RANGE ROAMING WITH County Agent

Neighboring counties in the Range Conservation area are a little farther along with projects already completed than is Terrell county.

So far, in Pecos county, ten earthen tanks, 25 spreader dams, and about two miles of spreader terraces have been completed. Three sections of lechuguilla has been cleared, and over 98,000 acres have been placed under the deferred grazing provision, and will be free of stock until fall, in order to let vegetation go to seed.

In Maverick county 36 earthen tanks have been completed.

In Brewster county two big dirt-moving outfits are busy building tanks, spreader dams, and terraces.

The commissioners' court of McCulloch county have purchased machinery which is being rented to the ranchmen to do their tank and terracing work.

M. R. Bentley, agricultural engineer for the Extension Service, was in Terrell county last week looking at tank and terrace locations with Ernest Williams county agent. Mr. Bentley measured the amount of dirt it would take where Hugh Rose is building a header dam.

"The site for a proposed header dam should be selected carefully," Mr. Bentley said, "because the amount of dirt figured to hold the same amount of water will vary according to locations. Fifteen cents a yard for the dirt will pay for the concrete header if the right location is chosen."

Mr. Bentley also stated that the kind and size of terraces that will be built under the program will be decided by the rancher and inspector. In other words, the type and size suitable for a particular ranch should be built.

E. C. Martin district agent, was in Sanderson Tuesday, and from here went to Sonora to attend the Ranchmen's Roundup.

Hicks Canon and Ernest Williams picked out three Hereford calves at the Robert Duncan ranch last week. Later one will be put on feed by Hicks as a 4-H Club demonstration.

David and Bob Allen will pick two calves from the Big Canyon ranch next week and place them on feed as a 4-H project. John and Allen Hardgrove will feed from ten to fifteen of their lambs this fall. One of their February lambs, carrying about 50 Corriedale blood, when weighed the other day, tipped the scales at 120 pounds.

Repair Work Under Way on Buildings

EQUIPMENT IN ELEMENTARY AND MEXICAN SCHOOLS BEING REPAIRED—EXTRA TEACHER SECURED FOR MEXICAN SCHOOL.

Considerable improvement is planned and now under way in the three buildings of the local school system. Most of the work is being done without a great amount of expense, but is of such nature as to improve the appearance of the schools for the next term.

Work under way consists of refinishing of desks and the painting of woodwork in the grammar and Mexican schools. All blackboards are being thoroughly cleaned. A number of classroom floors are being resurfaced and polished. Plans are also being made to refinish the gymnasium floor.

Additional seats are being placed in the Mexican school in order to accommodate the increased enrollment in that school. An additional teacher is to be placed in that school next term.

Textbooks are being received, counted and made ready for the opening of school in September. Another improvement is the repairing of the clock and bell system now in use in both the high school and grammar school.

All of the above repairs are needed regularly in any school plant in order to keep the buildings and equipment in the best possible condition. Much additional work, such as cleaning the boiler and testing of the heating plant is also planned for the summer.

Four thousand book covers were received during the past week from the Walraven Book Cover Co., Dallas, for use this next term. These are to be distributed to the pupils free of charge, through the courtesy of the Ferguson Motor Company of

More than a score of attorneys and government officials gathered in conference in the federal building in San Angelo last Friday and agreed to a settlement of the suit of the United States Government against the estate of the late Mrs. M. A. (Monroe) Smith for unpaid income taxes.

Judge William H. Atwell of Dallas, signed the judgment, permitting closing of the litigation upon payment of $57,500 by various of the 120 defendants in the suit. The $57,500 was agreed upon as a compromise for the total amount of income taxes, penalties, and interest due from the estate.

When the suit was filed on October 11, 1936, the government had asked the payment of $65,000 in taxes allegedly due and unpaid, and sought, in addition, penalties and interest which brought the total to approximately $110,000.

Aside from the amounts to be paid from impounded oil runs by four oil companies—Gulf Refining Co., Humble Oil & Refining Co., Ohio Oil Company, and Shell Petroleum Corporation—the balance of the agreed payment is to be met by the administrators of the estates of Mrs. Smith, James Cornell and Mrs. Emma Cornell.

The oil companies will make payment aggregating $34,000, and the administrators of the estates will be responsible for the balance, $23,500.

LICENSE REQUIRED TO HUNT AND FISH—LAND OWNERS AND TENANTS EXEMPT—TERRELL COUNTY LISTED

A new law which requires persons to secure a license in order to hunt and fish in Several Texas counties was recently passed by the Texas legislature. Exemptions from the new law are persons under 17 years, and land owners and their tenants, provided they hunt only on land owned or tenanted by themselves. Hunting licenses are two dollars, and the license for fishing with artificial lures is $1.10. Those not using or owning artificial lures must procure a local fishing license at a cost of 55 cents. The owner of such licenses as outlined above may hunt or fish anywhere in Texas.

The law applies to twenty-eight counties, embracing the best fishing and hunting areas in the state as follows: Menard, Mason, Kerr, Schleicher, Crockett, Sutton, Edwards, Kimble, Bandera, Real, Blanco, Llano, Kendall, Gillespie, El Paso, Hudspeth, Culbertson, Wood, Val Verde, Kinney, Maverick, Terrell, Brewster, Harris, Hays, Caldwell, Bexar, Galveston.

The new law also provided that in the above named counties any person operating a shooting preserve shall act as the agent of the Game, Fish and Oyster Commission and collect ten per cent of any amount that is charged for hunting privileges on the property which he operates as a shooting preserve; and it shall be the duty of this operator to keep an accurate record of all amounts charged for hunting on such preserve.

Eagles Rout Vaqueros at Ball Game On Banner Ranch—Enjoy Barbecue

That the spirit of the Old West still lives was exemplified last Sunday when the Cowboys of this county, whose habitat is on the banks of the old Rio Pecos, entertained the Sanderson Eagles baseball team, and other guests from this place. It goes without saying that the women folks had big part in the entertainment, too.

The gathering was at the hospitable Banner ranch, one of the real beauty spots in this section, and the highlight was a big barbecue dinner, with imposing menu. Also, the guests enjoyed swimming and fishing on the huge lake which is part of the Banner holdings. Everyone reported a wonderful time.

At three o'clock the Cowboys and the Eagles squared off for a baseball game, which finally got under way after much arguing over the arbiters. The final decision favored Odus Wickliffe to call balls and strikes, while Ernest Williams kept an eagle eye on the bases. Though the players were dubious at first, they admitted, at the close of the final innings that both did a swell job.

The Eagles, as soon as the game started, forgot they were guests and romped on their hosts to the tune of 9 to 8, notwithstanding the fact that the Cowboys outthit the Eagles. R. Bogusch, on the mound for the students, gave up six hits, while Willie Banner, doing the flinging for the Cowboys, gave up but four safeties.

Column Right—

Nebraska has a fool law which prohibits undertakers to cuss or swear in the presence of the corpse. On second thought it is not as crazy as it sounds. Many a corpse has been known to rise up and walk as the lid was being battened down on the pine box. We remember one instance: An Irishman had passed on, and the neighbors came over that night for a big wake and to congratulate the widow on the fat insurance she'd collect. Toward morning the party was in full swing—and noisy. They made so much noise that they failed to see a movement in the casket, but they all came to when the "corpse" sat up and said: "If this wake goes on a minute, the corpse must be in it—you'll have to get me drunk to keep me dead."

That fellow who murdered his wife in El Paso, evidently was absent-minded. After killing her with a pop-bottle, then strangling her to death, he forgot to shoot her and set fire to the house.

The strike situation gets no better fast. A recent visitor in one of the affected areas stated that the situation is akin to that which existed during the Civil War—father against son, brother against brother, and the women folks not knowing which way to jump. And the people are wondering just where the administration comes in. And, by the way, what's become of our Madam Secretary of Labor Perkins?

You often hear of people yelling their heads off. Unfortunately it isn't true.

School teachers got a wee bit of a break this week when an educational committee set a minimum salary schedule of $100 for high school and elementary school teachers. Our sympathy always has been with teachers. They earn every cent of their money, but in a majority of cases have to be content with a pocketful of I. O. U.s, which they usually have to discount in order to eat and wear clothes. And in many of the smaller towns you fail to see them at social functions, partly because such things are frowned upon, largely because they cannot afford it.

Listening to the broadcast of the Braddock-Louis fight Tuesday night, one in the party remarked that the reception was fine. "Yea," spoke up another, "but Jimmy seems to be on the receiving end."

Fish tales are beginning to seep in. There should be a law. But then, funny things can happen while fishing. Several years ago, on a fishing trip at 15-Mile Dam on the Pecos, Bill Davis snagged one and his pole snapped close to his hand. Bill dived in retrieved the remaining pole and was whisked through the water as if hitched to a motorboat. As he came to the surface and caught hold of Bill, but that whale never slackened its pace. Finally there was six of us hanging on to that piece of bamboo. Even the Republican elephant couldn't buck such odds; the fish weakened, and finally gave up. Bill started pulling toward the bank, with visions of a 100-pound catchfish. All liked to fainted when that fish was dragged out. He didn't weigh an ounce over 4 pounds. "Must be one of them strong men," said Bill in disgust, and kicked it back into the river.

Senators are peeved over pictures of Texas Dust Bowl. Claim it isn't so. Well it is. All spring we've been inhaling dust, and this week after a few carloads of dry dust was dumped in front of this office we've been eating it.

Rats Cause Loss Of Millions Each Year in Texas

Austin.—Texas sustained a fifteen million dollar loss last year on account of rats, declared Dr. Geo. W. Cox, state health officer. The figure is a very low estimate based upon the probably number of rats in the State, two for each person. No doubt many suffer losses that would pay their taxes, and this does not take into consideration the losses from diseases, time and money, caused by the rat.

Typhus fever is on the increase in Texas, Dr. Cox said, and the rat is the cause of its spread. Old World typhus fever has a high death rate, while the type we have in Texas, sometimes called Brill's Disease, has a low death rate. It occurs among persons who work or live in rat infested buildings. It was the observation of this fact that led to the discovery that rats are carriers or transmitters of the disease. It appears that the rat suffers attacks of this form of typhus fever and that the fleas harbored by the sick rat bite man and thus human infection results.

Although this disease is not commonly fatal, it cannot be considered lightly. The intense headache, the high fever, and the great mental depression are its most unpleasant features. Like in seasickness, the patient's fear is that he is not going to die. The illness lasts about two weeks.

The control of typhus is very difficult and it depends upon the extermination of rats and this is no easy matter. Trapping and poisoning help, but the best results are obtained by starving the rats. This is done by having all buildings where food is stored rat-proofed. The State Department of Agriculture will be glad to assist communities in their program for the extermination of this pest.

Nine Comedians Cavort Crazily in 'Hotel Haywire'

Let nine comedians loose in a hotel as crazy as the house that Jack built and the resulting picture should be something. That's what Paramount has done in its newest comedy, "Hotel Haywire" which comes to the Princess Theatre next Monday, June 28th, for one night only.

Headed by Leo Carrillo and Lynne Overman the cast includes known comedians even in the bit roles. Carrillo plays "Zodiac Zippe," astrologer and gentle racketeer, whose money-making activities include everything that is short of murder. Lynne Overman plays the role of a dentist who finds himself headed for divorce through a practical joke played on him by a poker-playing friend.

Benny Baker, as a vaudeville actor turned detective, has an opportunity in "Hotel Haywire" to show how a detective should and shouldn't act. Assisted by his vaudeville partner Collette Lyons who makes her movie debut in this picture, Baker gets in Overman's hair while he and his partner trail Overman and his wife, played by Spring Byington.

Miss Byington, remembered for her part in "Ah, Wilderness," adds a comic portrayal to her list of successful movie roles as the wife. Chester Conklin, former Mack Sennett comedian and Teddy Hart, whose few screen appearances have made him a man to watch, are cast as partners in a law firm involved in the divorce proceedings. Geo. Barbier, Porter Hall, Mary Carlisle and John Patterson complete the cast.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Gardner and daughters, enroute to the Carlsbad Caverns from their home in San Antonio, spent last Sunday in Sanderson, guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Cochran.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Yeates visited in Del Rio last Thursday.

Mrs. S. H. Underwood and children, Mildred and Ross, left last Thursday for Ballinger for a visit with relatives.

New Colbert Film Set in Paris and Alpine Sportland

An up-to-the-minute gal with a thirst for fun, Claudette Colbert sails merrily abroad in her new comedy romance "I Met Him in Paris," which comes to the Princess Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, June 30 and July 1, and she plunges headlong into a double-barreled romance with two gay, giddy, debonair young gents, Melvyn Douglas and Robert Young.

Douglas and Young, who play the part of two writers equally determined to win Miss Colbert's heart, meet the brunette on her arrival in Paris. The gay romantic chase carries the trio to the Swiss Alps, and then back again to Paris, with the girl still unable to make up her mind which of her two determined suitors she prefers.

While those scenes laid in Paris afford Miss Colbert the splendid opportunity to wear the glamorous style creations which Travis Banton designed for her, the outdoor Alpine scenes also introduce thrilling sports fashions which will certainly set new fashion trends. The star sports more than a dozen changes of dress including formal, traveling, informal, sports, and skiing costumes.

Miss Colbert's two swains have wardrobes almost as lavish as hers; Douglas makes nine changes of clothes and Young eleven.

"Hoppy" Joins Texas Rangers in Latest Picture

"Borderland," the 9th of the popular series of "Hopalong Cassidy" pictures, brings Bill Boyd back to the screen of the Princess tonight and Saturday, June 25 and 26, as an under cover man for the Texas Rangers.

Cassidy, in "Borderland," is assigned to capture a cunning bandit operating on both side of the Rio Grande. In order to do this he undertakes to destroy his own reputation for fair-dealing and has himself exposed as one of the worst of the West's outlaws—a receiver of stolen cattle. His ruse is so successful that he not only succeeds in deceiving the desperado, but also stuns his pals, Johnny Nelson and "Windy," who are not in on the scheme.

Know Texas

(T. S. C. W. Feature Service)

Denton.—A strange combination of deserts, canyons and fertile valleys awaits the visitor who heads down from Lubbock to the land "West of the Pecos." Possibly the most interesting route is across the line into New Mexico, where Carlsbad Caverns provide interest and beauty.

Swinging back into Texas by way of Guadalupe Peak and into El Paso, the traveler may catch his first view of Old Mexico in the city of Juarez, with its ancient missions and motley population. Immediately south of El Paso the cultivated areas of the Rio Grande valley appear, and in the midst of the oldest community in the state are the missions of Ysleta and Socorro.

Southeastward the Davis Mts., rising a mile above the level of the sea, are famed for their scenic beauty, healthy climate and historical importance. Here also is Mount Locke, where the University of Texas is building the McDonald Observatory with the second largest telescope in America.

No good Texan can skip a detour into the Big Bend country down in the southern tip of this western section. The continually producing Shafter silver mine is located here, and farther on are the impressive Los Chisos (The Ghosts) mountains.

After a good look at the Santa Helena canyon of the Rio Grande with its 1,800-foot walls, the visitor can well understand why the state is trying to acquire sufficient land in this area for a national park. Two hundred and fifty thousand acres of the proposed one million acre tract has already been acquired, and the Mexican government is planning to match the Texas acreage with land just across the border. The completed international park will include 2,000,000 acres.

Mrs. Mata Wheeler, after a visit here with Mrs. Grace Wheeler, left Wednesday for her ranch home near Rocksprings.

TODAY a cab driver rings the bell and chalks up his name as a distinguished adventurer. He is Patrick J. Whalen of Bloomington, Ill., and on December 12, 1935, he had the adventure of the passenger who wouldn't take no for an answer.

Pat works for the Yellow Cab Company at Bloomington, and his brother, Jim, is night manager of the company's office next to the interurban depot. Pat drives on the night shift, and on this particular shift, and on this particular December evening he was sitting in the office with Jim, waiting for a call.

It was a cold night. The interurban was due in a couple of minutes, and suddenly Pat noticed a man looking into the office. He opened the door, asked him if he wanted a cab, but the fellow shook his head.

Just then the phone rang and a call came in for a taxi out on the east side of town. Pat went to his cab to answer that call.

PAT WAS PUT IN A HOT SPOT

He had just turned the ignition on when he heard the door open. Standing beside the cab was the man who had refused his offer just a moment before. Pat started to tell him that he had a call now and couldn't take him—but he never finished.

Suddenly, the man pressed a gun against his side. "Don't make a move," he said, "or I'll drill you!"

The man opened the rear door and got into the back seat. "Get going," he snapped, "and turn right at the next corner. We're going to town." Pat managed to get the car started and around the next corner. It was a cold night, but Pat says he was sweating as if it had been 110 in the shade.

He drove out through town and each block they traveled took them farther from the crowded business section—and safety. As they reached the outskirts the man in the back suddenly shouted to him to go faster. But there was a governor on the cab and Pat couldn't go any faster. He told the man that, and he was apparently satisfied. But Pat was still nervous about the gun that fellow had trained on his back.

As Pat started to slow down for a red light, the fellow thrust the gun in his back and told him to go ahead. Pat passed the light.

"I was hoping a policeman would see me run that light," Pat says, "but no such luck. Thought after thought ran through my mind. Maybe I should hit a telephone pole or run into a parked car, or do something else that would attract attention."

GOOD PLACES FOR A MURDER

But with that gun in his back Pat didn't have a chance to do a thing. The road they were on was leading them straight for a cemetery and next a slaughter house—both ideal spots for a murder.

Pat was on the verge of screaming as they approached those two spots, but he whizzed right on past them and nothing happened. A little farther on, the man ordered him to pull over to the side of the road and stop.

"Now he'll shoot me!" That was the thought that raced thru Pat's mind. They were really out in the country now—not a house in sight. Pat says he'll never know how he got out of that car. His teeth were chattering and his knees were knocking together. The man with the gun stopped behind him and they started to walk.

They only walked a short distance. Then they came to a railroad embankment and the man pointed to it with his gun. "Climb up there," he said, "and start walking. And don't look back or I'll kill you on the spot."

Pat climbed the steep, snow-covered embankment. As he started down the tracks he could hear his abductor starting the cab. When he thought the man was no longer watching him he ran down the embankment on the opposite side and headed for a farm house.

"As I walked," he says, "I breathed in deep breaths of cold night air and considered myself the luckiest fellow in the world. The first farm house didn't have a phone, so I walked to the next one. I called the office and Jim started to bawl me out for not going to the place I was called to."

HOW THE GUNMAN WAS NABBED

Pat told him what had happened. Jim told him he'd notify the police and send a car for him. Pat started walking toward town to meet the car.

"I don't know why I did that," says Pat. "I was just so jittery that I had to be doing something. I had walked three-quarters of a mile when I saw a car approaching. Imagine my surprise when a police car came up and a voice asked 'Are you Whalen, the cab driver?'"

"That's me," said Pat, and the policeman turned a flashlight on the back seat. There, handcuffed and sitting next to another officer was the fellow who had been holding a gun on him only a short while before.

"His eyes were like little slits," says Pat, "and, oh boy, did he give me a dirty look. I couldn't understand how they had caught him so soon, but Jim explained after I got back to town."

It seems the gunman made a wrong turn and, not being very familiar with the city, landed back in town. He then decided to drive to the depot and catch a train. What he didn't know was that Mr. Hill, the owner of the company, is always at the depot at train time to check the drivers out.

"When he drove up, Mr. Hill, thinking it was me, started toward the cab to call me down for disappearing. The gunman backed up the cab and tried to make a getaway, but as he rounded a corner he turned too short, hit a telephone pole, and another driver, Harley Green, grabbed him and took away his gun."

The police searched Pat's gunman and found in his pocket the loot from a store that had been held up a short time before. He confessed to the robbery, but when they examined him they found him insane and committed him to Kankakee asylum.

Pat thinks he was mighty lucky to get away from that bird alive. "And when I see reports in the papers of people who have become victims of men like that," he says, "I know perfectly well just what they have gone through."

False Faces

By JANE O'RYAN

SHE liked him at once, because his smile was attractive and the expression of his eyes was both frank and sympathetic, and he hailed from the West about which she had heard so much from her father, and which made her long to be of it.

He liked her at once because she had something more than mere prettiness. Her eyes held understanding as well as the glow of youth. Her smile was distinctive. It was in accord with the seriousness of her face and the intelligence of her eyes. She never giggled, nor wasted time in idle talk with the shallow young men in the office; yet she was friendly and obliging.

Rutherford considered her unusual and for that reason the obvious red of her lips annoyed him. He decided that it must be remedied. He realized that he would have to bide his time before he could broach the subject. He realized also what his interest in her meant and he was pleased. She would make an excellent wife and that was what he wished.

So with his vast help their acquaintance grew and with it grew their regard for each other. Rutherford became acquainted with Clara's mother and brothers, and sister. He told her about his "folks," yet no mention of the "obvious" red of her lips was made. He still waited the right opportunity, and of course, it finally came.

He had invited her to the theatre and it was at the end of the first act when Clara exclaimed, "Isn't the leading lady beautiful," that he recognized his chance.

"Yes," he answered, "I suppose she is; but she would look far lovelier if she weren't so artificial. Look at her mouth, for instance."

"But," said Clara, "if she didn't rouge it, it wouldn't look good over the footlights."

"But it is so palpably unreal," Rutherford exclaimed, "and when anything artificial loses the semblance of reality, beauty no longer exists."

Clara looked at him seriously. There was absolute understanding in her eyes; then with a smile she opened her vanity box and regarded herself critically in the mirror. A slight frown came between her brows. "You are right," she said, "it is not pretty. It will be remedied."

His eyes thanked her eloquently, then suddenly she leaned nearer and whispered, "What about my face?" and her eyes twinkled.

He looked surprised. "I never suspected," he said, with a smile. "That is where artificiality drops all its syllables but the first. One cannot object to perfection."

Then the curtain rose on the second act and they watched it happily.

"How do you like the hero?" Rutherford inquired when the curtain descended.

"Splendid," Clara replied, "but severe."

"Severe," said Rutherford. "He has ideals for the girl he loves and for himself. There is no pretense there; no artificiality." He looked squarely at Clara. "I should be like that," he said "with the girl I love."

Clara felt self-conscious; but she assumed a nonchalance, as she inquired: "You would be suspicious and jealous?"

He nodded gravely. "Where is there love without jealousy—rational jealousy, of course? And where there is jealousy, there is always suffering."

Clara smiled with an assumed sadness. "What a tragic state love is," she sighed.

"A glorious state," he replied promptly.

She must have agreed with him after all, for that very night he proposed in a taxi and was accepted. "You are sure, Clara?" he asked tensely.

"As sure as can be," she answered, her eyes as tender as his. "And you understand that I demand much?" he asked.

"But not any more than you give." She smiled into his eyes with absolute confidence. "Not any more," he replied.

Then everything was forgotten in their first kiss.

Blissfully the next days passed; then upon the third day, as they walked together after business hours, Rutherford startled Clara by saying suddenly, "Love has made you serious, dearest."

She laughed; but her pretty mouth, now naturally red, did not show real mirth. "Love is a serious matter," she said, "and—I try not to make you—suffer."

He pressed her hand and gave her a look fraught with tender appreciation. "I understand, dear, better than you think. It is hard for me to watch those men talk to you and smile, and see your answering smiles, but I know it is a part of the day's work." He looked at her intently. "They never say—" he began, then he broke off. "No, dearest, I shan't question you. My faith in you is complete."

She sighed, but so faintly that he did not hear.

They walked thru the park to their favorite summer house and sat hand in hand, scarcely talking. Once in a while Clara would indicate some tree or shrub at hand whose beauty she asked Rutherford to note.

When they parted, they made arrangements to meet there on the morrow at five o'clock. It would be Saturday and a half holiday; but Rutherford had some business to attend to and could not meet her sooner. Several times he expressed disappointment over this, and each time Clara laughed, while the color deepened in her cheeks. And each time she said, "It can't be helped, dear."

In the vestibule of her home he held her close to him and kissed her. "I wish," he said, "that you were not quite so serious."

Her laugh was so gay that he brightened and when he left her was feeling quite happy, indeed. But there was no doubt that love was a serious business.

At noon the next day when they left the office together, he said, as he pressed her hand at parting, "Five o'clock, dearest."

But he finished his business earlier than he had thought, and it was scarcely four when he entered the park and walked to their trysting place. Clara said she had "things to attend to," so in what better way could he spend his time than in waiting for her in the park?

The air was crisp, and it was not likely that anyone would be in the summer house. But as he came in view of it, he saw that someone was there—a girl and a man. They seemed intent upon each other. Their backs were to him; only their profiles were visible. Then suddenly, his heart contracted. The girl was Clara! The attitude of the young man was unmistakable. He was making love to her.

Unconsciously, Rutherford had stopped in his walk; but now he made a spasmodic movement forward. The pain at his heart just seemed beyond his strength to endure; nevertheless he strode on and presently heard what the man was saying: "Darling, you are the dearest girl in the world. Don't think of that other one. He cannot love you as I do."

So this was the girl who stopped rouging her lips to please him—who had done everything to please him—a cry of pain came from him and they turned and saw him.

Clara managed to laugh as she said: "Oh, Tom, you're away ahead of time."

He laughed, too, a dry harsh laugh. "As you are," he replied, staring into her frightened eyes.

"I think," she said quickly with a sudden glance at the young man beside her, "you'd better go." She gave him a push with her hand and automatically he rose.

Rutherford turned fierce eyes upon him. "Would you go off like a sneak?" he cried.

The young man seemed dazed and gazed at him speechless. Clara sprang to her feet and laid her hand on Rutherford.

"No," she said, "not like a sneak. He doesn't—understand." As Rutherford made no effort to reply she turned to the young man and smiled. "You had better go," she said, "and—you'll hear from me."

He smiled and bowed, then he turned to Rutherford with a look of mingled dislike and suspicion, opened his mouth as though to say something, but apparently changing his mind, strode off without a word.

Clara watched him for a moment or two, then with a sigh she turned to Rutherford. "She saw how deeply he was suffering. A look of pain came to her eyes, and with a sudden movement she brought to view her left hand, which she had held behind her back, and in which was a book. "There," she said, "is the explanation." Then with a little sob she cried, "Oh, Tom, that you should have doubted me!"

He had taken the book and now stared at it. Instant relief showed in his face. He looked up quickly at Clara, caught her hand and drew her to the seat in the summer house. "Forgive me," he pleaded.

Tears brimmed Clara's eyes. She said, "I had promised to be in the play quite some time ago, but when we became engaged I tried to resign, but could not without disrupting everything; so I thought to keep it from you—to save you pain."

He glanced about and seeing that no one was in sight, kissed her tenderly. "In my heart I did not doubt you," he whispered, then he glanced at the book, "and I'm going to see you play the part, because we can't upset everyone. But—please never let it happen again!"
