BCD Hears Plans For Various Town Projects

Robert Lee BCD had an interesting and busy meeting Tuesday at noon. Information on the upcoming addition to West Coke Hospital, the proposed new nursing home, a sewer system for the city and lights for the golf course was presented to those present.

Paul Haraleson, who is working for construction of the nursing home, and his wife were guests at the meeting. He presented his plans and needs for getting the project underway, and showed pictures of homes now in operation.

Work was underway Tuesday afternoon toward getting the site deeded to Haraleson. He proposes to make application for a loan to finance the project as soon as legal details are worked out, possibly as soon as later Tuesday. Deeds to the land on which the home will be built specify that the land will revert to its present owners if the loan is not obtained and the project is not built.

Haraleson proposes to build a 56 bed unit, across the street east of West Coke County Hospital.

R. B. Vandiver, administrator of the hospital, told the BCD about activities now underway toward construction of an addition to the hospital. More details on this project will be found in another story in this issue of The Observer.

Mayor Robert D. Vaughn discussed possibilities of building a sewer system for Robert Lee. He outlined possible routes to take in financing such a project. Haraleson, during the discussion of the sewer system, voiced his concern about the lack of a sewer system in the city. He stated that a city sewer system would greatly simplify his job in building the nursing home and cut down on construction costs.

W. D. McAdams reported that West Texas Utilities has submitted a bid of $337.58 for lighting the driving range at the golf course. The bid was considerably below the $558.00 bid received earlier.

Two visitors and 17 members were present for the meeting.

April Offers the "Lucy Eleven"

That's the eleven foods plentiful this month. Featured are eggs and prunes. Although spring usually brings a large number of eggs to market, supplies this month are expected to exceed those of last year. Dried prune production is heading for a 40,000-ton increase over last year—with official estimates at about 171,000 tons.

Other foods reported plentiful by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Consumer and Market Service include two poultry items—broiler-fryers and turkeys, fresh carrots, onions, cabbage, canned pears, canned pink salmon, honey and dry peas.

Turkey for Easter dinner is a good thing to keep in mind. It should be a timely treat—and can easily be prepared ahead of time. And you should find broiler-fryers also an economy meat. Marketings are expected to be nearly 10 percent above a year ago, when farm prices were the lowest on record for April.

You'll find lots of honey on the market this month. And April 18-24 has been designated "Honey for Breakfast Week", a real good time to "sweeten" up the morning menu.

Fresh onions will be plentiful, due to a large harvest and a decline in export movement because of the dock strike. Dry peas will be well in excess of trade needs.

Wall-to-Wall Cleaning
If washing the walls is on your spring housecleaning agenda, here's how you can do a better job of cleaning them.

Select a mild soap or commercial cleaner. Use one bucket for the cleaning solution, another for clean water for rinsing, and large sponges for both.

Wash the walls from the bottom up. This is the secret of success. If you start at the top, you may drip scrub water down over the soiled area. This will cause streaks. But if the solution drips into a clean area, it can easily be wiped off.

Wash only as much as you can reach—then rinse immediately. In washing the next area, overlap the first one.

Do the ceilings last.

Effect of Diet on Lifespan Studied
The relationship of diet to body function and longevity of experimental animals show—among other things—that overeating shortens the lifespan, according to a recent study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

In the study, rats that ate excessive amounts of food and gained weight at a rapid rate died at an early age regardless of the composition of their diet.

Twenty-nine different nutritionally adequate diets were fed to laboratory rats in long term studies. The basic diet included casein, lactalbumin, yeast, mineral salt mixture, hydrogenated vegetable oil, sucrose and cellulose. This diet was varied, depending on the experiment, by substituting natural foods for part of the basic diet.

In one group of experiments, only the source of protein and fat was varied; white in another, the source and level of protein remained constant but the kind and level of fat were varied.

Results show that even when nutritionally adequate diets are fed, differences in survival are observed. These differences are due, in part at least, to the way an animal makes use of different combinations of foods. The particular combination of foods in a diet seems to play a bigger role in the way foods are used than the individual foods being tested, the scientists learned.

The importance of this intersection of foods is indicated in studies of cholesterol levels in blood serum. In the Beltsville experiments, cholesterol levels in blood of test animals had no consistent relationship with the kind or level of fat, or with the level of cholesterol in the diet.

The researchers found that heredity played a great part in the reactions of animal to diet.

Household Hints
Glasses which have had milk in them should be rinsed first in cold water before being put in dishwasher or dish pan. Hot water will leave milk glasses with a cloudy look.

Do you have some hard dry cheese? Grind it with chunks of raw onion. Add a little mayonnaise and you have a perfect spread.

Strawberries should be washed two or three times in warm water, followed by a cold rinse under the tap. Remove the cap with a teaspoon.

Schedule
Thursday, April 1—Clothing workshop, 8:30 a.m. Bronte Zeta Delta; 1:30 p.m., Robert Lee.

Friday, April 2—Office
Saturday, April 3—Meeting of Bronte and Future Leaders 4-H clubs, Robert Lee recreation center.

Monday, April 5—Office.
Tuesday and Wednesday, April 6-7—Kerrville meeting of extension agents.
