SANDERSON WINS FROM FORT STOCKTON

Champions of Mexican Border Highway Beat Oil Field Winners 10 to 5.

The Sanderson Boosters added another victory to their long list Sunday when they defeated Fort Stockton, under the steady pitching of "Matty" Maddox, local ace. Sanderson started the fireworks in the first round. Robertson led off with a sharp single, on the first pitched ball, and a single by M. White, a double by Barbee coupled with an error, gave Sanderson three runs in the first inning. They held the lead until the eighth when Fort Stockton tied the score 4 to 4. Sanderson put the game in the winning column in the first of the ninth, by scoring six runs. Fort Stockton scored one run in the ninth to end the game 10 to 5.

Robertson had a perfect day at bat, getting four hits in four times at bat. A large crowd of fans made the trip with the ball team and made themselves noticed by their cheering for the home team.

Sanderson will probably play the Houston Sunsets here Friday or Saturday. They play the El Paso Sunsets at El Paso for the championship of the S. P. League in Texas, and if arrangements can be made, Sanderson will have them stop over here for a series of games on their return to Houston.

In all probability a game will be played on the local diamond Sunday against Marfa.

AS IT LOOKS TO ME

TRANSFORMATION.

By Jack Ainslie.
From my front porch I see a number of men at work putting up a little building on a hillside nearby.

But yesterday, the lot on which they are building was a mere rock-pile, drab and weed-grown. Tomorrow that rocky weed patch shall have undergone a marvelous transformation. There, a busy wife shall, early and late, attend to the countless duties of a housekeeper and mother.

To that place a tired but happy father shall return, each evening, after the day's toil.

There, gay, bright-eyed children shall romp and play and dream their fairy dreams.

Trouble and sorrow, sickness and death, shall there find their way and weigh heavily upon brave and wondering hearts.

But there, too, shall be welcomed seasons of happiness and gladness to compensate for the dark hours of sadness.

All too soon, little children shall there emerge into manhood and womanhood. Romance shall cast its magic spell over their lives and cupid shall merrily draw his mythical bow to send the arrow of love into young hearts.

From there they shall go out into the world to play their part, small or great, in the captivating drama of human effort.

Fond and indulgent parents, from the shelter of that building, shall hopefully and prayerfully watch the progress and success of their grown-up sons and daughters. Or, perchance, it may be their happy lot to shed bitter tears over the wanderings and waywardness of a prodigal.

Quite a wonderful change has a few days of labor wrought upon that bit of ground.

The rock-pile has become a home.

School Opens September 12

The local public schools will open here Monday, September 12, according to announcement made this week by Supt. T. L. Williams. During the first week in September the faculty will go to Alpine, where they will hold joint institute with Alpine and neighboring towns. Mr. Williams states that the faculty has been completed with the exception of the fourth grade teacher, which vacancy will be filled by the opening of school. All the high school faculty will be back next year and Miss Helen Eyley will be a new member added. She has been elected to teach English. Several grade teachers are to be added due to the crowded condition existing there.

This year Mrs. J. A. MacMillan will be principal of the Mexican school and Miss Myrtle Harrell will be the assistant.

Carpenters have been busy this past week repairing the main building and getting it ready for school. The grounds are being cleaned and play ground equipment being made ready for opening day.

An unusually large enrollment is expected this year.

Rev. Fr. Bertrand has as his guest his niece, Senorita Ramona Grieve of Barcelona, Spain, and Mrs. J. T. Fleming of Los Angeles, Cal. These visitors are very much impressed with our city and are liking it more and more every day.

D. J. Guinan, who has been appointed secretary-manager of the Mexican Border Highway Association left this week for Alpine where he went to assume his duties. Mr. Guinan has made many friends during the few months he has been secretary of the local Chamber of Commerce, who regret to see him leave, but congratulate him on the securing of such a responsible position.

Jack Reinke motored in from San Antonio last Saturday to visit relatives here and to join Mrs. Reinke and son who have been here the past few weeks visiting relatives. They returned home Tuesday, accompanied by Mrs. Reinke's mother, Mrs. P. F. Robertson, who will visit them for several weeks.

Miss Carrie Ivy has returned from a visit with relatives in Vanderpool, and has accepted a position with the Sanderson Drug Co.

YOUNG WOMEN MAY KEEP WELL

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Here is Proof

St. Paul, Minn.—"Here is a little advice I would like to have you put in the papers. Mrs. Jack Lorberter of 704 Dellwood Place writes to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company. 'If young women want to keep their health and strength for the next thirty years of their lives, it is best to start in right now and take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have tried the Compound myself and received fine results from its use. In describing her condition before taking the Compound, she writes, 'I was afraid in my own house in broad daylight, I used to lock the doors and pull down the shades so that nobody could see me.' One day a booklet advertising the Vegetable Compound was left on her porch and she read it through. In so doing, she found a letter from a woman whose condition was similar to her own. 'I bought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound,' Mrs. Lorberter continued, 'and have had fine results. My condition made me a burden to my husband. Now I ask him, 'How is housekeeping?' and he says, 'It is just like being in Heaven!' Are you on the Sunlit Road to Better Health?'

And He Couldn't

Wife (with newspaper)—I notice, dear, that a post-mortem examination is often made in murder cases. What does that mean? Hub—A post-mortem examination, my dear, is intended to allow the victim to state verbally his own testimony against his assailant, and is taken down in writing. Wife—Thanks, darling; and you won't look down on me, will you, because I haven't your education? He said, he wouldn't.—Boston Transcript.

Ye Gods! Another Atrocity

Flyosan still killing flies and mosquitoes by the millions.

ARE you still fighting flies and mosquitoes by swatting them one at a time? Or do you use Flyosan—original, and best liquid spray from an atomizer—killing 100,000 of the whole lot!

Monkeys and the common house fly, the deadliest pests that invade the home, are loaded with millions of disease germs. "Swatting" them scatters these deadly germs into the air which you and your family breathe. Flyosan floats through your rooms. It destroys all these germs as well as all the flies and mosquitoes which carry them.

Feminine Appeal in Mind's Many Changes

Man is to blame for woman's habit of changing her mind so often, declares Supreme Court Justice John Ford of New York in an article in Liberty. "Since the beginning of time," Justice Ford asserts, "woman has been the victim of man. She has been pursued, abused, and ill-treated by the big, hulking brute, man. Being weaker, physically, she has had to use guile to protect herself and her offspring. Generations of practice have made her instinctively the master of man. "Man is her game," Justice Ford continues, "and she knows how to handle him. Not the least of her attractiveness to the male is the very thing of which some of the males complain: her changes of mind. The unexpectedness of her is a wonderful cure for monotony. No married man can complain of monotony in his wife's thinking."

Highest Patriotism Not Exemplified in Spirit of Internationalism

By CURTIS D. WILBUR, Secretary of the Navy.

IT IS no more necessary for all churches to unite in one organization than it is for all people in the community to live all in the same house and eat at the same table in order to achieve unity and brotherhood. Loyalty to one's own home is as vital as loyalty to the community, so the Christian Endeavor movement teaches loyalty to the church as well as loyalty to Christ, and finds in loyalty to the individual church no inconsistency to the loyalty to the fundamental principles of getting together. And we find that the churches are getting nearer together.

As the young people who are met together in Christian Endeavor conventions and in the co-operative efforts have reached positions of authority in the churches, they have and always will continue to cooperate. In this spirit we look for greater unity.

This is the day of consecration and I ask you to consider our nation and its flag. Under that flag no human being need despair nor suffer injustice, but there are those with us who are decrying patriotism and nationalism and lifting up internationalism as a higher and better patriotism.

The brotherhood of men is said to be superior to the obligations of citizenship. This seems like loyalty to Christ, but when Paul dealt with the spirit, he said, "But if any provide not for his own and specially for those of his house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

It is impossible for a man to be loyal to mankind and not loyal to his own part of mankind, his family and his nation. If he hasn't the spirit of unity with his own people he cannot have the spirit of unity with all men.

Government in United States Tending Toward Regulatory Excess

By ALBERT C. RITCHIE, Governor of Maryland.

The United States is passing from a government of law to a government of men and a power that often approaches tyranny has been vested in the federal government. The government is no longer the creature and protector of our individual rights, but is rapidly becoming dictator of them. Today local self-government furnishes the only efficient, effective, workable basis on which the diversified and changing problems in our diversified and changing land can ever be practically settled.

The American government has become the most regulatory in the Western world, outside of Russia and Italy. Inspectors and spies and official regulators follow the American from the day he takes his first nourishment.

Here he is told what he may eat, there what he may smoke and everywhere what he may drink. What he may read or write or see on the stage is prescribed, too; and not content with this, his government advises him how to hang his curtains in his home, what meat to cook for his Christmas dinner and, not two months ago, the Department of Agriculture distributed throughout the country a treatise entitled, "A Pocket Essay on Kissing."

The growing contempt for law is attributable in a large measure to this unwholy zeal for more law. Those at least who knew what their rights were under a government of law often do not know under this government of men whether they have any rights at all.

Women Have Proved Worthy of High Position in the Economic World

By MRS. ERMA TEMPLEMAN, Women's Clubs' President.

There is no telling how far feminine permeation of industry will go. It is to woman's credit that she went into industry and business; she merely sought the work that had gone from her hands. The modern woman, then, is the product of her economic developments not brought about voluntarily by herself. When electric power takes the dirt and muscular strain from industry, even man will have to become intelligent to keep his place in the economic world.

The time was when girls and women could remain at home and be self-supporting, but with all the heavier activities of the home taken care of on the outside, women must and have taken their place in the world of trade and commerce.

This change of scene for her activities came so suddenly as to shake the world and there are some, even in this day, who are constantly proclaiming that women are out of place in the business world. The speed with which women have adjusted themselves to their environment is marvelous.

Character and Faith in Truth and Goodness Far Above Material Things

By DR. ERNEST WRAY ONEAL, Methodist, Chicago.

Certain phases of modern life indicate an age of veneer and hypocrisy. Man's eye are charmed today with gilding rather than pure gold. Veneer is as popular as the genuine article; not character, but codfish aristocracy is the popular thing. Instead of statesmen in politics we have hired assassins, ward hevelers and grafters, in business we have watered stocks, cooked accounts, salted mines and sham everywhere. Even in religion there are too many fakes in these days. Just to look like a Christian seems to answer the purpose.

Character, a willingness to serve and live for the good of others, and a steadfast faith in truth and goodness, are better than all the splendor of clothes and the desire for material wealth.

Youth Ever Ready and Eager to Accept a Real Religious Message

By DR. ALFRED E. STEARNS, Principal Phillips Academy.

Traditional beliefs and old stock phrases have no power over youth, but a real religious message, interpreted in the language of the day, will be received. My pride in youth increases constantly when I see how manfully they are withstanding the dastardly assault on their finest instincts which is being made constantly by obscene literature, loose stage and movies, and exponents of free-thought philosophy.

And the home is not entirely blameless. It is no longer the fashion to give religious instruction in the home, and the universities and colleges shy at the religious issue. The church is still hiding behind man-made creeds and moss-covered dogmas which offer nothing to youth in a new scientific world in which we live.

Gas production in the Laredo district was boosted 115,000,000 cubic feet daily during the past week by the bringing-in of one monster gasser making 65,000,000 to 70,000,000 cubic feet daily, another making 40,000,000 cubic feet daily and a small gasser making 10,000,000 cubic feet daily.

Texas is in a fair way to be included at the end of the year in the one million passenger automobile registration class. Up to date the total registrations, according to records in the State Highway Department, stands at 909,725, the highest total yet reached in this state. There remain five months of the current year for registration filing with the Highway Department, and it is predicted that by the end of that period the total will reach the one million goal.

Efforts are being made to have the Prince of Wales visit this city during the national encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, September 4 to 10, when the 25th anniversary of the founding of East Greenwich, a suburb, will be celebrated simultaneously. An invitation was cabled to the heir apparent to the British throne recently by the general encampment committee, expressing the hope that Wales would see fit to attend the convention in conjunction with his trip to Canada.

No definite decision has been received in regard to the invitation extended to President Coolidge whose presence at the reunion of veterans is being sought by the encampment committee and Commander-in-Chief Stitt of the V. F. W. It is believed that Coolidge's reply will be based on the date of his return to Washington from the Black Hills in South Dakota.

Providence recently entertained Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh in his tour of the country in the interests of aviation. The committee in charge of the V. F. W. encampment plans again pressed its invitation to Lindbergh, seeking his presence among the thousands of ex-service men expected to invade Providence during the convention.

Other notables who have been invited as honor guests of the encampment include Sir Esme Howard, ambassador from Great Britain; Nobile Giacomo de Martino, Italian ambassador; General Clarence R. Edwards, com-

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Stratham, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, is a carefree youth whose chief activities are fishing and hunting. Proud of his marksmanship, he gives an exhibition before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on a beach near him. The men hurry a chest while he watches. The work finished, he sees two of the strangers kill the third. The actual slayer is the man with whom Lindsay had talked the day before. Lindsay's presence is discovered.

The silence lengthened; from the far distance the whistle of a flock of curlew came to my ears. How strange, I reflected idly, that that should be the last sound I would hear; and then, slowly, deliberately, the dark pirate lowered his weapon until his muzzle pointed toward the ground. Then came the reaction. A momentary faintness and dizziness seized me; I felt myself sway, almost threw out an arm for support. Then, with a great fear lest these men should mock my cowardice, I bit my lip savagely, thrust my nails into my flesh, and the weakness passed.

Burford turned inquiringly toward the man in the red coat. The captain's face was alight with some emotion that I could not fathom; the dawning of some new idea was there, and whatever it was, it must have pleased him hugely, for all at once he began to laugh, not openly and heartily, as I was accustomed to see men laugh, but silently, and as it seemed to me, evilly. Presently, since he did not communicate to his companion the reason for it, my friend of yesterday inquired with some sharpness, "What cause for laughter?"

"Cause?" answered the captain, becoming grave again. "Much cause. What if we sent this one in place of the other?"

What he meant by this was unknown to me, but evidently Burford understood, for he seemed to ponder for a moment, then queried, "What gain?"

"What gain?" Barclay repeated. "All the gain in the world. I spare his life; hence he goes as my man. He will be welcomed without suspicion; the fatted calf, perhaps, will be killed for him. And at a time appointed he delivers my enemy into my hand."

What they were talking about I had not the remotest idea, but I could see that what Barclay said impressed his hearer. For an instant Burford stood in silence, then glanced at me with a scrutinizing and critical air. "But they have the other's picture, and he has a scar."

Captain Barclay, smiling as if at some humorous thought which I could not comprehend, answered lightly, "A simple enough matter, my dear Burford; simple enough."

Burford appeared to have no more objections, and I was beginning to think that for some mysterious reason I was going to be saved after all, when suddenly the captain gave a sharp exclamation of disappointment. "Ah, I forgot," he said. "The other is a dead shot. That, in fact, is the main reason for his coming—to drill the body-guard. The old fox adds other reasons, but if I know my man it's the marksmanship and not the nephew he wants. So unless this lad can shoot like the devil himself, we must give up the plan."

Again I shuddered, partly at his words but even more at the business-like way in which he once more raised his pistol, as if to complete the work where he had abandoned it. But this time, for a change, it was Burford who was to come to my aid. "But he can shoot like the devil himself," he exclaimed. "I saw him kill yesterday three sea-ducks with three bullets, and two of the birds were on the wing."

The captain hesitated; finally his fingers, to my great relief, left the handle of his too-ready pistol. "It may have been chance," he answered, gazing at me as if suspicious of my merits as a marksman. "Still, we can see. Go to the gig, Burford, and bring me my gun."

Burford departed. The dark captain stood waiting silently until his follower returned and handed him his piece. Gradually, while we had been talking, the mist had begun to fade, so that now, while it was still impossible to see to any distance, yet for a space of perhaps one hundred yards around us the air was tolerably clear, and the faint light of the sun could be seen, painting the gray and beautiful gold. From the mainland, where they had spent the night in the fresh-water ponds and streams, flocks of ducks were passing continuously out to sea. Indeed, the captain had no sooner taken the gun from Burford's hand than, heralded by a rapid beat of wings, a single black duck hurtled by overhead. Like a flash, the piece leaped to his shoulder, and the bird, struck dead in midair, turned over and over and crashed heavily upon the sand. Without the slightest emotion, the captain handed me my gun. "Do likewise," he commanded.

And with a significant touch of the finger on pistol butt, he added curtly, "No tricks, mind."

I was in no mood for tricks. Nor, to be honest, was I eager to enter this test of marksmanship, for I knew that my nerves had been sorely tried, and I knew also how simple a matter it is for the best-aimed charge to scatter and fall to strike a vital spot. However, there was but one thing to do, and a second later a wildgeon shot out of the fog, and, catching sight of us, began towering upward with the speed and elusiveness for which a wild duck is noted. It was not an easy shot; yet so strong was the fowler's instinct in my heart that without thought I swung on the bird, and, hitting him with the very center of my heavy charge, fairly drove him upward through the air before he turned over and dropped lifeless within a dozen feet of where we stood.

The captain said nothing, nor from the expression on his face could I tell whether or not he was pleased at my display. "Load," he commanded curtly, and handed his own piece to Burford to be recharged. Once again we stood prepared, and before a minute had passed a pair of low-flying pintail ducks swept by us, separating.

Burford turned inquiringly toward the man in the red coat. The captain's face was alight with some emotion that I could not fathom; the dawning of some new idea was there, and whatever it was, it must have pleased him hugely, for all at once he began to laugh, not openly and heartily, as I was accustomed to see men laugh, but silently, and as it seemed to me, evilly. Presently, since he did not communicate to his companion the reason for it, my friend of yesterday inquired with some sharpness, "What cause for laughter?"

"Cause?" answered the captain, becoming grave again. "Much cause. What if we sent this one in place of the other?"

What he meant by this was unknown to me, but evidently Burford understood, for he seemed to ponder for a moment, then queried, "What gain?"

"What gain?" Barclay repeated. "All the gain in the world. I spare his life; hence he goes as my man. He will be welcomed without suspicion; the fatted calf, perhaps, will be killed for him. And at a time appointed he delivers my enemy into my hand."

What they were talking about I had not the remotest idea, but I could see that what Barclay said impressed his hearer. For an instant Burford stood in silence, then glanced at me with a scrutinizing and critical air. "But they have the other's picture, and he has a scar."

Captain Barclay, smiling as if at some humorous thought which I could not comprehend, answered lightly, "A simple enough matter, my dear Burford; simple enough."

Burford appeared to have no more objections, and I was beginning to think that for some mysterious reason I was going to be saved after all, when suddenly the captain gave a sharp exclamation of disappointment. "Ah, I forgot," he said. "The other is a dead shot. That, in fact, is the main reason for his coming—to drill the body-guard. The old fox adds other reasons, but if I know my man it's the marksmanship and not the nephew he wants. So unless this lad can shoot like the devil himself, we must give up the plan."

Again I shuddered, partly at his words but even more at the business-like way in which he once more raised his pistol, as if to complete the work where he had abandoned it. But this time, for a change, it was Burford who was to come to my aid. "But he can shoot like the devil himself," he exclaimed. "I saw him kill yesterday three sea-ducks with three bullets, and two of the birds were on the wing."

The captain hesitated; finally his fingers, to my great relief, left the handle of his too-ready pistol. "It may have been chance," he answered, gazing at me as if suspicious of my merits as a marksman. "Still, we can see. Go to the gig, Burford, and bring me my gun."

Burford departed. The dark captain stood waiting silently until his follower returned and handed him his piece. Gradually, while we had been talking, the mist had begun to fade, so that now, while it was still impossible to see to any distance, yet for a space of perhaps one hundred yards around us the air was tolerably clear, and the faint light of the sun could be seen, painting the gray and beautiful gold. From the mainland, where they had spent the night in the fresh-water ponds and streams, flocks of ducks were passing continuously out to sea. Indeed, the captain had no sooner taken the gun from Burford's hand than, heralded by a rapid beat of wings, a single black duck hurtled by overhead. Like a flash, the piece leaped to his shoulder, and the bird, struck dead in midair, turned over and over and crashed heavily upon the sand. Without the slightest emotion, the captain handed me my gun. "Do likewise," he commanded.

CHAPTER III

The Panther Strikes.

For the first few moments I thought only of what I was doing, putting my back lustily into every stroke of the oars, and taking care to keep the most absolute time with Burford, who certainly set a lively and dashing stroke for me to follow. But since the captain, after a careless glance in my direction, seemed satisfied with my prowess and paid no further heed to me, I settled down mechanically into the rhythm of the steady sweep, and improved the opportunity to take, as it were, account of stock, and to look ahead to see whether this strange adventure was leading me.

For one thing, it was only too clear that I was among men with whom the life of a fellow creature counted for nothing. A word—a blow—a knife thrust or a pistol shot—that was their mode of life, not so much, perhaps, immoral as absolutely unmoral, without a law of God or man to check their fierce and unbridled passions. If only, by good luck, I could find myself once more armed, then I knew that whether I liked it or not it would be myself for my own hand—my life against that of every other man—and devil take the hindmost.

So much was clear. I could have wished that I had been equally certain of the reasons which had caused the unlooked-for staying of the captain's hand. Who was this "other" to whom they had referred—an inch taller than I, with a scar on his cheek, and a dead shot with rifle or gun? And for what reason was I to take his place, and deliver the captain's enemy into the captain's hands? There was no use in puzzling my tired wits; I must wait and see.

Curiously enough, though I admit it with shame, in spite of the fact that I was in imminent danger, in spite of the fact that I might never see another sunrise, yet so wayward is youth, so avid of adventure and contact with the world, that I was all eagerness to see this pirate ship, and thrilled with excitement every time I looked at the spare, silent figure in the stern, those keen eyes looking straight ahead, those delicate hands resting lightly on the tiller ropes. This man had just committed a hideous murder; had rewarded a follower with the basest treachery; and I felt my whole nature cry out against him in revolt. And yet, explain it as you will, there is something so wonderful in the display of power, something so magnificent in the man who leads, who lords it over his fellows, that now, against my will, I found myself admiring this ruffian for his high and mighty ways, and marveled as I thought of the vessel which he had sailed, the rich vessels he had looted, of the almost charmed life that he bore.

So meditating, I paid small heed to the passing moments until a curt word of command told me that we had reached our craft, and the next instant we had shot alongside, and the captain had leaped aboard, leaving Burford and myself to follow in his wake. Before I had time even to cast a glance around her decks, Burford, with extended arm, pointed to the eastward, to a dense column of smoke on the horizon, and whispered in my ear: "There's what's left of the Eastern Star."

I heard him with a sinking of the heart. This, then, was the fate of the bark I had seen loading only two days before, and the first taste of pirates and their ways made me realize more keenly than ever where I was, that I must keep my wits about me and, until I could find a chance to arm myself, my fists ready to strike. Then, glancing hastily around me, I saw that I was aboard a beautiful craft, schooner rigged, of perhaps two hundred tons, with lines which told any one familiar with the sea that she must be capable of great speed. Once more Burford pointed, this time aloft, and I saw that from her main topmast there floated a white flag, and in the middle a panther, sable, crouched to spring. "Another of your friends," said Burford grimly, "was right," and with this he left me, giving me my first chance to look forward and see with what material the craft was manned.

rectly over our heads, at almost precisely the same range as the flock at which the captain had fired. Two beautiful birds were flying close together and almost directly in line, and as they passed overhead I sighted at the leader, swung ahead, and pressed the trigger. Never in my life have I felt a keener thrill than when from out of the flock a beautiful drake dropped onto the sand, and lay there, beating his wings in his dying agonies. "Fetch it!" cried the captain imperiously; and I obeyed. The bird was brought by the time I had reached it, and, bringing it back, I handed it in silence to the captain. Through the dark breasts and out of the back at the base of the neck the ball had sped. The captain looked first at the duck, then at me. "A good shot," he admitted half reluctantly; then, as if realizing that this was inadequate praise, he added, more heartily, "An excellent shot."

I made no answer. It has always been one of my many failings to permit my emotions to show too readily in my face, and this must have been the case in the present instance, for the captain, eying me keenly, abruptly inquired, "Why should you be gloomy? Are you not satisfied with your aim?"

And now, utterly reckless as it was, for no one, I think, could have blamed me for concealing the truth, I had to yield to impulse and blurt it out. "I am gloomy," I answered, "because I missed my bird. They were flying faster than I thought, and they were higher than I thought; the fog deceived me. I held on the leader of the two; this drake was just behind. I deserve no praise! I missed."

Both the captain and his henchman stared at me as they might have stared at a lunatic; then simultaneously they roared with laughter. "In God's name," cried Barclay, when he could speak, "here at last we have Honesty; rampant, roaring Honesty, the greatest thing to a man in the whole wide world." And yet he did not seem ill-pleased either, perhaps because he felt that his reputation was restored; but in any event, to my great joy, his hand kept clear of his pistol butt. Evidently, for the time at least, my life was saved.

Every moment the fog was thinning beneath the rays of the sun, and now, observing the captain cast a quick glance out to sea, I followed the direction of his gaze and saw, some distance away, a handsome black schooner, hove to. That this was his vessel I had no doubt; and evidently he thought it time to be rejoicing her, for pointing to the corpse of his murdered follower, he said curtly: "Set that carrion adrift, and without more ado walked off in the direction of the gig.

With the utmost loathing, I turned to my hateful task, but so huge was the bulk of the dead sailor that I should have feared ill had it not been for the assistance of Burford. Between us, we managed to drag the body to the western shore and cast it adrift. I half-sick with disgust, Burford unconcernedly humming a tune. Then, as we turned to retrace our steps, he laid a hand on my arm and made a gesture in the direction the captain had taken. "Capt. Francis Barclay," he said quietly, "is better known in the Caribbean, as the Black Panther. One of your friends in the tavern was right."

Here, then, was one more surprise in this morning of grim adventures, but by this time, as it seemed to me, nothing in the world could greatly have startled me; I accepted the news almost as a matter of course, and walking on by Burford's side, I found the captain impatiently waiting for us in the stern of the gig.

"Take the stroke oar, Burford," he commanded. "And you, young man," he added with a frown, "shove off, and then take the bow oar, and see that you handle it like a sailor and keep pace with Burford, or it may be the worse for you."

I paid small heed, however, either to his frown or his threat, for I could row with the best, and knew it. Shoving off, therefore, I took my place as

as they glimpsed us, and passing one to our right, one to our left, giving us a close, but none too easy cross-shot. At once the cautious Burford dropped flat to escape the chance of being hit, and the captain, picking the bird on the right, shot him neatly out of the air. I, perforce, took the one on the left, but, to my horror, though I felt that I had held straight and true, he flew on as if untouched. From the corner of my eye I could see the captain's hand reaching for his pistol. "No, no," I cried. "Wait! For many a time I had known a duck to fly on as if unhurt, then suddenly collapse, stone-dead. And, fortunately for me, this was to prove one of those instances, for before the drake had reached the borders of the encircling fog, all at once his wings folded to his sides, and, darting downward through the air, he splashed, lifeless, into the sea."

The captain gazed at me as if uncertain whether it was luck or skill that was aiding me, and would, I think, have tested me yet again, but as he handed the gun to his subordinate, a flock of about twenty scamp ducks, closely massed, passed overhead, but well out of gunshot. With a sudden exclamation, he stooped, seized my rifle from the ground, leveled it and fired. I fairly held my breath; if he made a shot like this, then in all probability my doom was sealed. And for a second I thought he had been successful, for one of the flock started to fall, then, to my intense relief, recovered and flew strongly on after his companions, while through the clear, transparent air a single feather floated down.

"What a magnificent shot, not I, least," he exclaimed. "Can you bet that that young cockerel?" And he handed me my rifle.

I felt that it was now or never. What might be the humor of this strange man I knew not, but I sensed instinctively that he was inordinately vain of his skill, and that whatever might be the object of this difficult test, he was most eager to prove that he was a finer shot than a mere country boy. Yet, strangely enough, so keen in most men's minds is this desire to excel, that even now, while my life hung on the result of the next shot, and while I was of two minds whether it would be to my advantage to win or lose, still, illogically enough, humor the captain's pride by missing, while the captain's pride by missing, I and thus perhaps continuing to live, I nevertheless stood ready to do my best, and if I must die, at least to die with the memory of a shot well sped to lighten my pang.

I had not long to wait. Again a whistle of wings, and a half dozen red-heads emerged from the fog. They took no notice of us, but passed di-

Put Faith in Image to Frighten Smallpox

Motoring along a country road in India, the attention of tourists was called to a curious-looking object by the roadside. It was a roughly carved little image, mounted on a small stool, with three legs.

The image betrayed no signs of expert workmanship and was quite clearly the handwork of some rough village carpenter. They eyes and mouth were roughly carved, and vermilion paint brought these into prominence. The little creature had also two wooden arms.

Stopping the car, the tourists waited until some villager came along the road, and questioned him as to the reason why this image had been left by the roadside. He pointed out that it had been placed a few yards over the boundary line of the village, and that it had been there since the early hours of the morning.

It was an image of the goddess of the village temple, so common in south India, and represented the deity who controls smallpox. The scourge had broken out and had laid low a number of people, and it was felt that unless the goddess could be persuaded to transfer the evil more would fall sick.

So the little image was made and removed outside the bounds of the village. Naturally the people in the next village did not appreciate this attention, and the custom is to move it from village to village. Then sometimes it is possible to get a Mohammedan, for a small fee, to destroy it completely.

Thus does the Indian villager deal with the troublesome disease.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

BULLFROG AND TURTLE

Mr. Bullfrog hurt his foot the other day and he had a doctor and a trained nurse.

Mr. Bullfrog had never been ill a day in his life, and he didn't know what to make of it.

Mrs. Bullfrog did his foot up in wads of soft, wet waterweeds, and rubbed it thoroughly with brook limnet.

But some how it didn't seem to help much.

And so they called in the doctor.

"Well, what is the matter with you, sir?" asked Dr. Mud Turtle.

"I'm surprised to find you laid up, for I thought you had never had a day's sickness."

"Neither have I," moaned Mr. Bullfrog, "but I have suffered dreadfully this afternoon."

Dr. Mud Turtle looked and said not a word.

Then he drew forth a pair of big glasses and a little stick, with which he felt the foot.

Finally, Dr. Mud Turtle noticed that Mr. Bullfrog was shaking all over, and he said to him:

"My good sir, you mustn't act so."

"But doctor, you frighten me, for you keep looking and looking and you don't say a word."

"The reason I have been looking for so long a time," said Dr. Mud Turtle slowly, "is because I haven't a thing to say."

"And when folks have nothing to say, it is better to keep quiet, isn't it?" Mr. Bullfrog tried to say:

"Yes," but he couldn't help blurt-ing out:

"Then why do you keep staring at my foot?"

"Because," said Dr. Mud Turtle, "I can find nothing the matter with it. It may have hurt you for a moment after you hit it, but I am sure you will find it doesn't hurt you any more. Or else I am very much mistaken. Now think about it—it doesn't hurt you now, does it?"

Of course Dr. Mud Turtle never made a mistake, and, sure enough, when Mr. Bullfrog thought about it not hurting for a moment, he found that Dr. Mud Turtle was right, and that his foot was quite well.

But just at that moment along hopped Mrs. Bullfrog with the Fairy Queen beside her.

"I have brought a trained nurse," she panted. "The good Fairy Queen will look after you."

"But I'm all well," said Mr. Bullfrog.

"Whatever shall I do with a doctor and a trained nurse now?"

"We'll have a game of leapfrog then," shouted the Fairy Queen.

And that was just exactly what they all had, and a fine, spirited game it was, too.

Canada's Peat Deposits

It is entirely possible that at no distant day Canada may be making commercial use of the great peat deposits which are to be encountered in various parts of the Dominion. A peat committee appointed by the government and the province of Ontario has been thoroughly investigating the subject and has made some very valuable suggestions. Field operations have been conducted for some time at a point 40 miles east of Ottawa and these have led to the solution of many problems incident to the commercial production and utilization of peat fuel. Machines have been developed for the economical extraction of the peat from the bog and it was found entirely practical to dry the fuel in the air, as the essential climatic conditions prevail over a period of 100 days during the summer season.

Millions for Bananas

Of the money spent by the people of this country for imported fruit, more than half of it was spent for bananas last year. The value of banana imports reached $22,074,410, as compared with $19,738,563 in 1923. Americans, particularly Bostonians, own most of the banana plantations in this hemisphere.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Strathmouth, in the year 1719, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his marksmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard.

What I saw gave me no great impression of the discipline on board a pirate ship, for I could think only of animals gorged and glutted with slaughter as I observed the score of villainous figures sprawled about the decks, drinking and carousing, and shouting snatches of ribald sea songs. To my relief, all traces of carnage were absent; whether they had butchered their victims outright, or had imprisoned them in the cabin of the bark before setting her on fire, I could only conjecture. From the looks of these men, with their colored handkerchiefs bound round their heads, their savage unshorn faces, their clothing an odd mixture of rags and tattered finery, I could see, unless the captain gave me his protection, that I should have small chance of surviving the first drunken brawl.

Walking off, the captain, as he passed me, indicated by a gesture that I should follow him. After what I had seen of the state of affairs forward, I was only too happy to obey, and had reached the companionway when the captain turned to Burford with the curt command, "Bring McAllister below."

A moment or so later, when my eyes became accustomed to the altered light, I perceived that the captain's cabin was much in keeping with the man himself, adorned as it was with silks and satins and the skins of magnificent wild beasts. One thing in particular, as I remembered afterward, caught my eye at once, and that was an ugly looking whip, hanging near the door of the cabin and suggesting all sorts of tortures to my mind. Yet all of this I saw, as it were, mechanically and without comprehension, my thoughts all lying in the direction of my own affairs and of what I felt might well be my impending fate. Meantime the captain, somewhat to my surprise, stepped to a cupboard and with his own hands set out upon the table a huge slab of beef, a loaf of bread and a great flagon of wine. Then, absent-mindedly, he seated himself, motioned to me to do likewise, and waited, his eyes brooding, as if busy with thoughts which took him far from the Black Panther and her savage crew.

Presently the companionway was darkened and Burford entered, followed by a taller figure with his arms strapped securely behind his back. I looked up as they advanced; then, forgetting all else in my astonishment, I fairly leaped from my chair and stood staring at the newcomer, while he, in equal amazement, stared back at me. And now indeed much of what my captors had said became plain as day, for barring the fact that this youth was a trifle taller than I, and that he had a crooked scar on his left cheek, I might almost have been looking at my reflection in the glass. He was, to be sure, better dressed, as befitted a station in life evidently somewhat above my own; but otherwise, as far as face and figure went, we might have passed not only for brothers but for twins.

The voice of the captain broke the silence, and little as I care to pay him compliments, I must acknowledge that the entrance into his cabin transformed him, at least for the time being, into a courteous and considerate host. "Mr. Robert McAllister," he said slowly, "I wish to introduce to you Mr. Richard Lindsay, Mr. Lindsay, Mr. McAllister, Burford, kindly release Mr. McAllister's arms. Thank you, gentlemen, I pray you to be seated and to accept my humble hospitality."

Completely puzzled, and yet with a great dread of what was to come, I again seated myself at the table, was helped to a generous portion of meat and bread, and being by this time exceedingly hungry, I improved the occasion to the utmost and I dare say proved myself the best trencherman of the four. Presently the captain poured us wine, and bowing in turn to the three of us, said courteously, "To your good health, gentlemen, and to your continued prosperity."

As he spoke, his face was grave; no sneer curved his lips; yet I could have sworn that he was amusing himself, as a cat does with a mouse, and that beneath his words lurked a meaning no hidden from us, but which we should shortly understand.

We set down our glasses, I, for my part, feeling a slight revival of courage with the welcome draught. The captain, I remember, leaned back in his chair, one hand toying absently with the flagon before him. It was a strange scene, I knew, from the gentle motion of the vessel that outside the waves were dancing in the sunlight and that the seagulls were soaring aloft in the blue; yet here, by some whim of Fate, this other youth and myself, who had only a few hours ago been free and happy, were now sitting in this cabin, our lives depending on the mood of this dark-faced, inscrutable captain, this "Black Panther" of the deep.

My meditations came abruptly to an end as I realized that the captain was speaking, and that as he spoke he looked at me. "Mr. Lindsay," he observed, with what seemed to me an ironical politeness, "I must needs venture, with Mr. McAllister's permission"—and now I felt that this ironical politeness included the other young man as well as myself—"must needs venture to tell you something of my personal affairs. Letters, you must know, though carefully dispatched, do not always reach their mark. They may sometimes be intercepted, and much information of value may come into the hands of those for whom it was never intended."

He paused, moistened his lips with wine, and continued, with the air of a man who feels certain of the attention of his audience, "Such a misfortune has happened in the case of Mr. McAllister. And although I was never meant to know it, I am now aware of something that had gone from his life forever, but of which even the memory could almost bring back to him past joys. Then the light faded from his eyes again, and he went on: "A lady sailed with me in those days, the most beautiful lady in all the world. Not a lady of the court, too fine to soil her dainty fingers or dirty the tip of her sliken shoe, but a daughter of the sea and of the storm, one who could wield cutlass and pistol, one who was all life and fire and daring and who feared not man nor devil—no, nor God Himself!"

Once more he paused, and his hand went to his throat as if to ease its constriction. I would have said that he had forgotten us, and that for the first time I saw the man's soul laid bare. But in another instant he had recovered himself, and went on: "There was trouble aboard my vessel at the time—a grumbling mate who dreamed of commanding in my place. He may indeed be commanding, but if so it's in another world. Yet just then he was in my way, and the captain of my consort persuaded me and my lady to board his vessel while we gave my mate his head and sent him away, proud of his chance, to capture another prize. His prize was a knife thrust in the throat. And in the dark of the night, near a lonely island in the Antilles, far off the track of vessels, the four of us rowed ashore and over that heavy chest we vowed to keep faith with one another, to come back as soon as might be in a vessel of our own, and then to leave the sea and spend the rest of our lives at ease. Thus we started to bury the treasure, and then—a mighty roaring in my ears, and all was dark. It was the sun on my face that awakened me, to find that I lay on the islet in a great pool of my own blood, and by my side my dear lady looking up at the sky with sightless eyes, shot through the heart. Why they had not made sure of me, I do not know. Doubtless they thought my wound was mortal, and left me for dead. And indeed I should have died, by rights, but I found strength to plant a stick with a rag on it; some fishermen, passing, found me raving for water, and took me with them and nursed me back to life."

Again he moistened his lips with wine, and again went on: "One thing in the world is stronger than love, and that is hate. Hate made me live, was medicine for my body, meat and drink for my soul. To live to revenge myself on that false-hearted scoundrel; to make up to him one-tenth of what he has made me suffer; to feel, if possible, his breath going out in his throat under my grasp—that is what is left of my life. If I could go through hell with him side by side, suffer each pain that he suffered till they wringed my heart apart—every second of that agony would be like balm, if only I could see his every torment, watch his every pang."

There was no mistaking his terrible earnestness; the man was talking from the depths of his being. Yet why, I wondered, did he tell all this to us, for he did not give the impression of one who would reveal affairs so private even to those whom he knew best, much less to strangers so youthful and so unversed in the ways of the world. But my unspoken question was to be answered far sooner than I imagined. "That," he said, "is my story, save for one detail. I have not told you the names of the captain and the mate. The mate is a half-headed scoundrel of the earth named John Shively; the captain's name—he turned to the youth beside him, then distinctly and with deliberation added—"the captain's name is Andrew McAllister."

In spite of myself, I started as though I had been shot, now, indeed, the whole affair became startlingly plain. But the effect on Robert McAllister was even more pronounced, for it was his own uncle whom he heard accused, and half-leaping from his seat, with crimsoned face, he cried boldly, "You lie!"

I drew an involuntary breath of dismay at the words, for I deemed them his death warrant, and indeed, for an instant, the captain's hand sought his belt; but immediately he mastered himself, and with shrugged shoulders muttered to himself the one word, "Youth!" There followed an ominous silence. Then the captain spoke again. "You would naturally defend your uncle, but I speak the truth. Now I shall ask you one question, which I presume you will answer in only one way; but I must ask it in fairness to you, for on your answer depends your future."

There was purpose in his words; to me it seemed that they were a threat, scarcely veiled, of death. Yet young McAllister, whatever his feelings, carried himself manfully, and sat motionless, with no sign of flinching upon his face, awaiting the question. At last it came. "Will you, believing that I have told the truth, become an inmate of your uncle's household, learn his secrets, and at the proper time deliver him and his treasure into my hands?"

There was not a second's hesitation. The young man's quiet "Never!" betokened inexorable resolution.

and free from care? Alas! no man is entirely bleat. It seems that he has an enemy, cruel and vindictive, who seeks to do him harm. He does not write this to his nephew, but from other sources I know it to be so. Thus it is his misfortune to live in dread on an island, in what is practically a fort, garrisoned by a little band of devoted followers. And alas! since none of us can stay young forever, Andrew McAllister has the further misfortune to grow old, and hearing of the talents of his nephew in America, he writes to him to come and join him. He hears—and he bowed low to the young man—"much good of him; that he is young, strong, brave, and—your pardon—save for a scar upon his cheek, a handsome youth. He hears also that he is a wonderful shot with rifle, pistol or fowling piece. Also Captain McAllister has an adopted daughter, and she may well and succeed to the wealth of the uncle. And thus Mr. Robert McAllister, hearing of these things, and having seen the young lady's picture, decides—perhaps unfortunately for him—to try the venture. He starts out, but scarcely has he begun his voyage when he has the ill luck to fall in with pirates, and is captured. I believe, Mr. McAllister, I state the truth."

"Yes," the young man assented, and it seemed to me that he bore himself manfully and with dignity, "that is the truth, except that, as you say, I had no knowledge of an enemy of whom my uncle lives in fear. Of that I know nothing, for in his letters he has made no mention of it."

The captain smiled a sardonic smile. "Doubtless," he answered with suavity, "your uncle had the best of reasons for not communicating the fact. And now," he added, again turning to me, "having explained these facts with regard to Mr. McAllister, I fear that I must trespass still further on your kindness, and tell you something of an incident in my own life."

Again, with that same hateful irony, he paused, looking around him as if tacitly begging our permission to proceed. And yet all the time he must have known that we would hang breathless on his every word. Since, in spite of his talk of hospitality, we were virtually his prisoners, it was only too evident that he was not talking to amuse us, but that his words bore directly on our fortunes, and in all probability on our lives. And thus we sat staring while he, quite casually, turned and glanced at the door leading from the cabin. The movement was so unostentatious that at the time I paid no heed to it; but later I was to remember and understand.

At length he resumed: "Do not fear, that I shall weary you with my adventures; it is of one incident only that I shall speak, and that, believe me, not because its memory is pleasant to me, for it is the blackest in my life; but rather because, as you will shortly see, you have a right to know of it. Three years ago I ranged these seas in the company of another vessel, whose captain I called my friend. Like two gray wolves we harried our prey, one on either flank, and lucky was the merchantman who escaped our fangs. Ours, of course, was the fortune of war; sometimes we made rich captures; sometimes our gains were not worth the loss of the killed and wounded, and only the sharks would profit by our enterprise. But on one great day we captured and sacked a real treasure ship, a prize as rich as those which fell to the lot of the old buccaners. There was spoil and to spare—for once our crews were gladdened with gold—but of the bulk of the treasure and of the jewels only four persons really knew, the captain of the consort ship and his mate, and I myself—and one other."

"He paused, and over his face stole an expression I had never before seen there—a yearning. I would have said, I drew an involuntary breath of dismay at the words, for I deemed them his death warrant, and indeed, for an instant, the captain's hand sought his belt; but immediately he mastered himself, and with shrugged shoulders muttered to himself the one word, "Youth!" There followed an ominous silence. Then the captain spoke again. "You would naturally defend your uncle, but I speak the truth. Now I shall ask you one question, which I presume you will answer in only one way; but I must ask it in fairness to you, for on your answer depends your future."

There was purpose in his words; to me it seemed that they were a threat, scarcely veiled, of death. Yet young McAllister, whatever his feelings, carried himself manfully, and sat motionless, with no sign of flinching upon his face, awaiting the question. At last it came. "Will you, believing that I have told the truth, become an inmate of your uncle's household, learn his secrets, and at the proper time deliver him and his treasure into my hands?"

Truth About the Petrel

For centuries mariners believed that the petrel never approached land, and that it laid its egg at sea and carried it about under one wing until it hatched. Not long ago, however, a party of explorers found a small petrel laying its egg under the soft soil of an isle of the Cape Verde archipelago, instead of carrying it around under its wing. The Cape Verde isle under its wing, which is uninhabited, is covered with the tiny bones of millions of petrels, which in ages past have come there to die.

Dog racing, which is really "coursing," and which is undergoing a great revival in this country, is one of the oldest sports. As far back as A. METAL-TRIM IN LATEST GOWNS; NOVEL SWEATERS FOR FALL WEAR

"TWINKLE, twinkle little star, how I wonder what you are" that's the way one feels about it at sight of some of autumn's new frocks, which are starred with either little gold or silver nailheads, or else with tiny repeat motifs done symmetrically upon blouse, or perhaps sleeves or pocket or some other equally as strategic trimming point.

Undoubtedly metal, especially touches of gold, have entered into the fall style scheme with renewed emphasis, and in such unique ways one experiences a thrill at every turn. Black frocks with gleamings of gold are being especially exploited.

Among unique trimming effects are metal stitched plaits, so maneuvered that the gilt forms a sparkling outline along the lengthwise edge of each plait. Cluster stitching done with gold or silver thread is also handsomely applied. A frock of black velvet, the new sheer kind, interprets the metal trim with scalloped edges accomplished with silver buttonhole stitch.

Comes from Paris a striking novelty—a tin-trimmed frock. In actual appearance not as sensational as it sounds, as this picture of a newly arrived model attests. The tin is so processed as to be lightweight and supple. Then it is riveted over varicolored silk, giving it an extremely beautiful effect. Pockets and a plastron collar of this tin novelty are very effectively disposed on the dress here shown.

Not only in a trimming way, but in the weave of many new fall fabrics, metallic effect asserts itself. Metal cloth also of exceeding sheer type strikes an entirely new note, its suppleness yielding gracefully to plaiting, which accounts for the new plaited metal cloth skirts included in early fall showings. It is said also

In the throng rooting for their hero, and so it goes, these many contributing causes to sweater prestige.

Striking color animates the new sweaters and somehow one cannot get away from the feeling that "tricky" designs or patternings have much to do with achieving these novel color effects which prevail throughout sweater styling. Per example, note how the stripes encircling the sweater shown first in this group are broken up into a medley of sections, dropping one color to take up another. This produces a most unusual color effect and many of the new stripes are just that way.

Speaking of stripes, they are very much in evidence in the sweater realm. Candy-striped sweaters are outstanding in the newer models. The sweater in the foreground in this group is typical of this trend to stripes.

Shakespeare's Writing Tells of Fatal Worry

None of Shakespeare's works in the poet's own handwriting are now in existence, but there are in existence books which belonged to Shakespeare and in which he wrote. These two conclusions have been reached by Dr. Samuel A. Tannenbaum, Shakespearean authority. Doctor Tannenbaum has made a close scrutiny of the six indubitable specimens of Shakespeare's handwriting; the three signatures in the will in Somerset house and on the three documents, one on each at Guildhall, British museum, and public record office. He demonstrates that the poet's handwriting shows characteristics that belong to sufferers from angina pectoris, and that the poet died of this disease, brought on, probably, by domestic worries, his younger daughter having married a man unworthy of her.

Women dragging plows through the first furrows in the fields to prevent evil spirits blighting the crops may be seen within short distances of Moscow.

Idolatrous worship and superstitious practices continue almost within the shadow of the Moscow universities, according to a report by the ethnographic department of the commissariat of education. The god of hens is still placated with special offerings in villages close to Moscow, wizards are asked to cure illnesses by applying tincture to the skin of the sufferer, quacks and voodoo-men conduct a thriving trade, and many other dark and dismal magics persist, in spite of the active educational work of the government.

HOT WEATHER DRIES OUT YOUR KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS

Perspiration carries off body moisture and the liver and bowels become dry and constipated. Then—biliousness, headaches, sour stomach; the heat makes you drowsy and lazy, and your skin breaks out with pimples and boils. Don't take calomel. That's wrong—calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans the bowels, that's true. But the damage it does to them, ough! It crashes into your system like a charge of dynamite and makes it numb. It stifles the muscles of the stomach and bowels, takes YOU a day to recuperate and no telling how long for your bowels.

All you need is Dodson's Liver Tonic. Take a spoonful at night and you wake up feeling great. It doesn't upset you, but cleans you out good. You don't lose a day from your work and you can eat anything you want.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tonic from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

FACTS —AND THE OPEN MIND

THE MOST important element in business success—and the most difficult—is to be sure that you have all the facts before you act.

TO GET them all, from every possible source, is the first objective in General Motors. The Research Laboratories contribute some. These are nuggets, left in the crucible, after hundreds of ideas that looked good have been burned away. The Proving Ground contributes others. Dealers contribute. The public contributes. Every department contributes. Through the whole organization runs a spirit of inquiry and of rigid insistence on proof.

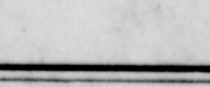

OUT OF such thinking come the new models announced from time to time by Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick, LaSalle, Cadillac—all with Fisher Bodies. And by Frigidaire. Each new model is a tested step forward. Nothing goes into it as a result of habit or guess or pride of opinion. Nothing counts but hard-won facts, gathered and used with an open mind.

METAL-TRIM IN LATEST GOWNS; NOVEL SWEATERS FOR FALL WEAR

"TWINKLE, twinkle little star, how I wonder what you are"—that's the way one feels about it at sight of some of autumn's new frocks which are starred with either little gold or silver nailheads, or else with tiny repeat motifs done symmetrically upon blouse, or perhaps sleeves or pocket or some other equally as strategic trimming point.

Undoubtedly metal, especially touches of gold, have entered into ers are about as important a subject as one can discuss in connection with autumn's incoming modes. Increasing note of popularity which knitted apparel is registering—"reason why" for sweaters—cool autumn days at hand when sweaters are an essential for comfort—reason number two. Back-to-school movement, which calls for sweaters for all ages, college sports season, where sweaters will be present many hundred strong

the fall style scheme with renewed emphasis, and in such unique ways one experiences a thrill at every turn. Black frocks with gleamings of gold are being especially exploited.

Among unique trimming effects are metal stitched plaits, so maneuvered that the gilt forms a sparkling outline along the lengthwise edge of each plait. Cluster stitching done with gold or silver thread is also handsomely applied. A frock of black velvet, the new sheer kind, interprets the metal trim with scalloped edges accomplished with silver buttonhole stitch.

Comes from Paris a striking novelty—a tin-trimmed frock. In actual appearance not as sensational as it sounds, as this picture of a newly arrived model attests. The tin is so processed as to be lightweight and supple. Then it is riveted over varicolored silk, giving it an extremely beautiful effect. Pockets and a plastron collar of this tin novelty are very effectively disposed on the dress here shown.

Not only in a trimming way, but in the weave of many new fall fabrics, metallic effect asserts itself. Metal cloth also of exceeding sheer type strikes an entirely new note, its suppleness yielding gracefully to pinning, which accounts for the new plaited metal cloth skirts included in early fall showings. It is said also in the throng rooting for their hero, and so it goes, these many contributing causes to sweater prestige.

Striking color animates the new sweaters and somehow one cannot get away from the feeling that "tricky" designs or patternings have much to do with achieving these novel color effects which prevail throughout sweater styling. For example, note how the stripes encircling the sweater shown first in this group are broken up into a medley of sections, dropping one color to take up another. This produces a most unusual color effect and many of the new stripings are just that way.

Speaking of stripes, they are very much in evidence in the sweater realm. Candy-striped sweaters are outstanding in the newer models. The sweater in the foreground in this group is typical of this trend to stripes.

Another new departure is the repeat motif patterning, being the symmetrical positioning of the figure, which in the case of the sweater shown to the right at the top, looks very much like a star—not a five-pointed one. Come to think of it, this is rather a patriotic group of sweaters, if displaying the stars and stripes gives evidence.

The various necklines displayed in this trio of sweaters also enlighten as to fashion's trend—and the long snug sleeves, do not forget to get a mental impression of them also.

Shakespeare's Writing Tells of Fatal Worry

None of Shakespeare's works in the poet's own handwriting are now in existence, but there are in existence books which belonged to Shakespeare and in which he wrote. These two conclusions have been reached by Dr. Samuel A. Tannenbaum, Shakespearean authority. Doctor Tannenbaum has made a close scrutiny of the six indubitable specimens of Shakespeare's handwriting; the three signatures in the will in Somerset house and on the three documents, one on each at Guildhall, British museum, and public record office. He demonstrates that the poet's handwriting shows characteristics that belong to sufferers from angina pectoris, and that the poet died of this disease, brought on, probably, by domestic worries, his younger daughter having married a man unworthy of her.

HOT WEATHER DRIES OUT YOUR KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS

Perspiration carries off body moisture and the liver and bowels become dry and constipated. Then—biliousness, headaches, sour stomach; the heat makes you drowsy and lazy, and your skin breaks out with pimples and boils. Don't take calomel. That's wrong—calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans the bowels, that's true. But the damage it does to them, ouch! It crashes into your system like a charge of dynamite and makes it numb. It stifies the muscles of the stomach and bowels, takes YOU a day to recuperate and no telling how long for your bowels.

All you need is Dodson's Liver Tonic. Take a spoonful at night and you wake up feeling great. It doesn't upset you, but cleans you out good. You don't lose a day from your work and you can eat anything you want.

FACTS —AND THE OPEN MIND

THE MOST important element in business success—and the most difficult—is to be sure that you have all the facts before you act.

TO GET them all, from every possible source, is the first objective in General Motors. The Research Laboratories contribute some. These are nuggets, left in the crucible, after hundreds of ideas that looked good have been burned away. The Proving Ground contributes others. Dealers contribute. The public contributes. Every department contributes. Through the whole organization runs a spirit of inquiry and of rigid insistence on proof.

OUT OF such thinking come the new models announced from time to time by Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick, LaSalle, Cadillac—all with Fisher Bodies. And by Frigidaire. Each new model is a tested step forward. Nothing goes into it as a result of habit or guess or pride of opinion. Nothing counts but hard-won facts, gathered and used with an open mind.

Save Yourself Many Weary Steps

Here about you are many women who walk the distance of a cross country hike from Seattle to Boston every year . . . without leaving their homes.

This startling fact has just been revealed by a leading college that made tests with a pedometer proving that women walk from 2 1/2 to 15 miles per day . . . doing housework.

If you use a coal or wood range you are its slave and trade daily many unnecessary weary miles. And this is the big reason why women stay younger longer when their homes are equipped with electricity.

High in Quality---

Low in Price

Motorists are beginning to learn that there's a big difference in tires, although they all look pretty much alike.

Some are made with skimpy, short staple cotton. Some have an overdose of "filler" in the rubber of the tread. Some are long on looks and short on quality.

But you won't need a microscope to be sure that the Goodyear Tire you get from me is a real buy. Goodyear mileages tell the story.

Goodyears are performing so satisfactorily for my customers that they invariably come back—not with a kick but with a boost, and for another Goodyear when they need tire equipment.
