

Vandalism has gone uncontrolled to the point where immediate action on the part of everyone is required before someone is seriously hurt or killed.

For three days I have listened to people discuss Sunday's vandalism. It's astonishing how many people seem to be more concerned with placing blame on particular groups than they are with preventing further occurances.

Thus far I have heard the "blame" placed on: City Police; Sheriffs Office; District Attorney; Parents; School Officials; Alcohol; and Drugs. While I tend to agree with those who say that a good dose of discipline ten years ago could have prevented this problem today, I also believe that the whole question of "blame" is irrelevant at this point.

The time has come to stop criticizing our law enforcement officers and instead offer our assistance.

The organization of a volunteer group to patrol at night, not to make arrests or act as law enforcement officers, but to observe and report, might go a long way toward preventing future vandalising.

While reports from officers indicate that night activity has diminished since Sunday, it's not likely that it will remain that way.

Based on past vandal occurances within two weeks, there will be more traffic any day of the week at 3 a.m. than there is on a Sunday morning at 8 a.m.

Added police patroling won't stop the problem as was proved Monday night when at least 3 law enforcement vehicles were patroling in town when the door of a business was kicked in.

The volunteer patrol might not be the solution but the time has come to stop criticizing, blaming and griping. We must direct our energies in a positive manner to assist our law enforcement officers in preventing future occurances of this type and at the same time assist them in finding out who is responsible for past acts.

Vandalism Continues

A two year long seige of vandalism evolved from the destruction of property to bodily injury last Sunday morning.

In three apparently connected occurances, the High School, the home of High School Principal Bill Blakley, and the home of High School Home Economics teacher Mrs. E. T. Jeter, were all vandalized.

City Police Office Ricki Russell was called to the residence of Mrs. Jeter about 4:30 a.m. Sunday and while there, a call was received to report to the residence of Blakley.

Officer Russell and Sheriff G. T. Garrett responded to Blakley's residence and discovered two windows broken by rocks.

Two windows were also broken at the Jeter residence.

Upon further investigation, two doors in the High School building, a door in the woodworking building and two windows in the High School were also found broken.

When the windows in the Blakley residence were broken, Mrs. Blakley received a laceration from flying Blakley told the Free Press Monday that during the past five years he had been subject to vandalism to his personnal property amounting to between $750 and $1,000.00.

According to Blakley, vandalism at the school since December 15, has amounted to about $6,000.00. This total is for materials only and does not include labor.

During the 1978-79 school year a total of 11 vandalism incidents occured at the school amounted to approximately $5,000.00 in damages.

In addition to school vandalism, Blakley added that three fires had been set in the High School building in the past two weeks and that both the High School and Junior High School Principals had been required to sit in on some classes to maintain order.

Blakley also added that it is becoming more and more difficult to obtain quality educators who will consider going to work for our school in light of vandalism occurances.

Mayor Royce Williams told the Free Press Tuesday that the City would increase the number of City Policemen, but that it was impossible to hire enough men to stop such occurances without the cooperation and assistance of parents and the general public.

The investigation is currently continuing with representatives of the Sheriffs office, DPS, Texas Rangers, District Attorney's office, and City Police cooperating.

Cleanup Continues

from flying glass in the incident.

The annual City Wide Cleanup in Haskell is continuing this week with Haskell being a beehive of activity as citizens are making a diligent and concerted effort to "clean up" around town. City and County crews will begin to pickup debris that has been piled up by these efforts, and really do a super job in this project.

Several organizations in town are working in specific areas to really get things going. City mowers have been "attacking" the weeds and grass in vacant lots and along roads throughout the city, and the trucks are rolling to pickup the debris.

Posters have been put around town to urge all citizens to participate in this cleanup, thanks to the 5th and 6th grade classes of Haskell Elementary School and the Haskell Young Homemakers.

The City dump east of town will be open each day and on Saturdays for those wishing to haul their own trash and debris, and will also be open Sunday May 25th.

Letters To The Editor

What events we have seen this past week, when we see vandalism such as we have had, not just in Haskell, but all across this country. What events that occur following, when all the young people of Haskell, the finest young people I have ever known, are critisized, condemned and intimidated due to the action of a very few, a small confused, troubled 1% or less.

I certainly condemn the action of the vandals, whether young or old, for their wanton destruction of both public and private property, the endangering of lives, and the general nuisance to our city and county. We are not a nation of anarchists, but supposedly a nation of law and order. Neither are we a nation of gestapo like tactics in which all are condemned for race, religion, color, creed, beliefs agencies, we do not have or associations.

I, as a taxpayer, am appalled at the losses incurred to our school, our rest area, our losses to my fellow business people in town, running a need for what we do have, to the thousands and thou- until events such as those of

We all want this when it is our property or our lives endangered. We all want this until it is our money that must pay for it. We do not have enough law enforcement officers, enough patrolmen, enough cars, enough sheriff's deputies, enough radios, enough equipment, or enough salary even for those we do have. We do not have enough co-operation between the 3 enforcement enough action from our courts or grand juries, we do not have enough support from outside agencies, state and federal. What we do need is a good city force of at least 4 officers, a sheriff's department with an We are a nation of laws, not adequate number of deputies at a reasonable salary, good co-operation between all agencies, and action from them all, at all times. We need a central hot line, to call at any time, to get immediate response from law enforcement officials.

We surely do need this, but WILL WE PAY THE PRICE. The only way we can possibly do this is to pay for it, and governments don't pay, people do. I have argued privately with some leaders in our city and county governments for enough tax increase to finance these necessary endeavors. People say that they are overtaxed today, but we have some of the cheapest taxes anywhere in the country. We need more money, must have more money, if we can expect any of the improvement necessary to our well being as citizens, taxpayers, and individuals.

Dear Editor:

Before daylight last Sunday, our school was vandalized for the sixth time this year. Even worse, rocks were thrown through windows in the home of two teachers and our high school principal. This incident resulted in the injury of one teacher and came very near to injuring others including some innocent children. Can you imagine the mental anguish these teachers and others are experiencing? How long must we endure these conditions? If this trend continues, we will have no real teachers left in our school system, our school taxes will be up because of repairs for vandalism, and our students will be graduating from high school with nothing but a worthless diploma.

It is time for leaders in our community to speak out and be heard. Civic clubs, churches, and concerned citizens must make their feelings known. Our law enforcement officials must know that the law is to be enforced no matter told that the school is to function as a learning institution and that no learning can take place without discipline for all students.

Finally, it is time for parents to be more concerned about their children-their attitudes, their education, their friends Perhaps, we need to be most Sunday, May 18th.

TO THE PARENTS

When windows are broken out of homes in other cities we read it and forget it. But, when it comes to our town. then it is time for us as parents to band together and see what we can do to help make our town a nice place in which we will be proud to say we live in Haskell.

Our teachers are being terrorized with rocks through the windows and doors, fire crackers and fires in the lockers at school and abusive language. Their lives are in danger because we have let things get out of hand.

A teacher's main job several years ago was to teach. Now some parents do not want 'Johnny'' made to study or have homework. "Johnny" needs to be free after school and at nights to do his own thing. Now teachers have to pamper not only the students but parents as well, try to see that "Johnny" has his grades within acceptance of the parents and passes on through graduation.

What happened to the parents backing the teachers in their teaching and discipline? When I was in school the teacher's word was the law. And, if I got a spanking at school then I got a harder one and their outside activities. at home. The parents stood behind the teachers, and there concerned about their where- was not the discipline probabouts at 4:30 a.m. on lem in the classrooms there is today. Also, there was not the discipline problem at home, because Mother and Daddy's word was respected and we did not dispute it, nor did we talk back, storm out, get into our cars and leave. It is as if today parents are afraid of their children.

If your child says they are going to a party at "Suzie's," then check with "Suzie's" mother and make sure Suzie" is having a party and it will be chaperoned. If

'Mary' is late coming home get out and check on her. Next time "Mary's" curfew should be shortened or she should not be allowed to attend a party.

Discipline has to start at parents care, they will discipline their children and will check on them. They will also stand up to their children and let them know they are the parents. Just because "everybody is going" is no reason for 'Mary' or "Johnny" to be allowed to go. Check and find Maybe if we hired some out who "everybody" is. Check out your child's friends.

There needs to be more communication between the school system and the parents so the parents will be aware of what is going on. If the students are made aware that their parents will be notified if they cause a problem, then When "Johnny" comes home and tells parents his side of the story, parents should find out the other side. Most teachers are willing to talk to the parents if the parents come to talk and LISTEN as well, and not to get onto the teacher because "Johnny" is having a problem. Parents also like for about the importance of priority coverage for athletic competitions versus literary meets? Perhaps I should butt out of the picture and not pursue this matter any further...or maybe there is a strong need for Haskellites to have my prejudiced opinion, along with Mr. Roger Cook's, which was printed in this newspaper on May 8, 1980, expressed on behalf of the 'majority' of people who find a literary meet more interesting than an athletic event. Mr. Cook admitted that he was prejudiced in an affirmative position towards athletics; I can accept that feeling as an honest and sincere one. What amazes me is to which poll he refers when he comes up with 'news coverage of sporting events is certainly more interesting to the majority of your readers than a literary meet." I do not feel that I have the right or the knowledge to speak for the majority of people in Haskell since I have not lived there permanently for the last six years, much less eighteen years for Mr. Cook. It is quite audacious for Mr. Cook to support his selfproclaimed, prejudiced opinions by using the word, majority, in his behalf. I must admit that more than likely many people do find sports more interesting and more descriptive to read. I, for one,

Actually, I am getting off of the tract or staying on this one for too long. Having lived in California for the last eighteen years, Mr. Cook probably does not know many of the students who participate in sports or in literary meets; I certainly do not. Although the word majority connotates an all around general feeling of most people (when substantiated), in this context, Mr. Cook does not take into account the personal, intimate feelings of those students who worked diligently and believed in what they attempted; yet, they are doomed to a second page destiny, which is accordingly "proper coverage" in Mr. Cook's opinion. Are they

High School has needs, goals, and emotions which are very real on an individual basis. It is unnecessary, unjust, and downright asinine to overlook these characteristics in a student or any person who shows an interest in bettering himself, his school, or his community. Furthermore, to insinnuate, whether Mr. Cook realized it or not (I am hoping that he forgot), that one aspect of a school's interest is more sincere and devoted, and, of course, more interesting, is discounting all of the rest of the school's attempts to enhance the students' opportunities, options, and talents to their perspective capabilities. (EDITORS NOTE: The following was brought to us by H.K. Henry from a 1968 edition of the Abilene Reporter

A man, feeling the need for medical attention, went to the Medicare building with that in view. Upon entering the front door he found himself faced with a number of doors, each marked with the name of an ailment: Appendicitis, Heart Attack, Rheumatism and so counts of their children's and on. Suspecting his trouble

Upon entering, he found himself faced by two more doors, marked Male and Female. He entered the one marked male and found himself in a corridor where there were three doors: Protestant, Catholic, Jewish.

Being Protestant, he entered that door, only to find two more doors, one marked White and the other, Colored. Entering the appropriate door, he found two more, marked Taxpayer and Non-Taxpayer. Of course he had to go through the Taxpayer portal and found himself facing two more doors: Married and Single.

He had a wife at home, so he entered the proper door and once more there were two doors, one marked Republican and the other, Democrat.

He was a Republican, so he entered that door and fell nine floors to the alley.

So watch it. This is a political year.

Farmers Still Single Largest Land Owners

AUSTIN--Despite the fact that so much of American land today is urbanized, farmers remain the single largest group of private landowners in the United States, according to Agriculture Commissioner Reagan

'Farmers and farm managers make up less than 2 percent of the U.S. adult population, but they own 46 percent of all private land," said Brown, commenting from a recently-released U.S. Department of Agriculture study of American landownership. The survey, conducted in 1978, also shows that over 8 percent of all landowners are farmers.

Brown noted that the last government survey of landownership in 1946 showed there were slightly more than 6 million farmland owners, of which 70 percent were actual farm operators. "Today, there are still about 6 million farm-

Since 1975 alone, Texas has lost over 16,000 farmers and about 1.3 million acres of farmland. This has been duplicated on a much larger scale nationwide. Individual farms have become fewer, but have grown larger in size.

"The continuing loss of farmers and ranchers, coupled with declining farm acreage, should be one of this country's priority concerns," said Brown. "Some think that we don't need farmers as long as we have supermarkets, but we have to realize that what concerns agriculture, concerns us all," he said.

Since the federal guidelines requiring coal conversion were passed, some states supplying Texas have levied excessive severance taxes on coal-one as high as 30 percent. Once again, this escalation in the price of coal is ultimately borne by the consumer. With the issues of both coal severance taxes and excessive transportation rates for coal, my office will continue to advocate the policy that electricity consumers of Texas should not be forced to subsidize any out of state operation simply because the energy situation of our nation is such that the citizenconsumers of Texas must now buy electricity that is generated from coal while our state continues to be a leading producer of oil and gas. Texans are willing to do their fair share, and I am presently in state and federal court with several lawsuits to keep that share from becoming unfairly burdensome. The object is for all parties involved in the production, transportation, and consumption of energy in the United States to pay their own way. I will continue my pledge to combat high electricity rates for Texans by continuing the high priority that this office is giving to the

Tower Addresses CAPITOL Saturday Closing UPDATE Of Post Offices

We're hearing a lot in Washington these days about cutting the budget, as well we should. But cutting a service (U.S. SENATOR for TEXAS that benefits every man, woman and child in this nation by more than 15 percent is not the way to go about it.

And that is what eliminating Saturday mail delivery

Delivering the mail was one of the first concerns of our national government. Next to defending our shores, it probably is the most basic thing the government does. The Postal Service used to take pride that "neither snow, nor sleet, nor dark of night" stopped the delivery of the mail. What has happened to our government if we can forget this obligation, and make it a scapegoat for our national

Long distance telephone aside, mail still is one of the primary ways Americans communicate with each other. Your newspaper may come to you in Saturday's mail. Or a long, newsy letter from a faraway relative. Or even a bill that needs to be paid.

But the problems in eliminating Saturday delivery go beyond the fact that the mailbox would be empty on that day. The question of what happens on Monday also needs sturdy piece of furniture. If to be considered. Already, the Postal Service must cope there is not basement or the with the buildup of mail that comes from not having delivery on Sunday, though mail is in the system. The glut of Monday mail caused by a two-day suspension in service every week would be an intolerable overload—especially to a system already plagued by too many delays in service.

I have always believed the primary tests to the value of government spending are the number of people who benefit, and whether the service could be provided by the private system or a more local level of government. The Postal Service benefits every citizen, and it can't be provided by any other agency or government level-so its service must remain intact.

That is not to say we shouldn't demand that the Postal Service exercise economy. We in the Senate have approved a high enough subsidy to allow continued Saturday delivery. But we also must demand that the Post Office improve its productivity. When the Congress created the Postal Service as an independent agency, the idea was to improve its management and efficiency. I don't know anyone who would argue that their mail service has improved since that action was taken. I am convinced considerable economies can be achieved in Postal Service operation, and that service can be made better.

142 RUSSELL OFFICE BUILDING

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

But we should not allow vital postal service to become a scapegoat to our national budget ills. We are in a financial crisis. Even the most avid spenders on Capitol Hill have become budget conscious. The problem is that many politicians in Washington are indebted to special interest groups for their next election. That makes it difficult for them to vote against large amounts of money for programs that benefit only small numbers of vocal people. The temptation is for them to take money from programs to benefit every American to mollify their special constituencies.

The only way taking budget cuts to make sure this doesn't happen is to make your voices heard in Washington above the din of special interest lobbyists clamoring for a larger piece of the tax pie.

With your help, we can keep adequate mail service. And we can keep other truly vital federal spending intact without busting the budget.

Better To Blow Away

BY GINA JENNINGS

Since my birth in Oklahoma have lived in the shadow of a funnel-shaped fear.

Although never actually caught, I have been chased, frightened, and generally harrassed by tornados as long as I can remember. Several months ago when my family moved into a house equipped with a storm cellar I thought I had finally out-smarted them for good. I entertained the fantasy that when the situation arose, I would calmly rise, collect my bag kept for such emergencies, call my children and proceed tranquilly to the

Not long ago, the warning sirens sounded and I discovered the folly of my thoughts when I put this carefully devised plan into action. I carried it out exactly and found myself sitting calmly in the cellar, perfectly serene--and completely alone.

Racing back up the stairs and into the house, I found an absolutely illogical and unforgetable situation. My husband, the guardian and strength of our little family, had heard the initial warnings, grabbed the car keys and rushed out the door to go SEE the twister. This, to me, is incomprehensible. Perhaps my fear of natural disaster is unreasonable but I am unable to muster enough enthusiasm to go out and view one like I would a parade.

He did not leave, however, without some parting words to the children. In a hearty voice he admonished them to finish eating their supper "since it might be their last one." My children are not predisposed toward hysteria but those words triggered pande-

My two year-old daughter studied the situation puzzledly and decided the point of this game must be to make as much noise as possible while jumping here and there and flailing the arms. She, therefore, joined in delightedly.

I attempted to convince my young "sirens" that it would be far more productive to utilize our energies in getting to the cellar. My eldest son refused to agree unless he could take his cat to safety also. Hence, the next few minutes I dashed about trying to apprehend my son who was running clockwise around the house, shaking the catfood box and calling out his pet's time and efforts around the name.

Sun Tanning Harmful To Skin, Says AMA

What does your doctor think of sun tanning? He's against it.

If you should ask your doctor whether there is any health value to sun tanning, he would have to answer "No." If you asked him whether sun tanning might hurt you, he would have to reply "Yes."

Sunning, overdone, can cause severe burn. Sunning, one modestly, can produce golden tan that gives an illusion of health and well being. But that golden tan often leads to premature aging and wrinkling of the skin, to premature "age spots" on the hands and neck, and to skin cancer.

So, once again, the American Medical Association advises Americans every-(where against suntanning.

But, your doctor also is well aware that millions of Americans will ignore this advice this summer. They will flock to the swimming pools and beaches through the warm months to bask in the sun. They will stretch out on the grass in the back yard, or on the roof terrace, or in the nearest park.

If you insist on getting a tan this summer despite medical advice to the contrary, here's how to do it without burning.

On the first day of sunning, allow 15 minutes on each side. The second day 20 minutes. The third day 25 to 30 minutes. By the third day the skin should begin to brown. Thereafter proceed at the best pace for your own skin to tan without burning. At the first sign of redness, get out of the sun.

It isn't easy to confine sun time to only half an hour on the first day at the vacation resort. But you can't stretch it very much. If you try to double the exposure time to hurry the tan, you'll burn. And then return from vacation with a peeling skin instead of a tan.

Time of exposure also should be adjusted to time of day. The sun's rays are hottest between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. After 5 p.m. you aren't likely to burn much.

There are creams and lotions that screen some of the rays and reduce danger of burning. But if the cream should screen all rays, there would be no tanning. You can still burn through creams if you stay out long enough. Also, water in the pool or perspiration washes away much of the cream in a short

Tanning removes most of the natural oils from the surface of the skin and many sunbathers find it helpful to use a cream or oil to relieve

Congressional Comment

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of four articles investigating the Social Security Program.)

WASHINGTON, D.C. -Remembering that the Social Security Program originally was based on the concept of being an income supplement program (not a retirement program) and was designed as a 'pay as you go" program, we can easily see that a serious shift in the program's balance has occurred since its inception in the 1930s

The system itself is not broken beyond repair, but does need some mending. The political question facing the Congress is: At which end of the see-saw do you either add or subtract weight to achieve the necessary balance? We must first face the political reality that even mentioning the reduction of any benefits in Social Security causes most reelection-minded Congressmen to stop dead in their tracks, even those of us who realize that the program has become overburdened with social welfare-related programs never originally intended. It is not popular to point out to voters that they have a responsibility to provide the major portion of their retirement income, either through other pension and retirement systems, or savings, and that the government can't do it all without increasing taxes.

So, in reality, benefits are likely to increase over the years, particularly since payments are now tied to the rising cost of living.

On the other side, the workforce that is trying! desperately to support the proq gram, cannot be expected to continue to carry the full load. and continue to bear larger and larger increases in the cost of the program:

Some changes, such as tax-1 ing of Social Security. payments, which I oppose, are not the answer. Changes in the long-range future of the program should come in incremental stages. I agree with the recent report by the National Retired Teachers Association and the American Association of Retired Persons when it recommended that: Whenever benefits are reduced on deliberalized (and I would place personal emphasis on the latter) or the rules governing eligibility or benefit computation are changed in any man? ner, lengthy transition periods must be provided to protect the reasonable benefit expectations of people.'

If the program is on an unbalanced see-saw, we must not ignore that inflation is the cruicial fulcrum - or balanci ing point - in the center.

Until inflation, with its ramifications on either end of the Social Security see-saw, is brought under control, neither the worker nor the beneficiary is going to be positively af-

At that time, change, in whatever legislative form advisable, can be gradually phased-in to restore balance to a system that is vital to our ever-increasing elderly population and other deserving disabled and survivor beneficiaries.
