Untested mix used in plant

GLEN ROSE, Texas (AP) — Untested concrete has been used in construction of portions of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant in North Central Texas, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

For at least three years, concrete inspectors at the plant under construction southwest of Fort Worth periodically failed to properly perform certain quality control tests related to the composition of concrete. Its condition when being used and its strengths after it was already in place.

The Star-Telegram reported its findings in a copyright story by Michael Millenson, who spent four months investigating it.

The failure to perform the tests occurred both intentionally and because the concrete was poured "too quickly" to inspect, the newspaper reported.

In some cases the results were forged, it reported.

Officials of companies involved in the plant construction denied there are any quality control problems now.

But officials at Texas Utilities Generating Co., charged with final approval of the quality assurance program at the construction site, acknowledged there were "management problems" with the Richard W. Hunt Co. of Chicago, which ran the concrete testing laboratory until mid-1978.

TUGCO is a subsidiary of Texas Utilities Inc., the parent company of Texas Electric Service Co., Dallas Power & Light and Texas Power & Light.

Celanese officials fight rumors, speculation

By GREG HARDIN
Pampa News Staff

Rumors and speculation about the cause of a massive electrical arc that injured 10 workers at the Celanese plant here Friday have floated about freely, but officials have not determined an exact cause to the tragedy, according to plant manager Gene Steel.

Investigative teams from Celanese, Brown and Root, Occupational Safety and Health Agency and an independent insurance investigator have been searching for the cause, Steel said Tuesday. "Three of these teams have finished their study here at our plant but have not finished their investigation and have not issued a report as to their findings."

Steel said he did not know when a report would be issued by OSHA, Brown and Root or AID Consulting Engineers (the independent insurance investigator).

"They (OSHA) didn't tell me when a report would be issued and I didn't press for a specific date," Steel said.

The manager said Celanese had formed its own investigating team with employees from within the Pampa plant and employees from the company's technical center in Corpus Christi. The investigating team includes Celanese safety officer Homer Thomas, coal project manager Al Baker, four other Pampa employees and the men from the technical center.

All of the investigations started in mid-afternoon Saturday with all four teams entering the accident area at one time.

According to Steel, it was decided late Friday that the electrical control room, where the accident took place, would be padlocked until all the investigating teams could arrive in Pampa.

The Brown and Root team was flown in from Houston and we had people that came in from Corpus Christi," Steel said. "OSHA contacted us and requested if they could meet with us on the scene Saturday afternoon. Our insurance company sent in an independent investigator."

"We took off the padlock and entered the accident area at the same time," Steel said. "Each team looked at different areas but we all agree that a piece of test equipment had something to do with the accident."

"We are not saying that this caused the accident," Steel added. "We are saying the men were working around this piece of equipment and it was in use at the time of the accident."

Although OSHA, Brown and Root, and AID have completed their preliminary investigation, Celanese investigators are still searching the accident site.

"Our people are still conferring about what they have found so far," Steel said.

Steel said the total dollar loss of equipment was very slight, estimating the cost of repairs between $1,000 and $2,000.

"I have even had an estimate of $100 for repairs to the equipment," Steel said.

"There was no fire. It was a large electrical arc that burned the people so there was very little damage to the equipment."

Steel related in chronological sequence what took place from the time of the accident until Tuesday evening. Here is what happened, according to Steel:

Steel said he went to Highland General immediately after the accident and was there when the first injured workers arrived.

The four men seriously injured were David Ball, 31, his father, John P. Ball, 48, Don Lawrence, 32, and Bill Whitley, 48. All of the men are from Pampa except Whitley who is from White Deer. Whitley remains on the critical list at Parkland Burn Center in Dallas.

Three other workers are listed in fair condition at Highland General Hospital. They are Walker Bird, 43, of Pampa, Lilly Mayberry, 26, of Borger and Betty Saulsbury, 32, of Borger.

"I was very impressed by the way the doctors and nurses at the hospital reacted to the emergency," Steel said. "There was at least one doctor for each of the injured."

Both the Celanese and Brown and Root rescue teams did an outstanding job. I was very proud in the professional way in which they handled the situation, Steel said.

Steel said he returned to the chemical plant after all of the injured were secure at Highland General or Amarillo.

"There had been some loss of power in the construction area and in the water treating facilities but the plant was up and operational," Steel said. "There were reports that 300 people had been evacuated from the plant but what actually happened was that without power the construction workers could not work so we sent them home."

"There had been total loss of power in the construction area and in the water treating facilities," Steel said. "But do to the quick skillful efforts of our operations and maintenance personnel the plant remained operational."

Personnel Director Al Miller said all costs of the accident to the employees will be defrayed by Celanese and that Celanese officials in Dallas, the company's home office, were making daily checks on the burn victims at Parkland Hospital in Dallas.

"Our people are seeing to the needs of those men and their families," Miller said. "Brown and Root are tending to the needs of their employees."

Steel said he called his seven department managers together Friday night and "laid out a plan of what to do."

"This is when we decided to padlock the control room so that everything would stay exactly the way it was," Steel said.

Steel said that Saturday was taken up by the various investigating teams searching the accident area.

On Sunday, after hearing bad reports on the condition of the men in Dallas, Steel and Miller decided to fly there for a first-hand report.

"When we arrived all of the families of the men except B.J. Lawrence (Don Lawrence's wife) were out of the hospital," Steel said. "We had heard that Don (Lawrence) had been moved from serious condition to critical. After seeing Don and visiting with him for three or four minutes we were glad to find the rumors unfounded."

Steel said that all the men were improving and that John P. Ball had been switched from the critical list to serious condition.

"Sunday was a good day for us," Steel said.

Investigators continued their probes Monday morning, according to the plant manager, and all the investigators agreed on one point.

"The best we can piece together is that the men were working with a large piece of test equipment (used to test electrical circuits)," Steel said.

"Something happened while the men were working with this piece of equipment. We don't know what," Steel said. "We have heard all sorts of rumors, that someone threw in an old shoe to someone touched the panel with a screwdriver."

"These things are just not possible," Steel said. "There is absolutely no evidence of that occurring."

Steel said investigators are being very cautious in their investigation.

"We know that excessive speculation can damage our investigation," Steel said. "We are very anxious to know what happened. We will know what happened. We just don't know when we will find out."

Investigators from OSHA have interviewed the injured who were treated and are back at work, Steel said.

"We have not talked with any of the injured as to what happened," Steel said. "The men that are most likely to know (Whitley, Ball, Ball and Lawrence) are in no condition to tell us."

Steel said investigators will probe the mystery to the cause of the accident that sent the 13,800 volt arc through the control room until there is an answer.

School board race nearing end

By EUGENE LAYCOCK
Pampa News Staff

Curt Beck will run uncontested in Friday's school board election for his third term as Place 5 holder to continue his support of work being done in the educational system.

Beck, 55, after serving six years said that the school system is good, but needed improvements in physical facilities and in other areas, especially college preparation courses.

Subject matter for college-bound students in some areas, such as biology, could be more sophisticated, said Beck, Cabot's corporate energy utilization officer.

He said that he plans to investigate into funds from the energy act that was legislated in October of 1978 to provide financing for energy saving renovation projects, such as the window and door repairs.

He said that the bill is retroactive, enabling the cost of recent changes to be state reimbursed to local funds. In response to the attempts of teachers to bond their efforts at the state level, Beck said, "Collective bargaining is not the Texas way."

Teachers, he said, can bargain under the consultation rules, which are sufficient for their needs.

He said that salaries should be commensurate to education and skills, as well as keep up with inflation.

In addition to the current salary over-scale increase, Beck said that teachers have the fringe benefit of a medical insurance plan, adopted in 1977 for $282.84 a year, that helps them deal with the economy.

The communication from and to the school board, he said, could always be improved.

The board is eager to hear and share information with the public, he said. He added that earlier attempts of town meetings in 1975 - 76 were disappointing because of poor attendance.

For the second consecutive year, Carolyn Wingham will run for a place, on the school board in hopes of expanding its representation with the addition of a teacher.

A teacher at St. Matthew's Day School, Wingham, said that, if elected into Place 4, she would work for physical plant improvements, including esthetical and practical.

Other goals of the educator of 13½ years are to obtain continuity, scope and sequence of materials, especially in the elementary schools; to enhance creativity and imagination through an expanded arts and crafts program; and to stress practical, student-oriented decisions in all board considerations.

She said that she favored collective bargaining for teachers as long as they stay in the classrooms and the learning process is uninterrupted.

Other workers use union methods to a degree, she said, and teachers should have the same rights as these industrial groups.

"Teachers in most school systems are not paid up to industrial scales," she said, and "some (salaries) are way below minimum wage if you figure out the money per hour."

She said that the basic rates for teachers' earnings have been going up and that salaries remain inadequate.

"About the only communication I have is from the newspaper," she responded in reference to the school board's relationship with the public and staff of the education system.

"The open records (of school board meetings and information) is not common knowledge," she said.

"It (communication) does need some improving," she said, and suggested having board meetings when more people can attend.

Running for Place 4 on the Pampa Independent School Board against a local teacher, incumbent Alfred Smith said that collective bargaining is counterproductive to the education system.

Unions all have to go through committees to obtain results, said Smith - who has completed his first term as a trustee, and teachers can receive benefits and have their needs met without this ordeal.

Automatic raises for any group feeds the fire of inflation, he said in reference to the inflationary salary provisions requested by a teachers' group at the Texas legislature.

Smith, manager of the Engineering Division of Cabot, said that he is also aware that the local salaries are on the lower side of other compared states.

"Communications are pretty good," he said of the ties among the school board, administration, teachers and the public, however, there is "always room for improvement."

He said that few people attend the school board meetings to convey their needs or complaints and rely mostly on radio and the newspaper.

A weekly newsletter from the school to the public was considered as a communicative aid, he said, but the possible cost caused some question.

A member of the Long Range Planning Committee, Smith said the purpose designated for the school system is "to teach kids some basic skills that they need - whether it be vocational or academic for college."

Some courses have been added to next year's schedule list to enable students to expand themselves, he said.

He said that he encourages extra curricular activities, such as band, choir, athletics and drama, to give a student a chance to develop himself.

Nursing home fire couldn't happen

By JOHN PRICE
Pampa News Staff

The administrators of Pampa's two nursing homes, as well as the local fire marshal, say the devastating fires that seem to plague retirement homes elsewhere in the country couldn't happen here.

Fires at a nursing home in Farmington, Mo. and a boarding house in Connellsville, Pa. early this week killed a total of 34 people, all but one of whom were elderly.

But Texas regulations, described as "rigid" and "stringent" by the heads of the local homes, are supposed to nearly eliminate the chances of such fires striking in Pampa.

"We have very, very stringent regulations regarding nursing home construction and fire regulations," said Phyllis Odell, administrator of the Leisure Lodge Nursing Home at 1504 W. Kentucky.

"The homes in the state of Texas have been made as fire-proof as possible," Opal White, administrator of the Pampa Nursing Center at 1321 W. Kentucky, said. "You don't hear about these horrible fires in Texas."

Both local homes are equipped with fire detection systems, automatic sprinkler systems, fire extinguishers and "smoke doors." If a fire is detected, the sprinkler systems turn on, alarms sound and the smoke doors shut, containing the fire in one area.

Nursing homes in the state are licensed by the Texas Department of Health. They must comply with local, state and federal regulations.

"Each time there is a fire in another state, then Austin has some new regulations for us," White said. "You either do it or you're put out of business."

The homes are required to conduct fire drills on a monthly basis, and to post evacuation plans, which have been approved by the fire marshal, in the halls. The staff at Pampa Nursing Center

"can have the patients out in a matter of minutes," White said.

The drills at Leisure Lodge are "not mock," Odell said. Last week, she said, it took four minutes to evacuate and completely secure a wing full of bed patients.

"We pretty well have it down to a science," Odell said.

Authorities investigating the Missouri fire believe that most or all of the victims could have been saved if there had been enough staff members to lead them to safety. Only one person was on duty when the fire occurred early Monday.

According to Howard Allen of the Texas Department of Health, a certain number of licensed nurses are required in state nursing homes, depending on the category of each home.

"There is a minimum requirement of licensed personnel," Allen said. "As far as aides and orderlies, whatever they (the homes) need to do a good job is what it amounts to."

"This company far exceeds the standards" for personnel, White said. There is "always, always" a nurse on hand "24 hours a day" to care for the Center's 82 residents, she added.

Odell said Leisure Lodge has a "basic staffing ratio" of one nurse to every 15 residents during the 11 p.m. - 7 a.m. shift. Leisure Lodge has a total of 70 residents.

Pampa's nursing homes are "as safe as you can get," according to Fire Marshal L.V. Bruce.

"I won't say they are fireproof, but they're about as fireproof as you can get," Bruce said. He is required to inspect the homes once a year, but Bruce said he usually goes out to the homes every three or four months, accompanying state and Medicare inspectors.

"I don't see how we could have a fire like that," Bruce said of the Missouri tragedy. "The only way there could be a big fire is if there was an explosion."

OPINION PAGE

Time not oil is running out

The count down has begun in America. Time, not oil, is running out. The oil is available within U.S. boundaries by drilling.

The count down is a double-headed. The Carter administration seems determined to impose gasoline rationing, and there seems, also, an urgency in the stir of action in that direction in the nation's capital. So to what date is the rationing count down - next month? May, June? The Fourth of July? Vacation time?

We don't know what the rules will be, but if they have been written as all bureaucratic rules are written, then they will not be simple and will confound the worthy and in the rigid conformity of federal bureaucracy they will hurt, hamper and prove to be an unfair hardship on the struggling, hard-pressed American worker.

This is not "war time" but gasoline rationing will have "war time" effect on those who must have gasoline to provide transportation required in their livelihood pursuits. But because it is not "war time", those with recreational units burning fuel will have "equal" ration-check rights.

Will there be a "holiday" on the use of race cars, pleasure boats and aerial entertainment? And lawn mowers? Probably not. One likely will be able to use one's limited number of ration checks as one pleases.

We are not questioning "fairness." We are simply tossing these thoughts around as we lead to the point we want to make: rationing will be inane; it is unnecessary; it is an implement for the extension of the bureaucracy. It is totally wrong in peace-time America, where in an atmosphere of a freemarket and a deregulated oil and gas industry there would never have developed the kind of "shortage" that has caused the present administration and the previous one to prepare for gasoline rationing.

Texas is a vast state. It is so big that a Texan "going home" or going to the capital or to the other side of the ranch may need to burn a considerable quantity of gasoline. Much of the nation's remaining oil and gas resources are in Texas, and the gasoline-rationing looming in their near future is not being anticipated with enthusiasm and accord by most Texans.

They make the count down in bitterness. The other count down is more definite. The date is June 1. That is when Jimmy Carter will become empowered to suspend the mandatory oil price controls that congress has imposed.

"As of that date," the Wall Street Journal reported, "it is entirely up to the President whether the policy continues of subsidizing OPEC oil production and discouraging domestic production. It becomes entirely up to the President whether we continue to grow dependent on OPEC oil."

The Journal pointed out that 24 associations of independent domestic petroleum producers representing 10,000 independent producers who drill 90 percent of the new exploratory wells in the U.S. have offered to displace imports barrel for barrel with domestic production in exchange for terminating price controls by certain dates.

Apparently the President does not want to hear the oil people. They had to put their offer in a letter. Carter sees decontrol as inflationary.

That, then, is the important count down in the doubleheader. Texans have a big stake in what happens at the count down. The state has underground much of that domestic oil that could displace the imports.

The Journal added: "The American oil men who are the closest to the facts of domestic oil exploration say they can displace Iranian imports with American output if only the government will remove the controls that prevent them from doing so. That the people with such a promising message can't even get through the President's door is scarcely a hopeful sign of any immediate return to sanity in energy policy."

Here, in a nutshell, we have it. The count down in Texas, in America, to the hour of gasoline rationing and to the hour of oil industry regulation or a continuation of the government's discouraging domestic production. The willing drillers should be given the chance to do what they can to lift America off its knees where OPEC firmly plans to keep it.

Briefly noted

Here's an early encouraging word - for some of us - on this year's federal income tax reckoning.

The Internal Revenue Service will be auditing 43,000 fewer returns than last year, 2.11 percent of total returns as compared with 1977's 2.16 percent.

That could mean that the tax people think we are becoming more honest. Or, much more likely, that the returns have gotten so complicated that they can't handle as many.

Of degrees and dollars

The tax bite is something this year's college graduates might well keep in mind as they prepare for their professional futures, particularly those most in demand.

They, according to the College Placement Council, are the engineers. Engineering openings account for 61 percent of all bachelor's degree job offers to date and are up some 40 over last year. Starting salaries for the very top of the line - petroleum engineers - average $1,788 a month. Next come chemical engineers at $1,633.

At the other end of the employment opportunity scale are the graduates in social sciences and humanities. Offers are down some 9 percent from last year, which wasn't so hot itself, and average starting money is $911 a month.

It only goes to prove again that in figuring the payoff on a college education, it is indeed a matter of degree.

Happy ending

Remember the killer bees?

These were the ferocious hybrids, an accidental cross between bad-tempered African and domestic Brazilian bees, that were buzzing their way north, attacking everything in their path from people and livestock to motor vehicles. They were supposed to reach Texas by 1985.

They still are. But according to a late report from Brazil, they are no longer a threat. Dr. Helmut Wiese of the Brazilian Confederation of Apiculturists informs that the killer has succumbed to romance. Enthusiastic mating with Brazilian bees has blunted its sting and transformed it into an industrious honey producer. Love, how sweet it is.

Which is preferable, a constitutional convention with representatives from all the states, whose decisions must be ratified by 34 states, or an ongoing constitutional convention, consisting of nine persons controlled by majority vote? The latter is a description of the U.S. Supreme Court with which a great many lawyers would agree. These are not mutually exclusive choices, but setting forth the alternatives in this fashion places in the context of governmental policy current proposals for a constitutional convention to require a balanced budget.

The convention approach is more democratic. Furthermore, the calling of such a convention is specifically provided for in the Constitution, whereas the authority of the Supreme Court to change the Constitution is much more questionable. Yet many supporters of our activist Supreme Court reject the convention approach.

Opponents of the convention contend it might not be limited to the one issue, but might "run away" and reduce constitutional rights. In a prior column, I discussed an opinion by an American Bar Association committee that Congress could confine the convention to one issue. But even if this is not accurate, all convention proposals would still have to be ratified by three-quarters of the states - and that does not come about readily. Moreover, why this fear of the people acting through a national convention? England has no written constitution and Parliament has absolute authority to enact any law a voting majority of its members desire. Yet England remains among the world's freest nations.

The liberal commentators who reject a constitutional convention because it may alter that document do not express fears about the U.S. Supreme Court. They are generally pleased with the results of contemporary decisions, such as those on speech and press, forced busing, and abortion. Nor do they contest the power of the Court to make vast constitutional changes. Their views are quite different from those maintained by their ideological counterparts in the first half of this century, when liberals, radicals and the academic journals frequently condemned the use of judicial review to strike down legislation.

Thus, Theodore Roosevelt, as a 1912 Progressive candidate for President, favored submitting to a popular vote state judicial decisions declaring laws unconstitutional. The Progressive party supported easier methods for amending the Constitution. Robert La Follette, Progressive candidate for president in 1924, proposed an amendment to the Constitution that would allow Congress to overcome a court decision declaring a law unconstitutional by simply reenacting the law.

In 1937, President Franklin Roosevelt proposed "packing" the court with justices favorable to his viewpoint. He wanted a Supreme Court "that will enforce the Constitution as written - that will refuse to amend the Constitution by the arbitrary exercise of judicial power." No New Dealer I am aware of talks that way today. The reason is that on the whole the contemporary court tends to strike down laws the New Dealers reject and uphold measures they favor.

Ironically, the justices appointed by Franklin Roosevelt and his successors probably have altered the Constitution to a much greater extent than occurred under their predecessors. Consider, for example, the contemporary court's rulings of the first amendment's guarantee of free speech and press. The court has expanded the meaning of these first amendment protections far beyond the language and intention of its framers.

A most glaring example is provided by the Pentagon Papers decision in 1971. As the reader may recall, the U.S. government sought to block the New York Times and Washington Post from printing a government study a national policy on Vietnam which it had classified as not for publication. The only branches of government involved in this controversy were the executive, which sought the restraining order, and the judicial which was requested to grant it.

The first amendment does not by its terms apply to either of these branches. It states that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." The language clearly restrains only Congress and no other branch or institution.

Nevertheless, the court, by a 6-3 majority, held that the first amendment prohibited the executive and judicial branches from preventing publication of the Pentagon Papers. All the justices assumed the amendment applies to the federal administration. One does not have to be a profound constitutional scholar to be wary about the exercise of such power by an unelected group of nine persons.

Last January the high court held that the Constitution prevented a teacher from being fired because of views she expressed privately to her principal. Justice Rehnquist wrote: "The first amendment forbids abridgement of the freedom of speech." Rehnquist would have been much more accurate if he had stated that the present court and not the first amendment, forbids these abridgments. Justices who write majority opinions do not make such statements since the court is only supposed to be interpreting and not governing. However, dissenting opinions often charge the majority with usurping power. No such problem would confront amendments duly promulgated by a constitutional convention.

FEC's questionable lube job

by martha angle and robert walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Politicians aren't the only ones gearing up for next year's presidential race. The Federal Election Commission has just announced that its "machinery is being oiled" in preparation for the campaign.

But that FEC lubrication job includes the questionable expenditure of almost $2,000 in public funds by a small group of the commission's senior staff members during a 2 1/2-day "retreat" at a countryside inn more than 100 miles from Washington.

The FEC is responsible for administering federal laws governing presidential campaigns and for authorizing payment of millions of dollars to candidates in both the primary and general election races for the White House.

The meeting to plan for the 1980 campaign was held far from the capital despite both opposition from FEC Chairman Joan D. Aikens and a warning from the commission's information officer that public disclosure of the arrangements could be embarrassing to the agency.

Although the retreat was designed to improve cooperation among the FEC's seven divisions, it produced instead a bureaucratic feud between the commission's lawyers and other high-ranking agency officials.

The driving force behind the meeting, held at a rural lodge called the Boar's Head Inn near Charlottesville, Va., was William Loughery, the commission's deputy staff director.

After returning to Washington, Loughery prepared a typewritten, nine-page, single-spaced memo that lists all the purported accomplishments of the rural retreat.

But even the participants who have defended the meeting on the grounds that it provided a valuable forum for informal discussions have characterized Loughery's memo as an exaggerated account, possibly prepared to ward off criticism that the trip was little more than a boondoggle.

Most of the participants rented $31.80-per-night rooms at the countryside inn for two nights, while costs for the conference room brought the total hotel bill up to $1,044.

Those who drove their own cars to Charlottesville were reimbursed for auto expenses at the authorized government rate of 17 cents per mile for a round trip averaging 250 miles, with costs in that category totaling almost $375.

In addition, the participants received a collective total of $520 in standard government "per diem" payments of $16 a day to cover the cost of meals and incidental expenses. The total cost of the retreat was slightly more than $1,960.

Aikens declined to personally discuss her views on the meeting, but a spokeswoman was authorized to say that the commission chairman "expressed her reservations" about the idea and "questioned the value of the seminar."

David Fiske, the commission's chief information officer at the time of the trip, also declined to discuss his attitude toward the retreat. But others at the FEC said he warned his colleagues that it could be publicly perceived as a pointless junket.

Such out-of-town retreats are common in the business world and do offer various benefits to both the sponsoring organization and the individuals who attend the meetings.

They provide an informal setting where difficult long-range problems can be discussed in a relaxed atmosphere free from the pressure of routine daily business. In addition, participants can become better acquainted with their colleagues.

But the concept can be abused by both business and government groups. Some federal agencies, for instance, have flown scores of officials to high-priced resorts thousands of miles from Washington, at a cost to the taxpayers of $10,000 to $50,000 or more.

By that standard, the FEC retreat was a modest affair. But commission officials remain rightfully sensitive about the meeting because it was a questionable undertaking for the watchdog agency committed to ethical campaign financing.

Revolutionary dress code

At its present stage, the Iranian revolution is almost hors de combat.

It will eventually run its chaotic course and a new order will emerge. But this is a matter more of time than of specific revolutionary events and decisions. The real shaping of the new Iran will begin when the revolution has exhausted itself.

Nevertheless, the demonstrations in Tehran of women alarmed by the Ayatollah Khomeini's comments on the proper dress for revolutionary womanhood are of more than usual interest, and just possibly significance. The call for women to attire themselves according to religious standards was widely taken as meaning the chador, the traditional head-to-toe black veil. And women who have become accustomed to Western dresses and jeans didn't like it.

One wonders where these women were, or what was their reaction, when the ayatollah, remote-controlling the revolution from his French exile, was declaring to Iran and the world his goal of an Islamic republic where the word of the Koran would literally be law. Now that he is back home, there is surprise that he means it to apply to all Iranians, not only such transgressors to be punished by whippings and hand amputations.

The stirring of opposition manifested by the Tehran demonstration suggests the ayatollah's Islamic revolution could be entering a very trying period. The Shah's overequipped army may have caved into it without a real fight, but never underestimate the determination of even the semi-liberated woman aroused on an issue that really matters.

The defiance of enforced orthodoxy among great numbers of westernized younger women was epitomized by one anonymous secretary quoted in The New York Times' account of the event: "I will wear a chador on the day all Iranian men start wearing turbans and stop shaving their faces, as Islam law says they must."

Is she kidding? Does she think exactly that may not also be in the cards as well as the Koran? Has she taken a good look at Khomeini himself recently?

Never underestimate the dogmatic consistency of the zealot. Just give him time.

Across the border

Texans passing up good gasoline buys

REYNOSA, Mexico (AP) — While most Americans are grumbling about the prospect of triple digit gasoline prices, some Texans along the border are passing up a chance to fill their cars here for about 16 cents a gallon.

"I'd rather pay the extra money and not waste the time," said a Brownsville physician who pays 65 cents for a gallon of diesel fuel north of the Rio Grande. "My husband hates to go to Matamoros," said another diesel owner.

Gasoline prices here are comparable to prices across the border, but diesel fuel remains astonishingly inexpensive. Even with increases in recent months, the fuel still sells for a peso and a centavo per liter — roughly 16 cents per gallon.

Mateo Salinas, president of the local association of gas station managers here, said the seven Pemex stations that sell diesel attract many U.S. customers. But a spot check of some Rio Grande Valley diesel car owners showed that they are willing to pay 50 cents more per gallon in order to avoid battling international bridge traffic.

"It's a matter of time," said Edinburg realtor Vance Hofmaster. "If I'm down there for dinner or to buy some whiskey I'll fill up. But to just fill up...It can take the better part of an hour and a half. I'd save maybe $8. My time is more valuable than that."

Ruben Edelstein lives even closer to the border. He is the mayor of Brownsville and he more often than not pays 65 cents a gallon for U.S. diesel instead of making the trip across the river.

"It's the convenience," he said. Hofmaster and others can remember when Mexican diesel sold for a nickel less than it does now. And while the price is edging up, Salinas said it will always be far less than it is north of the Rio Grande.

"Diesel moves the country here," he said. Much of Mexican commerce depends on diesel-powered buses and trucks. Salinas said the nationalized oil industry here makes sure the diesel price stays low.

Some U.S. motorists question the quality of the Mexican diesel fuel. Salinas said the diesel here is sometimes "heavier and dirtier" than U.S. diesel. But none of the Texas motorists contacted could recall having any problems with the Mexican fuel.

Salinas added that Mexicans do not resent U.S. citizens coming across to fill their passenger cars. But the Mexican government has taken steps to prevent U.S. truckers from having a field day at the pumps. About a year ago a 100-liter per purchase limit was ordered for U.S. citizens.

One service station owner recalled pumping 10,000 gallons of diesel one night when the truckers could buy unlimited fuel.

Salinas said Mexican officials also feared that U.S. citizens were buying mass quantities of the inexpensive fuel and re-selling it north of the river.

The Texans who do cross the river for regular fill-ups at the bargain basement prices realize they are living in a sort of dream world.

One McAllen woman, believing it is best to "let sleeping dogs lie," asked not to be identified in print. Her husband makes periodic trips here for a tankful of diesel and she was not sure that publicity about the 16 cent a gallon fuel was wise.

"The more said about it, the more chance they'll try to stop it," she said.

Church aid bill gets large support

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Legislation raising state subsidies for students in church colleges and other private institutions of higher learning won massive support Tuesday in the House.

A 123-19 vote advanced the bill (SB356), and a similar majority was expected to send it to Gov. Bill Clements' desk today.

Clements recommended the bill, along with a vastly enlarged appropriation for "tuition equalization grants," in his budget.

The handful of House members who fought the bill contended it increases the existing tie between state and church and would cost money Texas can ill-afford to spend.

The bill would raise the maximum grant from $600 to half the cost of educating a student at a publicly supported college. Since that cost is $2,500 a year now, the top grant would rise to $1,250 and continue to increase as the cost per student at public colleges rises.

For the first time since the grant program began in 1971, part-time students at private colleges could receive state help in paying their tuition.

Rep. Jerry Donaldson, D-Gatesville, a supporter of the bill, said this would help students who are unable to attend school fulltime because they must work.

Independent Colleges and Universities of Texas (ICUT), an association of private schools, lobbied heavily for the bill.

Rep. Lynn Nabers, D-Brownwood, the sponsor, said the maximum grant had not changed since the program began, despite rising costs.

He contended that when taxpayers help a student attend a private college instead of a state university, it results in "a saving to the state of Texas."

Nabers, a Baptist, represents a district that includes Howard Payne College, a Baptist institution.

Rep. Bill Sullivan, D-Gainesville, said some state colleges are operating below capacity now and asserted, "I don't see why we are expanding a competing system."

Rep. Foster Whaley, D-Pampa, a Texas A&M graduate and a member of a Church of Christ, failed repeatedly to cut the potential cost of the bill.

ICUT decided to spend $44.3 million (over the next two years) and they just can't spend that much with a $600 level. Through their political machine, which is about as well-greased as the beer lobby's, they have been able to convince a lot of you to go along," Whaley said.

Clements recommended the $44.3 million in his budget, but Nabers said the grant program can cost no more than the Legislature appropriates. The Legislative Budget Board has recommended $23.7 million for 1980-81.

Grants now average $335 and Clements, a former trustee of Southern Methodist University, said his budget — reflecting the ICUT bill — would raise that to $900.

About 20,000 students, or about a third of all those in either private or state colleges, receive grants now.

In other action Tuesday, the house passed and sent to the Senate bills that would:

—Set up a $5 million state fund to guarantee land loans to farmers who have a net worth of under $100,000 not counting their homes. The bill would implement a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the guarantee fund.

The measure also would provide payment of 4 percent of the interest on a loan, but with the farmer later reimbursing the state.

—Require health insurance policies to cover medical services rendered by chiropractors, as long as the treatment is legally within the limits of their licenses.

—Establish a state registry of active cancer cases, including patient follow-up, to provide physicians information on diagnosis and treatment of the various forms of the disease, which kills 20,000 Texans a year.

—Revise state law on strip mining of coal to conform to federal regulations and enable the Texas Railroad Commission to continue regulating it.

—Create separate rules for surface mining of uranium ore but exempt from regulation "in situ" mining of uranium, which involves recovery of ore in solution through injection wells.

Senators accepted House amendments and sent Clements a bill requiring semi-annual review by district courts of the cases of children placed in custody of the Texas Department of Human Resources, including those in foster homes.

AWAITING THE third recitation of a poem, some children hold on to hand movements and facial expressions, that were gesticulated by students from West Texas State University at Canyon during previous readings. The college students, instructed by Professor Martha Estes Beard, showed musical activities for learning - disabled children. Singing and other musical means are used to help handicapped children learn to be cooperative in a group and to perform some basic skills, as well as to grasp some concepts in education. The poem about a tree and a lumberjack enabled children to get a feel for rhythm, especially in a poem, and to express themselves. Later in the demonstration, a young man sang with his hands, keeping tempo by swaying his arms and changing facial expressions. His features reflected kindness when the song mentioned friendship and care then took on sternness when it hinted of a need for strength. Expressiveness in the song and the poem were keys to keeping attention for communication. See related story below on children.

Commission recommends no overnight downtown parking

To make street cleaning easier for city crews, the Pampa Traffic Commission recommended an ordinance Tuesday to restrict overnight parking in the downtown area.

Commissioners suggested that the city commission prohibit parking between 12 - 5 a.m. on streets east of Somerville Street, west of Ballard Street, south of Browning Avenue and north of the Santa Fe Railroad tracks. Also included in the ban would be the 300, 400 and 500 blocks of S. Cuyler St.

The proposed ban was requested last month by merchants in the 300 and 400 blocks of S. Cuyler, who complained that parked cars block access to their businesses and make street sweeping impossible.

The commission approved its recommendation after looking into an ordinance already on the books that prohibits overnight parking on certain streets. A letter from City Attorney Don Lane advised the commission that the ordinance was adopted in 1928 and is "out-of-date."

"It seems we need such an ordinance, if for nothing else just to pull it out when we need it," said Chairman Pernal Scoggin. The commission had been requested to recommend two-hour daytime parking in the 300 and 400 blocks of S. Cuyler, but that request was tabled.

"I have been by there three or four times and I've always looked to see about the parking during the day," Scoggin said. "I have not seen any parking there that amounts to anything."

"I see the same thing — only one or two cars parked in the street," said commission member Floyd Sackett.

Upon the suggestion of R.B. Cooke, director of public works, the commission also recommended that the northbound right-hand lane of Cuyler south of Highway 60 be marked "right turn only."

Presently, northbound vehicles crossing the highway in three lanes on Cuyler are suddenly restricted to two lanes north of 60, causing what Cooke described as a "squeeze." The commission hopes to solve the problem by restricting traffic in the third lane to right turns.

During therapy demonstration

Children's eyes light up to music

The thump of the drum, click of sticks and jingling of a tamborine lighted up the eyes of several children who sat in Stephen F. Austin gymnasium last night to take part in a music therapy demonstration.

Students, studying under Martha Estes Beard, assistant professor of Research in Music Therapy of West Texas State University, explained and illustrated the methods that they use to teach children with learning disabilities.

"Music therapy..." said Beard, who received her degree in the subject at the University of Georgia, "is the use of music to reach nonmusical goals."

The audience of teachers, learning-disabled children and their parents joined in several of the demonstrations by emulating gestures designed for a poem recitation and by playing musical instruments according to the orders of student leaders.

The material is a basic example of musical methods that are used to teach the emotionally disturbed, deaf, retarded, cerebral palsied and other learning disabled children.

The therapy tries to develop motor skills, recognition, response, social congruity and self image and to increase the child's education concepts.

Beard, who had a deaf child herself, has worked as a music therapist for Amarillo State Center Psychiatric Pavilion and as a music teacher at the State School for the Blind in Austin.

Her students teach groups at Amarillo State Center for Human Development, Children's Rehabilitation Center, Amarillo Speech and Hearing Center, Killgore Children's Hospital and Psychiatric Pavilion.

The seven WTSU students will begin six-month internships soon, said Bearden, and several are just freshmen and will have much to offer.

The students have classes of their own and use the demonstrated methods in them, she said. In the deaf classes, the pulse is introduced as a natural rhythm in the environment, said one student.

The deaf, he said, learn the difference in sound and silence through feeling vibrations of musical instruments, as well as the concepts of pitch and tone.

A few adults played the instruments in the simple rondo, which demands concentration on rhythm and beat.

One young girl had students hopping, walking and marching between short concerts on various instruments to illustrate a method of her own creation. This method, said Beard, incorporates motor skills and rhythm with the recall of past experiences.

"Over expressiveness" in messages helps to insure better communication and was said to be best implemented through musical instruments.

Children were shown to be responsive to the piano, which reinforced the oral commands to hop, shake, run and walk.

"Any musical instrument is extremely helpful," said Beard.

Murder indictment returned in Wheeler

WHEELER — A 31st District grand jury Monday returned a first degree murder indictment against Russell Eugene Galer, 24, charged in connection with the March 19 shooting death of a Los Angeles man near Shamrock.

Charles William Hulen, 24, was found dead of a gun shot wound to the head next to Interstate 40 about three miles west of Shamrock after a motorist driving on a highway frontage road reported seeing a man on the side of the highway.

No trial date has been set. Galer is scheduled to undergo a psychiatric examination in Amarillo today.

Galer, of Utica, Michigan, was arrested by DPS officers about seven miles west of where Hulen's body was discovered. He was driving an army tank truck which ReporTedly motorist, Bill Turnbow.

Officers said Galer had a loaded automatic pistol. Galer is being held in Wheeler County Jail under $50,000. Hulen was reportedly riding with Galer after being picked up in eastern Oklahoma or Arkansas.

Weather

Texas weather

By The Associated Press

Forecasts called for clearing skies and warmer temperatures today after thunderstorm activity moved eastward out of East Texas into Louisiana.

Temperatures remained quite cold in northern sections of the Panhandle during the pre-dawn hours. It was 16 at Dalhart, where snow was still on the ground following a freakish April snowstorm.

Fog reduced visibility in East Texas and along lower sections of the Texas coast early today. Some low cloudiness was reported around most of the rest of the state. Only West Texas had clear skies early today, but forecasts called for clearing skies from west to east.

Highs ranged from the middle 40s in the Panhandle to the 70s in Southeast Texas and the 80s in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Early morning temperatures ranged from the middle teens in northern sections of the Panhandle to the lower 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. Extremes ranged from 16 at Dalhart to 64 at Brownsville.

National weather

Booming thunderstorms produced heavy rain across southern Louisiana and Mississippi, spawning tornadoes and gusty winds in New Orleans suburbs and generating possible flood conditions along much of the Gulf Coast.

Late Tuesday, police said three twisters damaged buildings and downed power lines in Thibodaux, Schriever and Luling. No injuries were reported.

The heaviest rainfall occurred in Mississippi, with almost 2 inches in McComb. Nearly 4 inches fell in Hattiesburg. The National Weather Service said the storm had expanded as far inland as Arkansas early today. Rivers in southeastern Louisiana were reported on the rise.

Forecasters said the danger of flooding continues over most of Louisiana, southern Mississippi and northern Alabama. A tornado watch was also issued for portions of Mississippi and Alabama early today.

CLOUDY SKIES and milder weather are expected in the forecast period, Wednesday until Thursday morning. Snow is expected for the western portions of the northern Plains. Snow is also expected for the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Valley.

Carter to end strike soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration says it has no plans to try to force a swift end to the shutdown of major trucking firms, now responsible for a swelling wave of production cutbacks in the auto industry.

"We are not contemplating any Taft-Hartley (ACT) action at this point," Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said Tuesday in outlining a hands-off policy in a dispute between industry and the giant Teamsters union. The law gives the government authority to seek a back-to-work order from a federal judge.

In the government's first comprehensive assessment of the shutdown's impact, the Labor Department said supplies of food and critical materials are not likely to be affected seriously for at least two weeks.

But Marshall conceded that the situation "already has begun to pinch," and automakers said about 90,000 workers at 25 plants either had been laid off or placed on short shifts by Tuesday.

Officials said production would halt today at six auto plants and that 24 others would go on short shifts, bringing the number of auto workers affected to more than 110,000.

Other furloughs were reported by Whirlpool Co. The firm said Tuesday it was laying off 4,600 workers at plants in Ohio and Michigan due to parts shortages. Company officials said all of its 16,000 workers could be laid off by early next week if the trucking shutdown continues.

While the dispute generally has been peaceful, Ohio authorities reported two men were arrested in connection with separate violent confrontations between striking and non-striking drivers.

About 500 trucking firms, represented in contract talks by Trucking Management Inc., ordered a lockout Sunday against the union, acting in "self-defense" after Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons ordered a strike against 75 companies. The actions came after the two sides failed to agree on a new contract by a midnight Saturday deadline.

TMI companies say they employ about 235,000 of the 300,000 Teamsters covered under the contract, and claim their lockout is 98 percent effective.

Dear Abby
by abigail van buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the man who seriously injured a boy on a bike struck home with me. (He said he didn't even see the lad until after he hit him since it was dark, the boy was wearing dark clothes and had no lights on his bike.) Abby, that's exactly what happened to our son—only he was killed instantly.

We live in New Hampshire, and a few years ago they started giving the kids in all the elementary schools packets of reflector buttons (called "Hot Dots"). They're about the size of a quarter, have sticky backs and can be attached to clothing, boots, bikes—anything a child wears or carries. These Hot Dots light up in the dark and make the child visible to motorists.

Every time I see a youngster at night with those reflectors on his clothes and bike, I can't help but think that if my son had had them when he was riding his bike that rainy night, he'd be 22 years old now.

NEW HAMPSHIRE MOM

DEAR MOM: I checked out the Hot Dot Safety program and learned that since Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. initiated it in 1974, New Hampshire's child pedestrian death toll has been reduced 40 percent.

But Hot Dots are not for children only. Adults, especially older folks, should use them on their coats, hats, shoes and umbrellas!

DEAR ABBY: This is in reference to the 12-year-old boy who was struck by a car while riding his bike in the dark without lights.

Twelve years ago Ted did the same thing. Fortunately, he was not hurt, but his bike was badly damaged. The next day, the man who hit him came to the house with his insurance agent—all apologies, offering to repair the damaged bike. Ted's face lit up, but his mother, who had very strict principles, said, "Not a penny will he get! Ted disobeyed my orders by riding his bike at night before he had his lights fixed. He could have been crippled or killed. I will not allow him to be rewarded for disobeying me. The bicycle repairs will come out of his allowance!"

And that's the way it was.

Maybe our insurance rates would go down if we had more people with principles like Ted's mother.

SUSIE

DEAR SUSIE: And so would our juvenile delinquency rate—which is even more important.

DEAR ABBY: I am 16 and very much in love with a wonderful guy. There is only one thing wrong with him. When he makes a date with me, I can never be sure if he will keep it. He has stood me up about half the time, but when he starts explaining the reasons, I forgive him and we start in again where we left off.

He's a real neat kid, Abby. Is there some way I can get him to quit standing me up? If it weren't for that, he'd be perfect.

KATHY IN AIKEN, S.C.

DEAR KATHY: That one imperfection is probably the most revealing clue to your boyfriend's character. His word is no good. If a man's word is no good, he is nothing. And a girl who gets herself involved with a guy like that is headed for misery. The word from here is: "lose him."

by lawrence lamb m.d.

DEAR DR. LAMB—I am a 34-year-old woman, 5 feet 10 with a large frame and weigh 186 pounds. I run four and a half miles six days a week, bike four miles six days a week and swim at least one and a half hours a week. I only consume 1200 to 1300 calories and that's a balanced diet. Also, I'm very active during the day and spend very little time sitting. Why does my weight stay high? Is it most beneficial to do push ups, leg lifts, pull ups and sit ups every day or every other day? I would appreciate your comments.

DEAR READER—You sound like you're in top shape. Since you're 5 feet 10 and have a large frame, it follows that you are just a big woman. There is nothing wrong with that.

You need to learn to think in terms of the difference between fat and muscle. That determines whether or not you need to lose weight and how much. You can tell by noticing how much fat there is under your skin. The waist and small of the back is a good place to check that. If you have much of a fat roll around the middle, then you do have some fat to lose, but if you're all muscle, forget it.

There is a basic law of nature that you can't change, any more than you can change the fact the sun comes up in the east. Energy is neither created nor destroyed. This is called the law of conservation of energy. If you are going to spend that much energy, you'll need to consume an equal amount of energy to keep from losing weight.

I'm so convinced that either your story isn't true or else that you need some help on how to count calories that I'm sending you The Health Letter number 4-7, Weight Losing Diet. This is a balanced diet of about 1300 calories a day. If you stick to that and follow the exercise you're doing, I'm confident that you will lose weight.

Regarding how frequently you should do the set of exercises you mentioned, it depends upon what your goal is. If you want to use up calories, the more frequent the better. If you are interested in growing muscles, then you really only need to do them about every other day. In fact, good studies show that once you've developed good muscle size and strength, a good program that uses the muscles to their fullest extent once a week is adequate to maintain them.

Calisthenic exercises as you describe do not stimulate large muscle development. Muscles get only as large as they need to be to lift a given weight. The larger the weight you lift, the larger the muscles become. Pull ups might cause you to develop large arm muscles because they must support all 186 pounds of your body weight.

'Bad men of the west' topic for Club

There'll be an old fashioned shoot-out Thursday evening when members of the Knife & Fork Club gather at the Coronado Inn to honor their past presidents.

The guest speaker for the evening will be Jim Dunham,

Jim Dunham to speak at Knife & Fork Club manager of Chuck Wagon Flying W. Ranch, Colorado Springs, Colo.

The subject of his address will be 'Bad Men of the West.' It is primarily an entertainment address, although it will revolve around the famous characters who contributed so much to the development of the west, particularly the men who were often marshals and, half the time, were criminals themselves.

Then, in addition, he will illustrate the old fast gun technique. He is reputed to have one of the fastest draws in America today and has been hired by 20th Century Fox as a fast draw expert.

Dunham is an expert on the platform. He knows the old west and is fortified with facts about it. In addition to his fast draw demonstrations he relates, with equal finesse, tales of fascinating characters who made history: Wild Bill Hickok, Calamity Jane, Wyatt Earp, Billy the Kid, and a host of others.

Dunham's love for the old west began when, as a youngster, he was a member of the Chicago Indian Center and followed the 'Pow Wow Circuit' as a dancer. He studied art, theatre, and American Indian history at the University of Colorado. Later he began speaking professionally on the history of the west.

Mule rodeo in Mobeetie

MOBEETIE — A mule rodeo is scheduled here Saturday and Sunday at Turner's Indoor Arena. Performances are set for 7:30 Saturday night and 2 Sunday afternoon.

10 events are scheduled for each performance, including junior mule riding, senior mule riding, bull riding, girls goat tying, barrel racing, wild mule race, team roping and calf roping.

Mule rodeos have become popular in Oklahoma and North Texas. All events are performed from mules, and no horses will be allowed inside the arena.

The mule is one of the most stubborn and unpredictable animals known to man, which is what makes a mule rodeo fun to watch.

When the western states were settled, the mule was used to pull wagons. Today, the mule is used for hunting, riding and rodeos.

Contestants under 18 must have a release from their parents to participate. Entry books close at 6 p.m. April 6, and mules will be furnished for contestants who don't own them. For more information on entries call 1-806-945-2501 in Mobeetie.

Weather postpones events

Tuesday's reversion to winter weather forced the postponement of two Pampa High sporting events. At least one of them will be made up today, weather permitting.

Steve Scott's baseball crew will take to the road to face Tascosa at 4 p.m. Scott has indicated Rick Dougherty will be his starter against the Rebs. Dougherty brings a 4-0 and 3.00 earned run average against the Rebels, 4-11 on the season. The Harvesters' 11-3 mark is the best in District 3-AAAA.

Both the Rebs and Pampa are 1-0 in district action. Tascosa blanked Palo Duro 5-0 Friday, while Pampa was shutting out Caprock 1-0 behind Steve Stout's two-hitter.

A tennis dual between Pampa and Berger also fell victim to the weather. No makeup date had been scheduled as of press time Wednesday morning.

PHS rodeo results

Lena Stewart and Shane Brown have led the way for Pampa High rodeo contestants in rodeos the past two weekends.

Miss Stewart placed third in breakaway roping at the Gruver Rodeo March 24-25 and took second in the same event at Happy this past weekend. Brown, meanwhile, was taking first place in bareback riding at the Gruver event.

Brad Gibson captured sixth place in bull riding at Happy. The PHS cowboys and cowgirls will be at Plainview this weekend for their next rodeo.

Umps plan picket in Cincinnati

Who will shout 'Play Ball?'

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
 AP Sports Writer

The cry of "Play Ball!" will announce the opening of the baseball season today. The question is who will shout it.

The latest report was that Paul Pryor, the only arbiter who has bolted the ranks of dissident umpires to sign an individual contract, would do the honors in Cincinnati, where the Reds were scheduled for their traditional opener this afternoon, with the San Francisco Giants providing the opposition.

Pryor was expected to be one of the umpires in Cincinnati, but there was no word on who would round out his quartet. Some 50 other major league umpires have refused to sign their contracts, seeking to renegotiate individually for higher wages.

The only other regular umpire under contract is Ted Hendry of the American League. He signed before the Major League Umpires Association decided not to report for spring training without signing pacts.

Hendry has been given the okay to go to work, but it was not known whether he would be part of the crew in Seattle when the Mariners and the California Angels play the AL opener tonight.

"We will be using local people known to the clubs," said AL President Lee MacPhail. "These are umpires who work college and summer games and are well known to the clubs through their scouting efforts."

The two leagues had hoped to sign a dozen minor league umpires, but eight of them rejected the offer of three-year major league contracts.

"Those guys make $2,600 a year but they wouldn't go against the regulars," said AL umpire Dave Phillips. "This thing has brought umpires from both leagues and the minors together."

More than 52,000 fans are expected at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium to watch what could be a pitching duel between Tom Seaver of the Reds and San Francisco's Vida Blue. After a slow start, Seaver was 16-14 with a 2.87 earned run average last year while Blue was 18-10 and 2.79.

Between 15-20 major league umpires are expected to be on picket duty in Cincinnati. "Every umpire within 12 hours' driving time of Cincinnati will be picketing the ballpark," said Richie Phillips, attorney for the umpires.

The Reds will get underway with two important new faces — John McNamara replacing Sparky Anderson as the managerial wizard and light-hitting Ray Knight taking over at third base for hard-hitting Pete Rose.

The Angels will send Frank Tanana, 18-12 and 3.65, against Seattle's Glenn Abbott, 7-15 and 5.28, but most eyes will be on seven-time AL batting champ Rod Carew, who is now California's first baseman after 12 seasons with the Minnesota Twins.

Indian training program funds cut off by agency

HOUSTON (AP) — Directors of a federally funded agency say they cannot continue job training for American Indians in Texas in the wake of a Department of Labor decision to withhold money earmarked for the program.

"We have received no funding since October. The board directors doesn't have any more money and can't keep subsidizing the wages for these people," said Ward Phelan, executive director of the Indian Employment and Training Services. "We just can't stall anymore."

Phelan announced Tuesday that the termination of the program will effect 75 persons in the program and 11 of 14 staff members.

The program terminated by the agency had been funded by the DOL through the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

The director said termination of the training program will cut agency expenditures from more than $785,000 a year to less than $130,000. The agency still receives federal funding for two other programs.

The agency came under criticism last year when it was discovered that Phelan drove a new $12,000 Cadillac leased through the program and questions were raised as to certain expenditures and management practices.

The IETS handled training for Indians in all but an 11-county area around Dallas.

The Alabama-Coushatta Indian tribe in East Texas pulled its people out of the program because they claimed they were not being solicited or trained on an equitable basis as other Texas Indians.

The IETS handled about 750 participants at one time but that figure had dropped to below 300 when the Alabama-Coushattas left to administer their own programs.

The other main group of Indians are the Tiguas in El Paso and they too reportedly are unhappy with IETS and may abandon it.

The Lufkin News reported last month that the Alabama-Coushattas may take over the state programs although Phelan said he was not sure who would get the funding now being withheld.

The IETS board received a letter Monday dated March 20 from Alexander MacNabb, director of the division of Indian and native American programs for the DOL.

MacNabb said "I am withholding approval of your fiscal year 1979 grant application because there is sufficient reason for me to believe that it fails to meet certain basic requirements of the Comprehensive Training and Employment Act."

This letter came after the IETS board voted Saturday to terminate the programs. Phelan said they had received a telegram late last year authorizing the agency to begin its 1979 CETA program and received further indications from the DOL that their grant was being processed and there were no problems.

The News reported that DOL asked Phelan to account for $86,000 in questionable expenditures after a surprise audit last fall.

DOL also questioned the IETS' leasing of a computer with CETA funds, which is against federal regulations. Phelan claimed Tuesday this was a red herring after the Cadillac episode. The DOL said it was not going to pay for the computer and has indicated it would not pay for certain expenditures.

WARD PHELAN, head of the Indian government and Training Service, holds a $23,000 check sent to his agency as part of its fiscal year 1979 grant, which hasn't been approved by the Department of Labor. The program that would have been financed by the grant was terminated by the service due to lack of funds. Phelan announced Tuesday at a Houston news conference.

For first time in two years

Senate forced into night session

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. Bill Meier, a champion filibuster, settled into the reverse position today as colleagues opposing his bill took the Senate into its first all-night session since Meier's record-setting stint two years ago.

Meier, D-Eules, said he expected the filibuster to end in the morning with a vote on his proposed amendments to the 1973 Deceptive Trade Practices Act.

Sen. Lloyd Doggett, the filibuster's leader, said Meier's bill would make it almost impossible for consumers to recover monetary damages if they are victims of fraudulent business practices.

Meier stayed on his feet for 43 hours to fight a bill during the last legislative session, taking time out for three trips to the restroom.

Being on the other side of a filibuster "feels wonderful," he said. "It doesn't hurt your feet — and other parts of your anatomy."

Doggett, D-Austin, donned white tennis shoes for comfort four hours after the noon start Tuesday. He had six other senators to share the talkathon in two to three hour shifts.

Doggett said he did not expect the filibuster to stop Senate passage of the bill. Amendments proposed by the bill's opponents failed regularly.

He said he hoped to "focus enough attention that we'll be able to slow up the Senate and get the House to do right."

Consumer groups called a Capitol press conference today on the issue.

The bill would remove provisions for triple damages, in most cases, against deceitful businessmen.

It would also require consumers to prove they were intentionally misled, require suits to be filed within two years of an alleged deceptive trade practice and prohibit class action suits under the act.

"This bill is the brainchild of the thieves," thundered Sen. A.R. "Babe" Schwartz, D-Galveston, as he took a turn and bantered the filibuster into high gear before an early morning lag. He referred to business interests who have lobbied for Meier's proposal.

When Meier good-naturedly objected to the description of his bill's supporters, Schwartz replied: "I have made what is called a 'Schwartzism.' That's a fact based on a prejudice based on a conclusion."

Schwartz said honest businessmen do not need protection from consumers.

Meier said the balance has swung too far toward the consumer.

"This (bill) strikes a balance in what is an important place in Texas commerce," he said. "We need to be careful that we're not creating a situation that is retarding commerce."

A reflection of today's business world

NEW YORK (AP) — You may not have noticed it, but stock are up this year. Shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange rose 10.5 percent through March; American Stock Exchange shares rose 18.5 percent.

You may not have noticed because, as Merrill Lynch points out, 45 percent to 50 percent of the investment services have been bearish through much of the period. But there are other reasons too. Many.

Mideast discord was interpreted as negative for the market. So was China's Vietnam offensive. And the acceleration of inflation. And the failure so far of the guidelines. And the oil and nuclear setbacks.

Market activity itself might have given a negative impression. The big mutual funds accumulated cash rather than stocks. And many individuals did too: they stored more than $13 billion in money market funds.

Still, as Interactive Data Corporation found in a computer analysis, those first-quarter gains on the two major exchanges were bigger than for all of 1978, when prices rose, respectively, 5.4 percent and 17.3 percent.

The over the counter market also fared well, with gains averaging 15.3 percent for the first three months of the year, just slightly below the 15.9 percent increase for all of 1978.

The increases were widespread too. Increases were found for no less than 82 percent of Big Board stocks, 81.9 percent of Amex shares, and 75.6 percent of over the counter stocks.

Measured almost any way, the market rose. The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 7.10 percent, the Big Board's composite index 6.53 percent, and the Standard & Poor's 500-stock average 5.70 percent.

To Galveston Bay

Tall ships to return once more

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — When the tall-masted merchant ships plied the world's oceans during the 19th Century, their exotic ports of call read like a world atlas — Calcutta, Bahia, Rangoon, Galveston.

In a few weeks, a spirit of the era of wooden ships and iron men will sail out of the mists of time and pull into Galveston Bay once again, only this time she will drop anchor for good.

Well, the 602-year-old Elissa won't actually sail — at least, not right away — because the Galveston Historical Society is still restoring her. But when work on the triple-masted square-rigger is complete, she will be one of the world's last operational 19th Century deep-water sailing vessels.

It will take an ocean-going tugboat to guide the 150-foot ship from her present berth in Gibraltar to Galveston, where she ultimately will become a working ship museum and the third oldest merchant ship afloat. Only England's Cutty Sark and the Star of India in San Diego are older.

"She should be here by the summer, without any problem," said Paul Gaido, a local restaurant owner and one of the driving forces in the effort to bring the Elissa to Galveston.

"We have a Houston tug lined up to bring her here," Gaido said, "but the tug is tied up in the Persian Gulf area waiting to have a propeller changed, which is taking some time because of the unrest there."

The Elissa is of Scottish ancestry, built in 1877 by Aberdeen shipwrights. A merchant bark less than half the size of her clipper ship sisters, she still retained the fine hull lines and flowing grace of her square-rigger breeding.

She was active until 1970, when she was left to rot at Pireaus, Greece. She had been completely stripped down — all masts and spars were gone and the clipper bow was replaced by a blunt prow.

The Elissa got a new lease on life in October 1975, when Gaido spent $40,000 of the Galveston Historical Society's money to buy her for use as the main attraction of the city's newly restored port area.

The Elissa was chosen because her size and condition reduced her restoration costs, she was small enough to sail along the Texas coast, and she had called at Galveston twice in her heyday — in 1883 and 1886.

Greek shipyard workers and volunteers from the United States have been working on the Elissa since then, but it was decided to tow her to Galveston because costs were mounting.

"The biggest problem was inflation," Gaido said. "Greece has had a 70 percent inflation rate since 1974. Even using volunteer help, it already has cost us about $400,000."

Gaido said the volunteers — 20 in all between the ages of 25 and 35 — saved about $100,000 in construction costs. No more than nine were in Greece at a time, and each spent between two months to a year on the project.

"I guess they volunteered for the satisfaction of taking part in something historic and exciting," Gaido said. "They certainly didn't do it to make money. They received $100 a month plus room and board, and all of them paid their own way to Greece."

Only four came from outside Galveston, and only two weren't Texans — both were New Yorkers. The other two came from Corpus Christi and Austin.

Officials waiting for core to cool to give all clear

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — As week-long tensions ease, authorities are waiting for Three Mile Island's smoldering reactor core to reach a cold shutdown before declaring all danger is past in the nation's most serious nuclear accident.

"There is still a potential that some loss of cooling mechanism might still cause the core to become uncovered," said Harold Denton, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's chief of operations in Harrisburg.

"We are right now developing and looking at plans for the most effective way to bring the reactor to a cold shutdown without an increased leakage from the plant," he added at a Tuesday briefing.

A gas bubble that had threatened to displace the reactor's cooling water, exposing the core and raising the possibility of a catastrophic melt-down, was eliminated by engineers. This advanced their efforts to reach a cold shutdown — bringing the reactor to a point where it could no longer pose any risk of escaping control.

"The news is better. The chances of any catastrophic event have been greatly reduced. Maybe the worst is over," said Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

But he extended his advisory that pregnant women and pre-schoolers remain out of the plant's five-mile radius and that schools in that area stay shut.

Meanwhile, thousands of people trickled back to their homes, and schools outside the five-mile radius reopened. Civil Defense officials estimated that as many as one-fourth of the region's 950,000 residents may have fled.

As anxieties waned over the immediate problems, Congress began looking into the long-range health consequences of the accident that began one week ago today with radiation leaking from the plant. Officials said radiation within the reactor containment building remained lethal.

Several congressmen active on nuclear issues said Tuesday, after a briefing by White House and National Security Council officials, that radiation from the plant may be released for weeks or even months to come.

Although federal officials say radiation outside the plant is well within safe levels, many health experts contend that prolonged exposure to even low levels of radiation can have slow-developing but serious health effects.

The bubble, a concentration of lethally radioactive and potentially explosive hydrogen and oxygen, was drawn off from the reactor and processed into non-explosive forms.

The reactor chamber was still under pressure, which meant any failure in the cooling system could complicate matters again. Cold shutdown comes when the reactor's water cools to between 100 to 150 degrees without pressure.

GOV. DICK THORNBURGH in a news conference Tuesday night at the state capitol in Harrisburg, Pa. said that he still recommends that preschool children and pregnant women stay out of the area within five miles of the Three Mile Island Nuclear Generation Plant at Middletown, Pa. Luis Santos, 5, who has been at the evacuation center at Hershey, Pa. since the governor's warning, blows up a nuclear bubble Tuesday afternoon, as the problems from a leak at the nuclear plant are still being studied and treated by state and federal nuclear energy specialists. Nuclear hearing to begin

DN FILED BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Testimony on the environmental risks of operating floating nuclear power plants proposed for the East and Gulf coasts was scheduled to begin today at a Nuclear Regulatory Commission hearing here.

NRC spokesman Clare Miles in Washington said Tuesday that the hearing, which could last until Friday, is on a year-old application by Offshore Power Systems Inc. of Jacksonville, Fla., to manufacture eight off-shore plants.

Environmental groups in New Jersey and Washington have raised questions about the effects of normal radioactive and thermal discharges on living organisms and other elements in the food chain.

The company, a Westinghouse subsidiary, is seeking permission to construct the plants and sell them to utilities along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

OPC said none of the proposed plants have been sold.

Defense lawyers poke hole in testimony

HOUSTON (AP) — Defense lawyers poked a hole in the testimony of a prosecution witness Tuesday, but another revealed threats from Ignacio Cuevas during a 1974 siege at the Texas State Prison that led to the deaths of four persons.

Cuevas is the only surviving inmate of the three who took over a prison building and held it for 11 days, the longest siege in U.S. penal history.

The 5-foot-4-inch, chunky Cuevas is being tried for the second time on charges of causing the death of a hostage. He was convicted in 1975 and sentenced to death.

After almost four years on death row, Cuevas was granted a new trial by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. The court ruled the first trial judge had erred when he failed to disqualify a prospective juror.

Linda Woodman, one of 11 persons held hostage during the uprising, testified Monday that Cuevas held a gun at her head and threatened to kill her.

But tape recordings made during a debriefing session with law enforcement officers shortly after her release by the inmates quoted Mrs. Woodman as saying, "Cuevas never directly threatened to kill anyone."

Defense lawyer Will Gray said Tuesday the conflicting testimony would give the jury the opportunity to decide the credibility of the witness.

Mrs. Woodman, a prison librarian at the time of the uprising and now an assistant warden, said she had "left out the time Cuevas threatened me" when telling her story to authorities after her release.

"I can't explain, at least logically, why I didn't think about it when questioned. But he did hold a gun at my head," she said.

Ronald Robinson, a teacher in the prison educational system at the time of the take-over, told his days of terror, being tied to a chair, blindfolded, and shot at by Rudolph Domingues, one of the inmates involved in the siege.

Robinson said, "I thought I was dead." He said the three risoners poured catsup and tomato juice over his shirt in an effort to convince "those outside that I had been shot."

After holding out for 11 days, the inmates, behind a movable shield of lawbooks, chalkboards, tape and hostages, made a dash for freedom.

They were met with bullets. Domingues and Fred Carrasco, named leader of the escape attempt by hostages, were shot to death.

Two hostages died. Cuevas is accused of causing the death of one hostage, Julia Standley, also a prison librarian.
