

House calls for cocaine campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee, saying it's "impossible" for the government to dam the international flow of cocaine into this country, is calling for an education campaign to curb the estimated $8 billion-a-year business.

But a White House official and a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman disagree with the panel's finding, arguing instead that recent efforts to reduce cocaine trafficking have been successful.

In the last few months, said DEA spokesman Robert Feldkamp, authorities have made some of the largest cocaine seizures ever. A record 130 pounds of pure cocaine, worth approximately $33 million, was seized in Colombia in October, he said.

But Feldkamp and Peter G. Bourne, President Carter's special assistant for health issues, acknowledged that recent seizures represent only a tiny fraction of the estimated 15 to 20 tons of cocaine — all of it from Latin America — distributed annually in this country.

Bourne, who estimated that one million Americans may have tried cocaine, said it is difficult to convince people that cocaine poses a health hazard. "As a result, it is very hard to have (education) programs that are very effective."

Earlier Thursday, the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse, in issuing a report on its six-nation South American tour last August, said, "It is impossible to control the distribution of cocaine after it enters international trafficking networks."

The report described cocaine-selling networks as highly sophisticated organizations with structures and discipline resembling multinational oil or grain companies. It said widespread bribery and other corruption undermine investigative efforts.

Noting that Americans are the principal users of the illegal drug, the report said, "We must ... develop new methods of public education which will discourage potential new users and provide current users with the type of information that will encourage them to discontinue their use."

The DEA estimates the current street price for a gram, or one-28th of an ounce, of cocaine at between $60 and $100 for a blend that is about 10 percent pure.

Cocaine is not physically addictive and produces no tolerance level or withdrawal problems but, because it is a powerful stimulant, regular users develop "strong cravings" and a psychological habit, the committee report said.

About 70 percent of the drug enters the United States from Colombia, where the estimated annual income of the traffickers is pegged at $6 billion, equaling its street value in the United States and exceeding Colombia's income from coffee.

Forger brags about Mineo killing

MARSHALL, Mich. (AP) — A swaggering, talkative inmate who waived extradition in the Sal Mineo murder case rather than pay a $100 legal fee is going back to California the same way he left — under guard.

Lionel Williams, 21, who was to have been released at the end of the week after serving time in Calhoun County Jail for forgery, has agreed to return to California voluntarily to stand trial for first-degree murder in the actor's death.

The Los Angeles Times, meanwhile, quoted court documents today as saying Williams on several occasions had bragged of killing Mineo, once to a woman visitor and on other occasions to fellow inmates.

The documents were filed to obtain an arrest warrant for Williams.

The Times said Sheriff's Deputy Ronald Peek of Marshall was quoted in the documents as telling a Los Angeles County sheriff's detective that he overheard a conversation between Williams and another inmate, Philbert Gallard, in which Williams said he had killed someone and when Gallard asked who, Williams replied, "Sal Mineo."

Mineo was found stabbed to death outside his apartment in February 1976. Los Angeles County Sheriff Peter Pitchess said investigators believed Williams, acting alone, killed the actor in a robbery try.

But, he conceded, no robbery occurred. Money was found on the 37-year-old Mineo's body in the carport near his apartment.

Williams first told Calhoun Circuit Judge Creighton Coleman he wanted a court-appointed attorney to represent him during the extradition proceedings. That would have delayed his return to California.

But when Coleman told him he'd have to pay $100 — of $180 he had — for the attorney, Williams changed his mind. "Forget it — I'll just sign these papers," he said. He was returned to jail to await the trip to California.

California authorities plan to escort the convict back to his home state during the weekend.

Calhoun County Sheriff Roger Dean said prosecutors probably will call Williams' fellow inmates from the Calhoun jail to testify against him in the trial. His cell was bugged to gather information in the investigation, and police said his conversations regarding Mineo can be used against him.

Asked if he expected to be found innocent, Williams nodded and remarked, "Oh yeah, I'm cool." Faced with a swarm of reporters and cameras, he joked to deputies accompanying him: "This is a big deal, ain't it?"

Williams was due to be released Sunday morning after being jailed since April 17 on a conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses. He was found guilty of cashing a forged $176 payroll check in Battle Creek, where he lived for two months in 1975. He had been extradited from California to face the charges.

Los Angeles County authorities linked Williams to Mineo's death through witnesses and reports that he had purchased a knife in the city, Dean said. A Calhoun County Circuit Court judge authorized a warrant to bug Williams' cell at the request of California officials.

Soviets testing satellite-killing weapon system

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviets are continuing tests of their satellite-killing weapon system, the Pentagon confirms, with the eighth trial conducted shortly before Christmas.

But Defense Department officials are refusing to say whether that test was successful. Intelligence sources said most U.S. experts believe the test was a failure but that some are not certain.

Official confirmation of the Dec. 21 Soviet test came from the Pentagon Thursday night, about six hours after spokesman Tom Lambert told newsmen, "My instructions are just to say nothing about it."

The Pentagon has been turning aside questions about the reported test since shortly before Christmas.

Lambert did not identify who had issued the instructions, but other administration sources said President Carter's National Security Council last month ordered the Pentagon to say nothing about the latest Soviet test.

Last October, the Pentagon readily responded to inquiries about the Russian anti-satellite test at that time, and said it was "presumably a successful intercept."

The reasons for the recent clampdown — and for Thursday's switch — were not made clear.

The pre-Christmas Soviet anti-satellite test was the eighth in nearly two years. Half of them have been rated successful, and Defense Secretary Harold Brown said in early October that the Russians now have the ability to attack some U.S. satellites in space.

Brown said this "is something of concern to me because we rely a good deal on our space systems."

Brown stressed that a U.S. ability to use satellites to watch Soviet military developments and to provide warning of possible attack helps prevent war.

The United States is engaged in preliminary research and design work on a possible anti-satellite system.

Quads improve; 3 off respirator

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Three of the Tyson quadruplets born earlier this week are breathing on their own today while the fourth remains on a respirator, according to officials at the Willford Hall U.S. Air Force Medical Center.

Doctors said all four of the children born to Penelope Tyson, wife of Staff Sgt. Kenneth Tyson, remained in good condition and continued to improve.

Nicholas, the only boy, and sisters Amie and Kendra had progressed well enough to be taken off the breathing device Thursday, doctors said.

The fourth quad, Kelly, remained on the respirator but may be taken off today, doctors said.

The quadruplets were born Tuesday night, about eight weeks prematurely. Doctors said the babies suffered from hyaline membrane disease, a breathing difficulty common in premature births, but were all expected to survive.

Calhoun County Sheriff Roger Dean said prosecutors probably will call Williams' fellow inmates from the Calhoun jail to testify against him in the trial. His cell was bugged to gather information in the investigation, and police said his conversations regarding Mineo can be used against him.

Lawyers hammer out advertising rules

By ROBERT HEARD
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lawyers are advertising today just like shoe stores and auto mechanics, and some of the older barristers are swollen purple because they can't stop it.

The U. S. Supreme Court said in an Arizona case last June 27 that advertising is all right. A woman lawyer in Houston immediately placed ads on her fee for divorce cases on post-midnight television, an hour when some spouses are wondering about the approximate location and pulse rate of their erstwhile sugar dumpings.

The high court said bar associations could adopt reasonable restrictions on advertising.

The Texas State Bar has given the Texas Supreme Court proposed guidelines. The main one restricts such advertising to newspapers.

The state court is expected to modify those guidelines this month and present them to the state's 28,000 attorneys in a referendum.

At least 51 percent of the lawyers must vote for the referendum to be binding. A simple majority of those voting will put them into effect.

But Joe Longley, bar board director from Austin says, "A lot of older lawyers will vote against it because it would look like approval of advertising. Most liberal lawyers oppose the guidelines on the grounds they are too restrictive."

Longley said this "unholy alliance" between older lawyers and liberal lawyers may defeat the guidelines. That would leave the legal profession in its present helpless position. A lawyer could advertise anything he wanted to so long as the ad is not false, misleading or deceptive.

By a 5-4 vote, the U. S. Supreme Court in Bates vs. Arizona authorized ads for "routine" services: "the uncontested divorce, the simple adoption, the uncontested personal bankruptcy, the change of name, and the like."

Those last three words have given bar association officers an opportunity to view their offices from a high point on their walls. What is included in "and the like"? What is a "routine" legal service?

As dissenting Justice Lewis Powell wrote, "A $195 fee may be reasonable for one divorce and unreasonable for another; and a $195 fee may be reasonable when charged by an experienced divorce lawyer and unreasonable when charged by a recent law school graduate."

Bar officials are taking the position that the burden is on the lawyer to show the service he advertises is routine.

But some lawyers are advertising their fees for matters that cannot be considered routine — personal injury suits, for example — and they say the only burden on them is to show the ad is not false, misleading or deceptive.

One of those is former Austin Mayor Jeff Friedman, who says his newspaper ads provoked "an extremely strong response, particularly from working and middle-class families that need legal services but feared exorbitant fees." "I never supported the concept of advertising, except on new offices and lineups (combinations of lawyers)," Friedman said.

But after the Bates case, he used ads to let the public know he is available for fulltime legal work now that he no longer is His Honor.

The American Medical Association filed a brief in the Bates case conceding doctors would be affected by the court's decision.

The AMA says it has never prohibited advertising, it only bans solicitation of patients. That's like saying the AMA doesn't oppose faith healing, only praying and laying on of hands.

Edwin J. Holman, a lawyer who retired in 1975 after 28 years as director of the AMA department of medical ethics, estimates only two to four percent of America's doctors solicit in their ads.

The Federal Trade Commission has charged the AMA's prohibition of solicitation is restraint of trade. That challenge is pending before an FTC hearing examiner.

Ace Pickens, counsel for the Texas Medical Association, says the medical profession will wait until that case is resolved before considering adopting guidelines for physician advertising.

Carl Hardin, executive director of the Texas Board of Dental Examiners, says dentists are not affected by the Bates case because the board, as a state agency, is regulated by the state. "The bar is a state agency, too, so Hardin may be mistaken in his belief that such agencies are exempt from the Bates decision."

But Hardin knows the Bates ruling may grow into something that cannot be predicted today.

"Who in 1954 could envision black and white kids on a yellow bus? That wasn't in that (school desegregation) decision," he said.

In the Bates case, the court said the ban on advertising originated in England, where early lawyers "viewed the law as a form of public service, rather than as a means of earning a living, and they looked down on 'trade' as unseemly."

"In this day, we do not belittle the person who earns his living by the strength of his arm or the force of his mind. Since the belief that lawyers are somehow 'above' trade has become an anachronism, the historical foundation for the advertising restraint has crumbled."

"Advertising is also said to erode the client's trust in his attorney: once the client perceives that the lawyer is motivated by profit, his confidence that the attorney is acting out of a commitment to the client's welfare is jeopardized."

"... the argument presumes that attorneys must conceal from themselves and from their clients the real-life fact that lawyers earn their livelihood at the bar," the high court said.

The American Bar Association urges lawyers to discuss their fee with a client as soon as possible.

"If the commercial basis of the relationship is to be promptly disclosed on ethical grounds, once the client is in the office, it seems inconsistent to condemn the candid revelation of the same information (through advertising) before he arrives at that office," the court said.

Faith in press drops

NEW YORK (AP) — A Harris poll reports that Americans feel more confidence in the country's major institutions and professions, with the exception of the press, which shows a drop in public confidence.

The other 15 groups cited by pollsters had a higher percentage of "great deal of confidence" votes in 1977 than they did in 1976.

The poll was a recent sampling of 1,496 adults around the country.

The press was the only category to show a drop, from 20 percent to 19 percent, according to the poll results released Thursday. Although the print press showed a decline, confidence in television news increased from 28 to 30 percent.

Public confidence in the medical profession exhibited a sharp turn-around, jumping from 42 percent to 55 percent in one year, according to pollsters.

Although overall public confidence was higher, it came nowhere near the high point as measured by a 1966 poll, when Americans gave the medical profession a 73 percent rating.

Confidence in presidential leadership increased from 11 percent in 1976 to 23 percent last year, but it was still much lower than the 1966 poll.

Foreigners buy farms, drive prices higher

EDITOR'S NOTE — American farmers, already up in arms over unfair returns on their investments, may have to contend with inflated land prices. A lot of foreigners are buying farms and farm-related businesses as investments — at prices beyond the reach of most farmers.

By WAYNE SLATER
Associated Press Writer
EUREKA, Kan. (AP) — The bidders wear cowboy boots and the cattle are Kansas-bred, but there's something alien about this glimpse of the American heartland.
None of it is locally owned. Not the auction barn where the Herefords are sold. Not the brick mansion behind wrought iron gates nor the grazing land which stretches as far as one can see.

In fact, the owners of this sprawling cattle ranch aren't even Americans.
Gary Longacre, a big-boned cattleman in leather chaps, sold 28 cows and 78 bulls at the November annual sale here. And at pretty good prices, he's pleased to say.
What he's not anxious to talk about, however, are the owners of the cattle ranch, a wealthy West German family which rarely visits the spread in the picturesque Flint Hills of eastern Kansas.
"Being a poor man all my life, I find it hard to understand people like the Flicks who live in a fishbowl," Longacre says, pulling a reporter out of earshot of a circle of Kansas farmers in Western hats and dusty boots. "I don't talk about them."

The Flicks, heirs to the Mercedes-Benz fortune, bought FLINT Hills Hereford Ranch from a Wichita oilman about eight years ago and hired Longacre, a rancher of good reputation, to manage it.
Legally, the purchaser was a Maryland corporation controlled by the Flick family. The sale and management agreement were handled by non-Kansas firms.
Increasingly, foreign interests are buying large tracts of American farmland. They are German industrialists, Italian bankers, millionaires from the Netherlands and wealthy tycoons from Argentina.
"They are people who have typically been from landed families in Europe," says Marvin Duncan, agricultural economist for the Federal Reserve Bank in Kansas City. "Further, they are people interested in diversifying their portfolios but concerned about political stability in their own country."

"And they are quite good business people and interested in profit. As an investment, farmland has performed better than the stock market over the past years."
By anybody's calculations, the total foreign holdings of U.S. farmland is small, but Kenneth Krause, an analyst with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said purchases to foreign interests are growing.
A U.S. Department of Commerce study of direct alien involvement in the United States at the end of 1974 shows that 4.9 million acres of land were foreign-owned and that almost 63 million acres were leased by foreign-owned American enterprises. Of that total, only about 22 percent, or a million acres, was identified as farm-related.

However, it doesn't include property held for personal use, holdings of less than 200 acres or tracts owned by small businesses.
Foreign investors are reluctant to disclose their purchases and reporting laws are largely ineffective.
A few foreign transactions are known: Prince Lichtenstein's 10,000-acre farm in Texas' Red River area; the Buonis' 12,000-acre Norris farm in Illinois; the Meternichs' 2,135 acres in Iowa; the Japanese Kikamo farm in Wisconsin; a 2-million bushel grain elevator in Salina, Kan., purchased by Mitsubishi, Japan's No. 1 trading company.

To remain anonymous, foreign investors buy land through a series of intermediaries or invest in large-scale American agribusiness.
For example, Saudi Arabian interests purchased 15 percent of the Arizona-Colorado Land and Cattle Co., which owns and leases more than a million acres of land. It operates cattle ranches in several states and has business interests in a beef-packing plant, cattle feedlots, a commodity futures, brokerage firms, a real estate company, natural resources, engineering firms and a bank.

Perhaps the most popular spot for foreign investors is California, although purchases are being made in the Midwest and Southeast.
"Over the last four years, we've sold about $70 million in real estate to foreign investors, some grazing land and some farmland," says Reed Oppenheimer of Oppenheimer Industries, a brokerage and land management firm in Kansas City.
In 1977 alone, Oppenheimer Industries sold some $8 million of farmland to foreign investors, much of it in Missouri and Arkansas. Most recently, the firm handled the sale of 1,000 acres to a German family and some 4,000 acres to an Italian interest, both from rich Marais des Cygnes bottomland in Bates County, Mo.

Newcomers to the market are from the oil-rich countries, although Oppenheimer says much of the Middle Eastern money is going into food packing and processing, not farmland.

Horowitz marks 50th at piano in US

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — In the early hours of Jan. 1, 1978, Vladimir Horowitz, his wife and five friends went home from a fashionable New York discotheque where they had seen in the new year.
In the afternoon, one week later, Horowitz — considered by most to be the greatest pianist in the world — will play a concert to mark the 50th anniversary of his American concert debut.
Even though Horowitz's art has been held in high esteem all his life, his career has been dramatic, like the playing which has electrified Americans for half a century.

He wasn't a prodigy; he played his first concerts at 18 for money, because his family lost everything in the Russian Revolution. He left Russia two years later, became a huge hit in Europe, then in America, went away from the concert stage twice — at the height of popularity — into seclusion and his ever again giving concerts, or visiting a crowded discotheque, seemed impossible.
Both times he returned to the stage, his technique as dazzling as ever, his interpretations even deeper and more sensitive, his fame and his fees escalating to a new high.
Now, he looks younger than 74. On stage, he looks slim, elegant, aristocratic. Talking in his living room, his expressive face constantly changes.

"But when I play, not a superfluous muscle moves. Youngsters now, when they come to play for me, their head goes up and they start to feel something and everything is in their face. I say, 'All right, your face has lots of eloquence. What is it about your fingers that there is no eloquence? Concentrate on your fingers and your heart and you will have no time for the face.'"
To a photographer in his living room, Horowitz says, "Try not to show too much the bags under my eyes — that is because I'm working very hard right now. The nose I don't care. It is big and I don't care. Most important, don't make me too old. I'm just 58."

Horowitz didn't go to Studio 54 to hear disco music; he stuffed his ears with cotton so he wouldn't hear anything. He goes there once in a while because it's a complete, even childlike, change from the dedicated business of being a serious musician.
Horowitz's concert on Sunday will be with the New York Philharmonic, the orchestra with which he played his first American concert, Jan. 12, 1928. He played a 25th anniversary concert with the New York Philharmonic, too, on Jan. 12, 1953.
On a typical day in his townhouse, Horowitz arises at 10 or 10:30, goes to the piano in the living room about 12:30. "I play one and a half or two hours, maximum. I play hard, you know."

He rests or naps, eats lunch at 3:30 or 4 p.m., rests again a bit, walks 25 or 30 blocks — often telling people who request autographs that he knows he looks like Horowitz but isn't — eats dinner at 8:30.
He and his wife of 44 years, Wanda, daughter of Arturo Toscanini, speak French to each other.
When they met, "He spoke French better than English," she said.
His second 12-year absence from concerts started right after his silver jubilee concert.

"I sometimes played five concerts in a week. It made me exhausted. The doctor told me to take one or two years off. I loved it. I took three. I took four. I started to make records. The records could travel and I'm staying home. Finally one day I decided to go on the stage. It was a little late, it is true. It was too long. I'm entitled to make a lot of money now; I'm regaining what I lost."
His concerts are always at 4 p.m. on Sunday, a time he finds himself and his audience untired and ready to enjoy music.

Crystal City still lacks fuel

CRYSTAL CITY, Texas (AP) — More than a third of Crystal City's 8,000 residents still are facing the winter months without fuel for heating or cooking, city officials say.
Part of the problem is blamed on slow progress on a federal emergency program to install propane tanks at many residences. Only one firm is doing the work.

Also, many people who have received the tanks and propane under the program already have used up their initial free supply of the fuel and say they have no money to buy more.
So far, about 300 tanks have been installed under the emergency assistance program, City Manager Raul Flores said Thursday.

Nearly 500 other families are awaiting installation of tanks and equipment.
The city was granted the $310,000 in emergency aid by the federal Community Services Administration, through the Crisis Intervention Program.

Crystal City, about 120 miles southwest of San Antonio, is a predominantly Mexican-American community with many migrant workers. City officials say most of the town's population receives at least some government welfare aid.

Competitive bidding at an auction offers an exciting change from comparison shopping at the store.

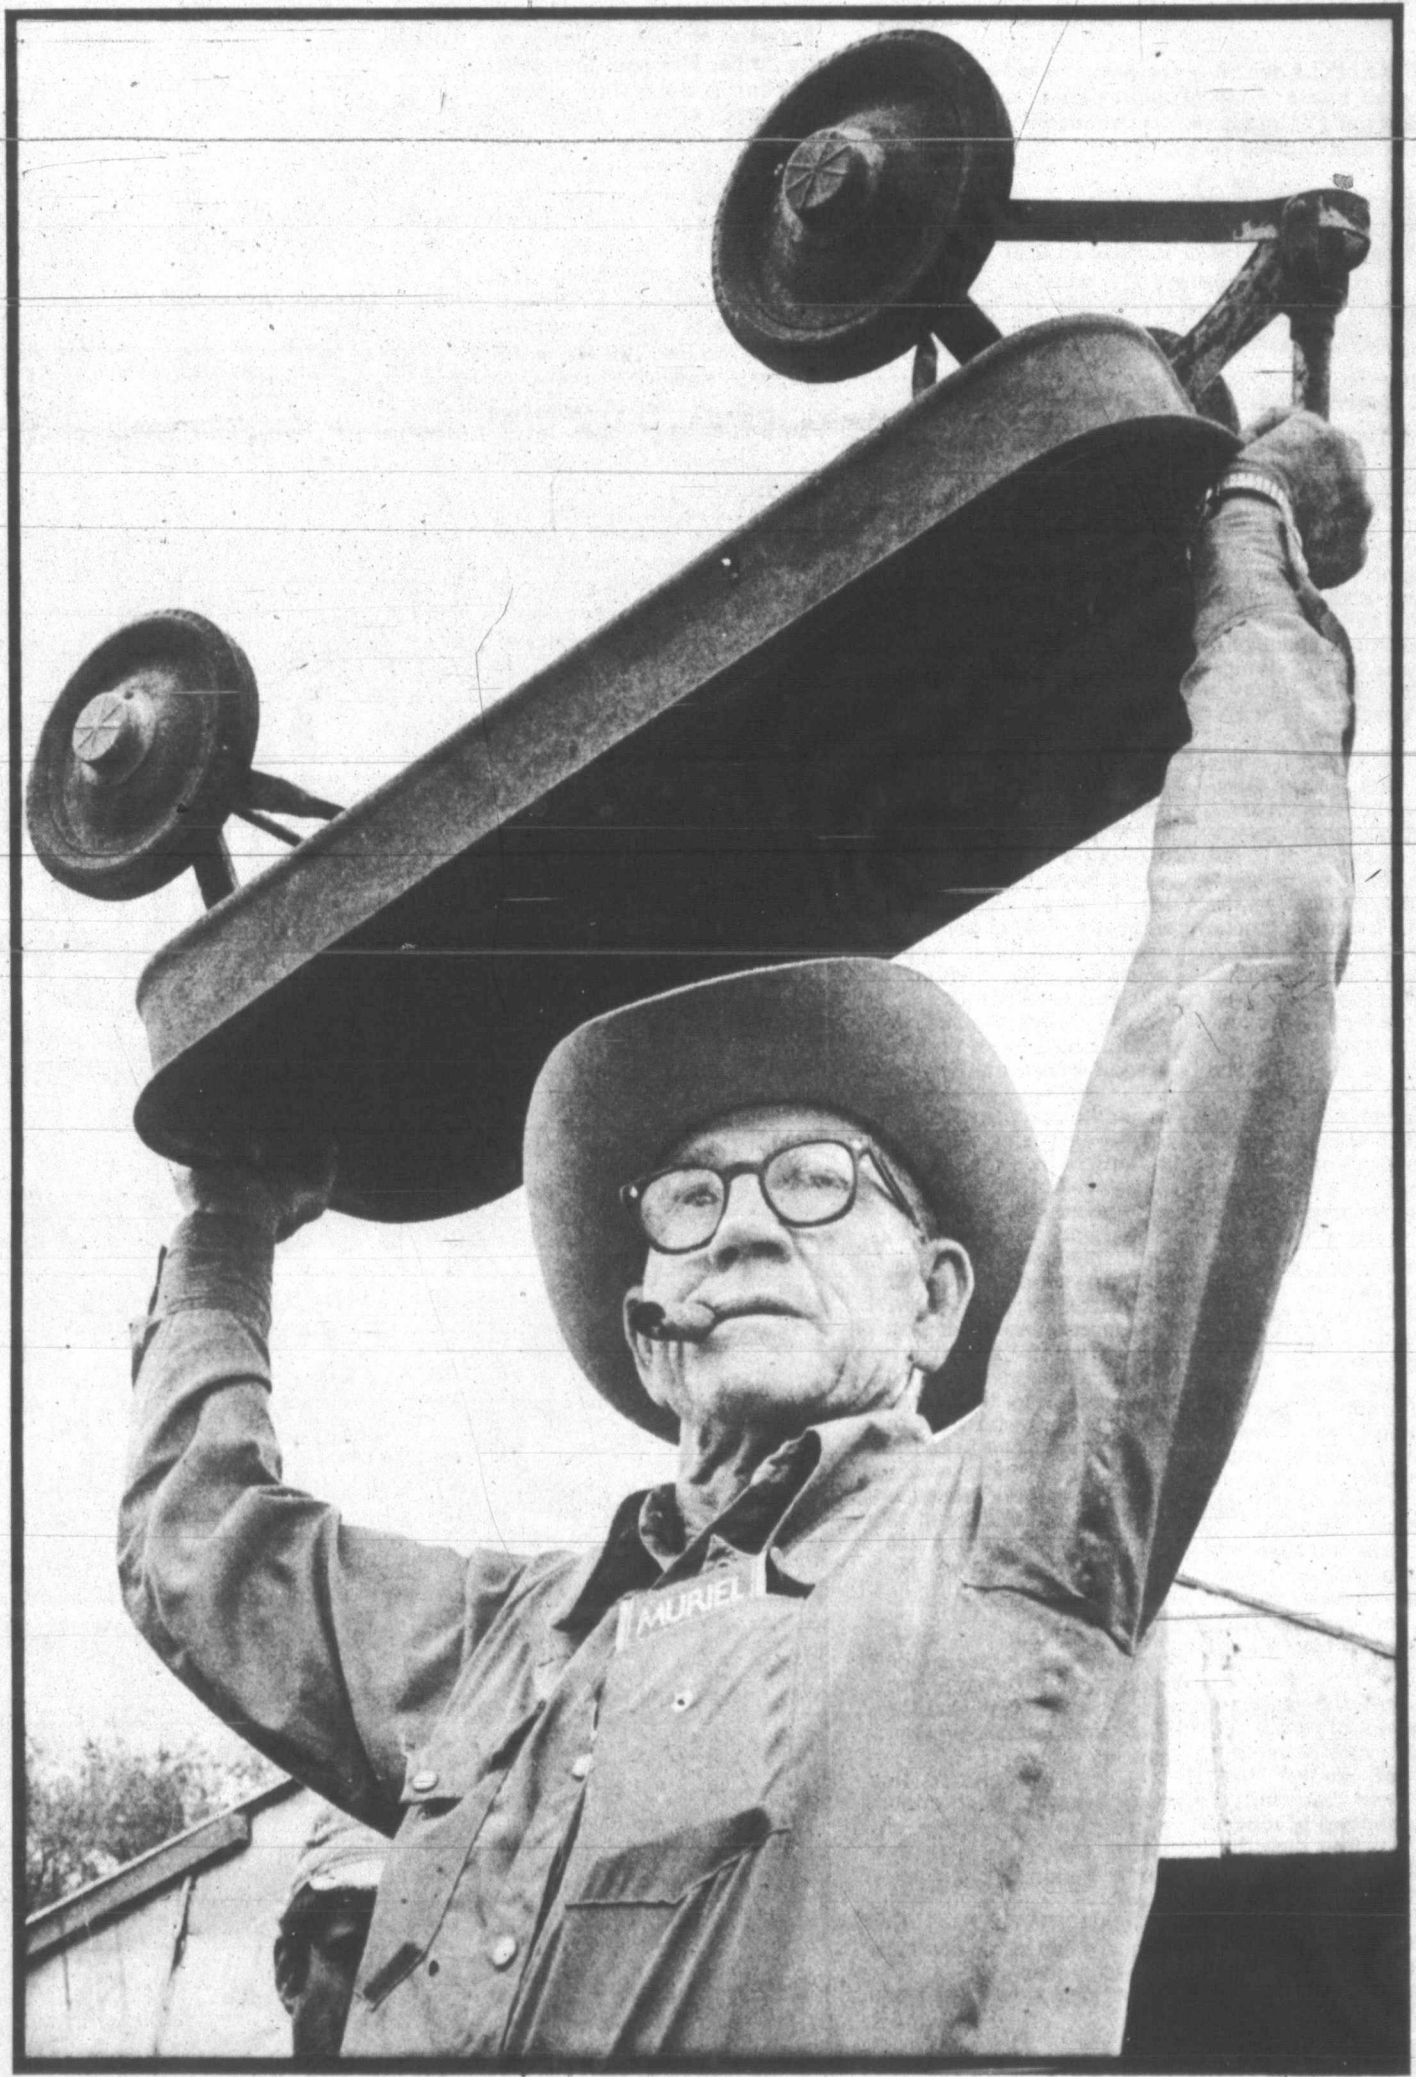

Shelby Pettit of Wheeler, auctioneer

The price on a stack of dishes was climbing. These women all were interested in it. ("Going once.") But the dishes worth another 50 cents? ("Going twice.") There were some at the store a lot like them the other day, but what was the price? It would be silly to bid more for these than it would cost to buy new ones. ("Sold to the man in the yellow cap.") Durn it. Wonder where he came from? Wonder if there are any more of those dishes coming up?

(Pampa News photos by Ron Ennis)

Timmy Hartley of Durham, Okla., knows quality auction stuff and bargain prices when he sees them. ("Now, what am I offered for this trombone slide?") If the money holds out Timmy may wind up with the entire instrument — mouthpiece, lyre, case and all.

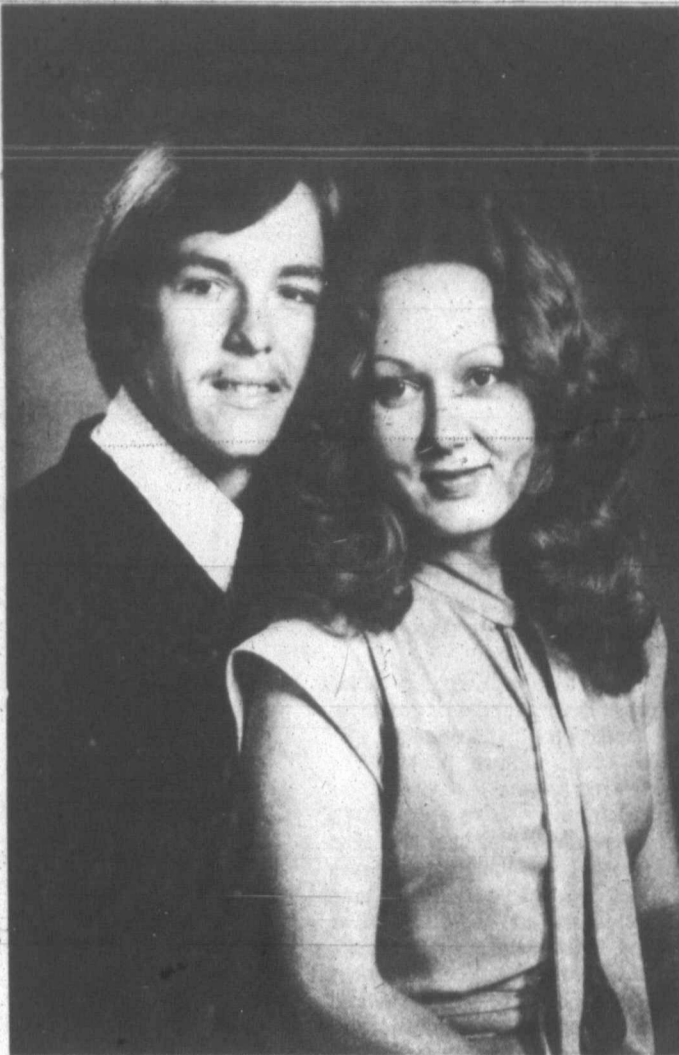

Al Conner holds an item so all bidders can see it at a recent auction on a Wheeler County farm. Auctions are defined as public sales of property or goods on the basis of competitive bidding which ceases when the auctioneer accepts the highest bid. They also are defined as a lot of fun by the folks who frequent them.

Store Leftovers
Carefully

After dinner guests depart, the problem of what to do with leftover food remains. If it is to be useable later, special care must be taken right away.

Usually the lower the temperature, the longer food can be kept. So it is best to store food at as low a temperature as possible without actually freezing it.

All foods placed in storage should be wrapped — and this means covering well. Food that's kept covered in cold storage can better keep bacteria under control.

Though useful in many ways, some kinds of bacteria also spoil food and cause illness. Like other living things, bacteria need food, warmth and moisture to grow. But they won't grow as fast in refrigerated food that's covered.

Some foods need loose wrapping so that air can get to them — others need tight wrapping to keep odors and moisture in and air out. If the food is to be stored only a few days, waxed paper or a covered container may be all right. But for freezing, tight containers or packages of freezer paper, heavy duty foil, glass or plastic are necessary.

Home Safety For Raw and Cooked Food

Most consumers know how easy it is for harmful bacteria to grow in raw meat or poultry held for several hours at room temperature. But equal concern should be given to being sure cooked food is properly refrigerated.

Most bacteria in raw food are destroyed at cooking temperature above 140 degrees F. But cooked foods can also be a haven for growing bacteria through recontamination or cross-contamination.

Cooked foods may be recontaminated if kitchen utensils used for preparing the food before cooking aren't washed before handling the same food cooked. Foods can be cross-contaminated by handling uncooked meats, then fresh vegetables without washing kitchen utensils and hands.

A good rule to follow is to wash all utensils and hands in hot soapy water after handling raw food — since it may contain bacteria — and before touching cooked food. Cooking food at proper temperatures will destroy bacteria that cause food poisoning.

To Keep Hard-Cooked Eggs

To keep hard-cooked eggs from getting a sulphur ring, chill the eggs quickly after they have been cooked. The green ring is due to overcooking and slow cooling.

Because quick breads baked in a microwave oven do not brown in the way they do when baked in a conventional oven, it is a good idea to choose a recipe that yields a dark batter or dough.

Student loans unpaid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is trying to collect $416 million in unpaid student loans and it says a breakdown shows students in California and Texas are the worst offenders.

The U.S. Office of Education said that the $416 million figure reflects student loans that have not been paid back during the 10 years prior to Oct. 1, 1977.

The latest state by state breakdown, dated June 30, 1977, showed $318 million in defaulted loans with the average amount being $922. That breakdown showed that better than two out of every five defaulted loans were recorded in either Texas or California.

The Department of Health Education and Welfare has announced a campaign to get the money back.

The government said according to the June figures 86,606 persons defaulted loans in California for a total of more than $100 million, while 40,571 persons defaulted in Texas for a total of more than $31.3 million.

The state-by-state breakdown used the students' last known address, the department said.

The Amazon River's network of waterways includes 18 major rivers and at least 200 important tributaries.

Visits unprecedented in Mideast war

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Arab-Israeli conflict enters its fourth decade in 1978 with peace hopes riding high as the result of groundbreaking meetings between President Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel on each other's soil.

But there remains the realization that failure of their efforts could mean a fifth Middle East war.

Sadat became the first Arab leader to set foot in Israel since it was founded in 1948. His solo peace offensive, suddenly unveiled in November and assailed by other Arabs, opened a surprising chapter in the strife-ridden Middle East and set the stage for Begin's unprecedented visit to Egypt at Christmas.

Sadat's trip to Israel:
—Gave de facto recognition to Israel for the first time from an Arab leader.
—Elicited a joint pledge of "no more war" between the two countries.
—Isolated the Egyptian leader from old allies, leading to a severe rupture in the Arab world.
—Seized the peacemaker's role from the United States and switched the stage for a settlement from Geneva back to the Middle East.

Within a month of Sadat's visit to Jerusalem, low-level Egyptian and Israeli negotiators convened a preliminary peace conference in Egypt.

Then on Christmas, Begin flew to the Suez Canal city of Ismailia to meet Sadat on Egyptian soil. Both sides reported progress on the question of Israeli troop withdrawals from Egypt's Sinai Peninsula. But they remained divided on the Palestinian issue and the future of the West Bank of the Jordan River.

The main achievement of the Ismailia summit seemed to be agreement on maintaining the momentum toward a comprehensive peace through committees headed by the two countries' foreign and defense ministers.

Probably the most dramatic impact of the two summits was the breaking down of a formidable psychological barrier between Arabs and Jews.

For Israel's implacable foes, the dialogues represented treachery and doom. The Palestinians and the Syrians joined the so-called "rejectionists" in denouncing Sadat's efforts as a sellout of the Arab cause.

Sadat responded by breaking diplomatic relations with Syria, the Palestine Liberation Organization, Libya, Iraq and South Yemen.

Jordan, with the weakest army and the longest border with Israel, and Saudi Arabia, the major Arab bankroller of the confrontation with Israel, remained on the fence.

For Sadat and Begin, much hinged on the amount of give and take in their positions on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Begin's original hard stance was eased somewhat by a plan to grant West Bank Palestinians administrative autonomy. But the Israeli leader remained adamantly opposed to a PLO-led Palestinian state on Israel's border.

Since the 1968 Middle East War, the Israelis have occupied the West Bank, Syria's Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip, a Palestinian refugee area previously administered by Egypt.

Before Sadat took the initiative, the peace momentum was mired in the long-standing dispute over Palestinian representation at a peace conference. Israel has refused to deal with Yasir Arafat's PLO, although the Arab regimes had designated his umbrella group as the legitimate representative of the region's three million Palestinians.

Although he does not carry the Palestinians' blessing, Sadat was banking on the goodwill and momentum of his peace offensive to wring concessions on a Palestinian "homeland" from Israel. Begin rejected this.

Elizabeth Ray feels sorry now

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elizabeth Ray says she exposed her affair with former Rep. Wayne L. Hays to get publicity and now feels sorry for the deposed congressman, whom she calls "an honest, good man."

"It was just a front to get attention, to get people to notice me," Miss Ray said in a telephone interview Thursday.

Miss Ray spurred a congressional scandal in 1976 when she announced that Hays, then the powerful chairman of the House Administration Committee, paid her $14,000 a year in public funds to be his mistress.

Within months, Hays was forced to resign his seat in Congress and retire to his Ohio farm.

Meanwhile, Hays announced on Thursday that he will "run for something" in this year's election. His political reappearance could come in a run for the Ohio legislature, where he served as a senator in 1941 and 1942.

Miss Ray said she wishes Hays well as he resumes his political career.

"I haven't talked to him," she said. "But I really do wish him well. I'm sincere in that. The other thing is peace."

"I'm sorry about it," she added. "I feel he's an honest, good man."

Miss Ray said she revealed the relationship because it was a period in her life when she felt the need for attention.

At the time, she told a markedly different story. She said she was afraid of Hays.

The affair occurred about the same time as the scandal between former Rep. Wilbur Mills and stripper Fanne Foxe, and Miss Ray at the time quoted Hays as saying: "If a broad did that to me, she wouldn't be around writing books. She'd be six feet under." Miss Ray was writing a book at the time, without Hays' knowledge.

She also said then that she made the affair public because of "the things he pressed me to do," but she refused to elaborate.

Throughout the scandal, Hays admitted he had a "personal relationship" with Miss Ray, but insisted it was not related to her job and existed prior to his marriage.

In the interview Thursday, Miss Ray also said she wants to become a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

"I feel good when I'm in church. I've made a lot of friends in the parish," she explained.

She also said she's studying acting and voice in New York City in preparation of a night club act — "singing and dancing" — to open this spring in Los Angeles.

"I definitely hope some day to be a superstar, so people will say, 'She can really act. She really can do that right,'" she said.

Miss Ray moved from Washington to New York three months ago to be closer to the theatrical world.

Fed warns of hazards elevators

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal job safety agency issued a special hazard alert to the U.S. grain industry today in the wake of four grain elevator explosions that killed more than 50 workers.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall urged the industry to follow the guidelines to prevent further disasters.

The alert, sent to more than 10,000 grain elevator facilities, provides safety information on such things as grounding of electrical wiring, ventilation and other hazards that can cause explosions.

Within a six-day period last month, grain elevators exploded in Louisiana, Texas, Illinois and Mississippi, killing more than 50 persons and injuring another 50. The blasts brought heightened concern among federal officials and others over safety conditions at grain-handling facilities, where grain dust may be ignited by static electricity or a spark.

Marshall noted that the department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration has only 1,400 inspectors, who are responsible for a total of 5 million workplaces throughout the country. He said they can only visit a small number of facilities each year and thus must concentrate on so-called "high-risk facilities."

However, he said, inspections alone cannot do the job and "the final responsibility for a safe and healthful workplace lies with the employer."

The hazard alert was based upon existing, mandatory OSHA regulations, as well as standard industry practices and new information obtained in the recent meetings among industry, government and academic experts.

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Argentina harvested 1.5 million tons of citrus fruit during the past growing season, up 8 percent from last year, reports the Economy Ministry here.

Orange production was up 10 percent, lemons 17.4 percent and grapefruit 3.3 percent. Only mandarin oranges declined by 3.9 percent.
