D. WALTER GREGORY DIES

D. Walter Gregory, 61, died at his home, 428 10th street Tuesday morning. He was a native of Denver, Colo., but lived in San Antonio for 50 years. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Emma Gregory; a daughter, Mrs. Ed Downie of Sanderson, and two grandsons. He was a member of Anchor Lodge No. 424, Scottish Rite Bock, and Alzaraf Shrine, Lotus Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and Brotherhood Railroad Conductor. He was a conductor of the Southern Pacific Railroad for 40 years. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, with Rev. P. B. Hill of First Presbyterian church officiating and Anchor Lodge in charge at the cemetery.—San Antonio Express.

The many friends of Mr. Gregory in Sanderson regret to hear of his death.

FRED YEATES CANDIDATE FOR TAX ASSESSOR

EAGLES WIN FIRST GAME ON LOCAL COURT

The Sanderson Hi Eagles won their first game played on the local court Saturday against the Marfa High quintet by the score of 25 to 12. The game was hard fought as all Sanderson-Marfa games are and its termination was marked by the best of feeling between the players of both teams.

The visitors gave the Eagles a scare in the first half by leading throughout the entire period. At the first whistle Marfa secured the ball and in a short time marked up the first field goal. The Eagles were not playing together and made many long wild passes only to lose the ball. But for the guarding of Jansa in this period Marfa probably would have gained a much larger lead before the Eagles finally found themselves. Most of the points scored by Marfa in this half were from long shots and gained for them the heavy side of an 8 to 5 score at the final whistle of the first half.

In the second half the Eagles came back with plenty of determination as displayed in their improved teamwork and fight. At the first tip-off the Eagles secured the ball and by a pretty series of short passes rang up a goal. This was followed by several goals in succession bringing the score finally to 25 for the locals and 12 for the visiting team. In this half the Eagles completely outplayed the visitors and gave many flashes of real team work.

Morgan was high point man for the Eagles with 6 goals from the field and 1 from the foul line. He starred on the offensive and played a good defensive game. Grigsby scored 6 points from the field considering the fact that he was out almost half of the game, tends to show that his score was almost on a par with Morgan's. Grigsby is the fastest man on the squad and should prove one of the best forwards this school has ever had by the end of the season if he continues to improve his team work and passing ability. Harrell playing his first year as a center was an outstanding player in the last half, he also added 6 points from the field, and he together with Morgan and Mitchell gave the locals some of the prettiest pass work ever seen on the local court. Jansa as usual played an excellent game at guard, and allowed but a few short shots. It was partly through the efforts and encouragement of Jansa in the last half that the Eagles rallied. Mitchell, considering the fact that this was his first full game of this year since being sick, played an excellent game, both from an offensive and defensive standpoint, and he is also a fine offensive guard. Miller went in as a substitute for Grigsby in the first half and played well and with more experience is going to be a valuable player.

The Eagles have made a creditable showing this year in spite of their late start, and as the season advances should show some real basket ball.

NOTICE TO REPUBLICANS.

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Gripe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches, get busy with good old Musterole.

Musterole relieves the congestion and stimulates circulation. It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

Rub it on with your finger-tips. First you feel a warm tingle as the healing element penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief. Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent seriousness.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Maple Springs Club Wins Garden Contest

The committee in the garden contest for all women's clubs, extension service, A. and M. College of Texas, carrying on programs of work under the direction of a county home demonstration agent, have announced the prize winners as follows: First prize of $35, Maple Springs Club, Harrison County; second prize, $25, Gil Gal Club, Harrison County; third prize, $15, Minter Club, Lamar County; fourth prize, $10, Glory Club, Lamar County; fifth prize, $7, Hampshire Club, Jefferson County; sixth prize, $5, Mathews Club, San Patricio County; seventh prize, $3, Crystal Farms Club, Rusk County.

These prizes were awarded by the H. G. Hastings Seed Company of Atlanta, Ga., for the purpose of inspiring interest in this contest.

In commenting on the contest, Miss Mildred Horton, state home demonstration agent, said that the object was to encourage continuous production of a variety of vegetables of good quality and to encourage a wise utilization of these in the daily diet. It is generally realized that Texas gardens last too short a time and that year round gardens are too few in all sections of the state. It is also conceded that inadequate production of vegetables results in inadequate diet which has a direct influence on the health of the family. It is regrettable that more people do not realize the value of the home garden in the matter of farm economics, since it has a very important place in the Live-at-Home Program which experience of the past has proved to be the most valuable in successful farm and home economics. It is indeed regrettable that such little use is made of garden opportunities as a cheap and convenient source of food supply in the Southern states. It is regrettable that such a small per cent of farms in Texas have real gardens. This seems to be an economic crime, to say the least, and no doubt the poverty of our cotton growing farmers is largely due to their failure to make use of these garden opportunities in the Live-at-Home Program.

This garden contest was open during any eight month period between January 1 and December 31, 1925, and it was open to all women's clubs carrying on programs under the direction of the county home demonstration agents. In order to win this contest it was necessary for the club to have two fresh vegetable shows each year, one in the fall and one in the spring, and it was necessary to have kodak pictures made of these shows. It was also necessary to have a county judging committee to list and attest all vegetables at these exhibits. Likewise, each member had to submit at the time of the show, a report showing the production of vegetables, their utilization, and what she had exhibited at the show.

There were thirteen counties represented in this contest, and thirty clubs containing 357 women, sent in complete reports. Nolan County was first in number of reports sent in, there being seven club reports, while Rusk County came second with six club reports.

Oil Cloth Rabbits.

Miss Vivian Weaver, county home demonstration agent of Harris County, sent in an interesting report concerning some oil cloth rabbits made by Mrs. Paul Darnell of Katy, Texas. These were sold during the holidays. However, Mrs. Darnell tells her own story in a card recently written to her district home demonstration agent which reads as follows:

I made seven oil cloth rabbits and sold five of them at fifty cents each. Four of them were made of black pebbled oil cloth and were bound in red bias seam tape. I painted the markings red. The other three were made of plain white oil cloth and were bound with pink bias tape and painted pink. I found that the white ones sold the best. Mrs. Douglas, who runs a store in Katy, sold them for me charging five per cent commission. It cost me ten cents a piece to make them. I made $2.00 on the five I sold.

Farm and Home Suggestions.

The school lunch is one of the child's regular meals, and it deserves consideration as such.

Orange marmalade that doesn't stiffen is probably not cooked long enough. When the hot mixture "sheets" off the spoon, it is done.

Mayonaisse which has "cracked" may still be used if it is added slowly to a fresh emulsion made from an egg yolk and a small quantity of oil.

No Enduring Security in Competing Armaments and Separate Alliances

By VISCOUNT GRAY OF FALLODEN, in "Twenty-five Years."

THE lesson of European history is plain. It is that no enduring security can be found in competing armaments and in separate alliances; there is no security for any power unless it be a security in which its neighbors have an equal share.

All this, it may be objected, is so obvious as to be commonplace—something of which nations must all have been aware for many generations, though they have not acted on it. The fact that, though possessing this knowledge, they have not hitherto acted upon it, is represented as proof that they cannot and will never do so. We are therefore invited to discard such reflections as are made in this chapter as being counsels of perfection, which could be of no use in practical politics.

This line of argument is, in effect, based on the assumption that nations are incapable of learning by experience. There is much in history that supports this view, but the tendency to pessimistic acceptance of it is checked by the reflection that man has, in fact, ascended from savagery to civilization and that this ascent has been possible only because men, individually and collectively, have been capable of learning by experience. The Great war has been the most tremendous experience in the history of civilized man, and the assumption that he has learned nothing from it except to prepare for and to make another war is unreasonable. It is not in accord with his past progress. It can only be true if he has ceased to learn, and, if that be so, he will not only cease to progress, but will dwindle and decay; for he cannot be stationary.

Nothing Done to Study Human Behavior in Relation to Politics

By DR. A. B. HALL, University of Wisconsin.

The two subjects that seem to affect human happiness most vitally are religion and politics, and it is precisely these two subjects that hold out against the scientific method. While there are exceptions, and some of them brilliant, it remains true in general that in these two vast domains of human interest, humanity still approximates the jungle type of civilization. Prejudice, superstition and ignorance still hold sway. Business men spend millions applying the methods of science to the study of human behavior in advertising, in vocational selection and in mental measurement. But nothing is done to study human behavior in relation to politics. Yet what is of most value to society: knowledge of the most effective way to sell laundry soap, or knowledge of how society reacts to political situations? We would seem to regard the soap salesman as contributing more to the advancement of social relations than the political agent. We put our best thought to the selling of soap, but the controlling principle for politics is chance, haphazard experience or the more or less skillful guess of the practical politician.

If Graduate Students of Literature Were Anything but Dull Sheep

By W. L. WERNER, Pennsylvania State College.

Innocent children today are led to believe that the study of literature includes such matters as Caelye's indigestion, Wordsworth's unfortunate daughter, Poe's liquor and Marlowe's brawlings, as well as pages of dates, volumes of history and libraries of wild surmises. Flooded with misinformation, the poor student finds no time to read and to reread the literature itself.

Such loose thinking is avoided in the other arts, which do not suffer under the blight of collegiate drof.

If graduate students of literature were anything but dull sheep one might cry up a revolution. As things are, one can only protest over their dead minds against teachers who lead researching parties down blind alleys after useless lumber.

Impossible for Women to Remain Untouched by This Individualistic Age

By DR. BEATRICE M. HINKLE, in Harper's Magazine.

For ages woman, as an individual creature, has been considered by the masculine mind to be inferior; only as mother did she possess a position and win recognition for herself. Therefore, the mother-woman was the ideal to which all women strove. But this was not woman as individual and differentiated; in this aspect she remained as far from attainment and recognition as ever. But the present age is strongly individualistic, and it is impossible for women to remain untouched by this tendency. Consequently they cannot continue in their own path. Moreover, the need for a new direction and an awakening of their latent potentialities is very great; for if the women remain static and unchanged in their eternal maternal strength, as they are so often told they must, it is certain that the race will remain psychologically unchanged and bound fast to them.

Nervous Systems Must Be Strong to Stand Strain of American Life

By SECRETARY J. J. DAVIS, in "Selective Immigration."

America is a land of high-pressure intensity of life. Our immigrants come from relatively slow-moving, traditionalized cities, towns and villages and drop into a maelstrom of humanity where little is permanent but change, where life is stimulating, dramatic, swift and intense. Nervous systems must be strong to stand the strain of American life, especially its town and city life. . . . Weak minds, unstable nerves, brittle mental stuff crack and break under this pressure. From the certificates of fitness issued by public health physicians our immigration inspectors may believe they are passing in men and women of steel or malleable iron when they are really admitting cast-iron which will not stand the strain.

We Shall Some Day Have Another Visitation of the Influenza Epidemic

By DR. E. O. JORDAN, University of Chicago.

It is now clear that the first estimates of the loss of life caused by the influenza epidemic of 1918 were too low. Recent disclosures make an estimate of 20,000,000 deaths in the whole population of the world probably not wide of the mark. This is comparatively the worst catastrophe of the sort that has visited the human race since the Black Death of the Middle Ages. Judging by the past, nothing is more certain than that we shall some day have another visitation of this destructive infection. It is not to be doubted that if it were to descend upon us tomorrow we would, as public-health workers and students of the disease, be little if at all better equipped to deal with it than we were seven years ago.

Disqualified Citizens.

Despite all the urging of the newspapers and the tax collectors thousands of Texans have allowed February to come without paying their poll tax and thus qualifying as citizens entitled to vote. One vote may not amount to much in determining the result of an election, but when that one is multiplied by thousands the result may mean much for the good or bad of the state and community. Texas would not have so much occasion to feel ashamed of the administration of affairs if only all Texans would feel a greater personal responsibility for the right exercise of the privilege of ballot. No state can be better than the intelligent understanding of statehood on the part of those who compose the citizenship.

Texas' Park System.

Turner E. Hubby, the Texas game, fish and oyster commissioner, is correct in the statement that Texas needs a few large state parks, well kept and used as preserves for wild game rather than fifty or more wagon-yard parks scattered everywhere for the accommodation of our migratory population. When the state park commission was created it set about securing land donations almost everywhere they could be obtained, instead of centralizing on a few really creditable parks offering attractions enough to be classed really as parks. The slow progress that has been made in the Texas park system has been due largely to the mistaken ideas as to the state's needs. Let Texas establish a few attractive large parks, and if many camp grounds are wanted along our highway systems, let the towns along the roads secure and maintain them.

Too Much Machinery.

Most of the departments of both national and state governments are overmanned, and as a consequence there is more idling than real work. When a new department is established, it usually functions for awhile at small expense, but in a little while the employees begin to increase in number. The head of a department must have a secretary to relieve him of his work; the secretary soon finds that an assistant would save him much labor; all of them want stenographers and soon there are assistant stenographers. By this time a few clerks are found convenient to keep the files and attend to the routine matters. To justify its existence in public estimation a publicity director is then employed, who in turn wants an assistant and a stenographer, and so on and on until dozens of people are employed at public expense to do the work that a few might as well do with the right application. If any business was as free in allowing for overhead expense as are most governmental departments it would soon be bankrupt.

Charities Cost Too Much.

The reason that government costs too much is that those who pay the taxes do not feel that it is their business to see that the taxes are spent for the things for which they are collected. The same trouble is found with most charities and other funds collected from the people. Too many half-lid people are paid to collect or to dispense the funds before they reach the place for which they are intended. Most of the money raised from entertainments for charity go to hiring halls, to paying the promoters and professional entertainers, to commissions for many things, and precious little of it gets to charity. This is an evil that appears hard to correct, but in the collection of local charity funds every community should seriously try to protect itself against imposition.

Road Money Badly Wasted.

Enough evidence has been developed in the cases tried at Austin to show that the taxpayers have been getting very little for their money spent in road maintenance work. Probably after the assessors and collectors and disbursers have all been paid and the expenses of the highway commission have been deducted, 10 per cent of the taxes collected for that purpose has been spent for maintaining roads and 90 per cent has gone to "upkeep" of another kind. These are not an auditor's figures and may not be correct, but they are correct enough to show that Texas hasn't been getting what Texans have been paying for. What are you going to do about it?

Build the Railroads.

If Texas people could have their way about it, every railroad that wants to extend its lines in Texas in 1926 would be allowed to do it. Some of them might possibly build unprofitable lines, but every line built would add to the prosperity and the development of the state.

United States Far Ahead in Patents

Patents abound in years of industrial activity, and 1925 has set a record for the United States with 46,540 of these indices of American creative ingenuity. As far back as 1790 congress passed the first national act providing for the granting of patents. But the comprehensive modern legislation dates from 1836, when all former statutes were repealed. We issue far more patents than all other countries combined. Our total is double that of Great Britain or France and nearly four times that of Germany, having passed the 1,500,000 mark. The figure for 1925 is nearly double that registered for 1900. Just as each generation decides that there is nothing new under the sun, the unheralded pathfinders come along not merely with novel ideas but with singular derivatives of the old notions, claiming the credit and paying the fee, even though the bulk of the discoveries may never progress from the sketch or the model to the stage of wholesale manufacture.

Canada Gets Oranges From United States

In the period from 1920 to 1924 more than 90 per cent (around 1,800,000 boxes) of the total shipments of United States oranges went to Canada, says the government's commerce reports. Smaller amounts were shipped to England, the Philippines, Cuba, China, Newfoundland and Labrador, Mexico and New Zealand. British trade statistics show that for each of the years from 1920 to 1923 imports of oranges from the United States comprised less than 1 per cent of the total orange imports of the United Kingdom. A comparison of United States exports of oranges for the periods 1920-1924 and 1900-1913 discloses that our recent shipments were around 1,995,770 boxes a year, as against prewar consignments of 1,005,247 boxes a year, an increase of around 1,000,000 boxes a year. Canada has always been the best market for our oranges.

New Yellowstone Planned

Plans for developing the system of parks in Denver, Col., are so ambitious that if they are carried out, the city maintains, it will have something on a par with Yellowstone National park. The board has at its disposal 47,000 acres of parks extending from the foothills of the continental divide and between the Platte river and Clear creek to work with. The tract is 30 miles long and 25 miles wide, and includes mountains, game preserves, lakes and highways. The federal government will be asked to aid in some respects. Herds of wild animals and large fish hatcheries will be included.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy

HOME AGAIN

SYNOPSIS—PART ONE—At a merry party in the studio apartment of Carter Blake, New York, Jerry (Geraldine) Harner, Prudence's daughter, meets Duane Allerton, wealthy idler. He admires her tremendously, and she likes him. But Allerton gets a bit exhilarated, with unfortunate results. Jerry, resenting his assumption of familiarity, leaves the party abruptly. The story turns to Jerry's childhood and youth at her home in Des Moines. Only child of a wealthy father, when she is twenty she feels the call of Art and asks her parents to let her go to New York for study. With some misgiving, they agree to her going. In New York Jerry makes her home with a Mrs. Delaney ("Mimi"), an actress, who, with Theresa, a painter, occupies the house. Jerry takes an immediate liking to Theresa, who is talented, eccentric, and the two become fast friends. Jerry now devotes herself to Theresa, who returns her liking. Jerry poses for Theresa's masterpieces, "The Ocean Rider." Allerton calls on Jerry. The girl refuses to see him. At a hotel dinner Jerry sees Duane and is conscious of his admiration, but refuses to change her attitude toward him. Jerry becomes convinced she has not the ability to become an artist. At a party Jerry again sees Duane, and will not recognize him. Theresa hints that Jerry should go home, and promises her a "present." Returning from an evening of gaiety, Jerry is shocked at hearing from Mimi that Theresa has killed herself. She also learns that Mimi is Theresa's mother. The "present" Theresa had promised Jerry proves to be her picture, "The Ocean Rider."

CHAPTER VII—Continued

"How should I know? She didn't tell me. She should have told me!" "Prudence would know," was all Jerry could say to that. Mimi lay rigid among the cushions, twisting her hands into painful knots, cutting her flesh with the gaudy stones. Jerry looked at her—the lavish toss of the hennaed hair, the carefully favored skin with its layers of cream and rouge, the voluptuous figure with its molding of fine French styes. Jerry saw her in a cloud of artificial lights, the center of artificial laughter, flirtations, affairs and intrigues—saw also the light kindness, the generous delicacy of speech and manner, the friendly camaraderie. And she saw Theresa dead by her own hand in the undertaking parlor with the flowers in the window, Mietta's, on the corner.

Jerry Was Going Home.

And then, as poor, suffering Mimi faded out, Jerry saw Prudence, clear-cut and vivid, saw the fine-lined, tender face, the gentle twist of the humorous mouth, the laughing, plaintive sympathy of the soft, sweet eyes. Jerry stared and stared. Her eyes burned painfully, her throat throbbled, there was a great longing in her heart. In that moment, Prudence's daughter, she ran suddenly to Mimi, caught her in her strong, tender arms, kissed her, cried over her, fondled her, and Mimi, after one slight, apologetic, high-strained laugh, buried her face in Jerry's arms and broke into helpless weeping.

Jerry helped her out of the lavish gown, out of the confining closeness of the French styes, and into a loose, light robe. She bathed her face, stroked her hair, hung over her with pitiful, sweet solicitude. And Mimi clung to her all night long, sobbing brokenly, writhing in hysterical anguish, and would not let her go. Jerry stayed with Mimi in the house on Reilly's alley until after the funeral—Theresa's funeral—when groups of her brilliant, wondering friends crowded into the little flower-filled room at Mietta's, to do last honor to her tragic memory, and went away again, afterward, slowly, talking it over, agreeing that after all, in a way, it seemed rather a congruous thing that such a one as Theresa, divinely driven, should flash like a meteor across a starry sky to fade at once in a final, dominant flash at the height of her brilliance, rather than fade away, as many do, into a dull and doddering mediocrity.

The night after the funeral Jerry, slipping softly down the hall toward Mimi's room, was arrested by the sicken, silvery voice. "Oh, you bad boy! This is the third—at six dollars a pint!" Jerry turned slowly back to her room. She was not deceived by that brave resumption of the old routine, shallow though it might be, had suffered a grievously cruel shock and she marveled that the hollow shell could send back an echo so musical to a world that had given her only its bitter dregs. Jerry went into her room, pulled out her bags, and began at once to pack the things of her possession. Jerry was going home.

Part Two

CHAPTER I

The Coming of Jerry

It was a blustering, blizzardily night in early March. The state of lower lay flat and bare under the lash of an angry winter, reluctant to loose its hold. Inside the Harner home was quiet warmth and cheery light. In the wide replace a great pine log cracked in gay defiance of wintry wind and sleet. At the round table in the dining room Prudence and Jerrold sat opposite each other across a bowl of fragile Cecil Brunner roses. "It's a nice night to be in," she said cheerfully. She was wondering if Greenwich Village was whipped with a gale like this. "Rotten weather to be out," agreed Jerrold absently. He was remembering the dangerous rush of taxis, when city streets are glassed with ice.

And so they smiled cheerfully at each other, and rejoiced with pleasant words that they were warm and bright by the fireplace, with the pine log, and the rosebuds and the candle lights. But in their hearts they were trying to assure themselves that Jerry was a very alert and self-possessed young person who could certainly take care of herself if anybody could, and what childishness to worry!

The doorbell sounded suddenly. Upon intense inward thoughts like theirs, even the soft reverberation of the most carefully modulated electric coming, how it was the last thing in the world she had dreamed of.

"But see here," remonstrated Jerrold, "you told me all the time she would come back. You said—" Prudence gave him a furious look. "I did not," she declared quite passionately. "Oh, for a visit, of course—but to bring all her things and stay forever, I never dreamed of such a thing. I can't tell you how surprised I am!"

"But, Prudence, you said—" Prudence glowered him into silence. "Now, Jerrold, I know what I said! I knew she would come for a visit, but this is really coming home, and I couldn't remotely fancy such a lovely thing!"

They went upstairs, the three of them, to Jerry's lovely room, and Prudence and Jerrold stood about, getting in the way, while Jerry unpacked the bags, the boxes and the trunk. Everything was exhibited, exclaimed over, admired.

And while she unpacked she told them of New York, of Graves McDowell, and the lessons in Art, of Rhoda, and her passionate devotion to her work. She told them of lovely Aimee, and the trashy column of society scandal she wrote for a daily paper. When Prudence asked about the girls in the house with her, Theresa, and Mimi, Jerry's lip quivered, her eyes shadowed, as she said:

"I'll tell you about them after a little. I'm coming to that."

She told them of her conquests in the city, her gay flirtations, her proposals. She showed them the little marble figur, the Russian sculptor, Korcky, had done for her. She exhibited the autographed novels and books of poetry, warmly inscribed to her by authors and poets of a dozen nationalities. She displayed a hundred little testimonies of her triumph in the city, a triumph social, if not artistic.

"Isn't the laborers who are slave-driven," she declared warmly. "They don't need unions to protect them. It is a genius union we need, something to keep geniuses from working themselves to death. There was a violinist in our building—mother, I tell you truly, that man began to work before I was up, and was at it every night when I went to bed. There was a composer at Rhoda's—once I was staying all night—at two o'clock in the morning we heard, oh, very softly, a little tripping melody on the keys. Rhoda said it happened often—ran through his mind during the night, until he got up and worked it out of his system—using the soft pedal not to disturb the others. There was a young writer across the alley from us—whenever I went out, or came in, I could hear that dull thud of his typewriter, twelve o'clock, one o'clock, two o'clock. A union for genius, that's the need of the century!"

At half past two in the morning Prudence and Jerrold were still sitting enraptured, spellbound, on the wide day bed against the wall, listening as Jerry talked. And when at last the trunk was emptied, she turned slowly to the great crate she had brought with her all the way, so carefully, so tenderly, and released the safety fastenings on the end. Then she drew it out slowly, the shadows deepening in her eyes—Theresa's gallant "Ocean Rider" with eyes like Jerry's own. Jerry's parents stared at it, exclaiming, marveling at its beauty.

"It looks like you," Prudence whispered. "The eyes—they are mine. As they were when I went to New York, when she first saw me—Theresa—Jerry choked over the words. "Let me tell you."

She hastily switched out the bright lights, leaving only the one soft Roman candle burning on her dressing table, for Jerry did not wish to pain them with the emotion her vivid face could not fall to reveal. And she came across to them, piled cushions on the top of one of the three steps which led up to the raised day bed, and snuggled in between them.

"Do you want me to go out?" Jerrold offered generously, feeling that this was to be the climax of Jerry's confidence.

Jerry smiled at him, drew both his knees impulsively within the clasp of her arm. "Oh, no, father, of course not."

And then she told them of the house on Reilly's alley, of Mimi, with the golden hair and the silken gowns, of terrible, tragic Theresa in her attic room upstairs. "I felt just like a mother toward that girl," she declared brokenly. She told of Theresa's rare talent, of her strange intensity, her impatient, impulsive kindness. "Mother, she killed herself."

Jerrold let his cigarette go out. He another feverishly, let it go out again. Prudence held Jerry in a close arm, weeping with her softly. And Jerry talked sadly on and on, told them of Mimi's pitiful, frivolous life, her wasteful motherhood. Sometimes as she talked, she lay in Prudence's lap, crying bitterly, only to sit up again with passionate earnestness to go on with the tragic tale.

here, as if she had fooled us all—slipped neatly out of a mess and left us looking at—cobwebs on our fingers. I can just imagine—in heaven—she would be laughing to think of the joke she had played on us. It's what Theresa would!"

Jerrold would have gone away then, taking Prudence with him, feeling that overwrought and highly strained young daughters would do best in bed. Prudence, with that tender insight of hers that was never known to fail, knew better. Jerry was unbending her heart, finding relief, had come to them, as she always came, when the things she undertook to do had proved too hard for her. And so they stayed on and on, and talked more of Theresa, and presently Jerry was talking of other things—of the mad frenzy that goaded all artists to desperation, of their intemperate folly, their unbounded love.

And then she was telling them of Greta Val, the little chambermaid, and how Graves McDowell was fairly living in her talent, feasting his own starved heart on the fuel he fed to hers. She told them of her little part in the drama, of how she had piled her wealth together, brushes and easel and boards, and with a profuse hand had tossed them on the unfortunate little tramp of the alleys.

"And what do you think she did? She stood up, and glared at me, and slapped me in the face—right there!" Jerry could laugh at it now, could laugh, and did, particularly at Jerrold's amazement, at Prudence's maternal displeasure.

"What are you going to do now?" Jerrold asked at last. "Jerry clouted again. She did not know. "What do other girls do?" she asked him. "Girls who are not geniuses by birth—and lucky they are, if you ask me—but girls who would go mad doing nothing! What do they do?" Jerrold cleverly evaded the issue by reaching for a cigarette, a prettily perfumed, gold-tipped thing that Jerry had brought in a handsome box, a parting gift from a young admirer, thus shifting the question to Prudence.

Prudence was very sober. "I don't know," she said. "What do you think?"

They talked of girls, of some who became teachers, some who went into the public libraries and museums, some into business. "That's all right if you have to earn a living," objected Jerry. "But doesn't it seem silly to work hard at something you don't care a thing about, just to earn a little money you do not need? Of course, if one has a real fondness for a thing—but I haven't! I think it would be perfectly trashy of me to go downtown and pound a typewriter eight hours a day for twenty dollars a week—when I don't adore pounding typewriters—and can get the money by asking father."

"And besides," said Prudence, "it would be keeping some girl out of a position who does need the money."

"It's a great responsibility, having a daughter," Jerrold said, standing up, suddenly shocked to know it was after four o'clock. "I'm afraid we went into this thing too lightly, Prudence."

They all laughed over that, and Jerry kissed both parents a warm good night, and closed the door behind them. In their own room, Jerrold turned to his wife to air a grievance that had lurked within his memory throughout all the happy evening.

"See here, Prudence, you did, too, expect Jerry to come home to stay. You said all the time she would come back."

Prudence caught his broad shoulders in her two slender hands, and shook him sternly. As a measure of discipline it was absurd, for Jerrold was tall and strong, and Prudence both slender and slight in strength. But as expressive of her pent-up emotions and representative of her scorn for his understanding, it was triumphant.

"Oh, Jerrold, will you never learn?" she wailed. "Don't you know that you must always be surprised at a woman!"

"But you said—" "Always be surprised at a woman! It pleases her, it flatters her, it makes her feel how very unusual she is to do the unexpected thing. Be surprised, Jerrold, always be surprised! Women love it!"

"Then you did expect her home?" "Of course I did," Prudence said this with a complacent pride in her astuteness.

"But you said—" "Oh, bother what I said. You be a little careful after this, and don't go about telling everything you hear."

"Shades of the Parsonage and John Wesley defend us," he ejaculated devoutly.

"Oh, well, if it comes to that," said Prudence, "I learned a great many things in the Parsonage that John Wesley never heard of!"

Well, Jerry is home again, where she belongs. And now what's she going to do?

"But constipation is serious, Grace"

"Not so long ago I was like you—headaches a good deal of the time, sleeping badly, and the least bit of housework tired me out. My complexion too, was bad."

"Finally, I went to see Dr. Farman. He showed me that it was constipation that was back of my troubles. He said that it was a very serious thing because poisons from clogged waste matter were picked up by the blood and carried to every body organ. And if I didn't correct it in time I might become a victim of one of those terrible organic diseases."

"He made me drop laxatives altogether, changed my diet, and put me on Nujol. I don't think I've ever felt better. I sleep well, my headaches have disappeared, and you can see for yourself what an improvement there is in my skin. Nujol has done wonders for me."

Nujol Works Like Nature

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It is neither a food nor a medicine. It does not gripe. It is gentle and natural in its action and is prescribed by leading medical authorities.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly, in accordance with the directions on each bottle.

As Nujol is not a laxative, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin the perfect health that is possible only when intestinal elimination is normal and regular.

It is one thing to talk and another to say something.

You borrow from yourself when you cut down expenses.

KID McCOY FULL OF ODD TRICKS

Resorted to Questionable Means to Win in Ring.

Conceding that nothing succeeds like success, neither does anything flop like a flop.

The stories of Kid McCoy's tricks in the ring are standard classics because he got away with them. He'd point to the floor and exclaim: "Look!" and while his opponent on the unprotected jaw. The books say that Sullivan whipped some of his patients by outroaring them or glaring them into panic while they were lagging on the gloves.

Here's the other side: Two champions were down for a no-decision. Interclass bout which was to be a polka, with the understanding that if the public liked the number they would take several encores. When the act wore out they would enter the ring for a real fight or shooting match.

The smaller champion decided, however, that the big one was a bunny and made up his mind to throw a fight into him.

"Tell that big bum of yours," he phoned to the big champion's manager, "that I'm going to shoot. He can't fight and I'm going to stop him."

"You're making a mistake," the manager said, "but if you don't want to use blanks, thanks for telling us. We'll shoot, too."

Before the sixth round the little champion had been knocked out.

Another incident:

As large Bill Brennan stood facing Luis Pirpo just before the bell began their fight in the Garden, he playfully reached out, plucked a tuft of fur from Luis Angel's chest, held his glove tip up to his face and blew the fuzz late Luis Angel's eyes. It was a very insulting way to treat a Wild Bull.

Then large Bill remarked, "Moo-oo-oo," imitating that of the Wild Bull fought like a Holstein cow.

In the twelfth round large Bill went down so hard that it took two weeks in a hospital to get him in shape to sit up in bed.

"Grand Old Man"

The photograph shows Connie Mack, who has just celebrated his sixty-third birthday and who still functions as the very astute and able manager of the Philadelphia Athletics. Although one would like to call him the "Grand Old Man of Baseball," he would probably resent the "old" part, for he's as young as his youngest player on the Shibe park diamond in Philadelphia. He is shown above with the mascot and trade mark of the Athletics.

Sport Notes

Field hockey is now played by women athletes in Japan.

Baseball teams in the American league used 34,164 balls last year.

Big game hunters in Alaska engage an airplane to carry them to the caribou herds.

Now and then the call of the dollar also falls sweetly upon the ear of the football coach, as well as the football player.

Woman tennis players in England are wearing shock socks to add speed to their footwear on the hard courts.

All boxers who lose on fouls, whether held intentional or unintentional, are to be suspended by the New York state athletic commission.

Denver of the Western league, has signed Benny Keyes, a home product, for a tryout. He filled in for a few games with St. Joseph last season when that team was in Denver and looked every bit a hitter.

Pittsfield of the Eastern league, sold Shortstop Waddy McPhee to the Salt Lake club of the Pacific Coast league.

He was captain and star of the Princeton university team before entering organized baseball.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

Mary Graham Bonner

VALENTINE'S DAY

Melly had been very busy getting ready for St. Valentine's day.

She was making a number of valentines.

Some she made by cutting out hearts from thick red paper, decorating them with little bits of gold hearts which she cut out of thin gold paper.

One valentine was a very big red heart, and all around it were the little gold hearts.

In the center she drew a funny little creature to look like Cupid with a bow and arrow.

In another she put a dagger which was to show that her heart had been pierced by love!

This she sent to her mother.

One with the big red heart and the little gold hearts she sent to her father.

The way she sent her valentines was to go outside the door early on the morning of Valentine's day and shove them into the mail box, and then they would be gathered up a little later when the postman was heard arriving with the letters.

She wrote little verses for a number of her friends, and these she posted in plenty of time so they would arrive on the morning of St. Valentine's day.

She wrote these verses in red ink and drew little hearts on each sheet of paper.

She spread her lines far apart so the valentines would look as though they were long ones.

And the people receiving them would not have to take long to read them, yet they would not seem too short.

This was her valentine for her friend Lucy, and it was written, in this fashion, with the lines far apart:

Lucy with hair so golden
Lucy with ways so fine,
Oh Lucy, will you, will you
Please, be my Valentine—

This was the valentine she wrote for her friend Caroline who lived nearby:

I have a little neighbor,
Her name is Caroline,
It would make me very happy
If she'd be my Valentine.

This was the valentine she wrote for her friend Mahalia:

I love Mahalia, yes, I do,
And I'll ask her for a sign
That she will be quite willing
To be my Valentine!

Then she sent a valentine she had bought in a shop showing a little boy and a little girl in an automobile with a big heart as a background. She sent this to Muriel, as she knew Muriel loved to go motoring with her daddy, and she knew her daddy took up a big portion of her heart!

She wrote one other valentine which she sent to a friend of hers who lived up in the state where it was colder than where Melly lived.

This was the valentine to her friend Dolly:

There's a dainty little lady
Who lives way, way "up state,"
She's a darling and a pet,
She's always "up-to-date,"
The snow may all surround her,
And it may be very cold,
But it can't freeze my devotion,
For I feel quite brave and bold,
And I'll be sure to be hearken
As I beg her to be mine
For I want her, oh, so badly,
To be my Valentine!

Where Hole Came From

"Phillip," asked a mother of her four-year-old son, "where did that hole in the screen come from?"

"I don't know, mamma," replied the little fellow.

"Are you sure you don't?" she asked.

"Of course I am," answered Phillip. "I throwed my ball a while ago and then I saw the hole, but, honestly, I don't know where it came from."

Martha Was Quite Proper

Martha is a proper child, who loves parties with their more formal action.

One day she started for one accompanied by her small, mischievous brother, and eventually she felt doubtful about his actions, for when she reached the door of the party she said to the hostess: "Here is Billy. You better look after him, 'cause it's your fault he was invited."

Simple

Teacher—Can any one tell me how a stovepipe is made?

Johnny—First you take a big, long hole, and then you wrap some tin around it."

Too Often It's a Warning of Disordered Kidneys

WHY drag around feeling old, worn out and miserable? Why not make up your mind to be well? That daily backache, those sharp, stabbing pains—dizziness, bladder irregularities, nervousness and depression, are signs of kidney inactivity. Use Doan's Pills. Thousands recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

Here Is Convincing Proof:

A Texas Case

Mrs. P. D. Cooper, 1016 12th St., Corpus Christi, Tex., says: "When I bent over, sharp pains caught me across my kidneys. I felt worn out and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used one box of Doan's Pills on the advice of a physician. They rid me of the backache and restored my kidneys to their normal condition."

Trade among Friends

NO matter what some folks say to the contrary, there certainly is a lot of sentiment in business. Friendship, for instance, makes more satisfactory sales than all the cleverness and argument in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store—not because its counters are arranged in a scientific way, but because the folks who serve you are always friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing—FRIENDLY SERVICE—is the power that draws people together into communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly cooperation.

And FRIENDLY SERVICE is the sentimental reason why you find it very much to your advantage to trade with our advertisers—to buy where you feel at home, where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.
