SOUL MATE HUNTING.

Every now and then you will run onto some man or some woman with a roving, haunted look in his or her eye. They are hunting their soul mates. They may be married, not necessarily to each other and perhaps to each other; but they are convinced that somehow they have made a mistake, and not found the ones God intended them to find. So they roam and they rove—mentally and physically they roam and they rove.

The person who starts out to hunt a soul mate is in the same fix as the person who sets out to hunt happiness. Happiness cannot be obtained by running after it. It is always in the next block, or the next county, or the next state, or the next country, or the next world. And so with the soul mate. He, she, or it, is ever just beyond, ever in an unexplored package, ever embodied in some embodiment that looks extremely good but does not turn out to be so good.

A soul-mate-hunting man was walking down the main street of a prominent city. His hungry eyes searched the face of every woman. He encountered a soul-mate-hunting woman. And her lustrous orbs were turned on the physiognomies of the men. Those two pairs of soul-mate-hunting eyes met; the owners of the eyes stopped short; and the two pairs of eyes stared into each other's depths. The man walked up to the woman and whispered tensely, "I love you." The woman murmured to the man, "I love you." They married and lived happily for about a week. That story is not fiction, it is not even exaggerated; it is an unembellished actuality.

When the average man marries, when the average woman marries, each is sure the soul mate has been discovered, or the marriage would never have taken place. So long as the woman thinks the man she has married is her soul mate, all goes well; but the minute that the one or the other entertains any doubt on that subject, then the static starts, the interference begins, and fading sets in.

It is all right for one to look for one's soul mate, provided one looks in the right place. And that place, if one is married, is at home. The largest soul-mate-finding possibilities lie right there. A man may be married to some woman with a head as frowsy as a sparrow's nest. That makes no difference. She is his soul mate; and if he doesn't know it the sooner he can find it out the quicker he will be glad that his mother wasn't an old maid. A woman may be married to a man who looks like a stickbug; but that is of no consequence. His frame houses her soul mate; if she can discover that fact, she will save herself futile, anguishful moments.

The married person who persists in looking beyond his own doorsill for his soul mate is like one who insists on trying to eat soup with a fork when there is a ladle handy.

The soul mate is to be found, after all, more in the attitude of the individual toward the individual than in the individual himself.

In the final analysis one can get no real satisfaction out of playing a game except according to rules.

AIRDOME IN THE AZORES.

The little island of Fayal, one of the Azores group, has long been a news cable center for the world. Seven different companies land their cables there, and bring them into one big building. Every thing that can be called news is known in Fayal within a few seconds of occurrence, whether it be a British Derby or an American election. Now a new honor or service seems likely soon to be Fayal's. As ocean flying becomes increasingly important, the Azores loom up as the logical place for an aviation base for transatlantic aircraft. Flying weather in that part of the Atlantic is more reliable than farther north. The distance from the Azores to the United States is comparatively short. Europe is very near. The establishment of an airdome on Fayal is under consideration. Thus aviation brings a day of new opportunity to places as well as to people.

It's just as well not to pay off those war debts too soon. While they last, it isn't so easy to raise loans for another war.

IS EFFICIENCY FOOLISH?

A newspaper contributor writing of the way in which industrial efficiency seems to create unemployment by reducing waste, standardizing output, etc., says: "It is easier to tear down employment than to build it up. Humans have found that you cannot cut out waste without cutting out work. Brains and capital are now cutting waste and labor faster than new inventions and salesmanship are making and supplying new needs. We need more daylight fireworks, more seeming waste, not less." The conclusion is shortsighted. The use of time and labor in wasteful effort never did society any good. Individuals may seem to benefit by it, but any such benefit is accidental and transient. Every person engaged in useless work is a loss to society, because the rest of us have to support him. Increased efficiency and lessened waste in production mean more goods and benefits to be passed around, raising the general well-being and thus indirectly or eventually improving the condition of everybody. Granted, it takes time to readjust workers to new production methods. Better engineering is needed there, to prevent the human waste. We should not have idle workers any more than idle machines, making needless overhead expense. But the remedy is not to put people to work efficiently producing wasteful and foolish products or rendering silly services. It is to put them to work producing more useful goods, of which there never can be too many if the right things are provided in the right place at the right time.

FOURTH VICTIMS.

More than 200 people were killed on the Fourth of July this year. That is unfortunate, yet shows progress. The fatalities used to be greater. The "same Fourth" propaganda has accomplished a great deal, especially in the matter of fireworks. Of 296 fatalities reported immediately after the holiday, only 17 were charged to that cause. Next came 20 due to heat, 57 due to traffic and 106 due to drowning. This is a surprising list. Almost anyone would have expected fireworks or traffic deaths to come first. It is evident that further reform efforts must be directed chiefly to reducing the water peril, which continues during the entire summer and is almost as great on any hot week end as on a big holiday. People who go into the water must learn to swim, and must take all reasonable precautions while swimming, and communities and neighborhoods must provide better safeguards.

COST OF A CAR.

What does it cost to own and operate an automobile? The American Motorists' association, after considerable study, submits these facts: It cost the average motorist last year a dollar a day—$365 for the year. The figures may be a little less this year. The estimate is based on the average retail price of $953 for a new car and an average life expectancy for the car of seven years. The biggest item is depreciation, a fact which many car owners do not seem to realize. That runs about $136 a year. Operators and maintenance amounted to $229, divided as follows: Fuel and lubricants, $101; repairs and replacements, $88; tires, $40. There doesn't seem to be any allowance for garage expenses. These figures are worth a little study, especially on the part of owners with a small income.

BY ARLINE de HAAS

Copyright 1928 Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. "TENDERLOIN," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. picture adaptation of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
A satchel containing $200,000 has been stolen from the Mercer National Bank. The Professor, leader of a gang of crooks, suspects pretty Rose Shannon of knowing where the money is. Hoping that she may use the game wily, inadvertently, he persuades Chuck White, one of his gangsters, to invite Rose with him to a supposed "dinner." There Rose falls in love with Rose, and then she tearfully denies all knowledge of the robbery he determines to protect her. Suspecting that Rose is double-crossing him, the Professor arranges with his gang to kidnap her, leaving Rose alone in the cottage with the Professor.

Lefty picked up an overcoat from chairback and put it on. "Come on, Sparrow." He shoved the man toward the door.
The three made a dash for the door, scrambling in. Molly in front with Mug, while Sparrow and Lefty took their places on either side of Chuck. The Mug picked up the reins and slapped the horse's hind smartly. The wet, bedraggled animal gave a start and then broke into a jog-trot.
Stung by the chill wind and the driving rain, Chuck was beginning to come to his senses. He realized that they were leaving the safe behind and that neither Rose nor the Professor was with them.

"You can scream all you like, young lady."

Rose stopped, looking inquiringly at the figure framed in the doorway. Slowly the man turned and closed the door behind him. The latch clicked ominously.
"What—why—what is it?" The sight of Hemingway alone in the room with her sent a chill quiver of fear to her heart. For he no longer seemed that kindly, gentle old man. His eyes were resting upon her, a hard, cruel light gleaming in their depths. His lips were twisted in a gruesome smile. His hand shot out, grabbing her wrist—his bony fingers closing about her arm in a grasp of iron. A sudden, hideous terror, a warning premonition of evil gripped her.
"Chuck! Chuck!" She began to scream, trying to wrench herself from the tenacious clutch of this diabolical creature.
Hemingway laughed, a short, sardonic laugh, that chilled her through and through. "You can scream all you like, young lady," he mocked, "there's no one here. All the others have gone. We're quite alone!" The Professor released her wrist, thrusting her from him with a violent gesture.

"Sit down," he ordered, pointing to the bed. "I want to have a little talk with you."
The girl backed away, staring at the man as though hypnotized. Her trembling limbs seemed scarcely able to bear her slight weight. She caught at the post of the bed and sank down beside it, leaning against it for support. She hardly heard his words, let alone understood his purpose.
The Professor jerked up a chair and sat down, facing the girl. "What," he demanded bluntly, "did you do with the money you took from that satchel?"
"Money—satchel?" Rose was stunned by the question. She could only stare blankly, uncomprehendingly. And then as the import of his words filtered through her brain she leaned against the post, gasping faintly. "Oh, I didn't take it—I didn't—I didn't." She began to sob wildly, her whole body shaking in a paroxysm of frenzied fear.
"Come on, now!" The Professor seized her wrist again, twisting it cruelly, pointing his long, lean forefinger directly at her. "No stalling. I know you took the money. Now you're going to tell me where it is, or else—!" His fingers dug deep into her soft flesh, bruising it.
"I didn't—oh, please!" she begged. "Please let me go. I didn't take the money!"
Hemingway thrust her hand away as quickly as he had seized it. He rose, kicked back his chair, and looked at his watch.
"I'll give you just one hour to talk or—!" he concluded his sentence with a gesture so significant of the agony she had just endured that Rose began to cry even more violently. He settled his chair between the girl and the door and sank back into it, as though preparing for a vigil.

Rose, her head buried in her arms, lay across the bed, crying bitterly. Her shoulders shook hysterically; in her heart she was calling for Chuck. Why didn't he come—why didn't he come to save her from this cruel torment? He couldn't have gone away and left her to such a fate of his own free will.
"No matter what happens, remember I love you." She could hear his voice reassuring her.
At last her tears ceased; her eyelids were swollen and hot; her breath came in long, racking sobs. She feared to turn, lest she should find herself staring into those cruel, narrow eyes that bored straight through her.

angry growlings. She covered her ears with her hands and fled to the comforting, all-enveloping softness of the bed. An outside shutter, torn from its fastenings, banged repeatedly against the house. Long branches of trees, whipped by the wind, rubbed up and down over the wet stones of the dwelling, making weird, ghostly moanings.
She shivered and drew the covers up about her head, trying to shut out the medley of terrifying sounds. But the heavy streaks of rain were beating against the window panes, rapping out a tattoo, running in great rivulets along the sill. The intermittent zig-zags of lightning shed an intense brilliancy for a swift second and left the night darker by contrast. The crash of thunder following in the wake of the lambent flames, rolled and tumbled about like air-wave sounds of giant cannonballs hurtling through space.
In the midst of the melee came a new distraction, a sort of thump-thumping on the stairs, like uneven footsteps ascending. Rose sat up quickly, drawing her negligee closely about her, her horrified eyes fastened on the door. Then she drew a deep sigh and relaxed. Surely it was Molly. No longer afraid, she hopped out of bed, thrusting her feet into her slippers, and started towards the door. The latch clicked, the door opened, and the Professor stepped into the room.
Rose stopped, looking inquiringly at the figure framed in the doorway. Slowly the man turned and closed the door behind him. The latch clicked ominously.
"What—why—what is it?" The sight of Hemingway alone in the room with her sent a chill quiver of fear to her heart. For he no longer seemed that kindly, gentle old man. His eyes were resting upon her, a hard, cruel light gleaming in their depths. His lips were twisted in a gruesome smile. His hand shot out, grabbing her wrist—his bony fingers closing about her arm in a grasp of iron. A sudden, hideous terror, a warning premonition of evil gripped her.
"Chuck! Chuck!" She began to scream, trying to wrench herself from the tenacious clutch of this diabolical creature.
Hemingway laughed, a short, sardonic laugh, that chilled her through and through. "You can scream all you like, young lady," he mocked, "there's no one here. All the others have gone. We're quite alone!" The Professor released her wrist, thrusting her from him with a violent gesture.

OF A SOCIAL NATURE

Miss Zadie McWhorter and Sam Barr Kennedy Wed.
The marriage of Miss Zadie McWhorter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McWhorter, to Mr. Sam Barr Kennedy of Abilene, was solemnized in the parlor of the First Baptist church of Cisco Thursday morning at 8:30 o'clock.
Miss Elsie Payne of Fort Worth sang "As Dawning" as the nuptial song, accompanied by Miss Nell Tibbels of Ranger. As Miss Tibbels changed into Lohengrin's wedding march little Elsie Pulley, carrying a basket of bride's roses, and little Bobbie Grace McWhorter, sister of the bride, carrying the ring in a cluster of flowers, entered. The bride and groom entered together and the ceremony was said by Rev. Lawrence Fitzgerald of Abilene. During the reading of the ceremony Miss Tibbels softly played "Melody of Love" and played the march as the group passed out.
The bride wore a powder blue georgette dress embroidered in motifs of darker blue and with white trimmings. Her hat was of yellow imported Japanese straw. She wore a corsage of varicolored sweet peas and carried a handkerchief of point lace made by the aunt of the groom many years ago.
The parlor was decorated with ferns and baskets of shasta daisies with a color scheme of white and blue in other decorations.
Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy left soon after the ceremony for a trip to South Texas. They will make their home in Abilene where Mr. Kennedy is associated with his father in the grain business. Mrs. Kennedy has been in Abilene for several years where she finished Simmons University and after her graduation in 1924 was manager of the University Bookstore until the first of June.

Those from out of town attending the wedding were: Mrs. L. D. Kennedy, mother of the groom; Dr. Joe A. Kennedy, brother of the groom; Misses Mary Nisbett, Grace Pleasant, Oma Lee Manly, Ivy Rhodes; Messrs. Edward King, O. C. Miller, L. A. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Ben H. Manly, Mrs. D. F. Tibo, Mrs. C. C. Edwards, Dr.

DAYTIME FROCKS GET NEW TOUCHES

Daytime frocks for summer wear have a new touch of fullness in the back introduced by a godet or godet fold at the back of the skirt, with the proportions of the bodice and skirt in accord with this new disposition of fullness. On suits and coats as well as all kinds of frocks, a little pleat, a little godet, just a minute flare, give that fluid quality which makes the garment seem almost a part of the figure.
Marcel Rochas puts this little fold of fullness at the side of a charming sport frock in pink crepe which has an applique design in darker tone. The facing of the blouse and a narrow roll at the hem, the cuffs and the belt are of the darker shade. The bit of fullness even adds to the slender, flattering silhouette of the gown.
Another of plain black georgette has long diagonal folds extending from the shoulders to the hips and held at the waistline with two rhinestone clasps. There as another much like it in bright blue with a two-tiered skirt and close jacket bodice and a unique arrangement of draping at the back.
A delightful daytime frock of black has narrow bands of crepe ribbon on the bodice and a long pointed line at the back of the waist which is repeated in the movement of the skirt which dips in a similar point in the back.

Oklahoma Lady Gives Interesting Account of Long Use of Black-Draught in Her Home.

Sageeayah, Okla.—"I have taken Black-Draught ever since I was a child, and can recommend it as a splendid medicine for family use," says Mrs. Cora Maberry, of this place. "My mother used it, in bringing up her family, and after I had a home of my own, I continued to use it, as I thought it was especially good to give the children."
"My children did not mind taking Black-Draught, and so when they got upset with stomach spells, or were constipated, I gave them Black-Draught tea."
"If I found that they were taking cold, I was quick to start giving them Black-Draught, as it helped them to throw off the impurities which caused the trouble."
"My children are all grown now and have homes of their own, but I still keep Black-Draught in the house and use it myself when I wake up in the morning feeling dull and 'headache', and have a bad taste in my mouth."
"Black-Draught is a simple remedy for constipation, and I prefer it to others because it is purely vegetable. I always feel better after I have taken a course of it."
In use over 87 years. NC-107

1 WELL GOOD, 1 IS NOT, IN SIBLEY POOL

RANGER, July 13.—One well showing up favorably, another not looking good furnish the latest developments in the Sibley pool south of Ranger.

The Mock-Texas No. 2 Williamson is reported with 1,500 feet of oil in the hole and should prove a good well. It offsets to the east the Henning well that performed sensationally a few weeks ago. The No. 2 Henning of A. H. Rhodes is not showing up favorably and may be drilled on to the Ellenberger. As Rhodes' No. 1 discovered a new sand—the Ranger—when it failed to hit production in the usual Sibley level, he may make more oil history by finding still another pay in that pool.

The speed with which wells can be drilled in the Sibley area is shown by the No. 2 Henning. It was only a few weeks ago that the No. 1 came in for 300 barrels an hour and work was in progress that afternoon on the cellar for No. 2.

DRILL REPORT OIL ACTIVITY IN DISTRICT 8

Following is the report of oil activities in the Cisco field, district No. 8, as made to Omar Burkett, deputy oil and gas supervisor:

WINS TENNIS TITLE SECOND TIME

Drama unfolded for when Helen Wills is riding the courts marked the victory of America's tennis queen over Senorita Elia d'Alvarez of Spain, in the finals of the women's singles at Wimbledon. ### GALVESTON CO. BARS BOLTERS FROM BALLOT

GALVESTON, July 13.—The Democratic executive committee of Galveston county Thursday night voted unanimously to bar the names of Thos. B. Love, candidate for lieutenant governor, and Mrs. Edith Wilman and Judge William E. Hawkins, candidate for governor, from the ballot in the Democratic primary election July 25.

"The integrity of the party demands that their names not be printed on the ballot because they are openly and notoriously violating their party obligations and pledge," a resolution adopted by the committee declared. The resolution charged that the three candidates who declared that they would not support the Democratic nominee for president had forfeited all rights and claims to membership in the Democratic party by their action.

Another resolution adopted by the committee gave election officials the right to challenge any voter in the primary and to question him regarding his intention to support nominees of the party in November.

A Texas supreme court decision upholding the Galveston county committee in a similar action in 1921 was quoted before action was taken on leaving names of bolters off the ballots.

Bishop Moore to Support Hoover. DALLAS, July 13.—Impetus to the fight to carry Texas into the Republican camp in November for the first time since the Civil War was added Thursday by announcement of Bishop John M. Moore of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, that he would vote for Herbert Hoover for president.

Bishop Moore declared that although he had been a Democrat for 40 years his views with regard to prohibition would not allow him to support Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York. He added, however, that he had no thought of deserting the Democratic party.

"I will vote for Hoover," Bishop Moore said, "to avert a moral disaster to this country and to save the Democratic party from the powers that are despoiling it."

WORK STARTS ON PAVING OF NO. 1-A GAP

ABILENE, July 13.—Preliminary work on No. 1-A paving project in Taylor county from Abilene has started. It was announced from the local offices of the state highway department. Contract for the paving of eight miles on the Albany loop of the Bankhead was let at the recent session of the state highway commission.

Approximately five miles of concrete paving on Highway No. 1 from Abilene to Merkel will be open to traffic July 23, the department announced. Paving has been completed between Mulberry creek and Merkel, a distance of about three miles and will be allowed to "set" until July 23. Two miles of paving have been opened already to motorists.

It's Smooth Sailing with Magnolia Anti-Knock Gasoline

Powerful Even Burning Knockless

Clipper, yawl, sloop or schooner, the sailing vessel has always been a symbol for smooth, effortless motion. A fair wind and a trim ship and a star to steer her by have brought renewed zest for living to many a tired heart.

Thousands will visit the Gulf Coast of Texas this summer to enjoy boating, fishing, swimming, camping and golf along the 940-mile stretch from Sabine Pass to Point Isabel, dotted with pleasure spots. They will follow the highways in more types of land craft than ever swam across a mate's glass. Landlubbers though they are, their motor craft can drive into the distance with a motion to rival the smooth drive of the sailing vessel, if they have started the day with a filling of our new ANTI-KNOCK Gasoline, the knockless fuel with no repair penalties.

Magnolia ANTI-KNOCK Gasoline is a Red gasoline, but all Red gasoline is not ANTI-KNOCK. Look for the sign.

1 WELL GOOD, 1 IS NOT, IN SIBLEY POOL

RANGER, July 13.—One well showing up favorably, another not looking good furnish the latest developments in the Sibley pool south of Ranger.

The Mock-Texas No. 2 Williamson is reported with 1,500 feet of oil in the hole and should prove a good well. It offsets to the east the Henning well that performed sensationally a few weeks ago. The No. 2 Henning of A. H. Rhodes is not showing up favorably and may be drilled on to the Ellenberger. As Rhodes' No. 1 discovered a new sand—the Ranger—when it failed to hit production in the usual Sibley level, he may make more oil history by finding still another pay in that pool.

The speed with which wells can be drilled in the Sibley area is shown by the No. 2 Henning. It was only a few weeks ago that the No. 1 came in for 300 barrels an hour and work was in progress that afternoon on the cellar for No. 2.

DRILL REPORT OIL ACTIVITY IN DISTRICT 8

Following is the report of oil activities in the Cisco field, district No. 8, as made to Omar Burkett, deputy oil and gas supervisor:

July 12.—W. A. Thompson and Harvey Leomis No. 1 R. H. Seal, Bond survey, Callahan county, intention to drill to 100 feet. Amersada Pet. Corp. No. 151 John W. Harris, Sanders survey, Coleman county, intention to drill to 450 feet. No. 1 S. M. Shoemaker, Leahy survey, Eastland county, plugged. St. Marys Oil & Gas Co. No. 8 J. E. Pruitt, T&E.L. survey, Callahan county, producer at 422 feet. Canale & Flint No. 1 H. E. Miller, HY&B survey, Coleman county, intention to plug. Dodgins No. 1...

The workers in the Daily News and Weekly American big subscription drive who will go after subscriptions Saturday and week until a late hour Saturday night will no doubt succeed in securing a few subscriptions that will net them some very high points and give them the very best opportunity to secure a lead this week that will put them over for the most points and win the better prizes which will be distributed to the workers after the close of the drive Saturday, July 21.

Subscriptions secured late Saturday may be mailed in Monday and they will count for points offered for this week. The 600,000 extra points will be doubled for every one year subscription to the Weekly American secured this week and for one year to the Daily News with the American the double points will be given for two years, four 3-months or two 6-months to count as two years for the extra points. Besides the 600,000 double points offered for subscriptions secured for last week and this week the workers will be issued 600,000 double points for every year to the Weekly American and for two years to the Daily News, that have been sent in during the entire time of the drive.

This week is the last big opportunity to secure the high number of points and if every worker could possibly know the few subscriptions that it will take to win the two automobiles and all of the valuable awards there is no doubt that they would make an appeal to their friends that would get them the subscriptions that would win.

The last coupons have been printed in the paper and there will be no more coupons or sample coupons sent out. All coupons will be good for points until Thursday night, July 19.

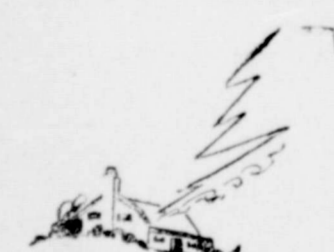

All points must positively be in the Daily News office by that time. The standing of the workers will be published one more time before the final close of the drive in Tuesday's city edition and Wednesday's mail edition of the Daily News. The standings will give the leaders, as near as possible after the returns from the workers come for this week.

THREE SAVED FROM LIVING DEATH

Three of the brave crew of the ill-fated dirigible Italia, who were rescued from slow death on the icy wastes of the Arctic Thursday by the Russian icebreaker Krassin. They had been missing since May 23 when the dirigible was wrecked and hope had been virtually abandoned for finding them alive. They are: Lieutenant Alfredo Vigliani (left) whom General Noble left in charge of the party when he himself was taken off in an airplane; Giuseppe Biagi (right), radio operator; and Felice Trojani (below), engineer. Four other members of the Italia's crew were rescued Thursday by the Krassin.

NOMINEES OF PROHIBITIONIST PARTY NAMED

CHICAGO, July 13.—William F. Varney, Rockville Center, N. Y., Thursday night was nominated by the Prohibition party as its candidate for the presidency.

Varney was declared nominated on the second ballot with 63 votes out of 121 cast. Hoover was second in a field of six with 45 votes. Varney's nomination was declared unanimously by a majority vote of the delegates, despite a demonstration by the minority.

On the first ballot Varney received 53 votes, lacking seven of a majority for nomination, and Hoover 42. Governor Alfred E. Smith received two.

The Democratic candidate's nomination and his subsequent poll of votes precipitated a one-man parade by Delegate Clinton N. Howard, Rochester, N. Y. Howard marched up and down for four minutes in front of the speaker's platform, shouting, "This is a burlesque! Such action as this make our party the laughing stock of the nation!"

His activity delayed the balloting until a storm of protests from the delegates forced him to sit down. Smith received no votes on the second ballot.

James A. Edgerton of Alexandria, Va., was nominated for vice president with 68 votes. Other votes were F. S. Regan, of Rockford, Ill., 29; Dr. B. E. Prugh, Harrisburg, Pa., chairman of the convention; two; J. R. Buck, Norris, Wis., one; Jesse Jones of Houston, one, and J. R. Buckman, one. Edgerton's nomination was made unanimous after the first ballot.

If all the Smiths and Robinsons vote for them, they may be elected. On the other hand, if all the Herberts and Charlies vote for the other ticket, it should be elected.—Pasadena Star-News.

BUFFALO GAP TO BE HOST TO OLD SETTLERS

BUFFALO GAP, July 13.—Final preparations for the annual reunion of the Taylor County Old Settlers on July 20th at Buffalo Gap have been completed, according to R. G. Anderson, president of the organization. Concession privileges have been acquired by J. A. Glascock. Old timers, members of their families and friends are being invited to bring basket lunches, tin cups, ketchup and cream. Coffee is furnished free.

Heretofore, a barbecue has been the feature of the reunion, but this year the officers decided to dispense with this portion of the program. Political candidates are invited to attend. However, no making is planned. The date will be merely introductory to the gathering.
