John White Asks Re-Election As District Clerk

announcement of John White for re election to the office of district clerk. Mr. White has lived in Eastland County practically all of his life and is well known to the publie. His record as a public official is also well and favorably

In making his announcement, Mr. White stated to the voters: "If my record as a citizen and s a public officer meets with approval, I earnestly solicit our support at the coming elecion and shall make a special efort to see as many of you as the duties of the office and present war the conditions will permit."

WACs Dream A Postwar Wardrobe

FREEMAN FIELD, Ind. (UP)

The Freeman Field air-Wacs may be all out for strictly governissue costuming now, but ment issue costuming now, but take it from them, there's going to be a postwar era that doesn't in-clude khaki.

They recently made up a com "dream wardrobe" to 'their war wearing habits. For instance the first thing on the list is one nightgown-very thin and ethereal -of shell pink trimmed with ecru lace. Not good for barracks they admitted.

To top this ethereal nightie, they'd like to have a four pocket cyclamen pink house coat with an orchid zipper all the way down the front.

One is supposed to be a sleek black dinner gown with long sleeves; another a smoky blue with yards of tulle: the third a daziling gown of poinsettia red or emerald green (the kind that can be worn with large jewelery) and last, a white chiffon with a swirling skirt.

And those low-heeled brown oxfords may feel comfortable walking around the post now, but for after the war give them lots of high-heels. They also want hair gadgets and earrings. Needless to say, dozens of pairs of filmy ny-

Ion hose top the accessory list.

They do go in for tailoring though. They want three slack outfits—none particularly practical, however, with a cream color flannel heading the list.

Most of all, they said, lots of color was to be included in everything. Khaki definitely will not be popular color scheme.

Bricker Impresses Scribe With His Forthrightness

Ohio Gavernor's Courage And Practicability Noted

By HELEN ESSARY Central Press Columnist

 WASHINGTON-I went to some of Presidential Candidate John cker's meetings out in Kansas City the other day. Bricker had left his post as governor of Ohio and stepped across the Mississippi river to whip up a little enthusiasm in Missouri.

I liked the governor a lot more than I expected to. You know how some people talk about John Bricker. They say: "He's been a good governor of Ohio, but, so what—?" They say he is lacking in force. That he is so amiable he has no enemies, and that enemies are as necessary to the development of a man in public life as were fleas to the dog of David Harum.

Of course, I don't know much about the governor's qualifications for the presidency. But I've listened to many hopeful candidates talk. And I was as much impressed with John Bricker as Bricker is a distinguished looking man. Sort of like Harding but not so bandsome. He has an excellent voice. He is a phrase maker. He thinks fast and has courage. I thought he had some originality, too. Didn't use all those same awful sentences politicians trot out as the next election day comes galloping up on the innocent populace.

Bricker sounded a practical fellow. They say he balances budgets with the turn of a fountain pen. He can also turn a neat joke to illustrate a point and he laughs as if he enjoyed laughing.

The audience to which Bricker talked when I was present was composed of party workers. And a very prosperous, pleased crowd they appeared, too. The place was full of four cipher fur coats and bright smiles. When the governor made a quick answer everybody applauded like the Dickens "Remember this," said the governor solemnly. "I am first, last and always—a REPUBLICAN:"

"You see!" said a woman next to me, with whom up to that me ment I had not exchanged two words of conversation. "You se "I do see," I said quickly, and was somehow reminded of that line in "Pinafore"—"for he b'mself hath said it, and it's greatly to his credit that he is an Englishman—that he is—an English A gentleman on my left now addressed me. "I saw you taking notes," he whispered. "What was that he said about foreign policy?"

"He said, 'We've got to learn that other nations are competent to take care of themselves and remember that our first job is to keep the United States strong. "I like that idea myzelf," I added. "Especially that bit about "I don't want my boy placed under the authority of some other gov-Of course, there were questions from the party workers and answers from the candidate on the over-centralization of government.

"There is not only over centralization of government, in Washington but the people down there no longer even bother to be polite in order to hide their incompetence," Governor Bricker was saying. "As the governor of a state it does seem that I should be able now and then to talk to some of those bureau heads over the telephone about matters of national importance. But I tell you it's more than a day's work to get them to answer a call."

Governor Bricker has a good reason, I thought, for objecting to the president's wish to take over the "Win-the-War" slogan for his next campaign.

"I don't know when any New Deal move had annoyed me more," he said. "Win the War' is a slogan that is the individual property of every citizen of the United States. Winning the war has not been the task or the duty of any party.

What kind of degrading partisanship has crept into the national istration since that call to arms? What's all this attack me, how could this miracle of production have come shabby pole coat, blue feit heret day, I can't believe that Christmas with a worn spot where she stuck it on with pins, clean but mended yellow cotton gloves, exfords in need of a shine. Her hair would do, but she wasn't sure of her lipstick and, likely as not, there was a spot of carbon paper shudge somewhere on nose or cheek, Saturday noons she never stopped to repair noons she never stopped to repair her appearance. Now she made a mental resolution never to leave the building without being prepared for anything.

She said, "Hello, Dennis," and he said, "Row do you do it? Up night-clubbing until 3 o'clock, a whole morning of work, and you look as "Only God and the Japanese gov."

would remember last Christmas she was sure she had heard Andrea say that Eunice was going to Alexandria for the week-end, but she when Andrea was planning to go waid, "No."

"I wish you were, I don't care much for those things myself, but marry Jim. Dennis, do you think we'll have war in the Pacinc soon?"

"Only God and the Japanese gov."

"Oh, fire" Beth said evenly "The clubbing until 3 o'clock, a whole morning of work, and you look as fresh as . . . as . . ."

"A dalsy, Dennia? I think that's the right word."

"Maybe," he said, "but I was trying to think of something pretiter. I had thought of quite a number of things I was going to tell you last night, but . ."

"Last night was wonderful. I adored the mariemettes and the Gypsy singers. Did you like them?"

"I thought you looked tired. I wasn't sure you were enjoying yourself, and I wanted you to."

Beth thought, "I'm keeping him here talking. He's probably going in the said and there was no reason why I should have been."

Beth stared straight at the road to the packets a what to go in and sit down opposite Andrea at that moment to meet her there at five."

"Oh, fine," Beth said evenly. "I's mice for Andrea that you'll be here. A girl hates to go to parties alone, and poor lamb, pretty as ahe is, she doean't have much chance to meet . . . escorts."

"I wish you were going to be there," he said again.

When she left him at the door, it was half-past six and she saw that dinner was already under way it the dining room, Andrea sitting it he dining room, Andrea sitting it he dining room, Andrea sitting it he dining room, Andrea at that moment. Not until she got over her resemble to the packets of the probably going the last of the packets of the packet Beth stared straight at the road sentment that Andrea should do a thead. She said, "I did. And Andrea loved it, too. Didn't we thank you?"

"You did, but I hope to be be rule."

"You did, but I hope to be be rule."

"You did. But I hope to be be rule."

"You did. But I hope to be rule."

"You did. But I hope to be rule." Composing herself, she went into stopping to think he might think she was jumping at an invitation.

The next moment she knew, from her to marry him, because they her I came out of the office."

Reth said casually, "and we drove that he was thinking of nothing but now fortunate he was. "Good," he said boyishly, "because I want to more until they came to the inn, but there were two ghosts riding think it was important enough to show you a little of the countryside and I thought you might like the food at a little place out on the Aft. Vernon Parkway."

"Shall I get in?"

He tucked a robe around her knees and said he'd put the top up on the car if she wished it.

"I love to feel the wind and it can't make me look any worse than I do."

He didn't say anything that he might have said, but he looked at her appraisingly and said he liked little hats like hers.

The ride was a lovely one and light?" Dennis asked when he had

The inn was a wide-verandaed house set far back in the trees, and in the diming room a great fire loaded in a huge hearth, filling the room with warmth and light and the pleasant odor of burning hickory.

They lingered over a delicious limch with which was served a light, fragrant wine. It was dusk the afternoon was gone.
