What the Weather Predicts For May

May opens with a raw, sleety disturbance, between the 2nd and 4th, with seismic conditions, followed by a change between the 6th and 8th. The next change falls on the 10th and 11th, clearing colder, and this is followed by a prolonged disturbance from the 14th to the 18th, bringing winds, rains, and intense seismic condition, with earthquakes and shocks, centering on the 18th. This is followed by storm conditions on the 20th and 21st, clearing colder, with a sharp change on the 24th, and another on the 26th, and again on the 28th and 29th, and the month passes out with storm conditions, ending a wet month in most sections.

Pirates Hope to See Cooper Back in Form

Wilbur Cooper, Pittsburgh, was one of the biggest pitching disappointments in the National league last season. Counted upon to keep the Pirates in the running, Cooper failed completely. He lost more games than any other hurler in the league. This year Pittsburgh expects much better assistance from its star of two campaigns ago. Should he return to winning form the Pirates' fight for top honors will be greatly enhanced.

NEW FIRST SACKERS ALSO CAN HIT PILL

Majority of Stars Last Year Well Over .300 Mark

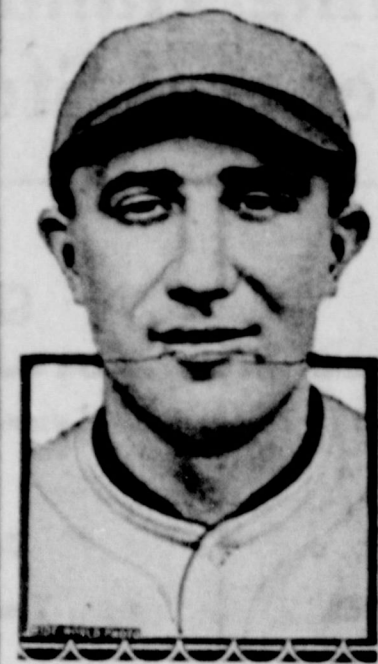

In the olden days a first baseman couldn't hold a place on a big league team unless he knocked the ball over the fence every so often, and, surely, he must be a bona fide .300 hitter. Cap Anson, Roger Connor, Dan Brouthers, Al McKinnon, Otto Shomberg, Dave Orr, Ted Larkin, Perry Werden and Jack Doyle were the popular type of first sackers during the '90s and early '00s. All were powerful batsmen, but rather slow on the paths, barring Roger Connor who, for a large man, was exceedingly fast on the base lines.

In 1887 every first baseman in the National league batted .300 or better. This is the only instance in major league baseball where all the guardians of the initial sack registered the mark of .300 in batting.

Last season the first basemen working in the circuit ruled over by Ben Johnson came within one, or five points, of producing eight of the regular first basemen who hit .300 individually or collectively. Sisler, Pipp, Hauser, Sheeley, McInnis, Burns and Blue came under the wire at a .300 clip. Judge, of Washington, was the only one who lagged, and he had a mark of .295.

In the National last season only three of the regular first basemen hit as first sackers are supposed to hit. Jake Daubert, Kelly and Grimes are the only regulars to live up to traditions. Rookie Bottomley, of the Cardinals, was well within the .300 circle but he played in only thirty games.

Archdeacon Is Fast

"Archie" Archdeacon of the White Sox, who came to the Chicago White Sox from the Rochester Internationals and is to be used as a regular with the Sox this season. Archdeacon is regarded as the fastest man in baseball and holds the record for circling the bases. He had one of the highest batting averages in the International league last season. Several years ago he was up before the Boston Braves but was sent back for more training.

A MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE MATTRESS

"It's hard not to get any appreciation," said the mattress to the bedposts.

"It is," said the bedposts. They did not say much. They were rather stiff and of few words.

"The Dreamland King sends beautiful dreams, I know," the mattress continued. "He deserves the appreciation he gets. I am willing he should get it. Quite willing.

"But I don't seem to get any appreciation at all. And many of my family suffer in the same way."
"Name with our family," said the bedposts.

"You see," said the mattress, "people are all tired out when they come to me. They're tired of staying awake. Or if they are not all tired out at least they are feeling that they need a rest anyway and that a rest will be good for them.

"Or if they do not think that about themselves some one else thinks it for them.

"But they look forward to the dreams the Dreamland King may send them. And they don't begin to appreciate that in the first place I make it so comfortable for them that they feel like seeing the Dreamland King and of hearing what he has to tell them.

"They hardly ever say a kind word for the mattress and it is just a shame. It is seldom when you get up in the morning that you hear them say: 'Well, that comfortable mattress is a joy.'

"No, they speak of a refreshing sleep and of how much better they feel and of pleasant dreams they have had but they don't say a word about me.

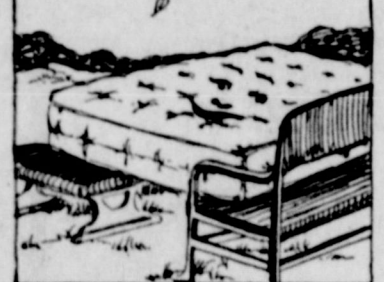

"Once in a great while some one says when there seems to be no other conversation about—if that is the way one speaks of conversation—that I'm a good, strong mattress and a comfortable one.

"But those times are very, very seldom. Usually they are at dull times, such as housecleaning time, when maybe I'm given a little bit of the springtime and am allowed out on some benches with a nice green lawn beneath and a nice blue sky above.

"I need that little bit of springtime for my life is not very joyous when you think that hardly a pleasant thing is ever said of me when I keep on giving all the rest and ease I can."

"They don't speak of us," said the bedposts. "And yet they'd be in a pretty state of affairs if it weren't for us."
"They wouldn't like to be on the ground, or on the floor.

"We're quite sure of that. Yet they don't say a friendly word for the bed-posts standing so straight and keeping them safe from falls.

"But we're forgiving. Even if they don't appreciate us we will never let them fall."

"No," said the mattress. "And neither will I do any other way than I have always done.

"Besides, you very seldom see anything else, poor bedposts, and I do get 'aired,' as they call it, out the window.

"Yes, I get a whiff of air and my mattress self feels much better for it. And I'm changed and turned over every day or so, and that is a great comfort. I don't like being in just the same position all the time.

"No mattress does. But I still think that a mattress is treated pretty badly when it gets so little credit for what it does."

"But then, alas, such is life! And I'd rather be a mattress than bedposts. I like a lying-down position. I could never bear it standing up all the time!"

"But we wouldn't want to be lying down," the bedposts said. "After all, there is something to be said in our favor. And we wouldn't want to be fire-escapes and exposed to all kinds of weather."

"I suppose the fire-escapes would hate to be indoors all the time," the mattress said. "Yes, we all have our complaints, but I don't suppose, when it comes right down to it, we'd want to change places with anyone. I wouldn't even want to change places with the Dreamland King. I could never be so adventuresome, nor have so many ideas!"

Joseph Greer and His Daughter

By HENRY KITCHELL WEBSTER
Copyright by The Hobbs-Merrill Co.

"YOU CAD!"

SYNOPSIS.—Joseph Greer, a black-bearded pirate of fifty, having discovered a process of extracting fiber from flax straw, is made director of a big corporation. For years distributing men of affairs, Greer has played a lone hand. Now holding what he considers the winning cards, he is willing to submit his wits to wealth. To protect his own interests Joe has foisted his own secretary, Jennie MacArthur, upon the company. Henry Craven, a bank clerk related to John Williamson, the millionaire backer of Greer's new company, is offered by Williamson the position of treasurer of the new company, with the generally understood purpose of watching Greer. Craven accepts. Joe tells Jennie about his wife, and his nineteen-year-old daughter, Beatrice, whom he has never seen. He is planning to force the daughter into Chicago society. Joe goes to a week-end party at Williamson's house, where he meets Violet, John's wife, and is strongly drawn to her. He fascinates her. Beatrice arrives and father and daughter get acquainted. Beatrice proves to be handsome, well-willed and lacking social polish. The affair between Joe and Violet progresses. Violet interests herself in Trax's social career.

"He filled me full of details," John concluded, "and I can't remember them. I'd like to take you out to meet him some time and hear for yourself what he's got to say."

Joe said, seriously, that he'd be very glad to go. There was nothing new about old Nicholson's facts, and nothing very alarming about his theories, but he'd be worth talking to anyhow, and his stand of Belgian flax worth seeing. If that stuff could be made to grow in this soil and climate it might be worth a lot to them.

He didn't mention to John that, for three months, he had put in odd hours designing a harvester that would pull flax up by the roots. He was always as secretive with his immature ideas as a cat with her blind kittens.

"All right," said John, "we'll plan to go out there some time, within the next week or so."

Joe grinned. He could manage it tomorrow, he said, though it was a pretty full day. And he was going North tomorrow night.

"Tomorrow's impossible for me," said John. "Oh, d-n it, yes, I'll make it today. If Nicholson's here, I'd promised Dodo I'd go to a ball game with her—Giants and the Cubs. But she'll let me off, I guess."

Nicholson was at home and would be glad to see them. So the date with Dorothy had to be broken. The two ate lunch together, and immediately afterward, in Joe's roadster, drove out to Nicholson's.

Joe enjoyed the afternoon thoroughly. He'd never liked John Williamson so well before; he had never had so little the sense that they belonged to two different species. They talked, for the first time, at ease, and found, within rather narrow limits, a common language.

As for old Nicholson, he proved clear treasure-trove. He was wild, possibly a little mad, utterly unbound in all his scientific ideas; and his manners, though somewhat more elaborate, were as outrageous as Joe's own. But he was a perfectly real, unaffected person, happily living a life that was just about as he wanted it, and as sublimely indifferent to collective opinion as he was to the facts of physics and chemistry.

He and Joe, as they tramped out to the flax fields and back to the "laboratories," and as they sat in his veranda discussing a hospitable supply of Scotch and soda, argued and swore at each other, until, by five o'clock, they were old friends. It was about this time that John was called to the telephone. Joe took advantage of the interruption for a look at the sky.

"We're going to have a h-l of a big rain before night," he remarked.

Old Nicholson nodded. "I could have told you that this morning, when you telephoned, only you wouldn't have believed me."

Williamson came back. It was Violet who had telephoned. Dorothy had driven her out to Hickory Hill—this was Graham Stannard's and Rush Wolfson's farm—and, with the storm coming up, she didn't care to let the get drive back. The Nicholson place was only three or four miles away, and Violet's idea was that John should pick them up at Hickory Hill and drive them home. "I told them," John concluded, "that we'd come out in your car, but that I didn't think you'd mind taking me over there, and, perhaps, take Violet home in my place. That little roadster of Dodo's would be a tight fit for three. It's taking you a lot out of your way, of course."

The request pleased Joe. It was of a piece with the more companionable feeling he'd been aware of between them all the afternoon. He would be late for dinner—and he'd been punctual as a commuter since Trax had been promoted to the head of his household—but he'd contrive to telephone from somewhere and let her know what to expect.

They left Nicholson's at once, but the stop at Hickory Hill used up a good deal more time than they'd counted upon.

It amused Joe to note that there never was the slightest question in John's mind as to how their party of four should be divided up. John, and nobody else, was going to drive his precious Dodo over those tricky detours. Violet, he believed from a gleam he caught in her eye, was somewhat dryly aware of the same thing.

Joe, with Violet, started out ahead; but the position was reversed as soon as it began to rain, for he pulled out to the side of the road at once and began putting up the storm-curtains, and the others came on by, passing with a derisive honk from John and a shouted comment, only half audible, from Dorothy. Her idea seemed to be that the storm wasn't going to amount to anything and that the rain felt good anyway.

"They'll go on like that till they're soaked," Violet said, discontentedly, "and then they'll put up the curtains and keep the wetness in. I'm like a cat about getting wet," she added. "I hate it."

Joe's car had a right-hand drive, and his levers, especially with the hand-brake set and the storm-curtains up, barred his entrance to the driving-seat. It was raining in good earnest before he'd finished with the curtains, and, in the light of that last remark of hers, he hesitated to ask her to get out so that he could get in.

"I can climb in over you," he suggested. "If you don't mind being squeezed a bit."

"I don't mind," she said, and he clambered in, over her knees. Then he reached across her and buttoned the last curtain fast.

The state of his mind and feeling toward her, when they had started out from Hickory Hill, would have satisfied the most exacting husband in the world. John Williamson, had he possessed the clairvoyant power to read it, would probably have smiled over his sole companion without a little more disposition to improve the shining hour—oh, in a perfectly harmless, decent way, of course—than could be read in Joe's intentions.

Her sensuous appeal to him was completely in abeyance. She was John Williamson's wife, and John was, after all, a thoroughly good fellow. She was also, in a way he'd never been lucky enough to experience before, willing to make friends with him. He wanted her for a friend, on Trax's account as well as on his own. And then, last and first and all the time, he was that newly discovered being, Trax's father. Emotions awakened on the night of his quarrel with her hadn't had time to subside into commonplace tepidity. The chance that Trax's father should even glance aside at the amorous possibilities of another woman would have been unthinkable to him—when he left Hickory Hill. But when he started the car, after that pause to put the curtains up, there had been a change.

The subtlety of the sense-perceptions, when they are trained and relied upon, as Joe's were, is beyond language altogether. It was with perfect innocence that he suggested it mightn't be necessary for her to get out of the car in order to let him in, if she didn't mind being squeezed a bit. But some quality of her voice when she answered, "I don't mind," roused him. She had intoned it in a thoroughly matter-of-fact way, too. There was the same message in the feel of her body as he crowded across it, in the non-withdrawal of her breast from contact with his arms as he buttoned the curtains, in her discovery of the wetness of his coat, and in the way she helped him out of it. A series of acts which could have been described in precisely the same words might have told him nothing at all, might have left him as coolly unconscious of her sex as he'd been when he stopped the car. There wasn't the faintest doubt in him of the authenticity of the message. Whether she'd meant to convey it, or even was aware she had, he couldn't feel sure.

He called up a sullen resistance to meet it. He drove bruskiy and hard through the pounding rain. His left hand was kept busy sweeping the windshield clear with the squeegee, and every time his arm came back to the driving position it had to crowd its way in beside her body. There was nothing tender about the way he did it. He talked, doggedly, dully, about old Nicholson and his flax and his mad ideas. Anything that would press back his consciousness—and his awareness of her—that they were shut in together snug and close against the storm, alone and secure; of their bodily warmth, the nearness of flesh to flesh.

She did nothing to help him. She said little, made no conversation of her own. And what she did say was no longer friendly but curt, preoccupied. Well, he knew—he knew too d-d well—what her preoccupation was.

He gave over trying to talk at last, and drove all the harder. He could feel his heart pounding like a sulky motor. The rain had increased to a cloudburst. It looked like a solid wall of water he was driving into. There was only a lurid dusk of daylight left, and the two misty pencils from his headlights illuminated nothing.

"I suppose it's dangerous to go on through this," she remarked, indifferently.

"It'd be a d-n sight more dangerous to stop," he growled, and didn't know whether she had heard or not. She gave no sign, anyhow, that she could hear or feel, and he didn't turn to look.

But within a minute or two the question of going on was settled for him. He had been balancing the car on the crown of a newly worked dirt road. It was a trick comparable to walking a tight rope, and when a loose stone threw him a little to one side the car instantly became unsteerable. He killed the motor and braked as hard as he dared, which wasn't much, to check their momentum, but there was no way to stop their slide-slip. The only question was whether they would bring up in a ditch, in which case the car would no doubt roll over, or against a cut-down bank. It depended on which was there.

Violet laughed as she felt them going, but not, he noted, the sort of laugh one might expect. There was nothing of panic in it. It was only a matter of seconds before they brought up against the bank and stopped with a jolt which threw her violently upon him.

For a moment her body was like steel, every muscle stretched taut; but even so she made no movement away from him. He eased the position of his shoulder by slipping it under her, and at that, with a gasp, she went soft. His arm closed round her and held her where she was.

"You're a good sport," he told her, hoarsely. "There's no telling where you're going to bring up when you start a slide-slip like that."

Her answer was haltingly articulate, "—been slipping a long while" was what he thought he heard.

He felt an imperious need to see her face, and, reaching out with his free hand, he switched on the dash-lamp. She flinched at the faint glow, but made no spoken protest. The little light made the outer darkness deeper. The rain shut them in like a many-folded curtain. "Oh, God!" he whispered, helplessly. Then, with a laugh, "I guess there's nothing we can do about it."

"Not a thing," she murmured. "I pulled her up higher so that her head fell back upon his shoulder, and he kissed her upturned mouth, hotly, unequivocally. Then he drew back and stared down into her face.

Her eyes, wide open, luminous, returned his gaze with something in them that confounded him—an impossible thing, innocence! The incredulous, half-terrified awakening of a new surmise! She was a mother of a grown girl. She had been married the better part of twenty years. But she made him think of Beatrice.

He shifted her over to her own side of the seat, gently enough, but with a movement of sudden resolution; then he clenched his hands on the wheel. "We can't go on with this," he said, holding his voice as steady as he could. "It isn't easy to pull up, but it can be done."

He didn't look at her; gazed out fixedly through the windshield as if he'd been driving the car. But he was aware of her, slumped down a little in her seat and shuddering. She gave no indication of listening to him, but he plunged heavily on, in sports. The news had got to be cleared up somehow, now, before it grew cap worn.

"That's the way we feel about each other, all right; there's no getting away from that. Have from the first, I guess—But it isn't the only way—not with me anyhow—It's nobody's fault this happened. Just bad luck. And there's no harm, done, yet—It's a string we can't play out. You don't want to make a fool of your husband, and neither do I. And I do want to be friends with you—the other way. I want you for a friend, for Beatrice. And this would spoil all that. We can't have it both ways. And we can't go half-way and stop. It's got to be all or nothing—with us—I'm not saying it's easy." His voice rose and his grip on the wheel tightened. "It's a h-l of a thing—the way it jumps on you, out of the bushes. But it's not the only thing in the world."

She turned upon him, now, and the movement brought his eyes round to her for the first time since he'd begun speaking. She was still trembling, and her eyes were bright, but with a furious anger. "Oh, you're—unspeakable!" she cried.

"For telling the truth?"

"The truth!" Hage made her almost voiceless. "I wouldn't have listened as long as I did if I'd understood what you meant. The beastly thing you meant."

"We meant the same thing, for a minute or two," he told her, bluntly. "It shocked you to realize it. Well, it shocked me, too—though you may not believe it. And I thought the only way for us to get back on the other basis—as friends—"

Frantically, she snatched the wheel away from him. "Friends? With you? After the beastly things you've done—and said?"

"It's the saying that's the crime," he commented, grimly. "What we did wouldn't have mattered to you, I guess, if we'd pretended it was nothing. Arent you any realer than that?"

"If you speak to me again," she declared, wildly, "I'll get out of the car. I'll waste in the night till I find somebody who'll come back and—"

She shrank away from him, leaving the threat to be guessed at, buried her face in her hands, and began crying like a child.

He clenched the wheel again, fighting down the impulse to take her up in his arms again. He knew what would happen if he did. She'd struggle for a minute, and then go soft again—and they'd be back where they were before. The old Adam in him was grinning at her for a fool to have taken her so seriously. Even a prudential consideration whispered that she'd be less dangerous—less troublesome, anyhow; she couldn't be dangerous—so dealt with, than as now. But he sat still, and the wave passed, leaving him cool, unmoved, as if the storm had never been.

Outside, the storm was, he finally decided, thinning. He looked cautiously round at Violet. She'd about stopped crying, too, though her face was still buried in her hands. "If you'll let me out," he said, "I'll see what can be done about getting started again."

She stepped down into the road without a word or a glance at him. When he came back, twenty minutes later, with some boards he'd found, she was at first nowhere to be seen, but presently he made her out by the faint daylight that was returning as the sky cleared, up on the bank a little distance away, looking down the road. He gave no sign of having seen her, but when he went to work jacking up the wheels and sliding the boards under them she came down and asked him, composedly enough, if he needed her help. She remained nearby, just the same, when he told her he did not, and even volunteered a remark about the weather. She suggested taking the curtains off before they started on again, and a something peremptory in her voice when she said it was all that slanted in any way toward what had happened between them. She took her place beside him with no appearance of hesitation.

They had a wild mile or two slithering over those inclined planes of clay which made what was supposed to be a road. Repeatedly they began sliding toward one of the ditches or the other, and it wanted all his skill and sometimes most of his strength to avoid disaster. She said very little, but she showed a perfectly normal concern for his success, and by the time they were safely upon gravel again he felt that she was, in balance and tone, much the same person with whom he'd left Hickory Hill. But of her intentions toward him, the sort of modus vivendi, if any, she meant to offer him, he had no inkling whatever.

He was conscious of a growing intangibility about her as she became more at ease. Indeed, it struck him, amusedly, at something she said, that she'd have said just that thing, and in just that tone, to Jeffrey, her chauffeur. But his last impression of her that day was to be of a different sort.

They had slowed down for a right-angle turn in the road when simultaneously they saw the other car, standing in a drive that led up to a big, comfortable-looking farmhouse. Joe stopped at once, and began backing to turn in.

"You needn't do that," she said, sharply. "I can get out right here." She added, when he went on without obeying her, "I've already been in the mud, so it's too late for that."

She was fumbling with the door handle, so, instead of cutting forward, he went on backing the car, across the culvert and up the drive. He made her no other answer until she demanded furiously, "Why don't you do as I say? What are you going to do?"

"I don't even know your husband's in that house. I suppose he is. But I'm not going to leave you till I can turn you over to him—as good as I got you."

Again he saw she was trembling violently. "You—cad!" she whispered. "I'm not going to tell him anything."

He said, "I'm going to let him have a good look at me, that's all."

By now he had stopped his car before the door. She sprang down and fled up the path to the doorstep, but he followed, only a pace behind. At the door she turned and spoke to him in the high, clear, cultivated, leisurely tone which connotes security and place and unlimited assurance. "I'm terribly sorry you don't think you can stop, but I know how frightfully late I've made you, already. Good-by."

But her face made of that manner a pitiable travesty. She was on the verge of the complete demoralization of panic. She couldn't endure seeing her husband and her daughter in the same room with him. Not today, at any rate. There was clear hatred of him in her eyes, but there was appeal as well, and this he couldn't resist.

He turned sharply away and was getting into his car when John Williamson opened the door. He waved one hand while he slid his transmission-lever into first speed with the other. A moment more and he was driving as fast as he could back to town—and Beatrice. He didn't care a d-n what John or any of the rest of that gang thought of him.

CHAPTER VI

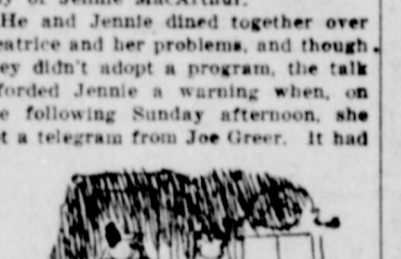

The Samaritans.

The first thing Henry Craven did after Margaret's departure left him free to enjoy life in his own way, was to begin worrying about Beatrice Greer. He caught glimpses of her in places where he felt she ought not to be, though it struck him that with her father away, home was no safer a place than anywhere else. He suggested to Violet that she extend a protecting hand to the girl, and in so doing made the troubling discovery that she had cast Joe into outer darkness and barred the very name of Greer. So, reluctantly, heavily handicapped by his sense of the ridiculous, he essayed the role of uncle to the girl, began going to see her and taking her about.

But within a fortnight she quarreled with him over his supposed attitude toward some of her other friends, foremost among them Lansing Ware. Finally he did what he should have done in the first place—made an ally of Jennie MacArthur.

He and Jennie dined together over Beatrice and her problems, and though they didn't adopt a program, the talk afforded Jennie a warning when, on the following Sunday afternoon, she got a telegram from Joe Greer. It had been delivered at her flat before noon, but as she had been out for lunch she didn't find it until her return about four o'clock. He was arriving that day, he said, over the Northwestern, at five-thirty, for a few hours only, as he was going out again that night. He wanted a talk with her and a visit with Trax. She was to telephone direct to Burns to meet him at the station and drive him straight out to her flat.

VIVACIOUS SPORTS FROCK; SPRING HATS ARE WONDERFUL

SPORTS FROCK WITH SHIRT BOSOM

THERE is something new in sports frocks this spring—it is the pretty and vivacious two-piece affair made of dependable fabrics, and in a casual style, that just suits our up-to-date women. When the wind is from the south and the sun shines, they are interpreted in several different kinds of materials, including some alluring novelties, with French flannel, alpaca, wash silks, wool crepe and the always-good pongee or linen, offering choices that cannot be anything but good.

In many of these frocks a plain material is used alone, or two colors, in the same good, are used together, as when white is used with green, brown, blue, or other color, in French flannel. But more assertive patterns are well represented, in which plaids, stripes and cross-bars are cleverly used, very often in combination with plain goods. Designers are distinguishing themselves in the group of five hats shown here is made up of what may be classed as milliners' entrancing establishments—and joyfully departs therefrom lighter of heart and of pocketbook. But if there is one excuse in the world better than all others for being a bit extravagant that excuse is—a becoming hat. This spring is rich in wonderful millinery; there are innumerable variations of the several style inspirations now established as the mode, and any representative collection of new hats is made up of shapes that adroitly flatter the different types of faces. There are hats that add dignity—or take it away—hats that add piquancy, hats that make the commonplace look distinguished, hats that lend color, hats that rescue one from tameness and hats that take off a decade or so from one's age. It is marvelous what hats and hair dressing can do to and for us mortals.

The group of five hats shown here is made up of what may be classed as selves in these frocks that put their resourcefulness to the test in combining utility with chic style and durability with daintiness. The color combinations in plaids, or in the striped and barred materials, prove an incentive to the introduction of matching accessories in ties, scarfs, pipings or buttons. The shirt-bosom vest is a new style note, allowing the introduction of white or a color in the blouse that is eloquent of this particular spring. But sometimes the shirt bosom is merely hinted at, by means of braid or of tucks as in the frock pictured here. Any of the fabrics mentioned might be used for this model which has a plain skirt and a slip-over blouse that is tied toward the neck. This simple-seeming dress is a masterpiece of good designing—furnishing a perfect equipment for joyous spring and summer days.

Two Sad Cases.

Recently a tramp taken up in a New York police court for drunkenness gave his birthplace as Boston. "Yours," said the magistrate, "is a sad case. Yet you don't seem to thoroughly realize how low you have sunk." The prisoner struck his brow with a pained gesture. "Heavens!" he exclaimed devoutly, "I have stood many indignities, but to be sentenced by a magistrate that splits his infinitives! This is the last blow!"

WASHINGTON NEWS.
 The immigration bill of 1924, carrying substantially the same provisions relating to Asiatic exclusion and other important changes in basic policy recently approved by the house, was passed Friday by the senate by a vote of 62 to 6. On the final roll call, as upon every important test vote taken since the measure was first reported, the senate registered its decision by a larger majority than ever in the house, where the vote on passage was 322 to 71.
 The board of army engineers Friday announced that it has allotted $2,000 for maintenance and improvement of the Brazos River to Matagorda Bay. The allotment was transferred from West Galveston Bay and Brazos River Canal, where it was not needed.
 Official tabulation of Texas ballots submitted for the Paddy-Mayfield recount has just been completed by Senate Statistician Turner and when the result is announced it will show a variation of 12,000 votes from the official figures given out after the 1922 senatorial election. The reported, from official figures which developed in the recount of votes preliminary to the Newberry contest, the only other in which a recount was undertaken, was 1098, with approximately the same number of ballots submitted.
 The Italian government is ready to accept in its integral form the work of the reparations experts, and the principles inspiring it, it was announced at Washington Friday by the Italian ambassador.
 The senate put itself formally on record Friday on the question of Japanese exclusion by re-adopting the Shortridge exclusion amendment to the immigration bill, 71 to 4. Reconsideration of the amount, which was approved Thursday, without a record vote, was had at the request of Senator Reed, republican, Pennsylvania, in charge of the bill, who explained that opponents wanted an opportunity to be recorded.
 The senate answered Ambassador Hanhara's protest against Japanese exclusion legislation Monday by voting 76 to 2 against recognition of the "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan on the immigration question.
 Cynthia M. Martin was nominated postmaster at San Augustine, Texas, Wednesday.
 Charges by Senator Heflin, democrat, Alabama, that postoffice department investigation of alleged land frauds in the lower Rio Grande valley of Texas was "stifled" were denied in testimony before the senate committee investigating the matter Tuesday by O. B. Williamson, postoffice inspector.

FOREIGN NEWS.
 The league of nations has discovered that in China 60,000 destitute Russian refugees are desperately in need of relief. Much has been done already by the Chinese andapan governments and by private organized charities, including American, but the great problem of permanently caring for the refugees remains to be faced.
 Hungary took another step toward financial and economic rehabilitation Saturday when parliament, after a prolonged session, passed the bills necessary to put the league of nations' reconstruction scheme into effect.
 The reparations commission Friday virtually told Germany to get down to work preparatory to a blanket acceptance of the experts' reports. Prior to this the commission decided unanimously to take note of Germany's reply adhering to the experts' reports and to approve the conclusions and adopt the methods proposed.

 Official decision was taken by the German cabinet and the premiers of the Confederate States Tuesday to accept in principle the Dawes reparations report.
 An intimation of the labor government's budget plans was given in a speech at Longborough, England, Tuesday, by Albert Victor Alexander, secretary of the board of trade, when he declared that the British people were "likely to see a reduction in the taxation on foodstuffs." The allusion is believed to be to the duty on tea and sugar.
 The Polish cabinet has adopted a plan whereby the value of the Polish currency is to be changed. The new unit, the zloty, is fixed at 800,000 Polish marks. Both marks and zlotys will be legal tender up to June 29, but after July 1 the mark will lose all value.
 To preserve the memory of 34,000 persons who perished by burning and suffocation in the former military clothing depot in Honju ward the afternoon of the September catastrophe, the city of Tokio, Japan, plans to erect a memorial hall to cost 1,000,000 yen.
 Added interest has been given to the gliding contest to be held in the Rhone Mountains in late August by the records which two German engineers recently established in a flight from Sindelfing to Heidenberg, Germany. These men, M. Schrenk and V. von Langsdorff, used a glider equipped with a motor developing only seven-fifths of one horsepower. They flew 75 miles and attained a height of 3630 feet and were in the air for two hours and two minutes.
 Japanese exclusion was written into the immigration bill Tuesday by the senate over the protest of both Secretary Hughes and the Japanese ambassador. There was neither roll call nor debate on the exclusion amendment, action on which came unexpectedly late Tuesday. Only a few more than a score of senators were present.
 The French representative at Constantinople has presented to the Turkish authorities a note protesting the closing of 36 French schools, attended by 12,000 pupils. The note states that very great consequences may result from this "violation of the Ankara agreement and the treaty of Lausanne."
 Coal miners from the Ruhr Monday carried the body of Hugo Stinnes, late German industrial leader, from his private villa in Grunewald to the crematory to the accompaniment of melodies played by their own band, while a miner's chorus alternately chanted dirges and sang Westphalian folk songs. Full military honors were accorded the dead in the service, which commemorated the twelfth anniversary of the sinking.
 Deposited Bank Head Dies.
 Kansas City, Mo.—John M. Moore, deposited president of the Fidelity National Bank and Trust Company, who died at his home Thursday without making any statement as to a discrepancy of $600,000 which had been found in his accounts, left property valued at approximately $250,000, records show. Deeds to a 19,000-acre ranch in Texas and to property in Excelsior Springs, Mo., are recorded, the rest of Mr. Moore's known property including 355 shares of Fidelity stock, being in the bank's possession.

LIVE STOCK
LIVE STOCK INDUSTRY SHOWS IMPROVEMENT
 (Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)
 That the live stock industry of the United States has benefited by the many years of effort toward improvement was brought out recently in a statement made by Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. He called attention to the fact that in this country nearly all the important breeds of live stock of all kinds are being grown and that many breeds have been developed here to a state nearer perfection than in any other country. In addition to growing the cattle, hogs, sheep, horses, goats, and poultry, American farms grow all the feed needed and a surplus for export, a condition found in few well-populated countries.
 Among other things listed as contributing to the high standing of this large industry are cow-testing associations, which now number 327; bull associations, numbering 218; means for controlling or eradicating every important disease of farm animals; freedom from dangerous plagues which exist in many foreign countries; more than 33,000 herds of cattle officially declared free of tuberculosis; and more than 12,000 stock growers who have agreed to use nothing but pure-bred stock of all kinds of animals on their farms.
 Doctor Mohler also called attention to our highly developed meat-inspection service, which is favorably recognized by all foreign countries and which has had much to do with the development of the meat industry in this country. He said that we have one-fourth of the world's cattle, and although we have only one-sixteenth of the world's population we use practically all of the dairy products produced here.
 Few of the problems of the breeders and feeders are deep seated, he believes, as the industry is well protected and on a solid economic foundation.

Oats as Fattening Feed for Swine Not in Favor
 Oats, because of the hulls, contain about five times as much fiber in a hundred pounds as corn. Hogs, with their rather limited digestive system, cannot handle fiber anywhere nearly so good as oats, and on this account fattening hogs as a rule are unable to give a return for one bushel of oats half as much per bushel as corn. With corn at 70 cents a bushel, oats are worth in the case of fattening stock only about 30 cents a bushel, although in the case of cattle they might very easily be worth 40 cents a bushel when corn is 70 cents.
 Oats have long been valued by breeders of pure bred hogs because they seem to help in giving hogs an appearance of stretch. In the case of the man who fattens hogs, however, oats are only doubtfully worth while except under the rather unusual conditions which often prevail for a time during August when corn may be very high and oats temporarily very cheap.
Docking and Castrating
 The custom of docking all lambs and castrating the males is almost universal in the range flocks, and to this practice, in a large measure, may be attributed the fact that lambs produced on our western ranges (outside native or farm-raised lambs at the market) on the average of from $1 to $1.50 per 100 pounds. These operations have been found profitable, and that is the big reason that they have become so commonly practiced on the western range. They are likewise applicable to the farm flock and just as necessary for the production of the best lambs and consequently the most profit.

Live Stock Facts
 Greatest losses of hogs in shipment occur in May and June.
 Sheep pasture becomes badly contaminated unless rotation is practiced.
 Provide shelter for all live stock. Animals that are properly housed require less feed.
 The hog will eat, and grow and fatten on more kinds of feed than will any other useful animal.
 Winter rye or blue grass are the only grasses which the hogs like, and lucky is the farmer who has such grazing for them.
 Laying your plans carefully now may help you have hogs to market in summer or early fall, a time when the hog market is least crowded.
 Sheep are naturally of a dainty disposition. Feed that has become slightly soiled is not eaten by them unless there is nothing else to be had.
 No ill effects should result from in-breeding if the stock is sturdy. Most of the good breeders of the country use this method to develop new strains.

"IF ANYONE WANTS TO KNOW ABOUT TANLAC LET THEM SEE ME"
 Says Joseph Baker of Memphis in Praising World's Greatest Tonic—Tells of Recovery.
 "If anybody wants to find out about Tanlac, just let them see me," is the hearty suggestion of Joseph H. Baker, 550 North Third St., Memphis, Tenn.
 Mr. Baker went overseas with the famous Thirtieth Division during the World War and participated in the St. Mihiel, Valley of the Woeves and Argonne drives, having been cited for bravery in action in the Argonne. He is now a popular member of the Memphis Fire Department.
 "When I came back from over there," said he, "I was in a mighty bad fix. I had been gassed and after getting home I got down with pneumonia. This left me 'all in,' without appetite, down in weight, liver out of fix, and suffering from constipation, biliousness and headaches without end.
 "Tanlac put me to eating as never before, shot my weight up fifteen pounds and made a strong, well man of me—and I feel the same to this day. I can't say enough for Tanlac."
 Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.
 Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills.

Made Shoes by Hand
 Up to the middle of the Nineteenth century the manufacture of shoes in the United States was done entirely by hand.
WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT
 Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.
 If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.
 Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness are oftentimes symptoms of kidney trouble.
 Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.
 Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store.
 However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.
Suited to His Need
 Mr. Bald Knob—Gimnase a shampoo and no talk about it.
 The Barber—How about a little scalp fertilizer? I got some I put on myself. It'll grow hair on an egg.

Whales Face Extinction
 So many whales are now being killed off the coasts of South Africa that appeals have been made to the Union government to restrict their taking to the larger size males. A total of 700 whales in a year were killed by companies operating out of South African ports and in the nearby waters. Whales are becoming scarcer and smaller as a result of unrestricted slaughter and it is now proposed to prohibit the killing of females and of all whales below a certain size, dependent on the species.
Kith and Kin
 "What were you and Mr. Smith talking about in the parlor?" demanded Miss Blushes' mother.
 "Oh, we were discussing our kith and kin," replied the young lady.
 "Yeth, you wath," interposed her little sister. "Mr. Smith asked you for a kith, and you said 'you kin'."

Mrs. McDole's Experience
 Ludington, Michigan.—"I suffered every month and was very irregular, had headaches all the time, was thin and pale, with no appetite. I had taken all kinds of medicines, and every doctor told me I would have to face an operation before I would be well again. I was doing factory work, and I had to stay at home so much that I was getting discouraged. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did so with good results. I am now feeling fine, and after the fourth I feel much better, and after the tenth I never felt better in my life, as it resulted in a complete recovery. I certainly recommend it to all I hear complaining and you can use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. MARY SULLIVAN, 923 E. 46th Street, Los Angeles, California.
Greatly Relieved
 Jersey City, N. J.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for cramps and fainting spells. I do office work, and have been in this condition four or five years, having to stay at home from work a day or two at a time, quite frequently. I have taken about ten bottles of it, and have been greatly relieved. I recommend it myself and you may print these facts with my full address."—LOUISE SCHOENFELDER, 112 Woodlawn Ave., Jersey City, N. J.
 No matter what your work is, a great deal depends upon your health. It is discouraging to be obliged to stay at home frequently on account of sickness.
 Your trouble may be caused by some female weakness, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought relief to many women just as these letters state. For sale by druggists everywhere.

"Bottle Books"
 About a century ago "bottle books" were made in the south of France. They were used to carry liquid refreshments and were popular with judges, lawyers and the learned folk generally. The legal profession was given to carrying its authorities back and forth under the arm. Hence these bottle books, which were made of lustrous, decorated dark blue faience, were in appearance not unlike toiled leather. The contents were wholly liquid or partly literary, with a liquid compartment. When the owner felt the need of a nip he opened his little book.—Detroit News.

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE consists of an Ointment which quickly relieves by local application, and the Internal Medicine, a Tonic, which assists in improving the General Health. Sold by druggists for over 40 Years. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Church News of Sanderson

Tomorrow is Rev. Adam's regular appointment for Sanderson. Services at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m. All very welcome.

The "Story of Easter" as given and so beautifully rendered in the Cantata last Sunday by Rev. M. F. Bell and his corps of singers from Marathon, was a great treat to all who heard it. The Presbyterian Church was packed which tended to show the appreciation of our people for Rev. Rev. Bell's work.

The Ladies of the W. M. S. met with Mrs. C. A. White Tuesday evening, with 5 present social day. The hostess served sandwiches and iced tea. A good time reported.

Rev. M. F. Bell will begin a meeting on Friday evening, May 9th and will continue until Sunday, May 15th and will close at the morning service of that date.

The W. M. U. met at the home of Mrs. Druse last Monday for quilting. Only 5 were present so they met each evening of this week to complete the work. They will meet at the home of Mrs. T. L. Williams, Monday, May 5th at 4 p. m. for social and business meeting. Everyone welcome.

Good attendance at Presbyterian S. S. last Sunday. The little folks sang their songs well, and the junior classes received their usual Easter gifts from the Supt., Mrs. Jack McKee.

The junior classes of both Sunday schools had their usual egg hunt, each teacher taking their own class.

Mrs. Dave Pollard had her S. S. class to an Easter morning breakfast. All had a lovely time is the report.

Usual attendance at the Methodist S. S. last Sunday, after which they repaired to the Presbyterian church to the Cantata.

The Ladies Auxiliary of Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. F. B. Carter at the Kerr Hotel next Monday for a social and business meeting. Hostesses for the evening Mrs. F. B. Carter and Mrs. N. E. Charlton. All please bring in your reports of, special lad service for the past month. All very welcome. —Regular Correspondent

Mrs. Charlie Rogers and baby came in from Valentine the first of the week where they have been visiting relatives.

Mrs. F. B. Carter motored to Del Rio last Saturday, returning the first of the week.

BE LOYAL AND ATTEND YOUR CHAUTAUQUA

Chautauqua is a service which is bought and paid for in exactly the same manner as all other legitimate commodities in your community. A group of the most loyal citizens have purchased this service, expecting each individual to buy the season tickets necessary for his immediate need. A season ticket represents fully fifty per cent saving over the single admission prices and helps to show your appreciation for those who are making the community a better place to live in. Buy your season ticket TODAY from any member of the Parent-Teachers' Association.

SANDERSON CHAUTAUQUA MAY 1 TO 4

Don't expect to cheer up the world or the other fellow if you go about with a long face or a frown; smile, it costs little and pays well.

The Lowest Priced
Two-Passenger Car

The Ford Runabout is the most economical car for personal transportation known.

Priced lower than any other motor car, its maintenance and running expenses are in keeping with its present low cost.

To salesmen and others who average a high daily mileage in business, the Runabout has a special appeal both for its operating economy and its convenience in making city and suburban calls.
