Sterling Says Honesty Issue

The issue of honesty and responsibility in government overshadows all other issues, and the threat of Fergusonism must be faced and defeated, Ross Sterling of Houston declared in a statement opening the runoff campaign for the Democrat gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Sterling's statement follows:

To the people of Texas: I made the best fight that I could in the campaign preceding the recent primary election. I am deeply grateful to those who supported me, and I shall always have a warm place in my heart for them. I have not the slightest ill will or resentment for those who supported for the candidate of their choice.

The first primary has placed Mrs. Ferguson and myself in the runoff to be held on August 23. The friends of good government in Texas are now confronted with a choice between my nomination for Governor and the return to power of James E. Ferguson who is running in his wife's name. I have made a clean campaign, discussing business, financial and economic problems, which will confront an honest and businesslike administration of the affairs of our state. The other candidates in the late primary, as well as their supporters, I am convinced, stand for an honest and efficient government, and they too are opposed to the return of "Fergusonism." And I invite the co-operation as well as the support of all right-thinking people who believe that "righteousness exalteth a nation."

FROM PAT M. NEFF

Editor, Sanderson Times
Sanderson, Texas.
Kind Friend:

At the July primary I received as a candidate for Railroad Commissioner a very fine vote in your county. I wish to thank your readers for the fine vote of confidence which they gave me.

While I carried 231 of the 253 counties of Texas and received nearly two hundred thousand votes more than the candidate running next to me, yet it will be necessary in my race to have a run-off for the reason that I lacked a few thousand votes of receiving the majority over the combined support of the other three candidates. In this second round I am in hopes that I may have your support.

To the end that I may get as large a vote as possible in your county, and that my election may be made sure, whatever you may see fit to do or say in my behalf will be, I assure you, highly appreciated and gratefully remembered. With regards, I am

Yours most sincerely,
Pat M. Neff.

Terrell County Oil Activities

Quite a few oil men from Shawnee, Okla., Los Angeles, Calif., and San Angelo, Texas, were in the county this week watching with eager eyes the various drilling operations going on.

George A. Kroenlien, the geologist who worked out the Stone Bend Structure on the W. J. Banner, M. H. Goode, Sr., and A. D. Brown ranches, and made the locations which is now being tested by the Transcontinental Oil Company, was here this week in company with a very prominent geologist from the west side of the Chisos mountains in the Big Bend district by the name of Homer Wilson.

Mr. Wilson is enthused over the drilling operations in Terrell county, and is probably acquainted with quite a bit of the geology of the district as he was in all probability associated with W. R. Calvert who selected the first location of a real test well in this county several years ago.

It is reported that the Trans-

Knitted Cotton for Children

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Oh! If some genius would only invent durable, comfortable, practical, attractive frocks for little girls, outfits for little boys, and sunsuits for both that will not continuously rip, tear and wrinkle during the siege of hours of play and hours of school—garments that do not demand a repeat-and-repeat performance of starching, of ironing and that come from their tubbing almost if not quite as prettily colorful as new. Mothers do indulge in dreams just like that. Sometimes dreams come true. We are inclined to think that the little dress pictured is pretty good evidence that they do. It is a knitted dress not of wool, for children draw the line at wearing wool, not of silk for silk is far too dressy for ordinary wear, but guess what. Give up? Well, the answer is beautiful sturdy and at the same time soft-to-the-touch cotton, durable cotton, if you please. Durened cotton is really mercerized cotton, the fiber being treated in a way to bring out a subtle luster, and best of all to withstand intensive wear and endless laundering.

These practical fashions of knitted cotton which children's specialty shops and departments are displaying with such pride are not beset with frills and furbelows (another point in their favor), but they are charmingly colorful, coming in a range of beguiling pastel shades. The little two-piece school frock illustrated is in an adorable shade of blue.

Youngsters with a desire for gay color can have many kinds of both underwear and outerwear in this sturdy knitted pastel cotton such as fine-mesh dune shirts, panties, union suits, sun suits and cunning costumes with smartly styled skirts and clever cardigans and sleeveless sweaters.

The typical undergarment for infants has been serviceable and unimaginative for years. It is only just recently that stylists have interested themselves in fashion appeal as well as that of service, and so it is that emphasis is now being placed on pastel colors for "young" underwear as well as upon outer apparel.

Home-Grown Products Are Valuable

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In counting up the advantages of living on a farm the things supplied to the family table from the kitchen garden, the orchard, poultry and other live stock, are an important consideration. Again, most farms furnish firewood and often ice.

The farm homemaker's budget and household accounts do not give a true picture of the economic status of the family unless these home-grown products are recorded and evaluated. Most farm women also can store a good part of their garden surplus, put up jams, jellies, and pickles, and "put down" eggs. When they take these preserved foods from the shelf and put them on the table they do not always stop to think that if they lived in the city each glass of jam or can of string beans would have to be paid for in cash. They are sometimes richer than they had thought they were. Some of the farm woman's products are sold—butter and eggs, young broilers, hens that have outlived their usefulness, vegetables, both fresh and canned, and various other things. Whether the income from such sales is looked on as belonging personally to the homemaker or is pooled with the family cash, one certainly should know what it amounts to, in order to judge which activities pay and which do not.

"But," complains the average farm homemaker, "it's too complicated to keep track of every basket of vegetables I bring in the house, or every jar of pickles I put away. I never had a head for figures, anyway."

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture had this objection in mind when Farmers' Bulletin 1553-F, "Planning and Recording Family Expenditures" was written, and in devising a practical loose-leaf household account book. The first suggestion made is that a pad or large card be kept hanging in the kitchen. Whenever anything is brought in for household use the kind and quantity can be entered at once. Materials for home canning can be written down when they are gathered, and then they will not need to be recorded at the time of use. With a little care the person who does the recording—and it is best for one person, usually the homemaker, to attend to this entirely—can avoid the mistake of entering materials more than once.

At the end of a week or a month, the entries on the pad or card can be transferred to a special page in the account book headed "Products furnished by the farm for family use."

Foods That Are Needed for Good Teeth

A large amount of sugar and certain bacteria cause an acid condition which dissolves the enamel of the teeth. Calcium, phosphorus and vitamin D are essential for good teeth. The health of the teeth is quite dependent upon vitamin C found in tomatoes, oranges, grapefruit and raw vegetables. The two former are found in milk, the latter in cod liver oil, liver, egg yolks and chicken fat. Contrary to popular opinion, there is a great amount of circulation in a tooth.

Evening Story for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The ducks had just said they had noticed the pelican children, but had not said they thought they were handsome.

"They'll soon be able to fly as well as we can," said Mrs. Pelican with pride.

"We are having lessons every day," said Mr. Pelican. "They are too old for the nest now—yes, they are much too old."

"What good times we did have then," said Mrs. Pelican. "It was such fun to find fish and take them home delicious bits—feeding them right in the nest."

"You mean right in the beaks and thence to their good pouches," said Mr. Pelican.

"Well," said Mrs. Pelican, "I meant to say that I was in the nest and they were in the nest when I fed them."

"Of course, the food didn't stay in the nest."

"It did in a way," said Mr. Pelican. "The little ones weren't going out, and the food went into them."

"They were in the nest."

"Oh, dear, oh dear," said Mrs. Pelican. "Will I ever learn to speak correctly?"

"Mr. Pelican is such a very particular creature about his speech and about my speech."

"So it seems," said the ducks. "Well, quacking is good enough for us, and we don't just care what we say when we quack."

"It's as easy to be right as wrong," said Mr. Pelican in a haughty tone, and he smiled in a kind way at Mrs. Pelican.

"You'll yet learn, my love."

"Ah, thank you," said Mrs. Pelican, sweetly.

"I suppose," said Mrs. White Duck, "that it is extremely useful to have those pouches that hang down under your beaks."

"Indeed it is extremely useful," said Mrs. Pelican. "We can eat so much more in that way."

"Yes, ever so much more."

"Of course that is a great advantage," Mr. Pelican added, in a tone as though he were telling the ducks that he owned the best part of the world.

"When they can fly they will forget they have web feet, for even though their legs are short, as ours are," said

"It Did in a Way."

Mrs. Pelican, "their wings will be strong."

"Every one knows how the pelicans can fly."

While Mrs. White Duck and Mrs. Tan-and-White Duck are listening, they were feeling unhappy.

They could not fly nearly so well as the pelicans could, and their feet were just as bad.

The pelicans noticed that they had

Serve Foods in the Baking Dishes

Stuffed Tomatoes Served in a Pie Plate.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When foods can be served in the same dishes in which they were cooked, there is considerable saving in time and trouble for the homemaker. Glass and earthenware casseroles, pie plates, and dishes of other shapes are all attractive enough to be put on the table, and as foods baked in them almost always have a pleasing color of browned crumbs or a pastry top, they appeal immediately to the eye as well as to the palate.

Stuffed tomatoes, served in a shallow baking dish or pie plate are a good example of colorful, flavory food prepared with a minimum of effort. There is either no cooking pan, or no serving dish—whichever way you look at it—to be washed. One utensil at least eliminated. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives these directions for stuffing tomatoes:

- 4 large firm tomatoes
- 2 strips bacon
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- 1 lb. chopped onion
- 1 cup dry bread crumbs
- 1/4 tsp. celery seed
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 tsp. pepper
- 1/2 cup buttered bread crumbs

Wash the tomatoes, remove a thin slice from the stem end, and carefully scoop out the pulp so that the tomato shells will not be broken. Fry the bacon until crisp, remove from the pan, and break the bacon into small pieces. Add the parsley and onion to the fat, cook for a few minutes, add the cup of dry bread crumbs, celery seed, salt, pepper, crisped bacon and tomato pulp. Stir until well mixed and add more salt if necessary. Fill the tomato cups with this mixture, cover the top with the buttered crumbs, place in a shallow baking dish, and bake in a moderate oven for 45 to 60 minutes, or until the tomatoes are tender and the crumbs are brown. Serve from the baking dish.

SOME HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Overcrowding the refrigerator prevents circulation of cool air and cuts down its efficiency.

Milk and fruit drinks in hot weather are not only refreshing but contain valuable food materials.

A tempting appearance adds to the success of a vegetable dinner. Color, attractive arrangement of food on the plate and daintiness all count.

Careful mothers remember that picnic meals for the children should be as well balanced and as thoroughly supervised as regular meals at home.

How to Cope With the Ant Nuisance

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There are a number of common species of ants which get into houses from time to time and cause annoyance by appearing on foods, especially sugar, cakes, candies and other sweets, and cooked foods of animal origin. An ant having once gained access to foods of these sorts, reports the discovery to the colony, and in an incredibly short time the premises may be swarming with these unwelcome visitors.

According to the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, both house and garden ants at times become a pest in the pantry and kitchen. The species that live entirely within doors nest in woodwork, masonry or articles of furniture. They are often very difficult to eradicate because of their inaccessibility. If the nest can be located by following the trail of the workers back to the point of their disappearance, the inmates of the nest may sometimes be reached and destroyed by injecting a little carbon disulphide, kerosene or gasoline into the opening, by means of an oil can or small syringe. In the use of these substances, precautions should be taken to see that no fire is present, as they are all inflammable.

The removal of attracting substances from their reach should be the first step. Keep food supplies which are likely to attract ants in tight containers or in the refrigerator, and sweep up promptly any crumbs of cake or bread scattered by children. Find and destroy the nest as soon as possible. It ought not to be necessary to take up the flooring to get at it, for poison baits can be used to kill the queens and the brood. Almost any of the common garden or lawn ants which build their little crater nests in the soil about houses may become temporarily house pests in their search for food substances. When ants are found swarming up kept on hand. Bait of this kind is put into a paraffined paper bag with one side folded down to admit the ants. It is nailed on the tree as shown, out of reach of little children.

Small lawns may be sprayed with kerosene emulsion, or a very strong soap solution, to destroy ants. Dissolve half a pound of any common laundry soap in one gallon of water for use in this way.

Food for the Family Table

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The foundation of education consists of training a child to work, to love work, to put the energy of his entire being into work; to do that work which develops his body, mind and soul; to do that work most needed for the elevation of mankind.—Parker.

A simple dessert well made and daintily served gives just the finishing touch to a plain dinner. Here are a few desserts that may be helpful in planning a luncheon and the dinner menus:

On baking day when the oven is not too well occupied, prepare and bake a pastry shell or two, or bake the shells on patty tins for individual pies. These will keep well for a few days and it will be found most helpful to put in a filling of lemon, cover with a meringue and have a dessert in a very few minutes. These shells may be filled with crushed fruit, topped with whipped cream, or they may be filled with a butterscotch filling or chocolate, thus having any kind that seems desirable or is well liked.

The following will be another filling that takes but a few moments to prepare:

Marshmallow and Fruit Pudding.—Soak one-fourth of a cupful of candied cherries and pineapple cut into pieces either in the pineapple juice or any fruit juice either canned or fresh, for an hour or more. Use marshmallows and their own sirup if preferred. Cut one-half pound of marshmallows into six pieces each. Beat one cupful of whipping cream until stiff, add three tablespoonfuls of confectioner's sugar gradually, then a half teaspoonful of almond with a few drops of vanilla. Mix the marshmallows with one-half cupful of pecan meats broken into pieces and fold all together. Chill and serve in the pastry cups.

A Dainty Luncheon Dessert.—Spread the round butter crackers with marshmallow cream and in the center of each place a teaspoonful of pineapple or orange marmalade. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff and dry, add one-fourth cupful of powdered sugar and with a pastry tube pipe this meringue around the edge of the cracker, then set a rose of meringue in the center. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and brown lightly in oven.

Spice Cake.—Sift two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour with one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of allspice, nutmeg, mace and one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon. Sift three times. Cream one-half cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of sifted brown sugar and cream together until light and fluffy. Add two eggs well beaten and the flour mixture alternately with one cupful of sour milk. Beat well after each addition and bake in a greased tin eight by eight inches. Bake fifty minutes.

Cooked minced carrot may be added in the same way. Beans, peas, onion or cabbage used in the same proportion will give variety.

CHAPTER VII—Continued

"Go easy," I told her. "We're going to have a real picnic trip down the river—no hurry, everything pleasant. There's nothing to cry about and nothing to get in a paddy about. I'm going to talk to the carriers; take any rags you want out of my swag while I'm away."

I left her alone, sitting there a forlorn slim figure, in the new sun of the day that was to have begun my march to victory. All the great bush was awake and getting to its business of the day—it didn't care that my ambitions were wrecked and my plans, of years, thrown into the Romilly river.

I had never questioned for an instant the necessity laid upon me to take Jinny safely back to civilization, save her from the consequences of her folly, at any cost. But I could not pretend to myself—however much I might pretend to her—that I was glad. It meant the using up of my stores, the going back to Daru to refit. Losing the carriers was possible; they might desert as soon as they saw the sea, and I should have to recruit ever again. Weeks of delay, months maybe, and all the time—

All the time—! I thought I can agree with Jinny in calling him a swine."

I found her waiting by the baggage. She had taken a shirt and a pair of trousers out of my swag and dressed herself in them, throwing away her rags. She had smoothed her hair with my comb, and washed her face with what I inferred to be the last of our drinking water.

No matter; I could send a boy or two to fetch more from the bottom of the gorge; what was time, now? The queerest mixture of kindness and anger filled my heart, when I looked at her. After all, if what I suspected was true, she was scarce at all to blame. After all, she had risked her life, was ready to go on risking it just for the doubtful blessing of my society. Was it a crime? No, by all the gods—no matter what it had cost me. Yet—

The way to the Romilly river was easier than it had been coming up. We got there in two days and camped to make rafts, since no canoes were now available. And on the first of the nights of our camp, Jinny and I came to an explanation.

CHAPTER VIII

We were seated upon the platform of Jinny's tent-fly, which had been mine (I slept with the carriers now). She sat with her legs crossed, playing an improvised "banjo," and mimicking the sound with closed lips, very cleverly—if one had felt disposed for such cleverness. I was not so disposed, feeling, indeed, a good deal more like going down to the Romilly and drowning myself in it, than listening to revue tricks—but I respected the pluck that set the improvised banjo to a seeming twanging.

Somehow she influenced me, drove the dark mood away. Somehow, by and by, she had me laughing. And the great dark about us pressed less heavily; the world narrowed, suddenly, to a cosy small tent with a lantern and a pretty girl lighting it up almost equally. . . . We had had little talk on the way down from the hills. But now, with a day or two of waiting before us, while rafts were made, it seemed to me that I owed her something. She thought me hard, unkind. I didn't want to be a churl.

"What's it about, Jinny?" I asked her, as she ended her play. "What's the smooching for? Want me to go out and buy you a pair of silk stockings?" She laughed; stretched out her shapely dancer's leg, disguised in my khaki trousers.

"I don't want anything off you," she said, suddenly grave. "At least, not anything you'd want to give me this side of the grave. . . . I've made up my mind to tell you all about everything—all about my comin' along after you, I mean—Well, the beginning of it was that day when you talked to me on Thursday Island, and said no woman couldn't go exploring; that put me in a bit of a paddy, because of course I didn't believe it and I don't either."

"Well, I was feeling pretty bad about it after you went. And it just came into my head, I dono how, that I'd get a boat and run over to the other side, and see, like, how things were going on with you and your trip. Of course, Sir Richard Fanshew, he was meanin' to go and get whatever it was, before you, and Spicer, he was backing him up; I'd got that much out of the old boy, while he was 'friends, because of course he wanted to make love to me, and I wouldn't, and that's when they will tell you. . . . And then I found that you weren't there at all, at Da—

"Daru."

"Yes. Seems you'd gone to Port Moresby after all. . . . Phil, wasn't that fair awful about it? Sir Richard gettin' drowned? Did no one ever find out anything? . . . Well, you know, and she ran on, without waiting for an answer, "when I heard you'd gone there, I was—I was—Phil, I was that snake-headed I could've bit you. I'm tellin' you all the truth, Phil—I didn't want you to go, because I knew she would be there, and I thought, let her get safe married to Sir Richard, and it'll be all right, because she's the milk-and-water kind that won't ever think of another man again; that's what I thought. So when I heard you'd gone there—and he was dead—Are you going to marry her?"

It burst forth like a cry. If I had been angry with her for her slighting words about Pia, I was not angered now.

"Jinny, my dear child—who do you think would have me for their daughter? I'm as likely to marry Miss Laurier as you are to marry one of the king's sons," I answered her.

She went straight to the heart of that sophistry.

"Yes, but if you was to find something up at Tatata, that was worth fortunes and millions—"

"I am quite sure, if I had a million tomorrow, Mrs. Laurier would not like me any the better." (Yes, but I thought to myself, she would let me marry her daughter; she hates the type I represent—all wise women hate it; it's anti-social—still, if I were a Bolshevik from Leningrad, with a million in my pocket, she'd swallow her hatred, hand over the girl—Curse her, and all like her!)

Somehow She Influenced Me, Drove the Dark Mood Away.

This went through my mind in a second, while Jinny was going on—

"I hadn't anywhere to stay at Daru. Mrs. Maidstone, she give me a bed. Spicer, he was there. I know Spicer; he used to be on the halls, years ago, but he wasn't any good at that, so he got a job as gentleman's gentleman to Sir Richard. Well, Spicer, he said to me—'Why don't you up and after him, when he starts? He'll be back here to get his boys which is waiting for him,' says he, 'and then he'll be off by the Romilly river, and if you take a canoe along the coast,' says he, 'I'll put you up to all the tricks,' he says, 'and you'll catch him up before he can get out of the bush country, where he'll have to cut his way,' he says, 'and you'll show him,' he says—'what you can do after all. And who knows,' he says—'Now I've told you everything, Phil Amory, and more than you want to know, so if you'll kindly leave my little wooden hut to me, I'll go bye-bye.'"

"You'll leave my little wooden hut for me," she parodied, shrilly. The black forest about us sounded to her high singing.

I had thanked her, and left her, and I was alone—alone with myself, and the knowledge of my wrecked ambitions. Things, on the whole, looked worse than I had supposed them to be. Jinny did not know everything. So far as she was aware, Spicer had been the moving spirit in the plot to stop me and bring me back; but I guessed the hand of Sir Richard Fanshew in the matter. If the plan were his, it was a good plan, fully organized, and one might expect developments from it. It was as certain as anything could reasonably be, that a rival expedition was even now on its way. One hope only I had. My road was not the road of the dead miner, Grace;

It was as certain as anything could reasonably be, that a rival expedition was even now on its way. One hope only I had. My road was not the road of the dead miner, Grace;

World Slow to Reward Men of Musical Genius

Musical composition is one of the very worst paid jobs in the world unless the composer happens to hit the popular fancy of his own time, which only a few composers have managed to do. Consequently most of the composers have done something else for a living, though generally something connected with music. J. S. Bach was a church organist, Handel was an organist and conductor, Mozart was in his day a famous pianist, as were also Mendelssohn and Brahms. Spohr was a great violinist, Gounod and Franck, organists. Robert Schumann was only prevented from making his living as a pianist by an accident to his hand caused by his enthusiasm to obtain a

I had used my knowledge of the country to beat out a new track. If I were right—and I was all but sure of that—the new way would cut down risk, time, expense, above all, enable me to get to Tatata faster than any one else could. Faster, it might be, than any rival trip that had started already; I wouldn't give up all hope of that, even now.

Under the hanging hurricane lamp I drew forth my copy of Grace's last notes, written on the day when famine and sickness drove him to turn back with his task still undone. Grace was leading an exploring trip, financed by the moneyed partner who wished to solve one of the many unsolved problems of the New Guinea back country, and, incidentally, place his somewhat undistinguished name upon the map. To cross from the Romilly to the Fly had been his ambition. There was—and still is—a big unknown area in those parts, and Jackson had been bitten by the desire, most natural, as I saw it—of finding out what, and who, might be in the untraveled space.

I sat on the end of the sleeping platform, under the lamp, and pored upon my copy of the words he had written in the bitterest hour of his life—

"January 5—No sago in sight. Stores very low. Jackson anxious to turn back at once. After dispute, agreed one day more. Boys weak, rebellious. Dysentery threatening."

"January 6. Today at four we turned back. Urged Jackson attempt further travel, but he declares himself unfit, insists immediate return. One carrier died today. Three in very poor condition. Natives appeared on distant ridge, war-danced. No attack. Deeply regret necessary return."

Then the passage that gave significance to the whole—added hastily in pencil, as if some reserve, some impulse of prudence had suddenly broken down—"Whole formation suggests gold. If so, have struck biggest jeweler's shop ever known." "Jeweler's shop," a phrase current among Papuan miners, means a pocket, or series of pockets, of extreme richness.

"January 9. Covered about five miles, hard going. Carriers very weak, feet badly cut. Jackson somewhat better."

"10th—Much regret to say Jackson killed by natives today, evidently belonging to same Tatata tribe that had threatened us. When stopping in stream bed for lunch, shower of spears suddenly thrown from dense bush. One went through Jackson. I fired into bush and ordered carriers to do same. Heard one or two shouts, but on entering bush later nothing to be seen. Attended to Jackson best I could, he did not live three minutes, seems to have been hit in heart. Buried him eight feet deep, piled boulders on top, resumed march. Reached creek I had named Jackson, about five. Camped. More dysentery among carriers, two in bad way."

The record continued, brief and hard, relating deaths of carriers, further attacks by natives, terrible straits for lack of food and lack of water; the finding at last of a small patch of sago that enabled them to secure enough food for a last rush back to the Romilly river. Grace had written little after that; the fever that ended his life some weeks later was burning out his strength day by day, and he was barely able to reach the coast alive. There, at a little trading station he died; leaving his gear with the trader; and I, coming along some while after, had bought the stuff for a song. Grace's diary didn't interest the trader, who had native blood, and could barely read and write. I was as sure as anyone could be that my eyes were the first to rest upon it. I had been absolutely sure—till the day I met Jinny Treacher on Thursday Island—that the very word "Tatata" was unknown to any save myself; that the suggestion, the possibility of immense treasure, contained between the lines of Grace's diary, was my secret alone.

Now that I had passed the trading station again, ascended the river, no Sherlock Holmes was needed to tell me how the secret had got out. That story was contained in one sentence—Grace had written to his girl. He had no doubt hoped to get better, get back to her. He had done exactly as I had done with Pia, as Sir Richard Fanshew had done with Jinny. Told his girl his secrets.

And Grace's girl had gone out, in an influenza epidemic, not long after. But before that, she had, in her turn, told some one who was, probably, her lover; might have been her lover all along—Fanshew.

SCENIC PLAYGROUNDS OF AMERICA

By G. M. KILBOURN

Chief Mountain

IF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN were still alive and could bring his kite and key and wet silk thread to some convention of modern electricians, the contrast of ages represented would probably get a good share of the newspaper headlines. But in Glacier national park, Montana, there is just that sort of a contrast—with mountains rather than men in this drama of inconceivable age.

At least eighty million years ago, according to the geologists, a group of rock strata totaling sometimes 11,000 feet in thickness was formed in that region by sediment slowly settling to some now long-vanished ocean's bottom. All this 11,000-foot cross-section is now known as "Algonkian" strata; and on the very bottom of it was a 1,600-foot layer of "Allyn limestone," originally a faint blue in color, but weathering to a yellow.

These Algonkian rocks also occur in the Grand canyon, and might never have been revealed there except for the fact that the Colorado river picked that particular spot to dig the world's biggest hole. But in the Glacier park region there was a perhaps still stranger circumstance; a bulging and cracking of the whole Algonkian section, with as a climax an overlapping, now called the Lewis Overthrust. This overlapping—whatever the reason or exact details of such behavior—placed the Allyn limestone, the lowest and therefore presumably the oldest of the whole eighty-million-year-old Algonkian family, on top of much newer, "younger" rock that had just previously been the surface of the earth.

With erosion by wind and temperature changes, as well as by water or grinding glacier, the front of the overlapping layer is slowly but constantly retreating, until the aged yellow bottom layer may now be seen high on the cliffs along the eastern edge of the park, as well as underfoot at Many Glacier, Two Medicine, and other points nearer the divide. But the strangest erosion has been that which wore a gap in the yellow layer to the northeastward and left Chief mountain's 1,500-foot silhouette there alone—a sullen, unflinching sentinel of the year 80,000,000 B. C.—or—thereabouts, sitting astride the "young" 7,500-foot plateau formed speck by speck by a patient ocean through the sands of later centuries.

Chief is a tooth shaped, precipitous yellow monster guarding the northeastern corner of the park. It may be seen by every Many Glacier visitor from the highway near Lower St. Mary lake or Babo, and those riding from Babo to the Canadian boundary get many views of it. Or it may even be glimpsed by west-bound passengers of the Great Northern railway a few miles before the Glacier park station is reached.

Another interesting feature of the Glacier mountains is that many of them wear a unique black stripe. This is a diorite layer from 50 to 100 feet thick, which tells a story of some ancient lava intrusion into the sedimentary rock. Sometimes the adjacent layers are whitened as if burned to ash by the lava.

Wave and ripple marks of some prehistoric sea are also frequently encountered on the Glacier park mountain sides.

Paper Money

There is no silver in our paper money. The notes are printed on a special kind of silk-fibered paper, which is made at the Crane mills, in Dalton, Mass., especially for the government. Its manufacture is a closely guarded secret, and the law forbids possession by others of any such paper or its imitation. The paper is received at the bureau of engraving and printing in Washington in packages of 1,000 sheets, this count being maintained throughout every department of the bureau until the notes reach the treasury.

First American Oil Well

In 1859, Edwin L. Drake, a conductor on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, organized a company and drilled the first American oil well near Titusville, Pa., writes E. H. Hamilton in Popular Science Monthly. Petroleum was struck at 69 feet. It was pumped from the well at the rate of 25 barrels a day. By the end of the year, this had dwindled to 15. But the modern oil industry had been founded.

ASKS FOR LIBERTY TO JOIN HIS WIFE

Tale That Outdoes Tragedy of "Enoch Arden."

Owen Sound, Ont.—A true-life story, exceeding in sordid tragedy that of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," is revealed in a petition sent to the Nebraska state board of pardons on behalf of Harry Lafayette Dales, seventy, formerly of Barrie and Owen Sound.

Sentenced to life imprisonment for murdering a horse trader more than a quarter of a century ago, Dales is now pleading for liberty on the ground that his wife and children here desire to see him again before his death.

His Wife Remarried

If his plea is granted Dales will return to his former home, as did Enoch Arden, to find that his wife, in the long interim, has married another. Furthermore, she declares that she was never legally married to Dales; that he tricked her into a bigamous ceremony, while he already had a wife living; and later deserted her and their three small children.

The former Mrs. Dales, now nearly seventy years of age, is now Mrs. Henry Rourick, and she denies that she has petitioned for the release of the murderer, or that she will consent to see him if he is liberated. She insists, in fact, that the Harry Dales who tricked her into a supposed marriage, is dead, so far as she is concerned.

"He disappeared and I heard nothing of him for ten years," she declares. "On those grounds alone I would have been able to remarry, even if we had been married legally in the first place; and I learned later that we hadn't."

Offers Him a Home.

Mrs. James Mothersill, Dales' daughter, who was five years old when he disappeared, admits that she has offered to provide a home for her father if he is released from prison, but declares that she had hoped to avoid publicity in connection with the matter. She does not condone her father's misdeeds, but she clings to the prayer "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us," and she declares that a quarter of a century in prison may be sufficient atonement for many misdeeds.

To the majority of Owen Sound residents Harry Dales is only a name, but a few old residents of the city remember him as "a likeable ne'er-do-well," and a man of many loves. A woman who passed as his wife was tried for murder with him in Nebraska and sentenced to forty years in prison. She subsequently became insane and died in an asylum. But she was not Dales' wife, either.

Andrews Finds Vast Sea Hidden in Gobi Desert

Pelting.—Discovery of a huge inland sea in which rich fossil deposits abound has just been disclosed by Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews, of the American Museum of Natural History, New York.

Doctor Andrews returned to Peking on a hurried visit to purchase supplies for the expedition into the Gobi desert which he is leading this summer. He said a storm struck the expedition in the shifting desert sands of the Gobi and destroyed the major part of their supplies on the 500-mile trek.

The fossil beds and the sea, or great lake, hitherto uncharted, may contain evidences of the earliest man, he said. It was to locate this sea or lake, surrounded by sand dunes and defying detection until now, that the expedition started a few weeks ago for the desert.

He Presses a Button and the Worms Come

Knox, Ind.—Choice fishing worms by the gallon with only the labor of picking them off the ground may be had with a little judicious use of electricity, Gordon Byers, florist and sportsman, reported.

Gordon drives a steel rod a few feet into the ground where he suspects worms are hiding, connects it with an electric light socket and turns on the current.

The florist says that three minutes later all the worms for yards about begin to crawl to the surface.

Attempt to Cross Ocean in Motor Boat Is Failure

Amsterdam.—What was to have been an attempt at a heroic crossing of the Atlantic in a 15-foot motor boat ended disastrously for Hans Haefel and Hans Brednew, of Hamburg. Their small craft encountering heavy seas, they raised distress signals and were rescued by the coast guard, but their boat was lost.

Auto Victim Rouses in Mortuary; Dies!

Los Angeles.—The shock of finding himself on an embalming slab when he recovered consciousness in a mortuary where he had been taken to await an ambulance after an automobile accident, was too much for six-year-old Oscar E. Raifson. He sat up, stared and fell back—dead.

RATTLE OF THE RAIL

Engineer H. W. Sherod is now working on the extra board at Del Rio.

It is expected that there will be some extra passenger travel from the east Aug. 16th, due to cheap excursion rates to California.

Two more of the single expansion type large freight engines for the Pacific System passed through going west Tuesday.

The medical re-examination car was here from Houston two days this week, all train service employees and a number of employees of other classes attending same.

The remote control was placed in service Wednesday. This will be controlled from the depot, and will allow trains to enter or leave passing track in yard without necessity of making stops, at the same time the ground switch east of the bridge which has been in operation more than 45 years will be discontinued. Another old land mark gone.

Four of the new "4-8-4" type passenger engines have been received on the El Paso division, number 700, 701, 702 and 703. They can be used in either passenger or fast freight, and carry 250 pounds steam pressure and have 73 inch drivers, and when used in passenger service will eliminate use of double headers, being more powerful than the mountain type passenger engine in use on the Pacific system.

In this weeks Times read the new advertisement for Caruthers and Watters. The Sanderson Garage at Pancheto Flores filling Station. They do all kinds of repair work, give them a trial.

A Remarkable American Family

PRESIDENT JOHN QUINCY ADAMS

PRESIDENT JOHN ADAMS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT HAS become almost axiomatic that genius does not transmit itself and that the sons of great men rarely, if ever, turn out to be great. Certainly that has been as true in America as in other nations, although we have had a few families which, over a period of years, have contributed several individuals of distinction. Two of these which come readily to mind are the Lees, who during the Revolution produced a statesman and a soldier, both of more than ordinary ability, and during the Civil war a really great military leader; and the Harrisons, who produced a Revolutionary war statesman and two Presidents.

But if it is necessary to find an exception to prove the rule it may be found, perhaps, in the statement made by some one that "American history is all cluttered up with Adamses." For in America there is one family, and one, that generation after generation has consistently and without interruption, made contributions of the highest order to our history and civilization. Those are the words of James Truslow Adams (who, by the way, is a Virginia Adams and not related to the Massachusetts family of whom he writes) in the prologue to his book, "The Adams Family," published recently by Little, Brown and company of Boston.

The Adams family was established in America about 1636 when a certain Henry Adams, probably because of a combination of religious and economic reasons, decided to leave England and try his luck in the New world. By chance he settled at a place called Brimtree in Massachusetts. He married and had children, who in turn married and handed down the family name. This went on for four generations without producing any man of distinction until we come to John Adams, a farmer and shoemaker in Brimtree married Susanna Boylston, daughter of a family prominent in the medical history of the colony.

"With the fifth generation, in the person of John Adams, historian, publicist, diplomat, President of the United States, the family not only suddenly achieves national and international position, but maintains it in successive generations for two centuries. Was it due to some mysterious result from the combination of Adams and Boylston blood far beyond the ken of science even today; or to some unfathomable synchronism between the peculiar qualities of the Adamses and the whole social atmosphere of the next few generations, a subtle interplay of unknown forces; or to mere chance in a universe in which atoms rush and collide chaotically? Fascinating as is the problem, it is insoluble. All we shall see is that without warning, like a 'fault' in the geologic record, there is a sudden and immense rise recorded in the psychological energy of the family."

The stage was set for the first great Adams, John, to play his part in American history when the dispute between England and her rebellious colonies sent him to the Continental congresses, where clear heads were headed to see that independence was inevitable and union of the colonies essential. While most Americans think of the Revolution mainly in terms of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin and a few others of spectacular deeds, the true history of those times could not be written without the name of John Adams. It was he who had much to do with bringing congress to the point of declaring independence; he was the master stroke which caused the adoption of the New England troops around Boston as a Continental army and which checkmated intercolonial jealousies by placing George Washington, a Virginian, in command; he deserves the principal credit for establishing the American navy, and he furnished many of the political ideas on which the new nation based its government.

The international career of the

AMBASSADOR CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS

Adamses began when John Adams was sent to France as one of the American commissioners—his son, John Quincy Adams, going with him to begin his education in European schools, and after a brief stay there and a brief return to this country he went back to England as one of the commissioners to arrange the terms of the treaty of peace and later to become American minister at the Court of St. James. His career as vice president and finally as President completes the pattern of the life of this first great Adams.

In John Quincy Adams, the second generation kept up the standard set by the first and even advanced it. Before he was seventeen years of age he was private secretary to the minister to Russia and to his own father in Paris and in London. On his twenty-seventh birthday, after his graduation from Harvard, President Washington sent him as minister to The Hague and later to Portugal, Prussia and Russia. Then followed a term of teaching at Harvard but he was soon called back to public service on the peace commission of 1815. Next he emulated his father by becoming minister to England and came home in 1817 to serve President Monroe as secretary of state.

John Quincy Adams was a master diplomat, having learned his lessons in the European school of international relations. He brought Spain to terms in Florida and his conciliatory actions offset the rash deeds of Jackson without blunting the force of the American policy. To him, according to Historian Adams, belongs most of the credit for the Monroe doctrine, though it has come down in history bearing the name of the Virginia President. Like his father he failed of reelection to the Presidency, but his great years came during his service as congressman from the Plymouth district when he stood almost alone in defense of constitutional government during the period of the slavery dispute. Finally he died at his desk, worn out in the service of the republic.

The third generation of Adamses did not produce another President, but it did keep up the family tradition of diplomatic service to the nation, and if there were any way to evaluate comparative worth of national and international service it might show that the contribution of Charles Francis Adams was just as great as were those of John and John Quincy. Originally a Democrat, he turned Whig in defense of freedom and union. After a career as editor and congressman, his great opportunity came when Lincoln and Seward sent him to the post his father and his grandfather had held—minister to England. There he successfully checkmated the Confederate attempts to secure recognition, and when his firmness forced Lord Russell to forbid the English-built rams to leave the shipyards for Confederate service, he sealed the doom of the southern cause. And as a member of the Alabama claims commission his conciliatory spirit tempered the excessive demands of his colleagues, convinced Great Britain of the fairness of the American cause and won a just settlement.

The fourth generation is remarkable for the fact that the Adams genius was scattered among four sons, which accounts perhaps for the fact that none is so outstanding as had been representatives in the previous generations. Only one, John Quincy, turned to politics and, having chosen the unpopular Democratic party, had little chance to rise to prominence. Charles Francis was first a writer and then a business man. He became president of the Kansas City Stockyards association and later president of the Union Pacific railroad. He led his state in railway regulation, but he was never very well satisfied as a business man and later returned to writing. Perhaps the greatest of the four was Henry Adams who won his distinction in the field of literature. His book, "The Education of Henry Adams," has been called "the most thought-provoking autobiography, though it was not so intended, that American has produced." Nearly as famous is his "Mont St. Michel and Chartres." Brooks Adams dabbled in law and in writing history without making any profound impression upon either.

In his "Epilogue," the Adams historian carries the record of this remarkable American family down to the present when he writes: "On September 20, 1824, John Quincy Adams wandered among the tombstones of the family burial plot at Quincy musing on the past and future of his line. 'Four generations of whom very little is known' he wrote in his diary, 'than is recorded upon these stones. There are three succeeding generations of us now living. Pass another century and we shall all be mouldering in the same dust, or resolved into the same elements. Who then of our posterity shall visit this yard? And what shall he read engraved upon the stones? This is known only to the Creator of all. The record may be longer. May it be of blameless lives!'"

"The century has passed. We have seen the generations, and today a third Charles Francis, a son of John Quincy's grandson, John Quincy, is head of the family. A Harvard graduate, like all his family since John; for thirty years treasurer of the university; a lawyer, like all his family; a famous yachtman who defended the American cup against the British; a man true to the family tradition and honored in his community, he sits in the cabinet at Washington as secretary of the navy which was founded by John.

"John Quincy's wistful hope has been fulfilled: 'The record may be longer.'"

SAUL, A MAN OF GREAT POSSIBILITIES WHO FAILED

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 9:15-17, 25-27; 10:1; 19:9-11; 31:1-4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A King That Disobeyed.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A King Who Failed.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Avoid Failure.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Profit from Failure.

The sad failure of Saul should be a warning to every young man. Few men in history had greater advantages.

1. Saul's Advantages.
  - (1) A worthy inheritance (9:1).
  - His father was "a mighty man of power." One's inheritance is a strong factor in determining his success or failure in life.
  - His natural gifts (9:2).
  - He was a "choice young man."
  - (1) He was humble (10:22).
  - When facing the responsibility of national leadership, he hid himself.
  - (2) He was considerate of his father (9:5).
  - Not being successful in the mission committed unto him by his father and thinking that his father would be concerned about him, he proposed to go back.
  - (3) The grace of God was upon him (10:5-7).
  - God visited him with his grace to enable him to see the divine choice.
  - (4) The Holy Spirit came upon him (10:10).
  - Acceptable service can be rendered only in the energy of the Holy Spirit.
  - (5) He was zealous for God (11:4-15).

As the leader of his people, he performed service because of his zeal for God.

3. The friendship of Samuel (15:25).

So strong was Samuel's attachment for Saul that he greatly mourned his death.

1. Saul Made King (1 Sam. 8:10).
1. The demand of the people (8:1-22).
- The reason for this demand was threefold:
  - (1) Samuel was incapacitated by old age (v. 5).
  - (2) His sons were unfaithful (v. 5).
  - Samuel, though a good man, greatly blundered in the appointment of his sons as judges of Israel.
  - (3) Desire to be like other nations (v. 5).

The surrounding nations had strong leaders as rulers. Therefore, it was but natural that the Israelites should desire such leadership. Samuel protested against their action and took the matter to the Lord in prayer. The Lord directed him to point out to the people the meaning of their action.

2. Saul chosen to be king (9:1-11).

While Saul was on an errand for his father Samuel found him and anointed him. (1 Sam. 10:1-16). In due time the divine choice was confirmed by the people at Mizpeh.

3. Saul displays leadership (1 Sam. 11).

He displayed his military genius in effecting a great victory at Jabez over the Ammonites.

III. Saul's Failure (ch. 15).

1. The command to Saul (vv. 1-3). He was commanded utterly to destroy the Amalekites. The reason assigned was their evil treatment of Israel after they came out of Egypt. (Ex. 17:8; Deut. 25:17).

2. Saul's disobedience (vv. 4-9). The command was only partially carried out. Azaz, the king, was spared and the best of the goods appropriated.

3. Saul rejected by God (vv. 10-25). (1) Samuel cried to God (v. 11). The news of this disgraceful affair greatly disturbed Samuel, moving him to pray to God day and night.

(2) Saul's hypocritical pretense (vv. 15, 16). This pretense carried a lie upon its face.

(3) Samuel rehearses before Saul God's dealing with him (vv. 17-23). God is more concerned with having his commands obeyed than he is to have sacrifices offered unto him.

IV. The Divine Judgment Falls (15:26-35).

1. The loss of his kingdom. For the presumptuous offering of sacrifice the dynasty passed from Saul's house.

2. Under control of the evil spirit (19:9-11). When allegiance to God is refused Satan takes control.

3. His shameful death (31:1-4). Samuel forsok him, leaving him alone to suffer in disgrace.

IT'S Sir Walter speaking. What, Sir Walter Raleigh? The same.

Some months ago he offered pipe lovers a free booklet on "How to take care of your pipe." And the poor chap's been buried under requests ever since.

However, we've succeeded in engaging two of Queen Elizabeth's ladies-in-waiting to help the old boy out with his mail—so don't hesitate to send for your copy. It tells you how to break in a new pipe—how to keep it sweet and mellow—how to make an old pipe smoke smoother and better—the proper way to clean a pipe—and a lot of worth-while hints on pipe hygiene.

If you're a pipe smoker, you'll want to read this booklet. It's free. Just write to the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Louisville, Ky.

Royal Canaanite City

Evidence of a great flood, probably the source of the account in the Book of Genesis, has been found at Kish as well as at Ur of the Chaldees, Dr. George Duncan, of American university, an authority on Biblical archeology, says. The mound known as Belt-Misirin, which is being excavated by Xenia theological seminary, probably represents a Canaanite royal city conquered by Joshua and mentioned in the Bible as Kirath-Sepher, in the opinion of Doctor Duncan. Evidence of worship of the sun and worship of the serpent has been found at various cities of Biblical lands now being excavated, he points out.
