Food Sense—Not Nonsense

Let's Have No 11 o'clock Drag!

Breakfast habits of many Americans on-the-go are due for a change—a change back to better breakfasts. Too often, this first meal of the day could no longer qualify as one of the good old-fashioned "three squares a day." People who skip breakfast or eat a skimpy one are apt to drag by 11 o'clock.

These are the people who may say, "I'm not hungry early in the morning." Perhaps they may not be, but are they alert at this time or does it take a good lunch to get them into action? Those who lack an early morning appetite might start the breakfast habit by eating small portions of a balanced breakfast, stepping up the quantities gradually.

The cost of mid-morning hunger has been checked in an extensive study at the University of lowa School of Medicine. During late morning hours, college students who ate a good breakfast turned out more work, were quicker in their reactions—both mental and physical—and did not tire as easily as when they either ate no breakfast or had only did not tire as easily as when they either ate no breakfast or had only unsweetened coffee.

Scientists say that those who skip over this meal or who eat a slim one, frequently fail to get enough of the needed nutrients in luncheon and dinner. For example, fresh fruits which furnish vitamins for sparkle are not always included in the last two meals of the day.

What is a good breakfast? Authorities say that breakfast should furnish from one-fourth to one third of the daily food needs. Plenty of fatigue-chasing precein should be in the breakfast—at least ene-fourth of the daily protein needs should be included if that let-down feeling is not to appear by mid-morning.

of the dairy protein needs abouid be included if that let-down leeling is not to appear by mid-morning.

A good breakfast can follow a basic pattern—fruit, a main dish such as eggs or a breakfast meat, enriched bread or toast, and milk. All of these foods except fruit are top sources of protein; they feed out a steady supply of energy. Enriched bread supplies not only protein but the essential B-vitamins, riboflavin, niacin and thiamine. Served as French toast, bread can be the basis of a high protein dish which combines eggs, milk and bread.
