THIRD EL PASO HIGHWAY WILL BE LOGGED IN MARCH
Most Southern Highway to Pass Through Uvalde, Del Rio, Alpine and Valentine.

A survey of the third highway route from San Antonio to El Paso, for an automobile log, of the most Southern route, is scheduled to be made beginning March 8, by W. H. Furlong of the highway department, Chamber of Commerce, and Louis F. Birdsong, local automobile dealer, who is to furnish the logging car.

Furlong and Birdsong recently completed detailed logs of the Old Spanish Trail route via Boerne, Kerrville, Sonora and Fort Stockton, and over the Glacier-to-Gulf and Bankhead highways via Fredericksburg, Big Springs and Pecos.

The most Southern route passes through Uvalde, Del Rio, Comstock, Sanderson, Alpine, Marfa and Valentine to Van Horn, where it joins the Old Spanish Trail and continues into El Paso.

The survey to be made will include detailed information on condition of roads in various kinds of weather, bridges, culverts, listing of detours, comfortable hotels and dependable garages. Increasing volume of traffic over the third route was given by Furlong as a reason for the detailed log, which will be furnished motorists.—San Antonio Express.

The above article will be of interest to our citizens. This same route was recently Federalized, and is the one that A. Madison of Del Rio has been interested in and held several meetings with our business people in regard to advertising same. When the tourists of the country learn that this is one of the best highways in Texas and learn of our wonderful climate and scenery there will be no other highway traveled.

Bridge Parties
Last Friday evening at her home Mrs. H. E. Laurence was hostess to several friends, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Harrell of Fort Stockton. The evening was enjoyably spent in playing bridge. Following the close of 6 games, the men's prize for high score, a smoking set, went to Mr. Max Bogusch, while the ladies' high score prize, a hand embroidered tea apron, went to Mrs. P. R. Burns; a poited hyacinth was the guest prize.

The hostess served angel food cake with whipped cream and coffee to the following guests and friends: the honorees, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. John Stovell, Mr. and Mrs. Max Bogusch, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Lemons, Major and Mrs. E. I. Burn, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Griffith, Mrs. F. B. Carter and Miss Kate Frazier.

One of the most delightful bridge parties given recently was the one at the Kerr Hotel last Saturday evening with Mrs. P. R. Burn as hostess, honoring Major and Mrs. E. I. Burn of San Antonio. Following several interesting games high scores for the evening were held by Max Bogusch, who received an ash tray, and Mrs. Laurence, who received a hand embroidered console scarf. The guest prize was a Japanese vase. At a late hour delicious refreshments consisting of fruit salad, cake and coffee were served. Mrs. Burn's guests for the evening were: the honorees, Major and Mrs. E. I. Burn, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Laurence, Mr. and Mrs. Max Bogusch, Mr. and Mrs. John Stovell, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Lester, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Lemons, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Cavender, Mesdames F. B. Carter, J. W. McKee, W. H. Savage; Misses Avis Crozier and Kate Frazier; Messrs. Martin Boyd, Clyde Griffith and Dr. Gorman.

MASONIC LODGE OBSERVES WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY
Sanderson Lodge A. F. & A. M. No. 988 observed Washington's birthday Monday in a very appropriate manner.
On Monday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock at the Masonic Hall open house was held. The large reception room was tastefully decorated with green cedar and American flags. A large framed picture of George Washington was placed near the center of the room with a guard of honor composed of four young De Molay boys, McDuffy Kessler, John Williams, Alfred Morgan and Thom Williams, on each side of the picture.

Monday night at the Presbyterian church an enjoyable program was given. W. H. Savage, worshipful master of the local lodge, in a very pleasing way opened the program with an address of welcome, following which the audience sang "America." Mrs. Sims Wilkinson then rendered a musical selection which was very much enjoyed. S. C. Bodkin, past worshipful master of the lodge, then gave a forceful and interesting talk on "Masonry, Its Objects and Purposes." In his address Mr. Bodkin made it clear that Masonry was not one religious body nor one political body, but only stood for the best, and was established for the "Brotherhood of Man."

The vocal selection given by Mrs. Wickliffe Edwards, accompanied by Mrs. Clyde Mills at the piano, showed truly an artist and a well rendered solo. Prof. J. A. White, principal of the high school, gave an interesting talk on George Washington, his life and especially Washington as a man and a Mason.

The program was concluded with a vocal solo by Mrs. M. A. Cavender, with Mrs. Sims Wilkinson at the piano.

Presbyterian Auxiliary Met
The Presbyterian Ladies Auxiliary met at the home of Mrs. C. I. Sims on Tuesday, February 23, for business and social meeting with Mrs. Sims and Mrs. J. C. Green as hostesses. After the regular business was taken up the election of officers for the next year was held, the following being elected: President, Mrs. N. E. Charlton; Vice President, Mrs. Stovell; Treasurer, Mrs. D. A. Pollard; Secretary, Mrs. H. D. Williams. A review of the Mission Book "The Romance of Home Missions," was given by Mesdames Cavender, Laurence, McKee and Charlton, after which the hostess served a delicious plate lunch of salad, cheese wafers, olives, cake and punch. The following visitors were present: Mrs. Landers, Mrs. P. R. Burn and Mrs. E. I. Burn of San Antonio and Mrs. A. B. Woodlief. The next meeting will be an all day meeting at the home of Mrs. Laurence on Monday, March 8, to sew for Theima, our adopted girl, and also for Bible study.—Reporter.

Mrs. Ray Parker and son came in Monday morning from Floresville. She was accompanied home by her mother, Mrs. Woodlee, who will visit her for a while.

Miss Lora Winn has returned home from Austin where she has been visiting relatives for the past several months.

A Ford roadster was in the city with a tire cover on the back with the inscription "Pardon Me, Ma Did."

Mrs. George Chapman spent the week-end in Dryden visiting friends.

RATES TO THE CATTLE-MEN'S CONVENTION
G. A. Sachase of Ft. Stockton, inspector for the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, was in the city this week and while here he made a visit to The Times office. He stated that the railroads will give rates of one and one-fifth fare within a radius of 150 miles of Fort Worth and a fare and a third from all other Texas points to Fort Worth for the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association on March 9, 10 and 11, and for the Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock Show on March 6 to 13. He also stated that the rates would not be on the certificate plan.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Custer of Phoenix, Ariz., en route to San Antonio, spent Wednesday here as the guest of Mrs. Custer's uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. P. F. Robertson.

Major and Mrs. E. I. Burn of San Antonio visited their son P. R. Burn and family several days this week.

The Sanderson Eagles motored to Ozona Thursday where they will meet Eden High School yesterday (Friday) to play the bi-district game to determine who will go to Austin to play March 5 and 6.

Eskimos Raising Foxes

Due to the fur-raising fads in the temperate countries, Eskimos have gone in for fox raising on a large scale. They are concentrating on white foxes. They will attempt to domesticate this particular breed, the biggest problem being regular feeding. It is a fact that fur bearers, while they thrive on irregular feeding when foraging for themselves and running wild, have to be fed regularly when in captivity, or the quality of their furs deteriorates.

Texas Schools in Politics.

Now that Dean L. H. Hubbard has been elected to the presidency of the College of Industrial Arts, it is hoped by all who are interested in the success of the College that he may be able to form a plan and work them out. The College of Industrial Arts, like most other Texas schools, has been used in the past too much to serve the political purposes of the politicians. No man can really succeed at the head of a great school and feel forced to play politics to secure the funds with which to maintain it or to retain his position. No teacher can do good work unless he is measurably independent of politics. There are those who contend that any teacher with enough personality to attract attention to himself in Texas is always in danger of becoming a political target, and that tenure of position is safe only for the unknown or those who lack individuality enough to attract attention to themselves, that political automatons, and not men of real brain force are desired in the schools. Of course that statement is rather too broad, but the fact that it is repeatedly heard makes one think there may be some truth in it.

Universities Should Be Self-Governing.

There is no reason why a state university or college should be, in fact, dominated by boards of regents, boards of control, legislative committees and others with the power at any time to cripple its activities. As a rule those who compose political official families know very little about school matters and controlling boards know but little more about such things. They may be ever so competent in other things, good business men, anxious to promote the interests of the institutions they serve, but in the nature of things they can't go closely into a study of educational needs and so they become mere figure-heads as board members. School faculties are composed of persons who devote their lives to a study of school problems, whereas boards are composed of business men who devote only a few days a year for a brief number of years to such studies. Legislative committees know even less about school requirements in a great state like Texas, and governors with the power of veto can give little time to the thousands of diversified school problems. Whatever educational problems need board supervision should have the control of boards of the faculty, and the president of an institution alone should be authorized to veto the action of the faculty, to which control of a school should be given.

Seeking New Thrills.

The old sensations do not appear to satisfy the youth of today, who is constantly seeking something new and untried. It is doubtful, for that matter, if those of us who are older are any longer really thrilled by anything. Things are no longer wonderful, however unusual or novel, they are accepted as ordinary events. I listened on New Year's morning, over the radio, to the ringing of the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia as complacently as if it had been nothing unusual. Tonight I may tune in on New York or Havana, or Mexico City for the best musical concert either of those cities can furnish. Why not, and what of it? Nothing surprises any more, nothing startles. What may not tomorrow or another year bring forth?

May Yet Talk With Mars.

The papers recently brought the information that W. J. McDonald, a Paris, Texas, banker, had left nearly one and a half million dollars to the University of Texas for the erection of an astronomical observatory. Dean H. Y. Benedict of the University, who is professor of astronomy, thinks that that that amount of money the power of the observatory may be limited only by the ability of men to produce strong lenses or whatever other things are used in making observations of the heavens. Who knows but that in a few years we may be peering over at Mars, about which we have been so curious so long, and that some one may discover the Mars air wave length and let us talk with the Martians? All things seem probable now.

Texas' Scenic Beachway.

Texas is building the greatest beach driveway to be found anywhere. I will let the Houston Chronicle tell you about it: "This beach, 400 miles long—Galveston to Point Isabel, no doubt the longest beach scenic highway—is destined to become the playground of the central states. It will be ready for traffic the latter part of the summer. Telephone service is now being installed with long distance stations every five miles. Barges connecting the islands and crossing river deltas are under construction at Corpus Christi, and plans are under way for several causeways bridging these gaps. Picture the future, 400 miles of hard, sandy beach, smooth and level as a table, shaded by palms and other Southern flora, service stations and happy homes, and yet will have the idea actuating the originators of the improvements."

Farming Attracts Soil Lovers.

While this is written in February the day is bright, balmy and spring-like, and the lure of spring is here. No man gets so old or so far removed from farm life that he does not suffer intense homesickness for the farm, if he was reared in the country. The farmer is often anxious at such a season to get away to the woods or to the creek banks, but the city man thinks mostly of the soil itself and wants to get out where he can enjoy its odor and breathe it all in as he did when a boy.

Hope Nevers Will Add Needed Punch

Ernie Nevers, Pacific Coast Star.

Ernie Nevers, all-American football star, college baseball, basket ball and gridiron hero, will be the observed of all observers when the Browns gather at their training camp at Tarpon Springs, Fla., late in February. No athlete has broken into the major leagues with more publicity than has attended the signing of Nevers by Sialer, and the baseball world will be interested in the young athlete's efforts.

Nevers will have a sympathetic manager. George Sisler, leader of the St. Louis Americans, came to the big leagues straight from college. Sisler thinks highly of the college athlete. He believes that the college training makes the university athlete a better prospect because he can learn more quickly than the sand-lotter.

Remember Sisler.

Sisler came to the Browns from Michigan university, where he had been a star batter and pitcher. George was a great batter even then. But persons who remember Sisler's debut will be inclined to be patient with Nevers. George swung at bad balls. He was not a finished batter, but he had the ability, the baseball instinct and in a couple of years he was a star. Even

In his case it took a long time to determine his proper place on the field and it was Fielder Jones who finally decided that the young Michigan graduate was a first baseman.

Owner Phil Hall, Business Manager Bill Friel and Secretary Willis Johnson consider Nevers a great prospect. They consider him only that, however. Baseball always is a gamble and the club was willing to pay high for Nevers' signature, on the chance that he might develop into another Sisler or Frisch.

A Great Athlete.

Nevers is a sturdy athlete. He has tremendous speed and persons who have watched him in action on the mound predict that he will rank some day with the best of the right-handers.

While his greatest fame was achieved on the gridiron, his admirers say that if college baseball drew as much attention as football Nevers would be as well known for his baseball as for his ability as a pigskin warrior.

Sisler does not need a great deal of added strength to turn the Browns into a championship team. If Nevers should deliver as a good pitcher or a hitter, he might add just the needed power. It certainly was a good chance to take.

LEONARD TO WAIT RING FANS' CALL

Will Fight Rocky Kansas When Public Demands.

Will Benny Leonard, retired lightweight champion of the world, fight Rocky Kansas of Buffalo, who recently won the title of champion from Jimmy Goodrich, also of Buffalo, winner of the New York lightweight tourney to determine a successor to Leonard?

Reports have been sent out from New York to the effect that Leonard would meet Kansas in an open air show in New York some time during the coming summer.

Benny at the present time is making a vaudeville tour of the country and it is all good advertising for him, and Benny is a good enough showman to know the benefit of such talk.

Despite the advertising arising from the controversy Benny Leonard is not seeking notoriety, but is sticking close to his show work.

During a talk in his dressing room Benny made it plain that he is not anxious to return to the ring, although he likes boxing for the sport and exercise he gets out of it.

"Many have approached me lately regarding a match with Rocky Kansas for the title," said the retired champion, "but I have not even given it serious consideration. In the first place, if there was anything doing it would be done through my old manager—Billy Gibson—for he is the only one whom I would work with. I have beaten Kansas three times and feel that the public would not want to see us in the ring again.

"As I said before, I do not wish to enter the ring again, not because of all that sob stuff about mother, etc., but for the very good reason that I wish to retire from the game.

"I have the greatest respect in the world for my mother's wishes, but she has made no request here and would not. She stated her side long ago, preferring to have me quit the ring and I have always respected it.

"If the public should ask me to come back and meet the best lightweight in the world I would do so, for the reason that it was the public, or rather boxing fans, who made me and I owe it to them to do their bidding. So that is where the matter rests—entirely with the fans. If they want me to come back I will do so, otherwise not."

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

The real cause of bad breath

"You cannot 'cover up' unpleasant breath for any length of time. The only way to rid yourself permanently of it is by removing the cause.

"Sometimes poor teeth are responsible. But the commonest cause of a coated tongue and offensive breath is constipation. You may not realize that your intestines are slow in eliminating waste matter, or that your breath is objectionable. But others will notice it.

"Get rid of constipation, and your breath will become fresh and sweet. Even more important, you will notice an immediate improvement in your health and spirits."

Nujol relieves constipation in Nature's own way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is so safe, so gentle, and so natural in its action.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles. Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time. Ask your druggist for Nujol today. Remove the cause of bad breath and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

Prudence's Daughter

Jerrold laughed, but sobered quickly. If then it had not been financial need which brought this city youth to the Middle West—it was a matter far more serious. His heart sank within him. He thought of Prudence and her happiness in having Jerry with her.

"I'll call her up," he volunteered. And when he had his daughter on the wire, he said cheerfully:

"Oh, by the way, Jerry, I have a young man from New York here looking for a job—letter from you as a recommendation."

Jerrold waited. He waited until he realized that his daughter had nothing to say on the subject.

"Well, what shall I do with him? Shall I bring him up to the house?"

And then suddenly there came such a torrent of tumultuous words over the wire as caused Jerrold to gasp with dismay, while confusion and consternation spread over his kindly face.

Presently a sharp click on the wire informed him that the conversation was at an end. He hung up the receiver. There was a deepening anxiety in his face as he said:

"My daughter says—Do you want to know what my daughter says?"

"Very much."

"I am pained to report that my daughter says if I bring you near the house she'll shut the door on both of us, that you came here for a job and I am to give you a job, and the harder you have to work the better it will be for you, but that personally she hasn't the slightest interest in you or in what becomes of you, as long as you keep out of her sight."

"Well, I'll be d—d," said Duane, and could say no more.

"Both of us," corroborated Jerry's father gently.

This turn of affairs burdened Jerrold with the entire responsibility for the young man. He did not like it. He didn't know what to do with him. He wished Jerry might have been more communicative about her impulses before she yielded to them. He thought she might at least have discussed the affairs of the Harmer Motor company with its official head before she involved the establishment in foreign complications of such portentous magnitude.

"Do you like the Middle West?" he asked weakly, remembering his duties as host, although he felt very much as if he had suddenly become the troubled owner of a white elephant placed in his Christmas stocking by some misguided well-wisher.

"Never saw it," said Duane Allerton. And then, suddenly feeling that perhaps some slight explanation was due this plainly harassed father, he went on: "You see, Mr. Harmer, I tried to—well, flirt a little—with your daughter in New York. And she didn't like it."

"Oh, didn't she?" Jerrold was surprised. He shot a quick look at the young man. He was very good to look at, even to perturbed and troubled Jerrold. He was inclined to doubt the sincerity of his daughter's dislike.

"But she does flirt," Duane went on positively. "Everybody said so. And besides, I saw her myself. But she seemed to angle me out for her resentment. For no good reason, as far as I could make out."

"Wait a minute. I'll call her up again and tell her she can't do these things," Jerrold spoke quite sternly. But when he got the number, it was Prudence's voice that answered. She said that Jerry had gone wildly away in the "Baby," and didn't know when she would come home, and if her father brought any strange young men around the house she'd never be home.

"See here," said Jerrold sharply, glad it was Prudence, with whom it was much easier to be stern than with imperturbable Jerry. "You should have told me about this."

Prudence professed her complete and absolute ignorance of it, at which her husband felt somewhat better. It was always a source of grievance to him when Prudence knew things first. He began to feel quite gratified because he had been selected for the brunt of the burden.

"Oh, it must have been a shock to you," he said sympathetically.

"Not a bit. I knew there was a man in it somewhere."

"How did you know that? Did she tell you?"

"She told me nothing. I knew by the way she looked."

"Well, what shall I do with him? I don't know what to do with him! I don't think he knows how to work—and he doesn't want to work anyhow. What shall I—"

"I don't know," said Prudence cleverly. "What do you think?"

When Prudence said that, both Jerrold and Jerry stepped warily, afraid of blundering. It was Prudence's way of getting herself out of a tight place. With these few words she could shift the entire responsibility for any matter in the cosmic universe and lay all consequential blame on other, stronger shoulders.

Jerrold hung up the receiver and faced the White Elephant grimly. The White Elephant, it must be admitted, seemed not in the least disturbed, rather pleased in fact, as though, like Prudence, he washed his hands of the entire affair and left himself to Jerrold's disposal.

And then like a rare flash of inspiration Jerrold saw a way out. He scribbled quickly on a piece of paper.

"I tell you what," he said triumphantly. "She's gone out in the car—Jerry, I mean. You go up to the house and see Prudence. She'll tell you what to do. It seems you are expected to take a position and go to work for me. Come in tomorrow if you think you can stand it, and we'll see what we can scare up. But the first thing for you to do is to go right up there as fast as you can and see Prudence."

Jerrold sent a boy from the shop to take him to the house in one of the cars, and Duane found himself standing on the wide veranda of the great white house, shadowy beneath great branching maples with leaves faintly turning to gold at the edges, before he realized that he had no idea under heaven as to whom he had come there to see.

"See Prudence," Jerrold had told him, with vast relief.

"In love like Prudence," Jerry had said on that memorable night in Carter Blake's kitchen.

"Good Lord!" he thought in trepidation. "Am I to burt it out like that. Lead me to Prudence?" For what or whomsoever she might be, whether sister, companion, or friend, he had no slightest idea.

In another instant he would have bolted for freedom from this embarrassing predicament, but the door opened in the face of his dismay, and Katie's sober placid features confronted him.

"Er-uh," he stammered nervously, and then he faced it bravely, with that winning smile which never yet had failed to blaze a trail for him. "It sounds rather a fool's errand, I know," he said pleasantly, "but Mr. Harmer sent me up and told me to see Prudence."

CHAPTER V

Jerry's Mother

Duane's plaintive announcement at the hospitable door of the Harmer home found echo in a soft peal of sympathetic laughter from within, and she came herself to receive him. Prudence, both hands outstretched in welcome.

"I'm Prudence," she said. "I am Jerry's mother. Come right in, won't you? It was just like my husband to send you to me in some such crazy fashion."

Duane felt a pleasant, curious quiet come over him as he looked at her. Prudence! Jerry had thought it was falling in love like—Prudence. Jerrold had sent him in triumph to—Prudence. This was Prudence.

In spite of the extreme slenderness of her figure, in spite of the delicate pallor of her creamy skin and the faint suggestion of silver in the soft brown hair, there was nothing of frailty about her, rather a sort of youthful, undying buoyancy. Duane loved the humorous droop of her sensitive lips, the humorous light of interest in her bright eyes.

Prudence laughed, holding his hand companionably in hers, as she drew him into the wide lovely room, where she motioned him lightly to an easy chair, and then tucked herself cozily into one corner of another, far too wide for her, leaning comfortably over the upholstered arm in his direction. She could have wept aloud over him, and yet she liked him. Prudence, with the rigid training of her Methodist ancestry, still stoutly affirmed that she never took a dislike to any human being, that she was positively without personal aversion. But when she liked it, it was with a quick unerring instinct which had never betrayed her trust.

She rejoiced that she felt this liking for the unfortunate young knight errant, who had come to the Middle West on such an absurd, boyish quest. Jerry might fool her father, might amaze and bewilder even one as skeptical as Duane, but Prudence saw through every little flaw in her armor, saw what lay beneath her stubborn resistance and her eager impulses, both springing as they did from the same emotion.

She found herself apologizing for her daughter. "You must really excuse Jerry if sometimes she seems a little self-willed, almost strong-headed, her father says. I can't imagine where she got so much backbone. I'm very easy about everything, and her father is wax in the hands of anyone who tries to wheedle him, but Jerry has a terrible mind once she gets it made up."

Duane found himself thinking less of Jerry than of Prudence, rather, thinking through Prudence to Jerry again. His impression of that lovely though willful young woman had to undergo a swift transformation now that he saw Prudence. She explained everything he had not understood before. He found her a rational accounting for the moods of a maddening maiden.

Prudence did not ask questions. She just talked, laughing with him, at New York, at Jerry, at the Middle West, and at his curious obedience to the caprice of her always capricious daughter.

"And you may have to go to work, too," she told him. "She seems quite to have set her heart on making you work. She used to scoff at the nobility of labor as applied to herself, but she seems to have no such scruples in regard to you. Perhaps she is going to ennoble you in spite of yourself. But possibly you will not mind. You do not look at all lazy."

"I've worked before—as you might say. Well, I never washed cars for a living, but perhaps I can if I must."

He asked Prudence if it surprised or disappointed her, when Jerry gave up her dreams of Art, her hope of becoming a painter.

"Not a bit," this amazing woman told him. "It didn't surprise me, and it certainly didn't disappoint me. I was glad of it. I knew all the time she couldn't paint."

"Then why did you send her—alone—to study, to—"

"I knew it, but she didn't. She had to find out somehow, didn't she?" And then she talked more of Jerry, of what she had felt might be in existence but had not known in person. "She may not be much of an artist," she said, "but she's a beautiful, wonderful daughter to Jerrold and me. We don't care whether she can paint or not, she's ours."

After a little, when he felt he could safely venture to intrude upon the intimately personal, he asked rather awkwardly:

"Would you mind telling me—how—you fell in love?"

Prudence blushed a little, laughed delightedly. "Oh, the silliest thing," she said apologetically. "Didn't Jerry tell you?"

And then she told him of that early morning on the level Iowa countryside, when she went coasting down a steep grade on a borrowed bicycle into disaster and wreckage at the bottom. When he sympathized, laughing, with the Prudence lying in the dust by the roadside, battered and crumpled and torn with the ruins of the borrowed wheel about her, and on her conscience—

"Oh, don't be sorry," she pleaded gaily, joining his laughter. "For I opened my eyes and there stood over me—Jerrold—Jerry's father—and we looked at each other—"

Duane's lips were a rigid line. "Love at first sight?" he muttered grimly. "I might have known it."

Prudence nodded. "Yes, love at first sight," she repeated softly. "Don't you let anyone tell you there's no such thing. There is! At least there was in our day. Oh, well, perhaps it is not technically and scientifically down in the books as love at first sight. But there is that little pleased wakening up, that warm attraction—and if it stops, it is nothing. But if it goes on and on, it is love at first sight. Like ours! But perhaps things are different now, times are changed, and girls are very different."

Duane was looking past Prudence now, beyond her, to the heart of Jerry, her daughter, unchanged with the changing times. In that moment he knew with undoubting sureness why he had come to this remote and curious place in answer to the impulsive appeal of her letter. His eyes, on Prudence's face, saw not hers but Jerry's.

"I'm surprised she didn't tell you about it," Prudence was saying. "From the time she could talk, she has adored that bit of the family history. When she was a baby, and a little girl—yes, and until she was a pretty big one, she would always say she was going to fall in love like Prudence. She thought nothing else was really love! She used to tell perfect strangers, with the utmost frankness and assurance, that it would come to her like that—love—a sudden look, and knowing—"

Prudence laughed tenderly. "She got over it, of course. When she was old enough to understand, she realized that it doesn't happen like that once in a thousand years, or more."

Duane said nothing. For once, Prudence was wrong. Jerry had not changed. All through her babyhood, and into her woman's estate, that had been the dominant hope and faith of her gay romantic heart. And he, with profane, half-drunken songs, and hot half-drunken lips, had rent the veil from the beautiful illusion that had been her tenderest dream.

"I love Jerry," he said aloud to Prudence, in a very slow and sober voice. "Did you know it?"

"I—I rather thought so," said Prudence, with a little quivering of her sensitive lips. But she smiled immediately. "I—I don't mind a bit," she said bravely, in gentle apology for that betrayal of her lips.

CHAPTER VI

Jerry Calls for Help

Jerrold returned to his home that night in an unnaturally depressed and embittered frame of mind. Why should he, he demanded of Prudence in a stern voice, be saddled with a protegee like that—as big as himself, and who by his own admission knew nothing of motor cars beyond the steering wheel. Prudence agreed with him that it was perfectly reprehensible on the part of their daughter, and she couldn't imagine what things were coming to with this new generation! She balanced herself on the edge of the bathtub while he was shaving, followed him meekly into the room they shared together and stood patiently beside him at the dressing-table while he viciously jerked a fresh tie into place.

"It's the way you've raised her," he said in a tone that cleared himself of all moral responsibility for Jerry at least, however much Duane might rest upon his shoulders.

"I know it," Prudence agreed meekly. And then she told her husband that she hoped he would be very tactful that night when Jerry came home, so that things might work themselves out to a neat conclusion without interference on his part.

"Tact? What do you mean tact?" he demanded.

"Tact—you know what tact is, don't you? It means, say nothing and believe everything you hear," she explained sweepingly. "It means, don't say a word to Jerry about the young man, and if she mentions him of her own accord, believe everything she says even if you know she's making it up word for word as she goes along."

Jerrold, who had always found her counsel good, consented to follow the dictates of tact as she portrayed it in his dealing with Jerry. And so all during dinner they talked with passionate concentration of a thousand things that on this night interested them not in the least—of Jerry's houses and her struggles with labor problems, of Jerrold's business, and Prudence's innocent pursuits, of politics, wars and religion, but not one of the three raised a voice on the subject of Duane Allerton.

After dinner they sat down for a practice game of three-handed bridge, but when Prudence, playing spades, revoked twice in hot succession without a word of protest from her opponents, she put her cards on the table.

"You're not paying attention," she accused them. "How can you expect to teach me to play bridge unless you watch me? I trumped hearts twice, and here I have two hearts in my hand, and now I don't know what to do with them."

Jerry laughed. "Pretend they're trumps. Anything is fair if you can get away with it," she said indifferently.

And then her father, abandoning the admonitions of Prudence, and the guidance of tact, turned on her in desperation.

"See here, Jerry, I'll stand for a lot—and heaven knows I've had to—but when it comes to bringing a strange young man out here from New York and dumping him down on me without warning, and washing your hands of him in cold blood—well, you can't do it."

Jerry stood up. She looked her father straight in the face, but her voice was very gentle. "Why can't I?" was all she said.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE
By Mary Graham Bonner

THE WOOD IBIS

"It seems utterly senseless to me," said the Wood Ibis in the big bird house on the zoo, "to hear of creatures quarrelling."

"Now I am a big bird. I could boss around many of the little birds, if I wished."

"But to my mind it would be a very mean thing to do."

"Especially if they were smaller than myself."

"It would be so easy to make a smaller bird do what I wanted to do, but there wouldn't be anything to that."

"It would be unfair, and I would be nothing less than a bird-bully."

"You're right," said the White-Faced Glossy Ibis.

"And you mean what you say, too. You do what you say you do, as the old, old saying used to go, you practice what you preach."

"Well," said the Wood Ibis, "I try to do what I preach—only I didn't mean to preach exactly."

"I know," said the White-Faced Glossy Ibis, "and neither do you. But the old saying of practicing what you preach is a good one."

"I've heard people scolding some one for the very same sort of thing they do themselves."

"I've heard them talk of some one who was a gossip or tattletale and then gossip and tattletale themselves."

"But you are different."

"Well," said the Wood Ibis, "I don't like quarrelling."

"I have pleasures. I enjoy looking for my food in the sand with my long beak."

"So do I," agreed the White-Faced Glossy Ibis, whose bill was certainly very, very long.

"Quarrelling," continued the Wood Ibis, "is so foolish because it doesn't do any good."

"It makes everyone who is quarrelling feel unhappy. Everyone says so."

rid things they don't mean to say, and goodness only knows how some of those things may hurt."

Now Mr. Wood Ibis looked very handsome as he stood talking to Mr. White-Faced Glossy Ibis.

Mr. Wood Ibis wore his best black and white suit and all the other birds looked at him admiringly as well as fondly, for he was popular in the bird house.

"Sparrows are little creatures without a great deal of sense, though they're nice enough in their way," continued Mr. Wood Ibis, "but they quarrel in a very stupid fashion."

"The whole point to me in not quarrelling is because it only makes us all unhappy."

"No matter who is doing the quarrelling, it causes unhappiness all around."

"And, oh, goodness, mercy me, there are so many other nicer, jollier, more friendly ways of spending our time."

Just then the keeper took some children through the bird house, and pointing out the Wood Ibis, he said:

"There's as gentle and sensible a bird as there is to be found."

"This made the Wood Ibis both happy and proud."

And every other bird in the bird house agreed with the keeper, which made the Wood Ibis rejoice.

For he hated quarrelling and loved friendliness and good nature.

FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

High Points in Extension Club Work For 1925.

With forty-seven per cent of all our club members reporting on their club work for the year 1925, we beat our best previous state record by twelve per cent. This is a new high mark for our achievements and should lend encouragement and add determination to our efforts for the coming year, advises Sterling C. Evans, extension service club leader.

Corn Clubs.
The reports on our crop club records show that the average production of our corn club members for 1925 was nineteen bushels per acre. While this is not as large, by several bushels, as our record in 1924, it is still a splendid showing when compared to the average production for the entire state which was only nine bushels. One boy produced eighty-eight bushels on his acre of land. This is all very conclusive evidence of the value of good seed and good cultivation as demonstrated by these junior farmers.

Grain Sorghum Clubs.
Our boys growing grain sorghum made even a better record than those growing corn. They produced an average of twenty-six bushels of grain on their acres while the average for the state was only nineteen bushels. The boy making the highest production in growing this crop gathered seventy-seven bushels from his acre plot.

Cotton Clubs.
Now when we consider the record of our cotton club boys, we find even a greater spread between their production and the average production of the state, than among our grain clubs.

Many reports came in from time to time during the past year telling of increased production and outstanding results made by club boys which all goes to show the value of their organization as a medium of doing extension work and giving important demonstrations in agriculture.

The Outlook for 1926.
Never before was the outlook so promising for club work. A renewed interest is being taken on the part of our entire organization in doing club work and in using these boys to demonstrate the methods that should be advanced in our work. Constantly we are having examples brought to our attention where club work is being used as a medium of carrying on the United States Department of Agriculture made a survey of extension activities in Middlesex County, Massachusetts, and made this report: "Fifty-one per cent of the families having boys and girls in club work reported changes in practices as compared with three per cent of the families without club members." It is also found that in the national report compiled on all extension activities in 1923 that club demonstrations comprised thirty-seven per cent of all demonstrations carried on through our national organization. All of which shows that more and more we are getting larger returns and quicker changes through our work with the boys.

Livestock Feeding Clubs.
Fourteen county agents report that they have club members feeding calves and pigs for the spring show in Fort Worth. A total of 127 fat calves and 51 pigs will be exhibited. However, we have a great many more pigs being fed which will not be shipped to Fort Worth. San Patricio County has eighty-six pigs on feed with the group weighing something between 280 to 300 pounds, and several going above this average. These will be sold locally on the 27th of February and promise to bring some very handsome returns to the club members. It is interesting in connection with this particular club project to learn from the county agent, C. M. Merritt, that every extension project in the county is an outgrowth of his club work.

Wilkinson of Kleberg County, is using the club boys of his county to demonstrate the value of good Hegari seed in this county. He plans to have twenty-five boys, growing acre patches each over his county, and expects this result: First, to show value of good seed; second, to demonstrate how and the value of roguing, and third, to produce good seed for the county at home and send it well scattered next year. This is a splendid project and one that surely will succeed.

Farm and Home Suggestions.
Screen the house and keep out the flies and mosquitoes.
Begin to swat the flies early before they multiply to uncontrollable numbers.
The farm premises should be kept free from decayed vegetables, meat scraps, etc., and all obnoxious odors should be removed which attract flies and insects.
Start in time to kill the weeds before they gain such headway to be able to kill the crop.
Gather up the farm implements, have them oiled and painted and ready for use in an emergency. This may save many trips to town and much valuable time, and time means money.

The Cyclone Finish

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

"GORGEOUS! No other word for it!" Leslie shouted, hands fast upon the cables on either side, as the swing swept in a full semi-circle, out and back again.

"Dare you to stop!" she called gayly to the husky men who were motive power.

The swing was a ponderous affair. Three-inch cables playing through wrought-iron rings clamped stoutly to a right-angled branch of a century-old oak. The branch was more than a foot through, and sound as a bell. The paneled seat was big enough for two. Bert Axley and Joe Sessums had put it up—by leave of Parson Sessums, Joe's grandfather, owner of the squat rambling gray house, the level thick-turfed yard, and a thousand rich acres besides. He kept a young herd, so liked to have the new generation about him. Hospitable as sunlight to those of his own age, it was noted that staying visitors were generally under twenty-five. Also and further, Joe's crony, Bert Axley, was almost as much child of the house as Joe himself.

Joe's widowed mother had come there, bringing her boy, the sole grandson. Between them all, the child had been so handsomely spoiled he had grown up the finest young fellow in the county. Tall, limber, light-footed, clear-headed, adorably faulty, more adorably kind, it was felt that his proper matching came near to being a matter of public concern. As to Miss Leslie Gilflower there were two opinions. Mighty pretty, rich as cream, a Martin granddaughter to offset the obscure Gilflower strain, the solid element couldn't just see her as Mrs. Joseph Sessums, whereas the gayer folk felt such matching must have been made in heaven.

She was at Sessame for the summer, that her father and mother were spending in South America. Bert and Joe had surrendered abjectly at about the third glance. A square game it should be his tact agreement— with the best man winning—if anybody.

The countryside enchanted her, by its unlikeliness to landscaped "estates" amongst which she perforce lived. Darning on the soft turf to Joe's whistling with Bert for a partner, or with Joe to the rhythms of the plantation band—fiddles, guitar and a triangle, made her a fairy tripping it in moonshine. Granny in her wheel-chair bent to see it with her strongest glasses, beating time softly with her unseathed left hand. But the real marvel and magnet was the big swing—she saw it first with Joe and Bert "pumping" in it, standing face to face upon the seat, bending, swaying, faster, faster, ever higher, until they came earthward, catching heavily twigs wrenched off recklessly at highest ascent. Leslie pleaded hard for a share in such sport—she was unwisely laughed to scorn. That night under a midnight full moon, she slipped into the swing alone, somehow set it rocking, then could not stop it for ever so long. Joe and Bert watching her from ambush, chuckled—hard at first—then as one man they scrambled out and up, crying joyously: "You talk about pumpkin!—when you don't even know how to let the cat die." Discovering that she was on the edge of tears, they comforted her with promises—they would teach her—oh, ever so many things—to ride standing upon a horse's bare back, for example, to hit the ace of hearts at ten paces, drive a two-twenty trotter all by herself—even a good bit later, when her head had set swimming, to be really truly swung—high enough almost to pick leaves for herself.

That morning there were clouds in streaks, at rising, but there was no threat of storm.

How it happened nobody ever could say. One minute blue sky, sunshine, hardly a breath of air—the next, from nowhere it seemed, roaring tempests, thunder out-roaring them—and the world beginning to rock and reel. The swingers were double-passing—sending the passenger upward with all their might, back and forth. Just as the seat and the girl cleared their hands the big oak began writhing violently—bending huge branches half-way to earth, shivering in all their fibers as they bent. One of the sturdyest caught the seat, held it fast, and swept back and upward. Then through the sudden dusk a sword of white light rent the century-old heart in twain. No voices could prevail against the storm. No eye saw anything for a minute—then dimly the watchers perceived that half the big tree was toppling to a fall. The half that bore a burden so precious! As it trembled slowly sudden stiffness fell. Through it both men shouted: "Hold fast till you see us—then jump—if you can. We'll catch you—or die trying," this last in their throats wordless.

They began to see Leslie—she had not fainted—instead she had somehow scrambled upright, and clung to the slacking cable with both hands. Roots cracked like pistons—the tree leaped as though alive. The cable grew suddenly taut. Leslie noted that first. With her heart in her mouth she clutched it farther out—and tried to go along it hand over hand. Strength failed her—she was dropping—but not to death—into cradling arms that received her tenderly for all their steely strength. Afterward, of course she married Joe. Equally of course, they lived happy ever after.

Have Little Fear of Artificial Wool
Woolen manufacturers in the West riding of Yorkshire are not disturbed by the discovery of artificial wool; neither are the wool merchants concerned in buying and selling the raw material perturbed.

As far as can be ascertained the new material shows no immediate sign of coming out the market in quantities sufficient to affect the price of wool.

The new synthetic fiber, which has a vegetable basis, has been subjected to exhaustive tests which show that it can be used with advantage in both knitted and woven fabrics.

It can be supplied to spinners. It is stated, in practically any length of staple required, and is suitable for use in a variety of fabrics for clothes, rugs, and similar goods.

Like artificial silk, it can be used for fancy effects in combination with wool or other material.—London Tit-Bits.

Modern Food Makes for Unsound Teeth
Return to food conditions much more primitive than those at present in vogue will be necessary if the ravages of dental diseases are to be checked. This is the lesson derived by Dr. T. D. Campbell of Adelaide university, Australia, from an exhaustive examination of teeth and jaws of Australian aborigines which he finds are strikingly large, well formed and healthy.

"There is in every respect," Doctor Campbell says, "a very marked difference between the well-formed Australian dentition, and the ill-formed, disease-stricken masticatory outfit with which modern civilized peoples are burdened."

The marked immunity from dental disease among the aboriginal children and grown-ups, he attributed to the coarse, tough food which formed their diet and the crude methods of preparation and cooking.

Supremacy Maintained through Features which Established Ford Leadership

Left-Hand Drive— Originally introduced by Henry Ford on the Model T car in 1908 and since adopted for most American-made cars.

Three Point Motor Suspension— First used by Henry Ford in 1903, and a feature of the Model T power plant for eighteen years.

Dual Ignition System— Dual ignition is provided for Ford cars, (1) the Ford magneto and (2) the generator and storage battery. This has been a great factor in establishing the Ford reputation for reliability.

Planetary Transmission— Costs more to build than the conventional sliding gear type but gives better light car control.

Multiple Disc-in-oil Clutch— The multiple disc clutch is generally conceded to be the best and smoothest type for any car. The Ford clutch runs in oil.

Thermo-Syphon Cooling System— Extremely simple—always efficient. No water pump to require packing. Circulation of water is governed entirely by engine temperature.

Simple, Dependable Lubrication— Exceedingly simple, combining the splash principle with gravity flow. No pump required.

Torque Tube Drive— Henry Ford originated the Torque Tube in 1908—a driving principle now embodied in many of the highest priced cars.

"We have never lowered the quality of the car to reduce the price"
