LULAC has problems with WISD proposal

Runnels County Council 658 of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) has some objections to the Winters Independent School District's (WISD) proposal to elect board members.

Rolando Rios, a San Antonio attorney, represents the Runnels County LULAC. He met with LULAC last week to discuss the proposal which calls for creating five single-member districts and two at-large districts.

Rios was quoted in the Sunday San Angelo Standard Times as saying "We had problems with the WISD plan and we're discussing them with the attorney general's office in Washington D.C."

Since the proposed plan is a change in the way school board elections are held, the plan was sent to the Department of Justice for the department's approval. All election changes must adhere to the Voting Rights Act.

Rios also said that "They (LULAC) want cumulative voting for the at-large district."

Cumulative voting is defined as a voter having two votes and being able to apply them to one candidate.

David Mendez, an attorney with the law firm of Bickerstaff, Heath and Smiley in Austin, represents WISD. Mendez stated "No allowance is made for cumulative voting in the Texas Education Code which the school falls under. The Department of Justice would have to override a state law to approve cumulative voting."

Mendez also argued that under the WISD plan it is possible that the two at-large districts would not be up for election in the same year.

Rios also said that LULAC was unhappy with the lines drawn for District I, the minority district. This district does not have as high a percentage of minority residents as the one proposed by LULAC.

"The district proposed by LULAC is two to three percentage points higher—in the mid-60 percentage," Rios stated.

Mendez states "Both districts proposed are relatively close in percentages, but what is critical is that District I has 52.56 percentage of voting age residents."

The LULAC drawn district has 55.78 percentage of voting age residents.

The mid-60 percentage Rios refers to earlier is Hispanics of all ages.

LULAC sued the WISD in San Angelo's federal district court last May seeking to abolish the present at-large system on the grounds of discrimination.

In a related matter, a proposal to settle a lawsuit brought against the city of Winters by LULAC was accepted by the Runnels County LULAC Council, Rios said.

Cotton farmers advised to make the best of bad situation

by Richard Minzenmayer, Extension Agent-Entomology (PM) Runnels-Tom Green Counties

Raising cotton in the Concho Valley this year has been tough. Not only has the dry weather taken its toll, but insect problems have been severe and the anticipated price is not favorable.

Several years of mild winter weather has allowed boll weevil populations to develop to high levels necessitating chemical control of overwintered boll weevils in most fields this spring. Controlling boll weevils with chemical insecticides reduced naturally occurring insect parasites and predators which help control other insects that attack cotton later in the season. Bollworms wasted no time in taking advantage of this situation.

Bollworms increased to high populations and many farmers have had to fight them all season. Aphids, spider mites and insecticide-resistant tobacco budworms increased after many bollworm treatments. The bottom line is that many farmers have had to spend lots of money on a crop that will return less revenue than average.

But cotton farmers are eternal optimists, always looking to make the best of the hand they are dealt. Now there is a chance to do just that. The hot, dry weather, while reducing yield prospects has hurried this crop along and cotton will mature much earlier than normal. Open bolls are appearing in dryland cotton at a rapid rate and many fields will be ready to harvest in September.

Farmers are seeing this as a chance to get back at the boll weevil. Nothing knocks back boll weevils any better than forcing them into overwintering quarters earlier than they would like, according to Dr. Tom Fuchs, Extension Service entomologist in San Angelo.

In a 1992 experiment, for example, less than 20% as many boll weevils survived when placed into overwintering habitat on October 22 compared to November 6. This indicates that forcing boll weevils out of cotton by harvesting two weeks earlier can potentially reduce survival for next year by 80%.

Forcing boll weevils out of fields early has an added advantage also. It forces survivors to emerge from overwintering quarters earlier the following year. Boll weevils that emerge in the spring prior to June 15 have very little chance to survive since there are no cotton squares to feed on or lay eggs in at that time if we plant cotton according to planting dates established in the area.

In the 1992 experiment, only 1.5% of the boll weevils placed into overwintering quarters on October 22 emerged after June 15 compared to 7.5% of those placed into habitat two weeks later.

This means producers have an opportunity to really deal the boll weevil a blow and help themselves in the process. Early harvesting also allows follow-up field work to be done early so that the land will be ready to begin storing up moisture for next year's crop.

This is an opportunity to accomplish many of the same goals that we would normally have for a fall diapause spray program, according to Dr. Fuchs, without the expense of an insecticide spray program.

Blizzards improve in scrimmage, start regular season play this Friday

WRAPPED UP—Chris McCaslin of the Blizzard JV squad gains good yardage before being brought down by a Colorado City defender in last Thursday's scrimmage.

An improved offense and a good defense led the way for the Blizzards in Thursday night's scrimmage.

The Varsity and Junior Varsity squads ran through a controlled scrimmage segment before finishing the night with a 30 minute game situation.

Winters outscored the Colorado City Wolves 3-1 in the controlled scrimmage and 3-0 in the game situation.

The Blizzard JV outscored the wolves JV 1-0 during their scrimmage time slot. The JV was also a much improved squad over last week.

Head Coach Robin Byrd stated "We were an improved ball club but there are still improvements to be made. There was good second effort and this scrimmage should give the team confidence going into the Coleman ball game."

The Blizzards ran and passed the ball well. "The offensive line did a good job of pass protection and run blocking," stated Coach Byrd.

No injuries were reported and everybody is healthy.

"A few position changes were made and they turned out to be good changes," reported Byrd.

Byrd stated that the running game still needed some work and that receivers needed improvement on running the correct route at the correct time.

In defense, Coach Murphy stated "Each player needs to take care of his assignment before helping others, and our tackling techniques need to improve."

Winters goes to Coleman to start the regular season this Friday night against the Bluecats. Coleman is a class 3A team.

The scouting report shows that the Bluecat quarterback is a threat running the ball and the tailback has lots of speed. Also the split end has good hands and speed.

Coach Byrd was "impressed with the line." He also stated that the Coleman defense had good size in the front line and did a good job getting to the ball carrier.

The Blizzards will need to gang tackle and not give up the big play defensively.

On offense, Coach Byrd says patience is needed and to take what is given. "Not turning the ball over to Coleman on our end of the field will be the key to winning, along with good special team play," Byrd states.

Back the Blizzards Friday night by traveling to Coleman. Game time is 8:00 p.m.

OIL BUSINESS . . .

By Reg Boles ©1993

After half a decade of virtual inactivity, carbon dioxide (CO2) injection projects are heating-up once again in West Texas.

Yes, enhanced oil recovery is alive and kicking in the oil fields of Texas once again. The follow-up to waterflooding that got its start right up the road in Snyder is re-emerging as a viable method to extract more oil from this area's stingy petroleum reservoirs.

The SACROC Unit, outside of Snyder, was one of the very first successful field applications of a tertiary, or third-level, recovery program involving the injection of CO2 to push oil out of rock already swept by waterflooding back in the 60's. Then, in the late 70's and early 80's, projects in Seminole, Denver City, and Levelland moved from the drawing board to the field as oil prices started on their way up.

You see, CO2 projects are expensive and prices must be high enough to make it profitable to go after additional reserves through injection of CO2.

As prices seemed to be on an endless incline during the early 80's, the projects looked unbeatable. But, as prices nose-dived in the middle 80's, the projects lost their luster, even though those already being applied in the field (Denver Unit, Seminole Unit, SACROC, etc.) were continued with a very slim profit margin. For sure, no new projects were even considered with all of the uncertainty of oil prices in the late 80's.

Now, with some improvements in technology that make the price threshold lower and relatively stable oil prices over the last several years (Desert Storm excepted), projects are being expanded and even some new projects are being initiated.

Plus, CO2 prices have really come down since the 80's. The CO2 has to be purchased, you see, and costs were running near a dollar per thousand cubic feet (MCF). Now, prices have dropped to near 60 cents per MCF. Add to that a Federal and State tax credit, and you have some encouraging project economic indicators.

The newest project is one by Mobil in Kent County. It is a large project in a field that has been very successfully waterflooded over the last decade. The field is the Salt Creek Field, and plans call for installing a CO2 recovery plant (the CO2 must be taken back out of the oil that is produced) at a cost of 75 million dollars. The zone is the Pennsylvanian Canyon Reef (similar to SACROC) at about 6300 feet. There will be three phases implemented over nearly a decade, with the first phase involving 50 injection wells and 100 producing wells.

Peak oil production is expected to reach 28,000 BOPD, about 7,000 more than it produces now.

CO2 will be purchased for the Cortez pipeline (Colorado) and the Bravo Dome pipeline (New Mexico) at a significant discount. CO2 will be gathered from these two sources near Denver City and transported via a new line, the Estes pipeline, to the Salt Creek Field. Total project costs will be near 100 million dollars.

The completion of the Estes line will also permit some smaller projects (the South Welch Unit, the Cedar Lake field, and the Huntley field between Seminole and Seagraves) to become a reality.

Several other projects in Far West Texas are also planned, mostly by independents.

In all, there are about 10 new projects and 20 expansions of existing projects throughout Texas slated for the next five years. This type of expansion and expenditure will add a little color to the cheeks of the folks in the oil patch who have had little to look forward to since 1986.

From The Well
by Pastor Jim Hanson

Her name was Hannah McCormick. She was a little old lady who lived in a little apartment across the street where we lived in Glendive, Montana. She had lived out in the country with her husband on a ranch until he died. When she moved to town, she had her mind made up on where she would live. When asked by her sons, "Mother, why do you want to live in that little apartment so close to the sidewalk in that part of town?" Her answer was simple, "So I can be close to the children." "What children? None of us live nearby." "The children that are walking to school," was her reply.

She wasn't looking for a plush place in which to retire, away from the people, surrounded by acres of green grass with no trespassing signs all over the place. Nor, did she want to be surrounded by people who were her same age. She wanted to live in a little house by the sidewalk, where she could see and hear the children, and become a friend of children. The children that were going to school.

I'm kinda like Hannah McCormick. Every fall, when school cranks up for another year, I get excited. It's a special time, for a little while, anyway, children are important to the whole town. "Back to school" means new clothes, school supplies, physicals, special meetings, adjustments to our schedule. Blessed be Hannah.

Many of our Sunday Schools get pumped up in the fall, attendance is better. It's often "back to church" as well as "back to school."

I love it. It's children time. I'm not as old as Hannah. She was in her 80's. But we don't have children in our house, and somehow a house without children is just that. A House. Not a home. And I do enjoy watching the children ride their bikes on the sidewalks around the church and see them and hear their voices.

Hannah became a substitute grandma for our five kids. It wasn't long before they found their way across the street. Her door was always open to them. I'll never forget the time Paul came home and asked, "Mother, can I sleep over at Grandma McCormick's?" Ever so often one of more of ours would wander over to her house. It was a special place. Children, all children were special to Hannah. They brought life and hope to her.

Today when we hear how unwanted some children are so, unwanted that there isn't even room in the womb, I think of Hannah. When I hear parents complain about "those kids" and I hear some school teachers fuss and fume, I think of Hannah. And of how God placed her across the street where we lived. And how she taught me by her example what Jesus said, "Unless you turn and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven." "And whoever receives one such child in my name receives me." Blessed be Hannah. And blessed be every person who reminds us by their life and action just who are the greatest in the kingdom of heaven!

Senior Adults in the Spotlight

When Lillian Eubanks won the contest sponsored by KRUN in answer to the question "Why Do You Like to Live in Runnels County?" everyone wanted to know what she said. Rather than try to tell them, she agreed to having her answer printed.

Why I Like to Live in Runnels County

Among the gently rolling hills and level land, where acres of cultivated crops grow, lies a portion of land called Runnels County.

Here, wheat waves gently in the breeze. Cattle graze in pastures of lush grass and lacy mesquite trees. A frisky calf runs to its mother.

Its people are a close knit family kind of people who are always ready to lend a helping hand when illness strikes; a house burns or is blown away in a storm.

This feeling of togetherness still abounds and makes our little spot called Runnels County the dearest place on earth to the ones who live here and call it home.

Written July 16, 1993, by Lillian Eubanks

My second senior adult who loves Runnels County is W.T. (Buster) Butler who lives at 309 Melwood. He was born at Pumphrey and lived in Runnels County until after his marriage. He and his wife, Ida, moved to California and he operated a crane moving heavy implements. After retirement he returned to Texas, glad to be in Winters.

The Butlers are my neighbors and when I visited them he gave me a newspaper clipping, which was a reprint in the Coleman Democrat-Voice, written about the Rough Frontier by Bill Laws, February 21, 1984.

(Butler says that his Dad was called Will and not Jon, as written by Laws, but otherwise it is correct, as far as he knows.) All of us are familiar with stories told about the early day public watering trough in the center of the main street of Wingate.

The Rough Frontier by Bill Laws

Some time back in the '20s I did some work for old Jon Butler over near the Moro Mountains in Taylor County. His son, Hughie, had one of those little overland cars. Remember those little overland Redbirds and Bluebirds? One day after we had been working on it, we saw that it was still missing, so we decided to drive over to Wingate and put some new points on it. As we drove into Wingate, we saw that the radiator was steaming, so we stopped at that well in the center of the street and filled it from the watering trough.

Then I remembered a boy named Gilbert King told me that he came through Wingate once and watered his horse at the public trough near the well. Before he left, one of the loafers on the store gallery yelled, "All right, Buster, grab that pump handle and pump up some more water." King was a scrappy cowboy and he told him to go to hell. About six or eight men came out of the store and pulled him off his horse and tossed him in the water trough. He whacked a few of them with the butt of his quirt. But one came after him with a baseball bat so he remounted and rode away.

Laws told Hughie about this and he said, "Well, I guess we can pump up a few gallons if we have to." We went into the store and bought some distributor points for the car. An old tough boy playing a game of dominoes said, "Did you boys pump up any water?"

"No, we just used about a half a gallon," Laws said. He sat there and clicked the dominoes, whistled a tune, then said, "Well, you better go pump up some more water."

The store keeper laughed and said, "Boys, we have had a tradition here for years that when you use our water you must pump some more."

We just said, "How about that," and started toward the car, but when those goat-lovers came toward us we began to work the pump handle. No water came out until one loud-mouth yelled, "Take that bucket and prime it, stupid."

Well, of course that was just horse play, but after that I did a slow burn every time I passed through Wingate. Tradition, hell. They just wanted to start a fight. I think the well in the street is gone now, but not forgotten.

And when the season

We'll know that our boys were true-blue.

We are the Blizzards,
the Blizzards are we.
We are the Blizzards,
Yes, sir-eee!

Winters High School Song

We are here, our dear old high
To laud your glories to the sky.
Colors, white and blue
And we'll stand by you.

We will wave our colors gay
As we go fighting on our way.
For our grand old high school
dear,
We'll never fail, never fail
Hip, hip, hooray!

The Winters High School Student Council met on August 25 to begin planning for Homecoming and other activities. Angela Bryan, president, presided. Regular meetings were scheduled for every other Wednesday at 6:00 p.m.

Several items of business were discussed. Members will be selling football programs at all home football games at a price of 50¢. In addition, members will be selling Blizzard fananas again this year. Fananas will be sold for $4.00 each. Be sure to support the WHS Student Council with the purchase of these items.

Members agreed to continue the "goodie" treats in the teachers' workroom each week.

Work-on members will be painting the curb in front of the school blue. This area is designated for Senior parking. Also, work-ons will be painting Blizzards on the elementary sidewalks.

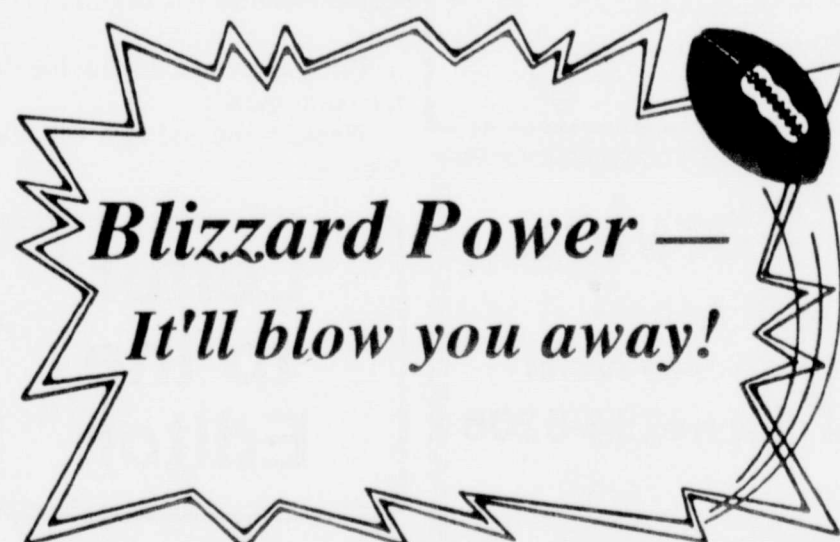

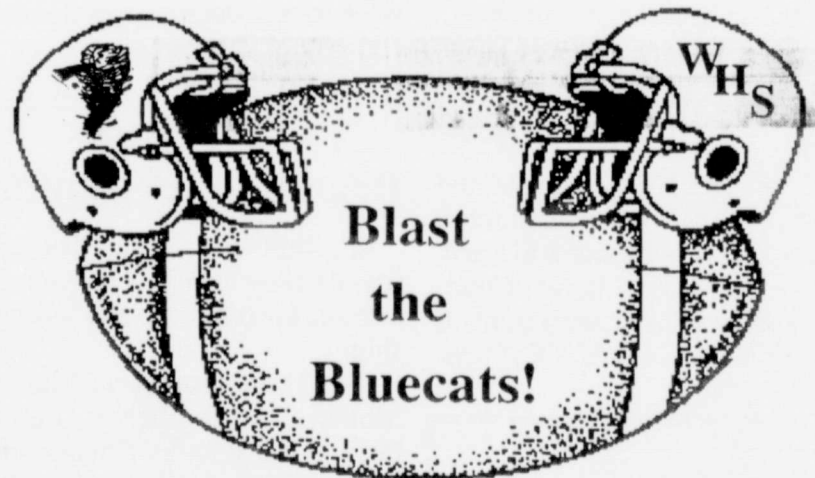

Plans are underway for an exciting Homecoming Week. Every day of the week will have a theme. There will be a "best legs" contest among students and faculty, Spirit Sheets and a Homecoming dance on Saturday, October 9.

Student Council members are enthusiastic about a new school year and have great things planned for the upcoming months.

Carolyn and Danny Slaughter

First Baptist bids fond farewell to Slaughters

Danny and Carolyn Slaughter were honored with a "good-bye" luncheon by First Baptist Church of Winters on Sunday, August 22.

They are moving to Ballinger where Danny is defensive coordinator for the Ballinger Bearcats and Carolyn is teaching third grade math.

While attending Winters First Baptist Church, Danny served as a deacon, chairman of deacons, Sunday School teacher, was a member of the youth committee and various other committees.

Carolyn was church organist for the twelve years, Sunday School secretary and a member of the youth committee.

The Slaughters were presented with two gifts, an engraved silver chafing dish from the church and a gorgeous picture from the choir.

Carolyn was also honored with a luncheon hosted by Mary Wilkerson and Jody Meyer at the Jeweled Sampler Tea Room in Ballinger. Administrators and fellow teachers attended to wish her well—as well as some new friends to welcome her to Ballinger.

Card of Thanks

Thanks to those of you in the Winters community, members of the Winters and Wingate Lions Clubs and several individuals in the Agriflex for collecting and sending used and out-dated eyeglasses to the Winters Lions Club.

The glasses have been turned in to the District 2-A1 Lion Sight Conservation Chairman who will send them to be used at the Lions' Sight Conservation Project in Del Rio and Ciudad Acuna, Mexico.

Our most recent project has been the building of an eye clinic in Ciudad Acuna for the purpose of providing surgical procedures and routine eye care that could not be afforded or available to many of the people in that area.

Sight Conservation is the major project of Lions International and the Winters Lions Club, as a part of Lions District 2-A1, has been very active in this very worthy project.

Sincerely,
Tommy L. Russell, DDS

Literacy Day

Wednesday, September 8, 1993, has been proclaimed National Literacy Day. Its purpose is to draw attention to the fact that one-third of American adults are functionally illiterate. According to the Texas Adult Literacy Laubach (TALL), a statewide literacy network of 58 affiliates, illiteracy is the root cause of many of society's problems. Solving the illiteracy problem would lower crime, joblessness, and accidents.

- Only three other states have a higher number of illiterate adults - Texas ranks 47th.
- Over 3.3 million Texas adults are unable to fill out a job application.
- Over 90% of all those individuals in Texas prisons are functionally illiterate.
- Of all chronically unemployed adults, 75% have difficulty reading and writing.
- Sixty-seven percent of Texas employers report difficulty locating candidates for technical and skilled positions.

Every Texan who can read and write could be a volunteer tutor to help someone who wants to learn. Contact your local Literacy Council or contact TALL by writing to P.O. Box 2152, Austin, TX 78768-2152.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

The second week of school is over and the question of the crosswalk is still not resolved.

According to a letter from Governor Richards dated August 4, 1993, the city of Winters will install signs and markings to establish a "No Parking Zone" approximately 50 feet on each side of the crosswalk.

As of August 25, 1993, this has not been done. I know there were several things suggested by the Texas Department of Transportation and all have been done except this very important thing. This one thing could make the difference in seeing a child or adult before it is too late. Even going 20 miles per hour it takes a long time to stop a car or truck and it doesn't take much for a car or truck to hurt someone if they are hit.

Cars and trucks are made of metal and plastics, people are made of skin, bone, and muscle. I do not know of anyone strong enough to outlast a car or truck in a contest. Even at 20 MPH in the "SCHOOL ZONE."

I hope we will see this project finished before the end of the third week of school.

Sincerely,
Annie Brown

Benny R. Polston, C.P.A.

Over 100 attend 4-H Family Fun Night

4-H Family Fun Night, held on August 23 at Ted Meyer Park in Winters, was a great success. Over 100 attended the Club's first meeting of the year, including 16 new members.

A short meeting was held with Kelly Walker leading the Pledge of Allegiance, Lori Bredemeyer leading the 4-H Pledge and James Andrae, the Inspirational. Officers were introduced and their duties explained.

The program was a presentation called "What is 4-H?" Members used posters and pictures to illustrate the activities in which the 4-H Club participated during the past year.

Mike Mauldin and Lance Rasch explained the 4-H Calendar for the year and discussed upcoming projects. Yearly Calendars and Point Pages were distributed.

It was noted that the Club had collected 38 items donated for families of flood victims.

Anyone interested in displaying crafts, clothing or food at the West Texas Fair in Abilene should be reminded that the final entry date is September 7.

If you were unable to attend and would like to enroll in 4-H, please call the Extension Office in Ballinger at 365-5042 or 754-5610.

Helping Newcomers Talk Texan

Is it just me, or does it seem like there are more foreigners in town? By foreigners, I mean folks who aren't from Texas. I was doing some shopping at the "convenient" store the other day. You know, groceries, minnows, gas, blue jeans and stuff. This man and woman drive up in a pink Volkswagen with two surfboards strapped to the top.

"Could you give us directions to Bronte" (with the accent on the e)?" the lady asked.

"Shore," I said, seeing no need to embarrass her with correct pronunciations. "Head down nair towards Norton..."

"What is that hissing noise?" she interrupted.

"Peers like yore tar has a piece of whar in it. Yon't me to yank it out with my plars?"

"My tar has a whar in it?" She looked puzzled for awhile. "Are you by chance saying that my tire has a wire in it?"

I finished giving them directions, but they still seemed confused. They headed "down nair" towards San Angelo instead of going "down nair" towards Norton. And they didn't even stop to see about that flat "tar."

To avoid such mix-ups in the future, I guess I better try to explain a few basic Texan terms to you newcomers. "Down nair," of course, is a direction. But not necessarily just down or what you might think of as south. Texans can be in Laredo and still go "down nair" to Ft. Worth. And "down nair" should not be confused with "out tair," which is always somewhere west of Rowena.

As for "i" words like wire, fire, tire, pliers, etc., Texans don't like to use the "i" sound any more than absolutely necessary. "I's" have a whine to them and we don't want to sound like a sissy. Besides, by changing the "i's" to lower pitched "a's," we can use the same vowels to call cows and holler at bird dogs.

In addition, words like "whar" can also mean "where" rather than wire and "tared" can mean a feeling of being "tired" rather than the "tire" that's on your pick-up truck. This way, we get double use from the exact same word and don't have to keep up with so many.

And "far" is used when the kids strike matches and start a "grass far" that has to be put out with the water hose. This is not to be confused with the "far" that refers to long distances. The proper term here is "fer" as in "It's a fer piece up that thar gravel road to Bobby Frank's place."

If you watch old cowboy movies, they always have fake Texans saying "howdy." The correct word, as we all know, is "haddy." Texans don't like to use up a lot of funny looking consonants like w's and z's. We save those to go on branding irons and with ranch names, like the Flying W or the Lazy Z.

"Tell Billy Fred and them haddy." If you're new to Texas, you might think that "them" is a general term. Actually, "them" is quite specific, referring to a precise group. Billy Fred will know exactly who "them" is and who to say "haddy" to.

"Hey, Uncle Bob, I dun dun it." Why use such confusing auxiliary verbs as "have" or "has" when we can use the same word that's already on our tongue anyhow? Again, it's a whole lot less to remember, especially during hot Texas summers.

"Back that truck up'er Johnny Bob and let's change that awl." Two vowels in a row, such as oil, soil, boil, etc., involve too much tongue rolling. Texans are content to leave all these sounds to folks north of the Mason-Dixon line.

"Uhauh." This one fools non-Texans every time. You may not recognize it from the spelling, but it's the universal term Texans use when we don't know the answer to something. "Uhauh" is used in conjunction with shrugging your shoulders and walking away.

"Muchabliged." This is the phrase that true Texans use to say thanks. Just saying "thanks" would be easier and it is. But "muchabliged" serves as a special password to weed out the transplants from the born and raised natives.

If you're a newcomer to our state or town, I hope this helps if we run into each other "down nair" at the convenient store.

"Now whar did I lay down them plars....."
