two counties will use the timbers from the old suspension bridge and some of the pipe which was used for railing.

Wool Is Moving Rapidly Now

The big rush in the wool business is on at this time, and several hundred thousand pounds have already been received here. A considerable quantity of wool was contracted for last winter at 20c, but open market quotations are around 22 and 23c for good clips.

Legislature Report

The Legislature is following its usual practice of continuing the regular session several days. It is impossible at this time to state just when the Legislature will adjourn. We have accomplished a great saving in the State expenditures in the Departmental Appropriation Bill. This time we are attempting to name every employee in every state department, setting out the salary to be received by each. This bill, also provides where a state employee uses his own car that he will not receive more than 3c per mile as expenses, and it does not make a lump sum appropriation to any department. It also stops State officials from using complimentary passes from railroads and bus lines and charging mileage to the state. We have consumed a lot of time on this bill, whereas, heretofore it has been passed without very much consideration.

As we all know, the Social Security Program has been the Number One issue during this entire session of the Legislature, and the Legislature has failed to agree on any program to finance it. However, work has been going on throughout the full session, trying to organize more strength and before the session ends there is still a chance of passing some tax measure.

This session of the Legislature has seen fit to remit to various counties over the State, approximately One Million Dollars in ad valorem taxes and in view of the Twenty Million Dollar deficit in our state funds and the remission of this large amount, it seems to me that it is very necessary that some measure be passed to finance this State.

For the information of those who are interested in the Soil Conservation Program, I have sent a copy of the bill to the County Agent and you can secure the desired information from him.

I am hoping the session will come to a close within the next few days.

Sincerely yours,
FRANK HOWINGTON,
Representative
104th District.

Trench Silo Meetings To Be Held

Meetings featuring a recording of Mr. E. R. Eudaly's address on trench silos and an illustrated lecture on growing crops for silage, building and filling trench silos and feeding silage will be held at Priddy, Tuesday, May 30 at 8 o'clock and Mullin Thursday, June 1, at 8 o'clock.

Clyde Lane of Cross Plains has the contract to drill a test oil well on Will Spinks' place seven miles northwest of Goldthwaite, and is now erecting a rig on the location.

The well will be drilled in a block of about 3,500 acres, and the contract calls for it to go through the Ranger Lime regardless of depth. L. M. White, prominent Fort Worth oil man, controls the acreage. This will be the sixth well which Lane has drilled for him.

Clyde Lane is a native of Mills county and served as its district clerk before moving to Cross Plains. He is an experienced drilling contractor, and those who know him say that if oil can be found here, Lane will get it.

The Caddo Lime will be reached before the Ranger Lime, and there is a possibility that the hole may be sunk all the way to the Ellenberger lime. At any rate a thorough test is promised.

District 4-H Club Tour

Twenty club boys from District 7 will be awarded a trip to Carlsbad Cavern and Yellowstone Park, starting August 4th. One Mills County boy may go on this trip. The object of the tour is educational combined with sightseeing. A stop will be made at the Wyoming Hereford Ranch and other agricultural centers.

Five county agents will each take 4 boys for the trip. Each county must put up $25.00 for the winner of the trip. Selection will be made by a committee.

District Agent W. I. Glass, College Station, will be with the group. The County Agents selected to go are W. E. Scudder, Comanche, in charge; J. A. Barton, Ballinger, secretary-treasurer; C. V. Robinson, Coleman, and Sam Rosenberg, Eastland, commissary; W. P. Weaver, Goldthwaite, general flunky.

More later.
W. P. Weaver, County Agent.

First Baptist Church E. E. DAWSON, Pastor

Welcome home, College Folk! This is always an interesting season because of your homecoming. May the summer season bring you much profitable pleasure. Regular attendance of church services and participation will make your summer much richer.

Our Sunday school meets Sunday mornings at 10:00 on the dot and is followed by the worship service, all concluding a bit before noon.

Evening worship is at 8:00. B. T. U. meets at 7:00. This Sunday will have a big bunch of visitors from Lometa and they will put on the program for the whole B. T. U. Let's give them a royal welcome.

Saint and sinner, rich and poor, townsman and countryman, all alike have perennial welcome with us.

Methodist Church

Our Vacation Church School is in full swing with a large enrollment. Our Church School attendance was much better last Sunday. Let us keep up a fine attendance all summer. It may take a special effort on the part of every one to hold up a high average of attendance, but let us do it and thus help the cause of our Lord.

The regular services will be held Sunday morning. For the Sunday night service we will have the men in the choir. And a special selection will be rendered by the male quartet. Come and you will enjoy these services. Invite your friends to come with you.

Fred J. Brucks, Pastor

Causes For Poor Grades And Failures In Local School

The past three years I have made a study of the causes for failures. Absence from school and physical defects are the cause for 98 per cent of all failures.

Experiments and tests were made testing eyes, ears and weight, in relation to age, height and physical type.

I have made a correlation of these statistics, taken from experiments and tests, with grades made by students.

In 1936-37 I had 91 students in my three science classes, three per cent of these 91 students failed. All of this three per cent had weak eyes, bad teeth, and were over or under weight.

Last year, 1937-38, 89 students made up my classes. Two per cent of this 89 failed. The two per cent had bad teeth, over or under weight, weak eyes, and were absent from school more than a third of the time.

This year, 1938-39, my classes were made up of 100 students. Ten per cent of these students failed. Eight per cent of that 10 per cent dropped out of school before the school term finished. Two per cent actually failed. This two per cent had bad teeth, under or over weight, weak eyes, hearing under normal, and were absent from school more than a third of the time.

Summary of this year's statistics. These statistics were taken from 100 students:

Weight: correct weight 42, students under weight 45, over 13.

Perfect eyes, 60, 22 of those students made E's, 38 made F's. Eye defects, 40, 36 F's, and 4 D's.

Hearing: 94 perfect, three students deaf in one ear, 3 hearing under normal.

Teeth: 25 perfect, grades, 17 F's and 8 E's.

Defective teeth: 75, grades, 6 E's (all need cleaning) 65 F's, 4 D's.

This year in our schools a dental inspection was held, every student's teeth were examined by our dentist. As a result of this inspection we found that approximately 75 per cent of all students need dental work. Seven per cent of those students with bad teeth have had them fixed, others are doing something about their teeth.

Only 20 per cent of our students in High School are on the Dental Honor Roll. You can see from these results that much work needs to be done yet.

It is our desire that next year we may give our students a physical examination, as well as a dental examination.

Defective eyes have more effect on grades than any other defect. Most of these cases can be corrected with glasses.

Bad teeth have an effect that cannot be seen, but evident. Teeth with cavities can be filled, which will make them almost as good as ever, if they are filled in time.

The dentist in Goldthwaite will examine your teeth free, this is the best way to keep your teeth in good condition. Have them examined at least once a year. This will save you money and lots of misery.

Proper weight can be controlled by proper diet and exercise.

Ear and other physical defects can be corrected by our doctors.

A strong, healthy body is the best insurance against any kind of disease.

The object of these experiments is to show the need for physical corrections and make students as well as parents aware of these defects.

You can see from these statistics that physical defects must have some effect on the efficiency of students school work, as well as their happiness and success.

And They Won't Come Back

AUSTIN.—At the Award Dinner of the National Safety Council, held in Washington, D. C. on April 13, Eddie Cantor, star of stage, screen and radio, made a dramatic appeal to drivers of motor vehicles. The magazine "Public Safety" has reproduced the article in the May issue, and it carries the message home so well, we are passing it on to you, by permission of "Public Safety."

"In the home of thousands of you folks tonight there's a little boy or girl you've just kissed and tucked away in bed—the most precious thing in the world to you—your baby."

"Tomorrow night at least ten of those little children won't be there!—won't be there for you to scrub their faces, and kiss them good night—won't be there ever again."

"They'll start out for school tomorrow, or for the corner grocery, or for the other side of the street—and they won't come back."

"They won't come back because some driver like you and me—someone who would rather die than harm a helpless little kid—has killed them."

"They won't come back because you and I have refused to accept the responsibilities of our day and age. We have refused to take on the obligation of protecting those little kids.

How are we going to feel when we see that small form in front of us—a flying little figure that popped out from nowhere—when we hear the screech of the brakes—and feel a thump—and hurry back to find out that in the twinkling of an eye, we have killed somebody's baby.

Is it going to make us feel any better to say: 'But it wasn't my fault' I didn't see him until it was too late!"

"Is it going to make our grief less terrible to say: 'He ran out from behind a parked car. I couldn't help it! I couldn't help it!' My dear friends, we can help it! We've got to help it!"

If we can find, in this country of ours, brains brilliant enough to design automobiles that can go a-mile-and-a-half a minute, then we certainly can find enough common sense to teach us not to drive like maniacs!

"We have no right—any of us—to expect those little children to share with us the responsibility of protecting their lives."

"Of course we teach safety. The National Safety Council and the school teachers and the safety patrols are doing a grand job of instilling the principles of safe driving into every boy and girl."

And the boys and girls are doing their part.

"But, after all, they're kids! They get excited—they forget!

No power has ever been discovered or ever will be discovered to make a pair of flying little feet stop at the curb when a baseball is rolling across the street and a guy is tearing around the bases for a home run!

"No, sir. No, ma'am—it's up to us—us grown-ups—to do most of the thinking in this traffic problem. It's part of our job as adults to take over the responsibility of saving human lives in the streets. For we are killing off the citizens of tomorrow with the carelessness of today."

"We've got to get into the habit of expecting to see a child come popping out of nowhere into the path of our car—just as we expect daylight and darkness. And don't give me that old argument about how much liability insurance you carry. No insurance company in the world has a policy which guarantees peace of mind to a careless driver who kills a helpless child!"

"In Washington tonight the National Safety Council is presenting awards to states and cities which have proved that traffic accidents can be stopped; that lives can be saved; that this slaughter on the highway doesn't have to go on. At this award dinner are governors and mayors and senators and some of the biggest business and professional men in the country. These are busy, important people. But they weren't too big or too busy or too important to drop whatever they were doing and go to this dinner to learn more about how to save human lives in traffic."

"My hat's off to them. If busy people like these can give their time to safety, you and I can, too."

"Remember, these kids are our kids—yours and mine. They're the most precious things we've got. Let's keep them! Let's do our part!"

Let's remember that the green light means "Go"—not "Go like the devil."

Let's remember that when we "step on it," we may be stepping on every hope and dream and prayer that some mother had for her little boy or girl.

Manufacturing an automobile so that the driver may sit on the right instead of the left requires alterations affecting about 1,500 parts.

HOUSE—FOSTER

Avery House surprised his friends by bringing home a bride Mother's Day.

WNU SERVICE

He stared at her. "Her uncle? Tell him what?"

"That you've found the bag." He flung off her arm. "Would you have me turn traitor?"

"Heaven's Baldy, this isn't melodrama. It's common sense. You can't keep that bag."

"I can keep it until she answers my advertisement."

"She may never see your advertisement, and the money isn't yours, and the ring isn't."

He was troubled. "But she trusted me. I can't do it."

Jane shrugged her shoulders, and began to clear away the dinner things. Baldy helped her. Old Merrymaid mewed to go out, and Jane opened the door.

"It's snowing hard," she said.

"The wind drove the flakes across the threshold. Old Merrymaid danced back into the house, bright-eyed and round as a muf. The air was freezing."

"It is going to be a dreadful night," young Baldwin, heavy with gloom, prophesied. He thought of Edith in the storm in her buckled shoes. "Had she found shelter? Was she frightened and alone somewhere in the dark?"

He went into the living-room, whence Jane presently followed him. Jane was knitting a sweater and she worked while Baldy read to her. He read the full account of Edith Towne's flight. She had gone away early in the morning. The maid, taking her breakfast up to her, had found the room empty. She had left a note for her uncle. But he had not permitted its publication. He was, they said, wild with anxiety.

"It'll be her an old tyrant," was Baldy's comment.

Frederick Towne's picture was in the paper. "I like his face," said Jane. "and he doesn't seem so frightfully old."

"Why should she run away from him, if he wasn't a tyrant?" he demanded furiously.

"Well, don't scold me," Jane was as vivid as an oriole in the midst of her orange wools.

She loved color. The living-room was an expression of it. Its furniture was old-fashioned but not old-fashioned enough to be lovely. Jane had, however, modified its lack of grace and its dull monotony by covers of chintz—tropical birds against black and white stripes—and there was a lamp of dull blue pottery with a Chinese shade. A fire in the coal grate, with the glow of the lamp, gave the room a look of burnished brightness. The kitten, curled up in Jane's lap, played cozily with the tawny threads.

"Don't scold me," said Jane. "it isn't my fault."

"I'm not scolding, but I'm worried to death. And you aren't any help, are you?"

She looked at him in astonishment. "I've tried to help. I told you to call up."

Young Baldwin walked the floor. "She trusted me."

"You won't get anywhere with that," said Jane with decision. "The thing to do is to tell Mr. Towne that you have news of her, and that you'll give it only under promise that he won't do anything until he has talked it over with you."

"That sounds better," said young Baldwin; "how did you happen to think of it?"

"Now and then," said Jane, "I have ideas."

Baldy went to the telephone. When he came back his eyes were like gray moons. "He promised everything, and he's coming out—"

"Here?"

"Yes, he wouldn't wait until tomorrow. He's wild about her—"

"Well, he would be," Jane mentally surveyed the situation.

"Baldy, I'm going to make some coffee, and have some cheese and crackers."

"He may not want them."

"On a cold night like this, I'll say he will; anybody would."

Baldy helped Jane get out the round-bellied silver pot, the pitchers and tray. The young people had a sense of complacency as they handled the old silver. Frederick Towne could have nothing of more distinguished history. It had belonged to their great-grandmother, Dabney, who was really D'Aubigne, and it had graced an emperor's table. Each piece had a monogram set in an engraved wreath. The big tray was so heavy that Jane lifted it with difficulty, so Baldy set it for her on the little mahogany table which they drew up in front of the fire. There was no wealth now in the Barnes family, but the old silver spoke of a time when a young hostess as black-haired as Jane had dispensed lavish hospitality.

Frederick Towne had not expected what he found—the little house set high on its terraces seemed to give from its golden-lighted window squares a welcome in the dark. "I shan't be long, Briggs," he said to his chauffeur.

"Very good, sir," said Briggs, and led the way up the terrace.

Baldy ushered Towne into the living-room, and Frederick, standing on the threshold, surveyed a coziness which reminded him of nothing so much as a color illustration in some old English magazine. There was the coal grate, the table drawn up to the fire, the twinkling silver on its massive tray, violets in a low vase—and rising to meet him a slender, glowing child, with a banner of orange wool behind her.

"Jane," said young Barnes, "may I present Mr. Towne?" and Jane held out her hand and said, "This is very good of you."

He found himself unexpectedly gracious. He was not always gracious. He had felt that he couldn't be. A man with money and position had to shut himself up sometimes in a shell of reserve, lest he be imposed upon.

But in this warmth and fragrance he expanded. "What a charming room," he said, and smiled at her. Jane felt perfectly at ease with him. He was, after all, she reflected, only a gentleman, and Baldy was that. The only difference lay in their divergent incomes. So, as the two men talked, she knitted on, with the outward effect of placidity.

"Do you want me to go?" she had asked them, and Towne had replied promptly. "Certainly not. There's nothing we have to say that you can't hear."

So Jane listened with all her ears, and modified the opinion she had formed of Frederick Towne from his picture and from her first glimpse of him. He was nice to talk to, but he might be hard to live with. He had obstinacy and egotism.

"Why Edith should have done it amazes me."

"She was hurt," she said, "and she wanted to hide."

"But people seem to think that in some way it is my fault. I don't like that. It isn't fair. We've always been the best of friends—more like brother and sister than niece and uncle."

"But not like Baldy and me," said Jane to herself, "not in the least like Baldy and me."

"Of course Simms ought to be shot," Towne told them heatedly. "He ought to be hanged," was Baldy's amendment.

Jane's needles clicked, but she said nothing. She was dying to tell these bloodthirsty males what she thought of them. What good would it do to shoot Delafeld Simms? A woman's hurt pride isn't to be healed by the thought of a man's dead body.

Young Baldwin brought out the bag. "It is one that Delafeld gave her," Frederick stated, "and I cashed a check for her at the bank the day before the wedding. I can't imagine why she took the ring with her."

"She probably forgot to take it off; her mind wasn't on rings," Jane's voice was warm with feeling.

He looked at her with some curiosity. "What was it on?"

"Oh, her heart was broken. Nothing else mattered. Can't you see?"

Jane swept them back to the matter of the bag. "We thought you ought to have it, Mr. Towne, but Baldy had scruples about revealing anything he knows about Miss Towne's hiding place. He feels that she trusted him."

"You said you had advertised, Mr. Barnes?"

"Yes."

"Well, the one thing is to get her home. Tell her that if she calls you up," Frederick looked suddenly tired and older.

Baldy, leaning against the mantel, gazed down at him. "It's hard to decide what I ought to do. But I feel that I'm right in giving her a chance first to answer the advertisement."

Towne's tone showed a touch of irritation. "Of course you'll have to act as you think best."

And now Jane took things in her own hands. "Mr. Towne, I'm going to make you a cup of coffee."

"I shall be very grateful," he smiled at her. What a charming child she was! He was soothed and refreshed by the atmosphere they created. This boy and girl were a friendly pair and he loved his ease. His own house, since Edith's departure, had been funeral, and his friends had been divided in their championship between himself and Edith. But the young Barneses were so pleasantly responsive with their lighted-up eyes and their little air of making him one with them. Edith had always seemed to put him quite definitely on the shelf. With little Jane and her brother he had a feeling of equality of age.

"Look here," he spoke impulsively, "may I tell you all about it? It would relieve my mind immensely."

To Jane it was a thrilling moment. Having poured the coffee, she came out from behind her batlement of silver and sat in her chintz chair. She did not knit; she was enchanted by the tale that Towne was telling. She sat very still, her hands folded, the tropical birds about her. To Frederick she seemed like a bird herself—slim and lovely, and with a voice that sang!

CHAPTER III

Edith Towne had lived with her Uncle Frederick nearly four years when she became engaged to Delafeld Simms. Her mother was dead, as was her father. Frederick was her father's only brother, and had a big house to himself, after his mother's death. It seemed the only haven for his niece, so he asked her, and asked also his father's cousin, Annabel Towne, to keep house for him, and chaperone Edith.

Annabel was over sixty, and rather indefinite, but she served to play propriety, and there was nothing else demanded of her in Frederick's household of six servants. She was a dried-up and desiccated person, with fixed ideas of what one owed to society. Frederick's mother had been like that, so he did not mind. He rather liked to think that the woman of his family kept to old ideals. It gave to things an air of dignity.

Edith, when she came, was different. So different that Frederick was glad that she had three more years at college before she would spend the winters with him. The summers were not hard to arrange, Edith and Annabel adjourned to the Towne cottage on an island in Maine—and Frederick went up for weekends and for the month of August. Edith spent much time out-of-doors with her young friends. She was rather fond of her Uncle Fred, but he did not loom large on the horizon of her youthful occupations.

Then came her winter at home, and her consequent engagement to Delafeld Simms. It was because of Uncle Fred that she became engaged. She simply didn't want to live with him any more. She felt that Uncle Fred would be glad to have her go, and the feeling was mutual. She was an elephant on his hands. Naturally, he was a great old dear, but he was a Turk. He didn't know it, of course. But his ideas of being master of his own house were perfectly archaic. Cousin Annabel and the servants, and everybody in his office simply hung on his words, and Edith wouldn't hang. She came into his bachelor Paradise like a rather troublesome Eve, and demanded her share of the universe. He didn't like it, and there you were.

It was really Uncle Fred who wanted her to marry Delafeld Simms. He talked about it a lot. At first Edith wouldn't listen. But Delafeld was persistent and patient. He came gradually to be as much of a part of her everyday life as the meals she ate or the car she drove. Uncle Fred was always inviting him. He was forever on hand, and when he wasn't she missed him.

They felt for each other, she decided, the thing called "love." It was not, perhaps, the romance which one found in books. But she had been taught carefully at college to distrust romance. The emphasis had been laid on the transient quality of adolescent emotion. One married for the sake of the race, and one chose, quite logically, with one's head instead, as in the old days, with the heart.

So there you had it. Delafeld was eligible. He was healthy, had brains enough, an acceptable code of morals—and was willing to let her have her own way. If there were moments when Edith wondered if this program was adequate to wedded bliss, she put the thought aside. She and Delafeld liked each other no end. Why worry?

And really at times Uncle Fred was impossible. His mother had lived until he was thirty-five, she had adored him, and had passed on to Cousin Annabel and to the old servants in the house the formula by which she had made her son happy. Her one fear had been that he might marry. He was extremely popular, much sought after. But he had kept his heart at home. His sweetheart, he had often said, was silver-haired and over sixty. He basked in her approbation; was soothed and sustained by it.

Then she had died, and Edith had come, and things had been different.

The difference had been demonstrated in a dozen ways. Edith was pleasantly affectionate, but she didn't yield an inch. "Dear Uncle Fred," she would ask, when they disagreed on matters of manners or morals, or art or athletics, or religion or the lack of it, "shan't my opinion as good as yours?"

"Apparently my opinion isn't worth anything."

"Oh, yes it is—but you must let me have mine."

Auto Manufacturing Takes Much Skill

Many unique jobs, such as sharpening diamonds, flicking dents out of polished fenders, and raining 245,000 pound blows on hard steel bars, are to be found in remote corners of motor plants where they rarely are seen by casual visitors.

Also behind the line, but essential to the smooth and steady flow maintained there, are numerous other jobs requiring a boxer's timing and a star bowler's co-ordination for efficient performance.

Enough precious stones to interest an Indian Prince are used in the automobile industry for boring, and keeping them in condition is a full time task. Working with a jeweler's skill, the nimble-fingered maintenance man removes the diamond from the end of the steel drill and by using diamond dust as a polishing material he gets a sharp edge on the cutting diamond. Precision boring is thus assured when the drill meets metal.

Ironing out bumps underneath paint is the dingman's job. A metal expert who is as familiar with surface of an automobile body as a doctor with vertebrae structures, the dingman knows where the tension is in the metal, and by applying pressure on a bump he can bounce it back into conformity without the slightest scar on the paint.

Though the steamhammer is a modern blacksmith whose thundering blows are comparable to those of Thor, God of the ancient Norsemen, the forge plant operator can lower his six-ton hammer with a featherlike touch to finish the shaping of a white hot steel crankshaft. As a demonstration, he can break an egg without splattering it, or crack a watch crystal without impairing the delicate mechanism itself.

Another interesting job, one of thousands preliminary to assembling a car, is the present-day maker of jig-saw puzzles—the man with the electric saw who cuts upholstery for the automobile's interior. Taking a stack of cloth a foot or more high, he follows a trail of dots almost as detailed and exact as the outlines of a blueprint, cutting the cloth so that each portion of the upholstery fits perfectly.

Sensitive ears are the chief assets of the motor and gear testers, who listen to the hum and purr of these primary working units of the vehicle. Working in soundproof testing rooms, the "good listeners" catch sounds that indicate trouble and send the parts back for rechecking.

Among the paradoxical occupations in a motor factory is that of the man who tears units out of a brand new car, installs replacement, and tunes the motor, just as if he were overhauling an old bus. His assignment is to discover how long it takes to service various parts, and the best way to handle them so that just the right tools can be designed for use of the service men.

Perhaps most upsetting of all is the job of the bad road maker. This man, at the proving ground, tears up a good road with a scraper on an eccentric wheel so that chunks of unequal size are gouged out to provide a tough workout for new cars. Making sure that no paint hose runs dry is the paint man's responsibility. With 15 or more different colors at his disposal, the mixing job alone is a big one involving more lacquers and solvents in a day than most house painters would be likely to use in a lifetime. The paint man always keeps one eye glued on gauges attached to the lines leading to paint spray booths, for any interruption in the flow means that a whole department's work would come to a halt.

Still another job, which illustrates the care taken in automobile manufacturing, is that of the paint "doctor." Using an instrument which looks like a stethoscope, he determines whether the body is painted with absolute uniformity, for durability precludes too thick a coat or too thin a coat.

Typical American sports of sandlot baseball and bowling contribute to the dexterity of performance which many motor workers display at their jobs. One stock room man receives wheels as they roll down a conveyor. He catches them on the fly, turns, and spins them 20 feet across the room to a second man who stacks them. Other men, engaged in putting mounted tires on axles, catch tires on the bounce as they are released from chutes. The effort is slight, for with exact timing the momentum of the tire does the work.

Special tricks or team work are practiced around a automobile plants. Two box makers, employed for twenty years with one company, have always worked together. One is left-handed and the other right-handed. The combination works beautifully when both are welding hammers at close range.

In another department where lining is tacked in the car's interior, twins form a team on a

JOHN NANCE GARNER Vice-President of the United States, and leading in the poll of Democratic candidates to succeed Roosevelt.

Garner Man of the People, Sound, Rugged and Honest

The time has definitely arrived in America when positions of trust and responsibility should be placed exclusively in the hands of the elders, declared Roy Miller, longtime editor of Texas, in speaking recently at a gathering of old friends and neighbors of John Nance Garner, vice president, in the little village of Detroit, Texas, where the distinguished Texan was born nearly sixty-nine years ago.

"There is no substitute, either in public or private life, for experience, and experience, of course, comes only with years. As a matter of fact, the only thing that is old about John Nance Garner is some of his political philosophy. He still believes in the old-fashioned virtues of economy, thrift, and self-reliance. In other words, he believes in the old-fashioned, fundamental principles of democracy, and no man in America, in both his public and private life, exemplifies those principles to such a degree as does this great man.

"While achieving high place politically, he has made substantial success of his private life, and it is his proud boast that he owes no human being a thin dime. He believes in the pay-as-you-go system, and what a blessing it would be if that system could be applied to America today.

"Last I be misunderstood, let me say here, with all of the emphasis I can command, that John Garner is no reactionary in his political philosophy. Indeed, he is not even a conservative, if the term be applied with the meaning with which it was clothed in years gone by.

"John Garner is a liberal and a great liberal. He was a liberal Democrat practicing liberalism, many years before some of the most vocal present-day sponsors of liberalism were even born. But there is no tinge or taint of radicalism in the liberalism of John Garner. His liberalism is that which would guarantee to every American citizen the right and opportunity to work out his or her salvation with the least possible interference upon the part of the Government. Therefore, he believes in all necessary legislation and regulation to protect the weak against the strong, the poor against the rich, the owner of property against those who would destroy the ownership of property; in short, equality of opportunity for every American citizen. He believes in Democracy and prefers to be known as a Democrat in the old-fashioned interpretation of

GOD'S GREAT OUT-OF-DOORS

We should glory in our cities, And in all that makes them great; In their mighty streams of commerce, As the pulse of all the state. We should feel the moving current, Of the nation's throbbing heart; We should laud these seats of learning, Prize their culture and their art. Proudly we may boast these centers, And of all the joys they give; Glory in their great abundance, Boast of how their people live; We may boast of stately mansions, Of their beauty and their grace, But for luxury of living, Give me God's great open space. Give me God's great open spaces, That in early days of spring, I may ramble through the forests, Where the feathered warblers sing, Listen to their cheerful music, As they flit among the bowers, Let me sit, and dream, and listen, As I while away the hours. Give me God's great open spaces, With their freedom and their joy; Give me trees and stately mountains, And their peace without alloy— Cities are by man created, While each rock and lifeless clod, And the vaulted skies above us Show the handiwork of God. J. S. BOWLES

IMPROVEMENTS LEADING TO HIGHWAY SAFETY

The improvements which have recently been made to provide more safety on the highways fall into two divisions: namely, the improvements which have been made on automobiles and automobile accessories, and those which have been made in the construction of highways.

In this first division, let us first take up the case of glaring headlights. Did you ever meet a car at night whose glaring headlights nearly blinded you? Nineteen years ago, the driver of an automobile was blinded by oncoming lights, and his car was wrecked. One of the passengers with him, a woman, was killed. This woman was the wife of Lewis W. Chubb, director of research for Westinghouse Electric. He was so grief-stricken by his wife's death, that he resolved to take the glare out of headlights. That was nineteen years ago. Today he has almost achieved his goal. By placing some crystals between two plates of glass, he caused light to be polarized; that is, the light goes through the glass and comes out in layers. When a horizontal polaroid light is viewed through a vertical polaroid glass, the result is a deep purpleish glow with no glare. Mr. Chubb's plan is to have all cars equipped with one type of polaroid glass lenses and windshields of another. Since the light from his own headlights will be reflected from the road surface, the driver can see the road well-lighted, and will not be blinded by the glare of the lights of oncoming cars.

Another safety feature involving lights, is the turn signal on the rear of some cars. This encourages a driver to signal his intentions to the driver of the automobile behind him, especially in cold and rainy weather when a driver hates to roll down the window and put out his arm to give the proper signal. The driver merely pushes a button, and an arrow on the back of his car lights up, showing which way he is going to turn.

Another recent improvement in the designing of automobiles is the change in the position of the gearshift and handbrake levers. With both of the levers in the center of the front floor, the driver had a hard time reaching them when there were three persons riding in the front seat. With the gear shift lever on the steering-wheel post, the driver barely has to take his hand from the wheel. And with the emergency brake on the driver's left and off the floor, nothing can obstruct the driver's operation of this essential device.

Still another improvement which has been made in the equipment of automobiles has been the consistent improving of automobile tires. Tires have now been developed which are practically skid-proof, and others which are blowout and puncture-proof. This would be a great relief to the mother of the boy who found she was waiting up for him one night. When she asked him if he had had a flat tire, he promptly replied, "Far from it."

Now let us turn to the improvements in the highways. You hear a good deal about the traffic accidents at intersections. Highway engineers have solved that problem with the so-called "Cloverleaf Intersections." From the air such an intersection looks like a giant four-leaf clover. It has two main highways at right-angle, one passing over the other, and a curved loop in each of the corners of the cross that is formed. By this a motorist can turn left from one main road to another and stay on the right side of the road while doing so, thus eliminating the danger of intersection wrecks.

How you ever been confronted with the problem of the oncoming driver who refuses to get on his side of the road? If you have you know the dangers connected with such a problem. This can be eliminated by any of three ways which have been devised. The first of these is to have two separate one-way highways. The second and third can only be used on a four or more lane highway. The second is to build a spring steel railing on flexible posts in the center of the road. Then if a car happens to run into this railing, it merely bounces back, perhaps with a few scratches, but what are a few scratches when probably several lives have been saved. The third method is to lay a series of diagonal tracks in the center of the highway. When an automobile starts over these, the front wheels are forced into the grooves and the car is guided back to the proper side of the highway.

All of these improvements have been made and are being made to help make the highways a safer place to travel and to make the modern automobile a less deadly weapon. But with these improvements, it is still the man or woman behind the wheel who controls the car. So it will not be until the drivers of today and tomorrow are taught the ways to control their cars, to control themselves, and to use the principles they have been taught, that the highways WILL be a safe place to travel, and that the modern high-powered automobile WILL become means of transportation instead of a deadly weapon.

As we, the members of the 1936 graduating class of Goldthwaite High School go forth to take our places on the ramparts of life, who know but that some device to further the cause of safety, or some other means of making this nation a safer place in which to reside will come from some of these graduates who are before you on this platform, tonight.

DIME NOVELS ON THE AIR

Readers of The Eagle whose memories extend back as far as the beginning of this century can remember the old-fashioned dime novel which was almost universally condemned and pretty nearly as widely read. The chief criticism launched against these penny thrillers, as our English cousins termed them, was that they were cheap and tawdry, poorly conceived and slovenly written. To read them was a signal waste of time and an encouragement of false ideals and wrong standards of life, even though the persistent villain was always taken to a cleaning by the noble hero in the last chapter.

We wonder what the protagonists of worthwhile literature in those days think, or would think were they still alive, of the drive that infects the airways of America today. Cheap, tawdry, sensational, false, filled with foolishness that is neither witty nor laughable, often charged with a spurious sentimentality that cheapens real values, these dime novels of the air are a terrible

Making Friends in Business

IN GOING THROUGH SOME OLD FILES at home this evening I came across ten very wise points on making friends in business. These ten suggestions appeared in BUSINESS for December, 1930, and are called "The Decalogue of Cooperativeness."

1. Be open-minded toward suggestions.
2. Meddling is the sand-in-the-bearings that causes friction.
3. Interest in the problems of others insures their interest in yours.
4. When layoffs loom, the grouch has few defenders.
5. Knowing when to stop arguing argues a tactful disposition.
6. To see the thing as others see it means good business eyesight.
7. Pettiness is the vice of little minds—they stress their pigmy importance.
8. Sincerity is the soundest currency of all business practice. The "Yes" man is a drug on the market.
9. Give credit when due. It will establish your own credit.
10. Play absolutely square. You will enjoy the game more—and earn the respect of the other players.

Thousands to Tour State This Year

Approximately 400,000 automobile vacationists served thru the Conoco Travel Bureau are expected to spend about $40,000,000 in Texas this year, according to a report issued today by Joe H. Thompson, national director of the bureau and well-known travel expert.

Based on a survey of the number of motorists who received hotel, route and information in 1935 and a study of the number of inquiries reaching the Conoco Bureau since the first of the year, Thompson said:

"We can safely say that this will be a banner year for this state. Motorists representing practically every state in the Union, and Canada, have written us asking for route information about Texas."

From actual records of the spending habits in earlier years, Thompson gave the following analysis of the probable expenditures of Conoco visitors in 1936: "About $10,000,000 will be left in retail stores; about $8,500,000 will be spent on food and meals; $6,000,000 will go for gasoline, oil and car repairs; another $8,000,000 will be claimed by hotels and tourist houses; $3,200,000 will be spent for recreation and $2,400,000 for refreshments, souvenirs and miscellaneous items."

Somebody sent the editor of the Pokelton Gazette a few bottles of home brew. The same day he received for publication a wedding announcement and a notice of an auction sale. Here are the results:

"William Smith and Miss Lucy Anderson were disposed of at public auction at my farm, one mile east of a beautiful cluster of roses on her breast and two white calves, before a background of farm implements too numerous to mention, in the presence of about seventy guests, including two milk cows, six mules and one bobbed. The Rev. Mr. Jackson tied the nuptial knot with 200 feet of hay rope, and the bride couple left on one good gang plow for an extended trip, with terms to suit purchaser. They will be at home to their friends, with one good baby buggy and a few kitchen utensils, after ten months from date of sale, to responsible parties and some fifty chickens."—Dallas News.

indictment against the banal taste and the low average of intelligence of the American housewife.

For some reason they only appear during the daylight hours when the little woman is daintily dabbling over the dishes or dealing a hand at bridge. At the hour when the lord of the manor is due to return to the hearthstone, the quality of the programs begins to improve.

This is in contradiction to the general belief that the female of the species is more particular than the male and more cultured to boot! Yet the programs which are sponsored (paid for) by some of America's most successful business houses must be profitable or they would not be repeated and imitated ad nauseam. And to be profitable, they must be listened to.

Our theory is this: During the dull hours of the day when any program seems better than none, the domestic members of the family keep the radio turned on so as to inhibit any inducement to thinking. But the radio series are so stupid, the commercial announcements that follow them are bright gems in comparison and invite compliance with their asserted promises of something for nothing. Nevertheless we believe a higher standard in daytime radio programs would also pay.

56,000,000 Pounds Of Butter

COLLEGE STA.—Texas' annual output of 56,000,000 pounds of farm butter is 22 per cent of the nation's total and gives the state first rank in production.

The tragedy is that two-thirds of this butter is of poor quality and serves to curb the consumption of the product on the farm and at the market. W. V. Maddox, dairy manufacturing specialist of the Texas A&M College Extension Service, has commented: "Yet good sweet cream butter can be produced on Texas farms if milk and cream are handled correctly."

Correct handling begins with the production of milk, which should be clean and free from objectionable flavors, he says. Clean, sterilized utensils are essential.

Cream, whether mechanically separated or hand skimmed, must be colled immediately after separation and held at 50 degrees until churning time. Freshly separated cream must be cream.

Maddox recommends that the different lots of cream be mixed from two to four hours before churning so that the temperature and ripening will be uniform. Use of a thermometer will help insure butter after 30 to 40 minutes of churning, and firmest hard-buttermilk granules. The best temperature is between 50 and 60 degrees in summer and 55 to 68 degrees in winter, and the churning should be stopped when the granules are the size of grains of wheat.

The granular butter should be washed twice with water of about the same temperature as the buttermilk. The buttermilk, which produces off-flavors very rapidly, can be washed out, but not worked out. An ounce of butter salt is added for each pound of butter, and if this is dampened, it will be more evenly distributed.

The Bugs Will Get You If You Don't Watch Out

By W. B. COOPER, Consulting Home Economist, Breeder-Feeder Association

Bugs are not bugs, strictly speaking, but we can't be too careful about them. When they get into your garden...

When they do occur in damaging numbers they may be numerous in one part of the field and absent or scarce a few yards away.

The nymphs are tiny active light green or yellowish insects; the adults look like pale, greenish white flies about one-eighth inch long.

When cotton has six to eight true leaves (not counting the two which first "come up") it normally begins to form fruiting buds, and should set a new bud for every new branch.

This is the stage (when the cotton has about six true leaves) when the grower must begin to watch his crop for insects.

By this time, also, the boll weevils which have survived the winter may be coming out of hiding into the cotton fields.

Let us assist you in planning your home. It was never easier to build than now.

Health Notes From Austin

AUSTIN, May 18—Case reports reaching the State Department of Health indicate that smallpox is rapidly forging to the front in the list of preventable communicable diseases over Texas at this time.

"Smallpox epidemics would never occur if everyone, especially children, could be effectively vaccinated," states Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

"Modern safeguards have removed every legitimate objection to vaccination. The virus is made from calves and, consequently, is incapable of transmitting human blood diseases.

"A primary vaccination with one successful revaccination will, as a rule, protect throughout life from the milder forms of smallpox, but this is not true in the severer types of this disease.

Therefore, be vaccinated and re-vaccinated at least every five years, so that you will have the greatest protection possible and the least chance of being sick.

RALPH (RED) SWINDLE BREAKS RECORD

In the Texas Conference Track Meet, held some two weeks ago in Austin, Ralph Swindle, former Goldthwaite High School athlete broke the pole vault record, with a vault of 12 feet, 8 and 3-4 inches. He also ran a lap in the mile relay.

Howard Payne won the meet with a total of 82 and 3-4 points. Abilene Christian College was second with 32 and 1-4 points.

Ralph Swindle is a senior in Howard Payne this year. He will take his B. A. degree in June. The past four years Swindle has been a member of Howard Payne championship track teams. Besides being a good athlete, Swindle has been a good student. His grades are in the upper quartile.

Swindle plans to teach and coach next year. His major is history, minor education. Any school that gets this young man will be fortunate, because he is an all around boy, being ideal in every respect.
