WOLF POISONING CAMPAIGN NOW ON

For the past week, O. L. Coleman, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, has been in the city preparing poisoned baits, which are to be used for poisoning wolves, coyotes and other predatory animals.

Fat pieces of pork sliced with a poisonous substance put between the slices is the bait being prepared. The county is paying the entire cost incurred in preparing this bait. There will be no charge to the stockmen using them. Signs will be furnished the stockmen securing the poisoned bait, which should be nailed to gates and put in other public places. Owners of valuable dogs will do well to keep them up during this campaign.

The poisoned baits are now ready and may be had by coming to the courthouse for them. As there is likely to be a good demand for these baits it is suggested that you come after those needed to poison your range as soon as possible.

TWO MEN HELD FOR ROBBING PARISH

About 7:30 Thursday night the Parish House was entered and several articles were stolen. Upon his return, Father Jiamona, discovered the theft and notified the officers. Upon searching the men the stolen goods, consisting of four watches, four watch chains, a pocket book, sweaters, socks, shoes and about ten or twelve dollars in change was found on them. They admitted the robbery and an examining trial was held Friday afternoon before Justice of Peace Jordan and were bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

The men gave their names as Earl Faulkner and B. R. Hughes, and claimed to have been reared at Lordsburg, New Mexico.

All Human Relations Will Improve With Progress in Social Sciences

By WALTER DILL SCOTT, President Northwestern University.

RESEARCH in the natural sciences has been effective in aiding the race to adjust itself to its physical environments. No such discovery of truth in the social sciences has been made in aiding the race to adjust itself to its human environments. Men are not now working together happily and effectively. There is said to be a lack of control in the home, restlessness in the school, apathy in the church, shirking in the shops, dishonesty in the counting houses, grafting in politics, crime in the city, and Bolshevism threatening all our institutions.

All our human relations will be improved as rapidly as we make progress in the social sciences, and I am convinced that our universities will make as great a contribution in the social sciences during the Twentieth century as they did by the discovery of truth in the natural sciences during the Nineteenth century. We may expect the most helpful contributions to the betterment of human relations from universities possessing favorable characteristics:

First, the university must be untrammelled by traditions or superstitions, by politics or cults; but must be animated by a love for truth, and the members of the teaching and research staff must be zealous in their pursuits of truth in their respective fields, and should be sympathetic with research and investigation in fields even quite remote from their own.

Second, the university must sustain a graduate school and a group of professional schools, all in intimate contact with city life.

Third, the university must be inspired with the ideals of religion. The religious interpretation of the universe offers the only possible hope for improvement. Faith in the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God provides the only basis for stable human relations.

You Can Easily Have a Trained-Pig Act All Your Own—and Here's How

By C. R. COOPER, in "Lions 'n' Tigers 'n' Everything."

Likewise the pig which you've seen squealing in the wake of the clown in the circus. The secret? Simply that his hoglets has been taken from his mother at birth and raised on a bottle. His feeding has been timed so that it comes during circus hours. The pig follows the clown because he knows he's going to get a square meal.

A pig isn't supposed to have much intelligence. Perhaps he hasn't—but you can have a trained-pig act all your own very easily.

Simply build a pen leading to a set of stairs which lead in turn to a chute, the chute traveling down into another closely netted enclosure. In this enclosure put a bucket of favorite pig food. Then turn the pigs loose and let them make their own deductions.

First of all, the pigs will try to reach the food by going through the netting. That's impossible. So at last they turn to the runway, go up the steps, hesitate a long while, then finally slide down the chute and get what they're after. Then—here's the strange part of it: after a week or so, remove the food. The pigs will keep on shooting the chutes just the same. By some strange form of animal reasoning, the pleasure of food has become associated with that exercise of sliding down that incline.

Punishment of Criminal Always Wrong, but Society Must Protect Itself

By CLARENCE DARROW, in New York World.

Punishment is always wrong. It brutalizes those who inflict it and those who receive it. There is only one motive for it and that is revenge, in which there can be no justice for it is based on hatred, which is degrading. That punishment is not much of a deterrent is clear from the fact that our prisons are full of repeaters and that spectacular crimes are followed by imitations. And the idea of reformation is equally absurd. Man works according to his structure. He never reforms because he cannot. His intrinsic character is fixed.

All of which doesn't change the fact that society must defend itself against the criminal—sometimes against the saint—whether it be worthy of defense or not. But all we need to do is to isolate the offender. In fact that's all we can do.

If scientists were no wiser than legislators, we would still be punishing the insane, the idiots, even the sick. We have abandoned such magical treatments. And some day we shall treat the criminal with as much understanding.

In All Future Reclamation Projects, the States Should Contribute

By SECRETARY WORK, U. S. Department of Interior.

The obligations of settlers on existing reclamation projects should be adjusted and a basis provided for future payments. This will require a reappraisal of areas to determine their ability to produce profitable crops under irrigation.

On all projects undertaken hereafter the state in which the development is located should participate in the selection of settlers and the development of farms. The states should not be required to contribute to construction costs, but should be required to contribute to the fund provided for advances to settlers for farm development as they now contribute to the construction of roads and to agricultural education.

A fund should be provided from which money can be advanced to help worthy, needy settlers improve and equip their farms. Such advances should bear interest, and, for permanent improvements, should extend over long periods. Four per cent is suggested as the interest rate.

A College of Athletes Who Are Not Primarily Students Is a Damage

By DEAN H. E. HAWKES, Columbia University.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether even the most desirable and successful athletic policy brings to a college the kind of students that the college most desires. Of course, successful athletics attract athletes, but a college of athletes who are not primarily students is a damage instead of a blessing.

In fact, I am inclined to think that among the elements that go to make the solid reputation of a college, athletic supremacy comes far down on the list in the minds of those, both young and old, whose judgment counts. This means that the cultivation of athletics in the college should be in the interest of the part that it plays in the education of both players and spectators.

Unless athletics can take its place in the picture, in its proper perspective, and in co-operative relations with the rest of the college, trouble is certain to arise.

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Permanent roads are a good investment—not an expense

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of concrete roads and streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highway now.

Original "Pale" Irish

The "Pale" was a district in Ireland within which English sovereignty and law were acknowledged after the invasion of the island by Henry II in 1172. This territory varied in extent at different times; but in a general way comprised the counties of Dublin, Meath, Carlow, Kilkenny and Louth. The word "pale" is derived from the Latin palus (stake), and is often used figuratively, as in the expressions, "To walk the studios cloister's pale"; "Without the pale of civilization."—Kansas City Star.

China, a land of many obsolete industrial activities, has one industry that is modern in almost every sense. It is cotton which is rapidly developing into a major industry. It employs much cheap labor, including that of children, of course, but its machinery and methods are up to date. Its greatest weakness is in the scientific management of the factories, but this is being overcome by the bringing in of foreign experts.

HUGH'S PHOTOGRAPH

SYNOPSIS—Living in the small English village of Dabury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is seen to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Rochdale, rich and well-connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town. They set out. Barbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanic. Word in a few days comes to Dabury that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost. Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the airplane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished. The two castaways build a shelter. In Croft's absence Barbara is attacked by a cannibal. Croft rescues her. Croft discovers a party of blacks, apparently reconnoitering. Croft fixes up an electrical guard which scares off an attacking party. Secure from immediate danger, Croft and Barbara settle down to make the best of things. Croft, who has traveled much among savages, makes friends with the blacks. Croft and Barbara fall in love. The man betrays his passion but restrains it. The girl desperately tries to remain loyal to Hugh. The man demands "marriage" and a husband's rights. The girl sets duty before inclination.

PART TWO—Continued.

"It's a d-d lonely position for you!" he exclaimed. Then he rose, with such precipitancy that she nearly fell. He began walking up and down outside the hut.

Instead of hurrying away, she hesitated, watching him in bewilderment—conscious of a strange longing to remain near him, to saunter together on the shore, as was sometimes their habit at night.

But when, at last, he paused near her, he made no such suggestion.

"Go to bed," he said rather curtly; "it's late. And, Barbara, don't lie awake all night, or cut off the rest of your hair! It's all—useless."

With that he turned away, and went off alone to the beach, leaving her staring after him.

Strangely enough, she did not lie awake this time. Those few passionate moments had embodied hours of emotional strain. The force which had seemed to be sweeping her from all moorings had ceased her to struggle violently, both mentally and physically, to retain her own individuality, to prevent it from being submerged in his. His lips on hers would have been sheer physical pain, unbearable, overpowering. . . . Afterward, a numbness fell upon her mind. She felt too desperately tired to attempt coherent thought. This was upon which, nowadays, they lived, must take its course! Since the moment when she had seen the shark, a lifetime of tumultuous emotions had whirled her mind and heart round like a top. Confused, yet subtly, gloriously elated, she slept till dawn.

A fusillade of sticks and stones roused her, but she did not see Alan. And a sudden overwhelming shyness restrained her from calling to him.

But there was no trace of last night's passion about this man of a hundred moods when they met; and her self-confidence revived. While she was packing the old tin box with food, he arrived, fresh and damp from the river. He gaily deposited a large bundle at her feet, and wished her a merry Christmas.

With surprise, she uncovered a cunningly contrived hammock made from tree fiber, airplane canvas, and aerial! As this was exactly what she had often wanted upon hot afternoons, her pleasure was unbounded.

"I have nothing for you, Alan!" she regretted, with compunction.

"Oh? Well—we'll see about that!" he replied emphatically, then hurried their departure.

They walked quickly, saving little, over the rough ground which, covered with low scrub, sloped upward on the east of their bay.

They paused to rest and eat, in the eastern wood, meaning to remain there during the midday heat. The shady branches stretched out over the beach were welcome to eyes jizzled by the morning's sun. The intoxication of the morning's beauties, their own radiant health and spirits, the strains of the wild sweet orchestra rising all around, lent enchantment to that little picnic.

Barbara had, as it were, caught at reeds during the last few weeks, but they had broken in her grasp. Onward she was madly whirling. She knew it; could not save herself; could not quench that light in his eyes, and her own foolish weakness in his proximity. Abruptly, he went to her and took her by the shoulders, saying nothing, but gazing into her face as if searching for something he wished to learn there.

Suddenly, apprehension in her eyes deepened to horror; a cry burst from her lips; she became rigid in his hands.

With such precipitate haste did the whole incident occur that she could never afterward clearly remember how it happened that, in a flash, the face of the whole world changed. . . . She was conscious of a dark bulk, a savage face she knew well, looming suddenly up amid the trees—of a spear arm uplifted, preparatory to hurling the weapon into the back of an unsuspecting enemy. . . .

Her man was in danger! That was her only coherent thought. Instantly she had whipped out the revolver, and, with deadly calm, raised it.

A sharp report and a puff of smoke; a wild howl of pain and fear; then a stream of blood oozing from the black shoulder in front of her, as the smoke cleared away. Those were the outward impressions of which her mind was dimly aware; but they seemed unreal, of an account. She heard the spear fly wide into the tree at her side; then Babooma's running footsteps and retreating cries. . . . Croft, astounded, had barely caught a glimpse of the dark face which he had often seen covertly watching him, before it was momentarily blotted out in smoke. He started forward in hot pursuit; then, arrested by a choking cry, halted abruptly, and looked at the girl. . . .

She stood motionless; her eyes, luminous as stars, fixed upon him, her mouth a little open, the still smoking weapon lying at her feet. It had been no mild idea of causing Babooma fear which had impelled her action, but a furious, savage desire to kill! She had hurled herself to the rescue, regardless of all else.

Afterward, all power or desire to move seemed to leave her. A veil fell from before her eyes; and a brilliance streamed in, illuminating, searing—full of such ecstasy that she stood as though transfixed, paralyzed with the wonder of it all, gazing upon him whom this brilliance had newly revealed. . . .

The breath caught in the man's throat; the blood raced madly through his veins; his eyes blazed, answering the glory of her own.

Like the Wagnerian lovers after drinking of the love potion, they stood a few feet apart, under the sun-flecked foliage of the trees, awed for a moment by the miracle. She raised her hand at last, as if inviting. . . . The spell broke.

Instantly his arms were around her. With an inarticulate cry, she was swept off her feet, clasped to his throbbing heart, his burning lips pressed hers, her hands clinging round his neck. All her individuality merged irrevocably into his, as a stream, falling through arches of rock, merges into the restless waves of the ocean. . . .

The sun was sinking, a fiery ball in an almost violet sky, its last rays shimmering golden-red across the water, when at last the two returned to the hut on what wonderful Christmas day. A new world greeted their eyes at every turn. Never had roof or sea or sky appeared so splendid. The superb, absolute egotism of newly found lovers enveloped them both; no thought save of each other disturbed the shining hours. Like one still walking in a dream world, Barbara entered the central hut, gay with its decorations. The line of golden light entering with her pierced the dusk within; and, falling upon the opposite wall, drew her eyes unconsciously that way. . . . She stopped.

Hugh's face smiled down at her, with all its old confidence!

Violently the dream-world crashed around her as she met the faithful, dog-like look she knew so well. Had he been there in flesh and blood, she could hardly have been more disconcerted. She felt as a traitor might, when meeting the unsuspecting eyes of the sovereign he has betrayed. For, however faithful she might remain in word and deed to her bond, her heart would ever be traitorous. His ring was still on her finger; it seemed to burn there, an outward sign of the world of fact with its prosaic realities, its duties, its sacrifices. . . . A cold foreboding swept over her. It was as if in the midst of glorious sunshine, a thunderclap had sent its warning of storms not far away. . . . She sat down, propping her face upon her hands, in self-absentment—fearful, yet, behind all, exultant. . . .

Thus Alan—after going to fetch water and remaining to bathe—found her, upon his return. He set down the basins, then bent over her.

"What is the matter?"

She half drew away from his touch,

Bending closer, he removed the hands from her head, and raised it back against his breast.

"What's troubling my dearest, on this day of days?"

She looked up into the ardent gray depths so close above her; then at the photograph upon the wall. His look followed hers, and quick comprehension dawned.

"Ah!" he ejaculated. "Well?"

"Don't you see?" she asked. "All this is—impossible!"

His eyes hardened a little; and he loosed her.

"You and I have gone too far, now, to draw back because of scruples, Barbara!"

"They are not scruples! It is a matter of honor." She half raised her left hand, showing the little band of diamonds.

With one swift movement he had seized the hand and ripped off the ring.

"Honor be d-d, then!"

She sprang up, alarmed at his violence. He towered over her, his face blazing.

"Do shed the remnants of the parson's daughter, my dear girl! Face things squarely! You drifted into this engagement when a mere child, not realizing all it meant. As you developed, it ceased to fill your life. His nature did not satisfy yours. I saw that at once. But until I knew your heart was free, I could do nothing—save keep away!" He laughed bitterly.

"I have wanted you and craved for your love, day after day, night after night, all these desolate months here together like—like two leopards in the Garden of Eden! Do you think now, when I have got it, I am going to lose it again? Would he or any sane man wish it—or expect it—after all this? Don't you realize what—the world would—think—now?"

She looked puzzled over this sentence, not having been acquainted with a malicious-minded world beyond her old horizon. But she knew the truth of every other word he uttered. Her awakened heart understood now the affectionate comradeship alone aroused by Hugh. Her whole nature yearned toward this man who had mastered it; her heart fluttered—wavered. The conscience warring against it made another dying attempt.

"I—I can't shatter a man's lifelong faith. It would be murderous—"

"Do you love me?" he interrupted, taking her firmly by the shoulders.

"Ah! you—know it," she breathed.

"Yet you would put—this—between us, with no hope of rescue!"

Loosing her abruptly, he turned and looked long at the pictured face. Then, with a stifled exclamation, he pulled it from the bamboo. Before she realized his motive, he had torn the photograph into shreds, and scattered them upon the ground.

"Alan!" she gasped, almost frightened by his vehemence. He wheeled, facing her with burning eyes.

"I'm not a lap-dog! If we get rescued, we shall, of course, go straight to Hugh and tell him the truth. But—if not—"

He suddenly threw his arms around her, straining her to him.

"Have you realized that probability—now, Barbara? We may be here forever—just you and I—where the mazes of civilization give way to Truth—where no laws exist save those of nature—no conventions!" He swept her off her feet, and his kisses burned upon her lips, her neck, her short hair. . . . Once more her life seemed to sink from her own keeping into his.

He set her down at last, still clasping her to him.

"Doesn't—that—decide it all?" he murmured steadily. "Don't you understand that we have bigger issues to face—here—than useless scruples?"

She turned in his arms, looking into his eyes through the gathering darkness. The distant thundering surf was the only sound; and it seemed to suggest approaching storms more terrible than any she had faced before. Freeing herself a little, she pressed him from her.

"You have won your way—as usual, Alan. But—ah! Be merciful!" As she had appealed before, so the cry came again from her unprotected heart.

That pitiful entreaty and her surrender reached where resistance might have failed. The passion in his face faded a little; and, seeing this, she pressed her advantage.

She Stopped. Hugh's Face Smiled Down at Her.

"Isn't the present joy—sufficient? You are mine and I am yours. Don't let us spoil the glory of it all!"

For a long moment there was silence in the darkening hut. . . .

Then this man, who had ever been wont to sweep aside all obstacles to his will, bent his head slowly, and kissed in turn the small hands clasped upon his breast.

"We must keep our faith in each other—whatever the future brings," he whispered. And tenderly, almost reverently, he kissed her lips.

PART THREE

Deep Chords

I

A ring of stakes, lolling drunkenly to one side, encircled the hut, at a distance of about twenty yards. With a small rock for hammer, Alan was pounding them into the ground, during the hour before sunset. He had conceived the idea of building a palisade.

Occupation! It was what they craved. Though neither confessed the fact to the other, both tacitly acknowledged the need. They seized on any excuse that would supply food for their thoughts, toll for their limbs, fatigue for body and mind. For, deep in the heart of each, below all the ecstasy of their joy together, lurked grim fear—not fear of each other, but fear of themselves; above all, fear of nature, of her smiling face and irrevocable laws. Resolutely, each buried the skeleton out of sight, covering it with a hundred pretty-colored reeds. But—sometimes, unexpectedly, it stretched out its skinny arms, and "I'll bring the river down here some day," the inventor of modern aircraft observed, thumping in a stake with his stone-age hammer. Why are you smiling in that vacant manner?"

"Alan," she murmured, "you have been a revelation. I thought you a bully, only intent upon getting your own way, regardless of everybody."

"Well?" He laughed gently.

"Haven't I got it?"

"Ah, but not until it proved to be my way too."

"Merely because I realized it would be worthless otherwise. I learned that first of all the many things you taught me."

"I?"

"Yes, you." He raised her chin possessively. "Don't you think you have been a revelation, too? And hasn't the 'spirit' of the island you spoke about been a revelation to us both? It seems to me."

"The only thing to save the world from being choked by materialism is to wreck it on a desert island! Make everybody begin life afresh, back in prehistoric days."

Barbara caught at this idea. "But," she said, following the train of thought it engendered, "if all discontented people had the chance to come, wouldn't every tree be crowded?"

"Not at all. Only a handful would arrive. The majority are too peacefully asleep to realize they are being choked. Commercialism is the god they worship. Although, when there is nothing better to do, they go to church—in their best clothes."

"You are very bitter!" she exclaimed in surprise.

To Barbara, this man had ever been full of surprises; but she had spoken the truth when she had called him a revelation. For, during the two months since Christmas, he had been so at every turn. Not until love opened her own eyes; until she knew the meaning of passion herself, and understood the tempestuous force of his, did she realize the strain under which he had been living. Since Christmas night the nature she had thought arrogant had revealed a thousand wonderful mysteries. As a tree, cold and hidden in the snows and frosts of winter, responds to the glory of spring, so he had opened in the glory of their love.

She drew away from him, and clasped her arms round her raised knees. Mountains, dark and threatening to those whose way lies across them, are little heeded when shrouded in mist, below which the sun shines. But now and then a jagged peak thrusts through; and, with the journey's progress, more appear behind. . . . Generally, these frequent peaks were instinctively shunned; but to-day Alan went on recklessly.

"After all, marriage was made for man, like all other conventions. We are not their slaves. What do forms and ceremonies matter—here? They are often tough. A pauper marries an heiress, and vows to endow her with all his worldly goods! If he did, he would have to take the clothes off his back and go stark naked. You and I would vow to forsake all others, when there is nobody here to forsake. You would hardly want to elope with Babooma? If you did, I should soon catch you. That's another point: we couldn't separate if we wanted to! So what would be the good of a wedding? Of vows we couldn't possibly break?"

"Bigger issues to face than useless scruples." It is the old, old conflict. Has it the usual end?

Get Rid of Dandruff By Using Hair Shampoos

LATE FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Hot Beds and Cold Frames.

The hot beds and cold frames are easily constructed and prove of great advantage on the farm. Some vegetables, such as tomatoes bear better and more fruit when transplanted after being started in the hot beds or cold frames.

The hot bed and cold frame should be located convenient to water and built on a well drained soil; also run east and west. Some protection such as a barn, fence or hedge should be on the north side to serve as a wind break. Where there are several hot beds they should be placed parallel which makes them easier to handle and helps to protect them from the wind. One important factor is to make sure no infected soil containing any disease germs whatever is used in the hot beds or cold frames. This is a place where a stitch in time saves nine.

The pit for the hot bed should be six feet wide and the length depends upon the amount of plants to be started, and whether or not glass sashes are to be used. The width may be more or less than six feet if preferred. This width is suggested because the standard sash which is used to cover the top of these beds is six feet long and three feet wide, and a bed six feet wide is very convenient to work. It is better for the length of the bed to be such that it can be divided by three when the sash is to be used. The depth should be from 6 to 24 inches, depending on location. In the northern part of Texas the depth should be 20 to 24 inches and in the southern part about 6 to 12 inches. If the depth of the pit is 24 inches, 18 to 20 inches of manure should be put in; that is, about three-fourths of the pit should be filled with fresh horse or mule manure. The manure ought not to contain more than 50 per cent of straw or bedding, and should not be put in all at once when the depth is great. A layer of about 4 to 6 inches should be put in, then packed with a sod tamper or the feet and sprinkled before the next layer is placed on. The second and third layers are put on in the same manner as the first layer. After the last layers are packed and damped, place on a layer of 4 or 5 inches of good garden soil, free from disease, when it is possible to obtain it. The top layer of soil can be placed in after the manure has heated, but it is best to put it on before the manure heats, because some of the weeds seeds are killed by the heat. Cover up the bed with sash or canvas and leave until the temperature rises and then drops back to 80 degrees Fahrenheit, which will require three to four days after the first heating starts. Do not plant any seeds until the manure has heated as it might take more time than that given above.

The frame for the hot beds may be made of cement, brick or boards. However, only the boards may be considered in this article. The frame should be the size of the pit, 6 feet wide and length desired. The inner posts can be made of 2x4 driven into the ground, deep enough to make the frame firm. The north side should be 8 to 12 inches higher than the south side. This will give a slant to the top for drainage; also the high side on the north will protect the bed from the wind and the bed will receive sunlight. The south side should be 1 to 6 inches higher than the ground. The boards on the side and ends should extend below the surface of the soil and the soil banked up around all the sides and ends, more especially on the north side. For the preservation of the lumber the posts should be dipped in some tar preparation and the boards for the sides and ends painted. The top can be made of canvas painted with a preparation made of three pints of linseed oil, one ounce sugar of lead (acetate of lead), and four ounces of white resin, which will help to keep out the water and air. This canvas can be tacked on the north side about two inches below the top and a round stick tacked on the south side which can be used in rolling it up. Some means should be provided to tie down the ends and south sides on windy days and nights. The glass sash is the best when it can be obtained. The glass lens in more light and the bed is kept warmer. Fresh air can be let in easier than with the canvas. The first coat of glass is large, although the average cost is not so much, since these sashes can be kept from year to year, if properly handled.

When the plants come up and start to grow, the bed should be given fresh air on the warm days.

Farm and Home Hints.

Carrot and orange marmalade is loaded to the gunwales with vitamins and hardly stays in glasses long enough to pay to cover with paraffin.

Ink may be removed from upholstery by covering the spot with a paste made of baking soda and water. When thoroughly dry, it should be brushed off. This may be repeated if necessary.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MRS. DUCK'S DELIGHT

"Quack, quack, quack-quack," said Mrs. Duck. "I never knew how lucky I was until yesterday."

"I always thought I was a busy duck. But I find I'm not nearly so busy as little Sadie is."

"One of Sadie's friends came around to see her yesterday and she said: 'Come on, Sadie, come on out and play.'"

"But Sadie called back and said: 'I can't come for an hour, any way. I've the beds to make and I promised to help wash the dishes.'"

"Well, I thought to myself, 'I'm a lucky duck. I don't have to make beds and I don't have to wash dishes.'"

"Of course I would have a nice place to wash them in, here in the brook, and I could use pleasant weeds as dish rags, but still I'm glad I don't bother with all such things."

"I agree with you, quack, quack, quack," said Miss Duck. "Ab, yes," said Mrs. Duck. "It is so much simpler to have no dishes at all, but just eat as one goes along."

"Now, when a cow is taken to some other place and has to go in a wagon and then on a train in a stupid small place, after having been in the lovely meadow, I say to myself: 'Poor cow. You've known better days.'"

"I've seen the trains go by the station at the far end of my brook. 'And I've thought to myself how lucky I was, not to be a cow. Then it's much nicer to live in a brook than anywhere else—even than in a palace.'"

"Of course, Bessie, the farmer's old horse is very lucky. You know Bessie is quite old and doesn't have to work any more."

"Bessie is allowed to wander anywhere she likes. 'She is a wonderful horse, for she goes down the paths and the walks, but never steps on the lawn or the grass anywhere except in the meadow. The farmer adores her and all the members of the farmer's family adore her.'"

"But, just the same, I think I'm a very lucky duck. It gives me delight to think how lucky I am."

"Now I must go down to see Miss White Duck at the end of the pond. 'I said I'd have a drink of brook water and a bite of bug with her this afternoon.'"

"Were you invited?" "Yes, yes, indeed," said Miss Duck. "I'd almost forgotten. I was so interested in what you were saying."

"Ah, you flatter me, but it is most delightful, too. Well, I suppose we must be off."

So the two ducks started for the end of the pond and there Miss White Duck was waiting for them.

"Quack, quack, good afternoon, Duck ladies," she said. "Good-afternoon, quack, quack," said Mrs. Duck. "Good-afternoon, quack, quack," said Miss Duck. "Horrid weather we've been having lately, quack, quack, is it not so?" said Miss White Duck. "Terrible," said Mrs. Duck. "Quack, quack, terrible."

New Fad in Diamonds

The sparkling diamond will no longer be fashionable, if Paris and London jewelers have anything to say about it. They are cutting the stones to give them a dull and somber look. This is done in "slat" effect. Diamonds so cut are about seven times dearer than the old "sparklers" because of so much waste. Onyx, sapphire, ruby and emerald cuttings in square or oblong slats are now quite fashionable in Europe. It is the "facets" small triangular facets which enable a diamond to catch and reflect light from so many angles, that give it great brilliancy.—Pathefrim Magazine.

Stream Makes Trouble

An underground river exists in the city of London, and architects and engineers of new buildings under construction near the Bank of England are caused much trouble by this hidden stream, which, though covered up and forgotten in the sixteenth century, still flows. The deep basements of new buildings near it have to be watertight tanks. The course of the Walbrook is right under the Bank of England and may give trouble when the new building is erected. The Walbrook was a tidal river—being apparently 30 to 40 feet wide at high tide—and it is still tidal. The river is about 50 feet beneath the level of the ground at the bank. When the new bank is constructed it may be advisable to run the stream through pipes.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calabate, the scientific Calabate tablet, that is purified from deep grooves, and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, benzoate recommended by physicians.

One or two Calabate at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calabate are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the one package, thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.

COLLEGE FAVORITES CHOSEN IN FINAL ELECTION WEDNESDAY

One Freshman, Two Sophomores and Four Seniors Are Selected.

The result of the final election to determine the College favorites for this year as announced by the Prickly Pear Wednesday evening is as follows:

College Beauty: Irene Brown.
Cutest Girl: Vera McCurley.
Most Popular Girl: Maxine Allen.

Best All-Around Girl: Myrtle Harrell.
Best All-Around Man: Walter Adams.

College Humorist: Alberts Walls.
Most Popular Man: Red Williams.

One freshman, two sophomores and four seniors constitute this year's list of college favorites. Miss Irene Brown, from Lorraine, Texas, is the only freshman to be selected, yet she stands at the head as queen of beauty.

Miss Vera McCurley, who comes from Cordell, Okla., is the choice for cutest girl. Both she and Miss Maxine Allen, who boasts of her citizenship in Stephens, Ark., are sophomores. The remainder, Myrtle Harrell, from Sanderson, Texas; Walter Adams from Chickasha, Okla.; Alberts Walls, from Clyde, Texas, and Red Williams, from Lorenzo, Texas, are all seniors and will receive their B. A. degrees this year.

The closest race developed in the College Beauty contest where both Pauline McCanties and Princey Harvey were close behind the winner in number of votes. The Best All-Around Girl's race was also warmly contested by all three entrants. In all the other races the winner had a wide margin.

These favorites will each have a page in the Prickly Pear.—The Optimist, Abilene Christian College.

The many friends here of Miss Myrtle Harrell agree with the decision of the contest.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE
When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The correct word is indicated by a number, which refers to the list below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column "Horizontal" denotes a word which will fill the white spaces up to the black square to the right, and a number under "Vertical" denotes a word which will fill the white squares to the next black square below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.
