Santa Letters | Texas lawmakers seek Abbott's blessing on oil theft crackdown

BY JIM MALEWITZ TEXAS TRIBUNE

Oil rustlers of Texas beware: State lawmakers want to crack down on the those who swipe hundreds of barrels of black gold to sell on the black market — whether the crime happens during the dead of a South Texas night or under the Permian Basin sun.

But first, they need the governor's blessing.

Even as a flooded oil market has slowed the Texas boom to a crawl, the multi-billion-dollar threat of oil theft remains large — if not growing — across the state's secluded drilling country. Some out-of-work roughnecks are resorting to crime just to pay rent. Experts say catching the thieves and keeping them behind bars for very long can prove maddeningly difficult under the state's current criminal laws.

So in its 2015 session, the Texas Legislature sought to give law enforcement officials more tools to address that problem. House Bill 3291, proposed by Laredo Democrats Rep. Richard Peña Raymond and Sen. Judith Zaffirini, would have toughened prosecutions of oil theft. It drew no public opposition and sailed through both chambers.

But Gov. Greg Abbott vetoed the legislation in June, calling its language overly broad, with the potential to lock away people for decades for innocent mistakes.

As the face of Texas changes, it's time to rethink diversity owadays in Texas, it's possible for a young woman in Houston to have one set of grandparents from Vietnam, another grandpar ent from New Jersey, and a fourth from Nigeria. This same Texan could be born and raised here, but let's say she also has a Colombian stepmother and half siblings, and she grew up bilingual. And Jewish.

So when she meets a born-again Anglo boy from Austin and they settle down to raise a family in Odessa, what on earth would their children be?

Well, Texans for one. But they'll be Texans who also think of themselves as racially, ethnically, culturally, linguistically, religiously and geographically mixed. They are the true Texas vinaigrette in the best sense of the word. And that's where we're all headed. Texas is riding the crest of a demographic wave, and like the many waves that have preceded it, this one is sure to change the way we view our state and ourselves. Texas became a majority-minority state almost 10 years ago, and the United States is projected to be majorityminority by 2044. This population growth is multidimensional — and the people who make up the face of Texas and America will not only look different but also think and feel differently. This shift will have significant implications for Americans of all ages and races

It's not just that the demographics of the country are changing. It's also how they are changing us that are important as well.

Texas is currently what the United States will look like in the future. How America changes with this population growth will also change our perspectives because how we see diversity today in Texas will be how we see diversity in the United States tomorrow.

The United States has seen decades of booming growth among Latinos and an increasingly diverse racial and cultural shift across the nation. From a national perspective, there's another factor on the horizon that will have significant impact on the face of America. Asian-Americans are poised to become the largest immigrant group in the United States by 2065. As Asian-Americans pass other foreign-born nationalities in population numbers, they will bring with them a "modern immigration wave" of 59 million to the United States. It's easy to see how we are becoming a nation of people with multiple identities. In the coming decades this means that most if not all of us are going to think of ourselves in the polyglot mix of culture, race, heritage and nationality that was once the exclusive purview of first- and second-generation immigrants.

Essentially, demographic trends are expanding the immigrant narrative and sense of identity to everyone. It is estimated that nearly 22 million Americans are considered "multiracial," meaning that they have at least two races in their background, including their parents or their grandparents. There was a time in Texas when a person had blood relatives and ancestors from a single ethnicity — so it was easy to just think of oneself as an Anglo or a Latino. But now it's getting more and more common to find people that are navigating a confluence of multiple identities.

who are in school now will be adults in the workforce. When they form opinions and perspectives about the world they live in, they will do so through a set of eyes that filters information through several lavers of identity. As a society and as a state, we need to embrace this plural sense of ourselves — because like it or not, that's the future.

By 2044, the students

With that in mind, it's high time we started to address a whole host of issues, from segregation to school reform to social acceptance to antidiscrimination policy. As a majority-minority state, Texas gives us a unique picture of what our country faces in the future. How Texans overcome lingering prejudice and de facto segregation in the face of this shifting sense of diversity will be the model for the rest of the country.

We owe it to our future generations of multilingual-Afro-Latin-Eurasian Texans to get this one right.

MUSTAFA TAMEEZ, a Houston-based

Santa's A She

I haven't paid much attention to department store Santas since I was eight years old and I saw a disheveled and sloppy Santa taking a long puff on a cigarette as he got into his putrid green VW bus with curtains. When the motor came alive that old VW's mighty muffler belched out more noxious fumes than the Basque do at their annual beer and beans barbecue.

I wondered, whatever happened to that whole sleigh concept? And I didn't see any reindeer either. I got a sense Santa traded them all in for the bus, probably shot the reindeer and had Rudolph's head mounted over the fireplace in his shack a long way from the North Pole.

Fast forward to the other day when I was sitting in a mall food court while my wife was shopping for my Christmas gift to her. I was watching parents drag their kicking and screaming toddlers to the almighty giver of gifts to have their picture taken. At first I didn't notice anything out of the ordinary about Santa but something seemed amiss. The first thing I noticed was that Santa appeared to be wearing mascara. That figures I thought, Santa was a transvestite. Why not, every other tradition has been blown apart in this politically correct world we're living in.

Curious, I left the food court to get a closer look. I tried to blend in with the parents so the mall security cop wouldn't think I was a pervert. As ha, now I could see what was out of place. Santa had, how use the lady's bathroom on her break, or shall I put this so as to not offend anyone? Santa had a bosom. A bust. An udder. And Santa didn't have a bowl full of jelly or even a beer belly. no, Santa was expecting a little Claus!

IT'S THE PITTS

Really? Santa's a she? It's just another lie our parents told us like, "Eat your carrots and you'll have good eyesight; keep eating cookies and you'll turn into one; don't swim after eating or you'll drown; when you get my age you'll understand." But now I'm old and I still don't get it. What a pack of lies our parents tried to sell us! What's next, a transgender Tooth Fairy or bisexual Easter Bunny?

I guess it was only a matter of time. Women are in the Infantry, driving semis and riding bulls, why not shimmying down chimneys? Although I do admit, Santa being a she does explain a lot of things, like why I always asked for toys and only got underwear and socks on Christmas day.

I moved in closer because I wanted to hear what the kids thought of a she-Santa. Did they say, "Hey, mommy, that Santa sounded like a girl." Or, "Daddy why did that lady have a beard?"

What if the little tykes saw the she-Santa reading Marie Claire, Vogue or the Ladies Home Journal in the magazine section of Barnes and Noble?

If Santa really is a she it does answer some questions. I never did buy the idea that any man was organized enough to be able to pack all those toys on a single sleigh. Only a woman could do that. And it always bothered me that Santa seemed to know so much about dolls and playhouses but did not know the difference between a Winchester 22, which is what I repeatedly asked for, and a Daisy BB gun, which is what I got.

I suppose a more lithesome female with smaller feet could get drown a chimney easier and it explains why there were no cookie crumbs on the couch, spilled milk or boot tracks of soot on the carpet Christmas morn. A real man would never wear clothes made out of what I believe is crushed velvet, and we all know that women are far more knowledgeable about stockings and such. And here might be the best argument yet that Santa's a she: everyone knows a male could never go around the world without a wife riding shotgun telling him how to drive.

Still, I do have a few concerns, like how a woman can grow such a great beard but I, a man's man, can't.

I also worry that this news is going to come as quite a shock to the elves and Mrs. Claus.

15 disaster-stricken counties to receive federal aid

STATE CAPITAL HIGHLIGHTS By Ed Sterling | Texas Press Association

AUSTIN — President Barack Obama on Nov. 25 ordered federal disaster aid to supplement Texas state and local recovery efforts in the area affected by severe storms, tornadoes, straight-line winds and flooding during the period of Oct. 22-31.

President Obama's action makes federal funding available to affected individuals in the counties of Bastrop, Brazoria, Caldwell, Comal, Galveston, Guadalupe, Hardin, Harris, Hays, Hidalgo, Liberty, Navarro, Travis, Willacy and Wilson.

Assistance can include grants for temporary housing and home repairs, lowcost loans to cover uninsured property losses, and other programs to help indirecover from the effects of the disaster.

Federal funding is also available on a cost-sharing basis for hazard mitigation measures statewide, according to the White House. The disaster declaration came in response to a Nov. 20 request by Gov. Greg Abbott. "I want to thank the President and FEMA for their swift response to Texas' request for a federal disaster declaration," Abbott said on Nov. 25. "Texas looks forward to working with its FEMA partners to ensure those in need receive the assistance necessary to start rebuilding their lives."

Gov. Abbott on Nov. 24 announced his plan to lead a delegation to Havana, Cuba to participate in meetings

Nov. 30 through Dec. 2. Abbott said he would meet with Cuba's Ministry of Foreign Trade and Investment, el, trade and exports from Port of Mariel, the Cuban Export-Import Corporation, Cuba Chamber of Commerce, Alimport (Cuba's food import-export company), and various economic institutions. This is the governor's second international business development trip since taking office. The first was a trip to Mexico City in September.

"With a new era of eased trade and travel restrictions between the U.S. and Cuba, and as the 12th largest economy in the world, Texas has an opportunity to capitalize and expand its economic footprint at home and abroad.

"Opening the door to business with Texas will expand free enterprise and the freedom that flows from it. I look forward to expanding business opportunities for both Texas and Cuba," Abbott said.

Should you be concerned about mercury?

Chances are, everyone has been affected by mercury-poisoning directly or indirectly and are completely unaware where they encountered it.

The controversy over mercury roars with accusation and "evidence" supporting any conceivable conclusion.

I say "mercury-poisoning" because it has no benefits in the human organism and even minimum levels can be toxic or fatal.

It is believed to react negatively with testosterone and, therefore, males affected outnumber females by 4:1.

Dental amalgams have been used in dentistry for about 150 years and contain about 50 percent mercury, as does a preservative (Thimerosal) used in all vaccines until 2004.

Tetanus and influenza vaccines still use this preservative in the multiple-dose vials. It is known to collect in fish and other marine life we consume and is found in the ground and the air we breathe.

After we ingest mercury, it collects in our cells by attaching itself to magnesium and other metals in our body.

While a healthy body can slowly eliminate mercury, it takes a long time. Major problems and diseases arise when we receive a dosage that, "like the straw that broke the camel's back", pushes our physiology past the point of tolerance.

There has been much debate about whether or not Autism is also caused by mercury ingestion.

Multiple lines of scientific evidence have shown that thiomersal does not cause autism.

For example, the clinical symptoms of mercury poisoning differ significantly from those of autism. In addition, multiple population studies have found no association between thiomersal and autism, and rates of autism have continued to increase despite removal of thiomersal from vaccines."

Dan Olmsted, investigative journalist and the author of, "The Amish Anomaly" and "Age of Autism" contends that Amish children do not develop Autism.

He asserted that the Amish do not vaccinate their children due to their spiritual doctrines and considered this to be evidence of an Autism connection to the mercury in the vaccine preservative. Olmsted's "Amish Anomaly" has since been criticized extensively and said to be illfounded.

Eric Gladen, a 29-yearold civil engineer, received a tetanus shot within an hour after scratching his head on a rusty nail on Jan. 18, 2004.

Within a week Eric began feeling unusually nervous and anxious. On Feb. 29, he began noticing very stark changes to his vision and overall changes to his mental health.

After lengthy treatment and recovery he recovered and became interested in Autism and the correlations to Thimerosal in children's vaccines.

The film, "Trace Amounts" was subsequently directed and produced by Mr. Gladen and deserves a look if Autism is a concern of yours.

General Admission is $10, which includes the meal of chicken fried deer, turkey, axis deer and pork sausage, deer chili, deer tamales and brisket. Ten percent of the admission proceeds will go to the West Texas Rehab.

This year's DeerFest will give away more than 80 guns, $10,000 in Cabela's gift cards, a 2015 Polaris Crew Cab Ranger and numerous other prizes including the Yeti Cooler Sale.

There will also be a 48gun Cannon Safe drawing and the BB gun raffle for the children.

The DeerFest came to life in 1988 as a fundraiser to keep the Ozona Chamber of Commerce's doors open. Art Roane and the Double T Ranch provided all of the deer for the event. Without their generosity, feeding hundreds of people in attendance would not have been possible. Twelve guns and several other local prizes were given away the first year. A few years later, the DeerFest had made enough money to keep the Chamber of Commerce open and then began donating to other local projects. The Crockett County EMS building and the Fair Park Convention Center were built with funds raised at the Crockett County DeerFest. Along with this, Deer-Fest contributes yearly to the Crockett County 4-H, Knights of Columbus, Our Lady of Perpetual Help Youth Ministry, The Ozona Ministerial Alliance, The Ozona Volunteer Fire Department, The Boy Scouts, The Cub Scouts, YMCA Youth Football, Ozona Youth Baseball, The Crockett County Youth and Civic Center and The Ozona Community Center.

The DeerFest also contributes annually to the West Texas Rehab Center, and they award academic scholarships to students from Ozona High School.

shocked us because the [governor's] staff had worked with us on it," said Zaffirini.

Abbott's office would not comment for this story, saying his veto spoke for itself.

Lawmakers have revived their anti-theft push. In what some are pegging as one of the top energy issues for the next legislative session in 2017, they're aiming to send Abbott an anti-theft bill he can stomach.

Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick and House Speaker Joe Straus both directed lawmakers to study the issue in the coming months, and the Senate Committee on Natural Resources and Development has already discussed it in a hearing this month

"My concern is that the thieves will get smarter with time," Sen. Troy Fraser, R-Horseshoe Bay, said at the hearing. "We've got to get the governor comfortable with prosecution."

Oil and gas companies and law enforcement officials nationwide have grappled with oilfield theft, and the problem looms particularly large in Texas, the U.S. energy king.

Thieves are eying most anything they can get their hands on; batteries, metal valves, piping and other equipment frequently vanish from oilfields, running up production costs. And of course, there's the petroleum, which criminals haul away and sell cheaply.

The problem, as old as the oilfields themselves, expanded during the last Texas boom, experts say, as surging production created more to steal.

Now authorities are seeing even more cases amid a downturn as laid-off workers get desperate and pennypinching companies are more likely to audit their supplies.

"Anywhere you got oil, and you got oil companies, you're going to have theft. That's just the nature of the beast," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who often handles two or three oil thefts each month. "Now that the drilling's stopped, or slowed down drastically, we're having people that have been accustomed to bringing in $6,000 to $10,000 a month. Now they've bought all their toys — their boats and their trucks — but have no way to pay for them, so they've resorted to stealing."

His office is part of the FBI-led Oil Field Theft Task Force, established in 2008 to fight such Permian Basin crime at the federal level.

Plenty of oil pilfering

'Oil theft is one of the hardest to prove because they could do it in broad daylight.

You almost have to know what's happening and be right there when it does.'

ing the problem is tricky. But the Energy Security Council, a Houston-based security group, estimates thieves took 1-3 percent of the roughly 700 million barrels Texas produced in 2013.

If accurate, theft would have bled up to $2.1 billion from producers that year.

Theft schemes range in complexity. Bolder thieves might directly tap storage tanks in dark of night, hoping no one is watching.

A more common scenario involves waste haulers or vacuum trucks, which are hired to remove water collecting on the bottom of oil storage tanks.

Criminals — whether employed in the industry or not — suck up some oil during that process to sell later, a crime that can go unnoticed even at a bustling work site.

"Oil theft is one of the hardest to prove because they could do it in broad daylight," said Midland County Sgt. John Henry. "You almost have to know what's happening and be right there when it does."

In South Texas' Eagle Ford Shale, Lewis Energy did just that — twice this year, teaming up with local authorities to nab two groups of alleged criminals in the act on sites near Cotulla. But such instances are incredibly rare, said Mike Peters, the company's global security manager.

One set of arrests came on an early morning in May, as a tanker that looked like a wastewater tanker was pulling out of well site. A crew had first used a scout vehicle to check the location and then act as surveillance as the tanker — which had no water-hauling permit — guzzled some 150 barrels of oil, Peters said. Theives had taken a total of 700 barrels over the course of a month.

The feds took up the case, which resulted in four arrests. Those charged could each be facing a 10-year prison sentence.

In a September case, a man driving a legitimate oil tanker for a gathering company was arrested after allegedly taking 185 barrels of Lewis Energy oil and selling it for a fraction of its market price, Peters said.

But because the federal task force — with its huge workload — did not take up that case, authorities could only charge the man with a state jail felony, which carries a sentence of just six months to two years in a state jail.

Stealing oil and sneaking it safely into pipelines often involves sprawling networks of criminals.

The teams of mules, lookouts and launderers are not all that different from drug traders, experts say. Sometimes, investigators may perform something of a DNA test to match stolen oil from the well that produced it. But oil from multiple wells often gets mixed together, making forensic tests near impossible and stalling investigations.

Law enforcement officials say strengthening criminal penalties would give officials more tools to attack the networks from all angles.

HOUSE OF

House Bill 3291 would have created a second-degree felony for anyone caught "recklessly" possessing, purchasing, moving or selling oil or gas without proper Texas permits. Such felonies carry up to 20 years in prison.

But Abbott nixed the legislation, calling it unnecessarily harsh.

"Theft of oil and gas is a serious problem facing one of our state's most vital industries. Those responsible should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law," he wrote in his veto message. But the bill's "overly broad language," he added, created "severe criminal penalties for conduct that may have nothing to do with theft of oil and gas" — like mere faulty paperwork.

"Apparently, it was the governor himself who did not like it. The staff itself signed off on it," said Zaffirini, who was disappointed with the veto but called Abbott's careful reading of the bill "refreshing."

Advocates hope simply swapping the word "recklessly" in the bill for "intentionally or knowingly" participating in theft will alleviate the governor's concerns.

They may not know for sure, however, until the next bill lands on his desk in 2017. At the hearing this month, Fraser asked Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton's office to help lawmakers make the bill airtight and veto-proof.

"Otherwise this committee will be doing this again two years from now," he said.

Miraculous Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked for favors. This time I ask you this very special one. Take it dear Jesus and place it within your own broken heart where your father sees it, then in your merciful eyes it will become your favor not mine. Amen. Say this prayer for 3 days, promise publication and the favor will be granted. Never known to fail.

The iWATCH program was created as a partnership between communities and law enforcement, and utilizes citizen-sourced tips related to criminal activity.

"In the wake of the terrible tragedies in Paris, we are reminding Texans of the important role they can play in helping law enforcement combat those intending to do harm to others," said DPS Director Steven McCraw.

In addition to the attacks in Paris, France, senseless attacks have also occurred closer to home in recent years, including tragic shootings at Fort Hood, and a shooting incident in May of this year in Garland, Texas. Concerned citizens can visit the website to fill out a report, which includes contact information and specifics about a particular incident. A report brought "in order to protect care for more than 13,000 patients whose access to HIV screening, cancer screenings, birth control, and other preventive care at Planned Parenthood is at risk."

The Office of the Governor on Oct. 19 announced that federal Medicaid funding for Planned Parenthood and its Texas affiliates would be terminated, in coordination with a letter issued by the Office of Inspector General at Texas Health and Human Services Commission to Planned Parenthood.

HIGHWAY FUND GETS INFUSION

Texas Comptroller Glenn Hegar on Nov. 24 announced the transfer of $2.27 billion into the State Highway Fund and the Economic Stabilization Fund commonly known as the Rainy Day Fund. Each fund received more than $1.13 billion, or 50 percent of the total transfer.

According to the announcement, the transfer amounts are based on whether oil production and natural gas production tax revenues exceed 1987 collections. If either tax is greater than the 1987 threshold, an amount equal to 75 percent of the excess is transferred.

In November 2014, Texas voters approved an amendment to the state constitution allocating at least onehalf of these severance taxes to the rainy day fund and the remainder to the State Highway Fund for use on non-toll highway construction, maintenance and right-of-way acquisition.

TEXAS JOB GROWTH CONTINUES

Texas Workforce Commission on Nov. 23 announced that Texas employers added 20,000 seasonally adjusted non-farm jobs in October, marking the eighth month of 2015 with jobs added.

The state's job increases have yielded a 1.7 percent annual growth rate continuing its string of positive annual growth for 66 consecutive months.

"Texas employers continue to contribute to the Texas economy by adding jobs, including 203,900 over the past year," said TWC Chairman Andres Alcantar.

Texas' seasonally adjusted unemployment rate increased to 4.4 percent in October, up from 4.2 percent in September, and remained below the national average of 5.0 percent.
