How Much Water Should Baby Get? A Famous Authority's Rule

that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eightpound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast-fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; successful transatlantic flights and other occurrences of the kind in and it is easily calculated for the bottle-fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, con stipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable-the recipe is on the have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. Press Staves Off Deadly Boredom by Giving HEAR FLY WALK. Suspense to Life

By DR. THADDEUS L. BOLTON, Temple University.

YEWSPAPERS are indispensable to the happiness and well-being of mankind, for they supply the stimulus to animation without which the life of the average citizen would become unbearably monotonous. It is difficult to know how we would get along if murders, disasters, instances of banditry, descriptions of crimes and conflagrations were not brought to us.

Suspense—the alternation between hope and depression—is after all something that our natures demand, and here is where the newspaper comes into our routine lives as a saving grace, snatching us from this that the electrons which are responsidreaded lingering death by boredom

Popular conceptions of nationalism have been so magnified since the wrapper-and millions of mothers World war as to assume the aspect of a great popular myth. The notion attributes to an international boundary line mystical properties far greater than those it actually possesses.

> At the beginning of the war the French and the Germans resorted to every subterfuge to make it appear armed forces of the opposing nation had crossed the boundary first, solely to gain popular support by an appeal to this prejudice.

Youths' Disregard of Moral Standards Due to New Significance

By DR. MAX C. OTTO, University of Wisconsin.

If modern youth looks lightly upon the moral standards of the older generation, it is because young people suspect their elders of making a failure of life. Interviews with hundreds of high school and college students have revealed the wide prevalence of dishonesty in school work, and In a conductor having high electrical that dishonesty was not considered in the moral category of the young

Good Humor and Joyous Laughter as One of the Articles of a Creed

By REV. CHARLES FRANCIS POTTER, Detroit.

It is high time we abandoned the religion of fear. The New Thought cults have much to teach the churches in the matter of affirmative re-

Laughter is conducive to health. A hearty laugh will cure a cold. Laughing heartily and frequently will get a person in the habit of breathing correctly, and correct breathing is the first lesson in health. Sometimes a person can get more good out of a stage comedy than out of a doleful sermon by a long-faced parson.

Laughing should be a part of religion. When I marry a couple with a sense of humor, I know that they are likely to weather the storms of matrimony. If I had a creed one of its articles would be, "I believe in salvation by good humor and joyous laughter."

Athletics in Church Needed to Put Backbone Into the Youth of Today

By SIR WILFRED GRENFELL, English Missionary.

Football, baseball and track men are needed in the Christian church if it is to solve the problem of saving the world. The task is not one for half-hearted believers, in an age when theological questions have little attraction for the young men who will be leaders tomorrow. Backbone and faith-the kind of faith that can be described as reason grown courageous-are the properties needed.

Faith is not a fool's credulity. It is the power by which human beings with limited capacities visualize the possibilities they hope for. Charles Lindbergh is a typical example of the man who had faith in the thing he sought to do.

Youth Looks to Older Generations for Example in Standards of Conduct

By REV. HENRY H. LEWIS, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Modern youth puts the burden of proper conduct on the parents. Youth is disgusted with hypocrisy and the habit of older generations to practice things other than they preach. The youth of today believes that what is fair for his parents is fair for him. Youth seeks the correct path, but demands that his leaders be beyond reproach.

Young persons are growing more observing, and it is a difficult matter for older persons to mask the errors of their lives from the searching gaze of the boy or girl of today.

Finds Minimum of Sound Energy That Can Be Amplified.

New York .- The minimum of sound energy that can be amplified by a vacuum tube has been ascertained by Dr. J. B. Johnson of the Bell Telephone laboratories, who has found ble for the conduction of current through a wire also create a noise that tends to interfere with the transmission of other sound.

Although it is possible by amplification to hear such sounds as the footfalls of a fly, there are limits to the smallness of noises that can be amplified, and man will probably never hear the grass grow. The electronic disturbance that would be produced in "stepping up" so tiny a sound would quite drown out the infinitestimal rustle of the blades, compared with which the fly's footsteps are like gun-

Act Like Gas Molecules.

Doctor Johnson has discovered that the electrons in a metal move about under the influence of heat, as do the molecules in a gas, and that this mowhich can be amplified to audibility a phenomenon recently demonstrated here. The electronic interference is increased as the temperature of the conductor is raised, and decreases as the temperature is lowered.

"Every resistance unit is a source of random voltage fluctuations," explains the physicist, "the effects of which can be heard or measured with suitable amplifying apparatus. Experiments at different temperatures prove conclusively that in an amplifier a component of noise comes from the vacuum tubes or other elements. The discovery of this phenomenon therefore is not only of scientific inphone engineers deal, for we know that there is a minimum from below which it is not practicable to amplify that in an electrical conductor there random motion which has partly to do with the temperature of the conductor. We have had less occasion to consider that this motion may result in a spontaneous fluctuation of ductor. This thermal agitation, this motion of electrical charges, does exist and can be measured under suit-

"The effect is most readily detected resistance. It is characterized by a continually changing or fluctuating roltage generated by the resistance sources of potential. We have demon strated that there can be no question Fixes Tube Noises.

This thermal agitation of electricity in a conductor has certain very practical aspects. When a tele phone is connected to the output of a sensitive amplifier a characteristic sound may be heard-the 'sh-sh-sh,' commonly called 'tube noise.' At least a part of this is the spontaneous noise arising from the input resistance itself. In fact, if the input resistance is high and the tubes are of the best the noise due to thermal agitation in the resistance is so large as en tirely to mask the noise contributed by the tubes. To the smallness of the voltage which can be successfully amplified there is then set a limit by the very nature of the substance of which electrical circuits are built."

Man, 61, Meets Sisters. Brothers First Time

St. Catharines, Ont .- About 60 years ago, when fourteen months old, Duncan Herald was taken West from St Catharines by an aunt, who was to have returned with him. The relative becoming attached to him, declined to take him back and reared him as her own. Not until he was twenty years old was he told of his true parentage.

Recently Duncan, who is now sixtyone years old and a resident of Kansas City, Kan., decided to search for his brothers and sisters, whom he did not remember having seen.

He arrived here and has since sur prised, met and become acquainted with five of them: Charles of Vineland; Alexander, of Niagara Falls, N Y.; Mrs. James Crosby, Mrs. John Burdick and Miss Herald of St. Cath-

IDLE ISLAND

STORY FROM THE START

On the verge of nervous colon the verse or hervola col-lapse, due to overwork, Gay De-lane, successful New York artist, seeks rest at Idle island. She rents a cottage, the "Lone Pine," from an island character, the and his sister, Alice "administrator," Gay finds the cottage is tenanted by an elderly lady, "Auntalmiry," an elderly lady, "Auntaimiry," who consents to move to an-other abode, the "Apple Tree." Awaking from sleep, Gay imag-ines she sees the face of a Chinaman peering in the window.

CHAPTER II-Oontinued

Roused by this rude thought from the sweet fantasy of dreams, she got up from the couch, and felt about her with outstretched groping hands. Dedding logically, to follow the walls until she came to the kitchen door, nowing she would find matches over the kitchen gas stove, she crept along he wall to the left, working her way, hand following hand, until she found them at last, struck two together, hurriedly, and was glad to have the full light of electricity flooding the room. Doors and windows stood open to the night as when Auntalmiry left in the afternoon. But on consulting her watch, Gay was amazed to find it was the hour of midnight.

"Well, I slept," she said philosoph-

On the kitchen table she found her basket of groceries, and feeling somewhat refreshed she took a real interest in unpacking its contents and arranging the: neatly on shelves in the little wall cupboard. Carefully mance! she closed and locked the doors and windows.

She opened a can of prepared soup and heated it, made toast, opened a jar of pickles.

For the first time since she left New York, she was sufficiently rested to feel a mental reaction to her environ-

She arranged her modest supper on a tray, and took it to the wall-seat by the window which looked down over the bay. The wriggling, wrinkling lines of many little colored lights in the black showed where boats rode out the night at anchor. Intermittently the black was mellowed, turned to white mist, by the sliding rays of a lighthouse searchlight.

"Nice," she said to herself. "I like it. I'm glad I came. Auntalmiry is a dear, the Captain is a lamb, and that administrator person who tries to be so very bossy is a kind, sweet, generous fraud."

Remembering then that she had not yet so much as seen the upper story of her new home, she left the tray in the window, and, cup of soup in her hand, went up at once to explore, switching on the lights of the stairway from the lowest step. She found it modest enough above the stairs, but clean and fresh, all to her iking. There was a large the landing, and to the left, a nicely appointed bathroom. The bedroom was large and cheerfully bright in furnishing, a bed, an old bureau, a commode and two small chairs match-

Her natural energy somewhat restored by the long sleep, Gay carried her bags upstairs and unpacked them, folding the little sliken garments away into drawers that smelled sweetly of cedar. Gay Delane, not a New Yorker by birth, had become one by labor. Work was her daily bread. She counted accomplishment the end of life, success its great reward. With Gay Delane there was no interest as to one's possession, from whence one came, nor from what family line had sprung. The sole point of personality to her was this: "What is he doing? What bas be done?"

The death of both parents in quick succession had thrown her upon her own resources at the age of seventeen. The last of the family funds, the insurance, all nad gone in a final year of practical prepara on for life-work, in which, with the incongreensly blended driving of necessity and desire, she had studied stenography, and at the same time continued her classes in art under the best teachers obtainable.

"I've got to work-but I am going to paint," she said.

From the strictly clerical work she had been obliged to accept at first, bread-and-butter work she called it, she had gradually worked away from getting into things more to her taste and her talent, and at last, when the was able, abandoning it altogether. Black and white copies of style figares, fashion pages, back work of iltration, all grist to Gay; and always. through the formative years, she kept ome hours, mostly at night and on ennday, for more advanced study.

For the definite business of earning living, she had a remunerative conection with the advertising house of burnham and Morey, for whom she did conventional paintings in bright ope, usually interesting, and exer-dised the artistic virtues of a quek we and finger for striking color ef-beta. But always, besides this, she of the crown.

kept on, studying better things, painting in all her hours of leisure the things her heart desired.

From the day she had entered upon the study of stenography, in her seventeenth year, Gay had never allowed herself time for a full and complete vacation, sufficient to give both soul and body recuperation. She said she hadn't time, there was too much to learn, too much to do. Even ber one memorable trip abroad, although it continued over a year, had afforded her no rest, for in addition to her studies she had taken with her also a contract for a series of pictures for the Sunday Magazine, so that she returned to New York at last afire with zeal, aflame with ambition, and far less rested than when she went.

But outraged flesh and violated nerves claimed their revenge at last for the eleven years' defiance. For fully six months before the final June torrent of heat forced her into full surrender, she had been a prey to quivering nerves that jangled in a jaded body, and when the inevitable forced itself upon her, she accepted it with a certain joy. If she must rest. she would make that rest a sport. If she must go into retirement, the exile should be a luxurious one. Perhapswho knew?-even on a good little island of idleness might lurk some stimulant for an ardent though flagging spirit. Adventure perhaps, amusement certainly, or even-ah, Ro-hampering confines of marriage, turned always sensitive heart-string to the strumming fingers of Romance. Marriage, Gay argued, was not designed for the ambitious worker. For the complacent, for the self-satisfied. for the indolent, all very well; perhaps; but marriage and ambition, passion for accomplishment, were never messmates. Gay's first romance, tender sweet blossom of her ardent young womanhood, joyously promised the full fruitage of marriage "when the war is over," lay buried with the soldier who did not come back. And Gay's first passion of grief soon subsided into a philosophical reflection that perhaps after all it was better so, that she was not domestic, not the type for humdrum home life. That experience confirmed her in her determination to live alone. Alone, but not lonely. Free, but not unloved. Ah, if on the good and idle Island should come a fresh awakening for her stilled affections! "Lumley Lane, for instance," she thought whimsically. "Lumley the lobster-man. A stern and silent nature, bronzed and bearded."

ETHELHUESTON | Out the lights and supped in the essence of evergreen. Gay slept, glad for the silence of the Idle Island. Next morning she wrote a note to her friend, Nancy Moore, asking to have her easel crated and shipped to her, with her paints, her canvases, any many of the pretty useful things of her studio which would add to the charm of her new home.

"It is the Land of Leisure," she wrote, "the Land of Emotional Leisure. It is Idle Island, the World of Wasted Effort, the Center of Silence. Every one works, but the work amounts to nothing. Every one is intensely busy, but it is the business of passing time. Every one is persistently intent on doing, but it is the doing of nothing at all. Soft, slow, unburried-"

He frowned portentously. "She'll boll them, that is, long as she's able. She's-expecting."

There is no telling how much an an- about 1875, taking considerable furtique piece may travel before it comes to rest in the hands of an appreciative collector or a museum. Recently a pine dresser was imported from England with some English furniture. The dresser stuck out like a sore thumb among the English pieces, and the dealer quickly spotted it. The wood, the hardware, the workmanship, the style, all proclaimed it Amerlcan. A wealthy collector purchased it and then set out to find how the dresser had ever strayed from the shores of America. He discovered, after lengthy correspondence, that an American family had gone to England

Elephants That Burn

Mixed metaphors are not by any means uncommon. Sometimes they are merely inept; occasionally they are ludicrous. In England the other day the Salford city council emitted

The question under municipal debate was whether Salford wanted to have an exhibition hall. There seems to have been a considerable difference of opinion. Said one speaker:

"I do not want the council to get their fingers burnt with a white ele-

removed. There were auto parties, boating parties, beach parties, bathing parties. At dusk every fine night she could count the slithery fires of half a dozen or more shore parties, where clams were baking, potatoes reasting, or lobsters broiling.

But Gay did not share in the gayety and the summer holiday life of the island. She reveled in rest, in freedom from the rervous pressure of an impatient city jogging her elbow. When her easel and paints arrived, she installed a studio in one corner of the big bright living room of the Lone Pine, and felt at peace with the world.

Auntaimiry was her friend. Auntaimiry was everybody's friend. She was a sort of unendowed institution, she went with the island. But although Auntalmiry no longer worked for a living, not as we speak of working for a living, she earned her keep, because she did what she could. Whenever there was fruit to can in the house of a native islander, jelly to make, or tomatoes to pickle, Auntalmiry, although not hired for the ocsasion, was always there, always at work.

For fifty years, she had presided at the arrival of all the small expectedones around Evergreen. She had sat up with the sick, mourned with the sad, wept over the dead. She kept everybody's children while mothers went shopping, played bridge, or had more children.

And for all these things, as Auntalmiry gave in service, she was paid in kind. Winter apples, potatoes, squashes, fellies and canned fruit filled her larder. She had a charge account at the Pier grocery store, but her monthly bills were rendered, not to her, but to the administrator, as was Auntalmiry had her own bank account, too. It was a small bank account, but like the widow's oil and meal it never diminished, but rather grew a little, curiously, now and then. Its nucleus was her identical bank account of thirty years before, when she was obliged after a severe illness to give up, once and forever, all actively remunerative labor.

No one, however, considered Auntalmiry an object of charity nor did er the potential dynamite which now she so consider herself. She did what seems to be concealed in some of the she could. She received what she issues will explode into a bitterness

With the familiar and much loved paraphernalia of her profession about er, and with all of her pretty personal possessions to soften the rugged austerity of her surroundings, Gay settled down with comfortable anticipations of long and lovely leisure for eisurely work. Every day she went out for a long walk through the shivhelp, if I can," Gay offered generous- ering little forest that backed the cot-"I was in the hospital for five | tage, and down to the rocky shore, and as strength returned, her spirit of adventure quickened also. Each day she fared farther, always with greater joy, and dally daring steeper cliffs and rougher walls of rock.

Comprising in all some seven hundred acres, the Island had originally been occupied exclusively by three families of sturdy seafaring stock: the Wallaces, the McAndlers and the Dominion, Marlings. The first settler of all was the grandfather of the present Cap-He, always referred to as the First Captain Wallace, had come there with his sons and daughters, his servants and his boats, and settled down to carry on a wide and prosperous fish and lobster traffic, incidental to his sailing trade. His children had married, cottages sprang up in the woods and the wild growth every year was pushed farther and farther back to make way for gardens, orchards and lawns.

Others came to the Island, some for holldays, some in service, and married, and remained. The early teachers of the little public school grew old in labor, and retired to private life, but did not go away. Lobster trappers came for a season, and settled for life. Later, as modern conveniences added comfort to island life, many who were engaged in clerical or professional work in Portland built permanent homes near the ferry landing, and crossed the bay to their work in the morning, and back to their island homes at night.

While many of the later generations of Wallace had gone into professional work and removed to other states, many also remained on the island, where they had married and intermarried, so that fully half the native population was linked up together by ties of blood or marriage, and oftentimes by both, a network so intricate that only the more obvious forms of relationship were given acknowledgement.

The island was three or more miles in length, barely one mile wide, a rugged line of rock fronting the Atlantic along the east, and drifting down gradually to a slow low valley slope of emerald green on the bay shore. A motor road led up from the landing beyond the Captain's house, and there at the bend, turned backward along the shore. But leading the other way, into the forest, were only dwindling trails. In the foreground of the forest lay a long row of pretty summer houses, fringing the woods and looking off down the grassy slope to the bay.

1828-Presidential Campaigns-1928

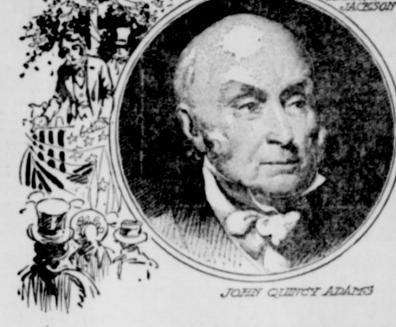

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON S THE time for the Republican national convention in Kansas City on June 12 and the Democratic meeting in Houston on June 26, draws near to warn the people of this nation that they are again about to be embrolled in the heat of another Presidential campaign, it is in teresting to compare the campaign of 1928 with that of a hundred years ago. Although no one can safely prophecy what the dominant issue in this year's contest will be nor whethwhich has been lacking in Twentieth "Why, it is socialism," Gay cried century campaigns, it is certain that of socialism, applied, effective and sion of candidates and policies reach ing the depth of vituperation, mudslinging, and general hatred that coldly. "Not by any means," she said characterized the campaign of the year

To understand the reason for the one, that of 1824, when John Quincy Adams was elected President over Andrew Jackson. This campaign of 1824 was, in fact, the first real Presidential contest. Heretofore the Presidency had been more or less of a procession to the executive mansion by Virginia aristocrats-George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and James Monroe, with one New England aristocrat, John Adams, slipping in for a single term. But | with his friends were firmly convinced by 1824 the West had begun to assert | that he had been cheated out of the itself and for the first time put for- Presidency by the bargain between ward two candidates, Henry Clay of Kentucky and Andrew Jackson, "Old Hickory," the military hero of Tennessee, New England offered John Quincy Adams as the candidate of the dying Federalists. The heir apparent of the Virginia dynasty was William H. Crawford, secretary of the treasury, a Georgian, born in the Old

At that time nominations were made by the caucus method and this | thus: was destined to be the last of the kind in the country. Despite the criticisms of the caucus method one was held and Crawford "was recommended to the people of the United States." However, he was elimiated from the race when stricken with paralysis and made speechless, almost blind, and helpless. As the campaign progressed it became apparent that Jackson, with John C. Calhoun of South Carolina as the candidate for vice president, was leading. When the returns were all in it was found that Calhoun had been elected vice president with little opposition, but that Jackson would have 99 votes in the electoral college, Adams, 84, Crawford, 41 and Clay, 37. Since none of the Presidential candidates had obtained an electoral majority, under the terms of the Constitution, the election was thrown into the house of representatives, which would choose among the three highest candidates. Clay, of course, was eliminated, Crawford could also be counted out, so that the contest narrowed down to Jackson and Adams. It soon became gossip around Washington that Clay's strength would be thrown to Adams and that Adams in return would appoint Clay as secretary of state. For weeks the capital was in a turmoil with charges and counter charges flying thick and fast. The upshot of it all was that in the final balloting Adams had received 13 votes, Jackson 7, and Crawford 4. (The balloting an extravagant profligate; while min-

elected President and two days later

he did appoint Clay secretary of state. The next four years were years of distress for the new President. With the war cry of "Bargain and Corruption," the Democrats did everything in their power to embarrass Adams and the bitterness of the campaign of 1824, which was carried over during those four years, gave warning that the campaign of 1828 would be even worse. The campaign of 1828 opened with Adams as a candidate to succeed himself and Jackson, who Clay and Adams and was determined to justify that belief, as Adams' principal opponent. No better description of this famous (or infamous) campaign a hundred years ago has been written than is the one contained in the book "Presidential Years 1787-1860," by Meade Minnegerode. published recently by G. P. Putman's Sons. In the chapter "Friends of General Jackson," he characterizes it

His public career was with Aaron Burr, his military arrests and contempt of court at New Or-leans, his insubordination in the Floridas, his executive autocracy at Pensa-cola, his "murder" of deserting milita-men at Mobile—"Some Accounts of Some of the Bloody Deeds of General Jackson," adorned with tombstones and coffi and known as the Binns Coffin Har bills-from every quarter, and in every variety of language General Jackso was ridiculed, assailed and exposed.

It was the end of a cultivated, discriminating era; the close of the suc-cession, whatever the idlosyncracies and limitations, of seemly persons, of capable intellects, of meritorious achievements, such as the founders of the Republic had envisaged as destined to dignify the chief magistracy of the nation, to mature its councils and to grace its annals. DOG TEST FAILS TO FIND MARVEL

Owners Give Pets Too Much Credit for "Brains," Say Scientists.

New York.-The average dog owner could write an enthusiastic book about his pet's intelligence and keenness. But scientists have only begun to penetrate into the dog's world, to find out carefully and exactly how much a dog sees and understands.

Experiments so far made indicate that the average dog has far more faulty vision than most dog lovers suppose, according to a survey of what is known as dog psychology made in the Quarterly Journal of Biology by Dr. C. J. Warden and L. H. Warner, psychologists of Colum-

THE SHY FLOWERS

The trailing arbutus flowers were awake. Just then they heard a rustling of leaves and then some laughter.

"I believe those are the voices of children," said the first arbutus. "Oh dear, I'm a little shy," said the second arbutus. "I must hide."

And it hid further under the leaves.

Most of the arbutus flowers are shy, and they always hide under the leaves. But once they are picked and put into water they are shy no longer, and they give a glorious fragrance al around them, to let grown-ups and children know how happy they are they can give pleasure. "We must look under the leaves," said one child. "I've heard this is the place where they come out first every

"Yes," agreed the first arbutus "Won't they love it when they see us hiding here?

"We're having a little game of hideand-seek-that's all!" "Look!" exclaimed the children.

'Here! Here! Lots of them! "Oh, aren't they beautiful, the lovely pink, white, sweet flowers."

The flowers smiled. "Good morning, children," they

they looked. "It's true," said one of the children, "this place is famous for the first arbutus of the year."

"There," thought the leaves to them selves, and the roots which were left behind, we will have to tell the flowers the same thing next year. "Oh, how sad it would be if we ever lost our fine reputation." "But I'll hurry things up next spring," said one of the roots.

"So will I," said another. And off the children went, carrying he biggest bunche of trailing arbutus flowers.

The flowers whispered secrets to the children, but as the children didn't understand flower talk they didn't know they were hearing secrets. This is what the flowers were say-

"We hide our heads under the leaves because we're shy, but we love children and the whole beautiful world, so pick lots of us, only leave our roots. "And then we'll be bright and gay."

But the children only knew that the flowers were very, very fragrant, and oh, so very sweet!

Flying Disks

Cut out large round disks from thin cardboard or stiff notepaper, and cover these with colored paper or paint them. You might have about twelve red ones, twelve green ones, and so on, until there are twelve sets.

This game is best when there are twelve players, as then no disks are left in the center. If there are less than twelve players then so many disks of each color are removed-say, six of each-and only six taken by each player.

The players sit or stand around a table, and the disks are piled in the center. Now each player takes one of each color.

Having taken their disks the players wait until some one says "Go! Then each flings one disk toward the player opposite. All see whether they can "pair" any of the disks, then they fling a disk to another player-any

Soon the air seems full of disks Players who throw one grab another of the color they are collecting, and presently some one realizes that he holds twelve disks, all alike, in his hand. Then, as quietly as possible he places them upon the edge of the table, and sits back in his chair with folded arms.

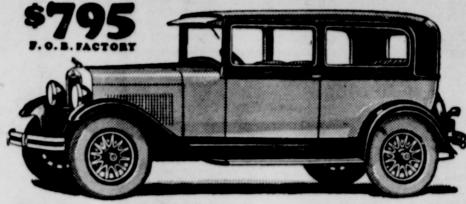

Gradually the other players notice that some one has won, and they drop their own disks. The last to lay down those he holds must pay a forfelt.

Shifts Earth Quickly

Material could be lifted to the top of a ten-story building by a giant electric shovel, largest in the world, now being constructed, says Popular Science Monthly. Placed in the center of a football field, it could dig out the entire field without moving from one position, and deposit the dirt in the stands. Its 120-foot boom eighty-two feet long, and a scoop that can pick up fifteen cubic yards of earth or coal, weighing nearly twenty-four tons, at a single stroke. The mammoth shovel will be used in the open pit mining of coal at Danville,
