Sheriff's office to get new equipment

Officers with the Donley County Sheriff's Office will soon be sporting bullet-proof vests and a more unified appearance thanks to a grant from an area foundation.

The Texas Panhandle 100 Club is a non-profit organization devoted to protecting the lives of area law enforcement officers and firefighters by paying for training and life-saving equipment.

Sheriff Butch Blackburn said his office will receive seven vests and five uniforms per officer as well as a vest and uniforms for the Precinct 3&4 Constable.

The grant, worth about $3,900, will let all local officers look the same, and the shirts and equipment should be on hand in about a month, Blackburn said.

The sheriff also said his office would soon be receiving seven Benelli shotguns at a cost of about $475 each. Those guns were purchased by the 100th District Attorney's office, and, along with the uniforms and vests, are things the Donley County taxpayer did not have to pay for, Blackburn said.

No comments made at city tax hearing

The Clarendon Board of Aldermen heard no feedback on the city's proposed tax rate during a public hearing last Tuesday, September 16.

Aldermen have proposed a property tax rate of $0.708915 per $100 valuation, up from the current rate of $0.65. There were no comments from the public during the tax hearing.

The board was meeting Tuesday night, September 23, and was expected to approve the tax rate as well as the fiscal year 2015 budget.

On Top of the World Clarendon author finds her true calling

By Roger Estlack, Clarendon Enterprise

Tt's been a whirlwind year for Clarendon's Morgan Hysinger, going from a college student to a bestselling author in a short time.

Writing a Scottish time-traveling romance wasn't where Hysinger thought her career path would lead when she graduated from Clarendon High School in 2009. The daughter of two educators, Hysinger first studied broadcast journalism before turning to corporate communications and later to education. She even took on an internship at Disney World, but nothing seemed to fit.

"Writing was always easy for me, and something always made me think I should be writing," Hysinger said.

She had never tried her hand at creative writing until she was in college, and even then it was just on her own to see if she could. But things began to change in 2012.

Hysinger signed up for a writing class under the tutelage of Jodi Thomas, a very successful historical romance author and the writer-in-residence at West Texas A&M University. Hysinger wrote a 20-page story for Thomas' class and was nervous as the well-known writer handed it back to her.

"She wrote: 'This is ready. Send it in," Hysinger recalls. "I thought, if she thinks I can do this, maybe I can."

Still, Hysinger continued on her traditional career route and was near graduating in the summer of 2013. She needed to do her student teaching and finish one class to graduate and then find a teaching job. But then a June writer's academy under novelist Alexandra Sokoloff gave her fresh insight on plotting novels like movies and convinced her she needed to leave college and take a new path.

"I was driving home thinking, 'I'm gonna have to tell my parents I want to do this and they are going to die," Hysinger said.

But the news went more smoothly at home. Her mother already knew she was interested in writing for a living, and her father backed her plan but gave her a year to make it work or go back to college. Hysinger then withdrew from West Texas A&M and went to an Atlanta writer's conference where she learned about the business of writing, marketing, and independent publish-

"I went to workshops on traditional and independent publishing," she said. "The indy workshops had ladies who were excited and making a lot of money."

The next week she pulled a pen name out of the air, "Bethany Claire," and by November she was ready to go with her first novel in the Morna's Legacy Series, Love Beyond Time.

As an independent publisher, there was not a big press run for the new book. Instead, the novel was and is printed as people order it off Amazon.com and other online sources. By the end of December, Bethany Claire had made more money than she would have in the two months of teaching public school.

And with that, her career took off with a series of novels set in Scotland and moving back and forth between the present time and the 17th century. The characters in the books are all connected, and the character of Morna is a common thread among them in something of a match-maker role.

The young author took over her parent's garage for her personal office, and by May she hit USA Today's Bestseller's List.

Now her mother has quit her job at Clarendon ISD and works for Bethany Claire fulltime to help with marketing and formatting her books. An independent contractor in South Africa designs her book covers.

Less than a year after she started her career, Hysinger has now penned four fulllength novels and two novellas, and the first book has sold more than 50,000 copies.

The young author says being her own boss is high pressure and scary but also very fun and rewarding.

King discusses education with constituents

By Ashlee Estlack, Clarendon Enterprise State Rep. Ken King (R-Canadian) addressed the Donley County Retired School Personnel Monday night at the group's regular meeting and visited with local voters. The representative discussed his freshman year in the State Legislature last session, and touched on several issues of local interest. Appropriate to the setting, the discussion focused early on education and federal interference with Texas' schools, particularly in terms of mandatory testing.

King said the federal government puts about $5.5 billion into refining its own skills objectives.

"I don't want Common Core," King said. "I don't want the federal government in Texas schools, and I don't want Austin in Clarendon any more than it has to be."

King also said the state needs to fund community colleges to help get high school kids into appropriate career and technical programs.

What's in a Name?

It was a central question in Shakespeare's play. Romeo and Juliet were from warring families, so their romance was star-crossed from the "git-go." She downplayed their plight, cooing, "What's in a name?" Then there was something about a rose by any other name smelling just as sweet.

The same question posed today begs several "sub-questions" before it can be meaningfully answered.

Who's asking? What's the purpose? Have popularity surveys been checked? Is it likely to trigger an IRS audit? Is there an "app" for that?

Space limitations shorten this treatise to naming human offspring, never mind there also are plenty of resources for persons pondering pet names.

the Brits. Land sakes alive, the mystique of picking names has piqued the interest of my Uncle Mort, a 102-yearold, never-say-die kin down in the thicket....

He was in town the other day to visit wrecking yards to find an "all right" body of the smallest Lincoln automobile. He doesn't need the "innards," since he plans to configure the Lincoln shell somehow over his golf cart - ongoing proof, really, that he wants to be viewed as someone he ain't!

With Matt McConaughey's ads that Lincolns are "all right, all right," maybe Aunt Maude would be willing to ride on the cart if passers-by think they're in a "little Lincoln."

Mort also has a word for the little old lady in another ad - the one who says, "It doesn't look like a Buick." He says he'll answer her thusly, "That's because it ain't a Buick. We're just trying to look like an 'all right' Lincoln."...

Mort said he wanted to visit about the excitement in naming Great Britain's new royal baby.

"When I came along, most babies were given biblical names, whether or not they ever darkened church doors," he laughed. "'Course, we shortened the names later - 'Abraham' became 'Abe,' Solomon was shortened to 'Sol' and 'Ezekiel' later was 'Zeke'." He claimed it "saved on ink later when signatures on official documents required such." (Idle thought: I don't think I've ever heard of anyone named for "Hezekiah," or, in today's text-flooded world, "Hez.") He finds it interesting that most feminine names from the Book more nearly remain intact - "maybe because they're shorter to start with" - like Martha, Mary and Ruth.

Mort asked me if I realized many girls' given names now are chosen from plants, and the list is long. "I'm plenty glad my folks didn't name me after a plant," Mort chuckled. "I'd have a hard time living down 'Kudzu'." He figures if the royal couple's second baby is a male, it would be a "slam dunk" to call him "Kong." If he ascends to the throne, he'll be "King Kong."...

After he left, I couldn't get my mind off the "baby-naming" thing. And, I thought of his name having no biblical reference.

He's proud of the name "Mortimer," by the way. This was clear in a conversation exhausted years ago. "How many other 'Mortimers' do you know with a dummy named for them?" he questioned. (Late ventriloquist Edgar Bergen allegedly named "Mortimer Snerd" after him.)

Anyway, I checked Mort's facts about baby girls named after plants....

Sure enough, the Chicago Tribune confirms that plant-based baby names are increasing. Examples include Lily, Violet, Willow, Hazel, Ivy, Iris, Olive, Dahlia, Juniper and Azalea. Violet is at its highest rank

Further, Laura Wattenberg's namewizard.com is a popular resource for name choices. "Lily" is now America's top botanical name.

In general, parents want fresh, original names that stand out--but don't seem "made up."

So, I must straighten you out, Juliet. There's quite a lot in names, and admittedly, Rose is a popular one. There are those by many other names, though, who sniff at the thought of being "just as sweet." They contend they're even sweeter....

Abuse of women, children must end

the quick,

the dead,

& fred

A couple of weeks ago, when the news that star football running back, Adrian Peterson, had been charged with child abuse, for spanking his son with a "switch," I immediately thought about how absurd it was to charge a parent with such a serious crime just for spanking his son. During discussions with friends about the incident, I took the position that the lack of spanking was the cause for a lot of society's ills today. My friends and I bemoaned the fact that it is inappropriate for the state to intervene in family matters, especially in this case, since Adrian Peterson was such a fine, upstanding man and a great example for today's youth.

We chatted about how we were spanked, when needed, as children. I recalled the time that I received three spanking from three different members of my family (uncle, grandmother, and mother) for the same offense - theft of a candy bar from Clifford's grocery store. I felt that it was terribly unjust to be spanked three times for the same offense. Of course, the first two spankings were mild, a couple of swats on the behind. My third spanking, however, was different - because Mom did the spanking. She may have weighed 100 pounds after a feast, and stood about five feet tall in heels. Even though she was no bigger than a minute, that woman could pack a punch, especially with a switch. Mother nearly always left welts on our naked hamstrings, after making us take down our jeans; and she spanked us with love and great purpose. Ouch!

I still take pride in the fact that I am the only grandchild that my grandfather, Leonard Putman, spanked. I deserved the spanking mainly because I snuck up on him and bit him on the back of his leg while he was enjoying the sweet, cool evening in his favorite lawn chair. I had taken exception to his admonition to leave Mam-ma's flowers alone, lest she become riled and spank my little behind. His spanking, if it could be called that, amounted to a few swats on my behind with his bare hand. I can say that I never had a spanking that I didn't deserve. Who knows, they may have even helped to mold my character? I did learn early on that crime does not pay, and that it is not a good idea to bite your grandfather, or anyone else for that matter. I fervently hope that my children can say the same thing about the spankings I administered to them. I never left marks (I hope), but they knew that they had been spanked.

Regarding Adrian Peterson, I felt that he was probably of a similar mind about spanking when I first read of the charges against him. Then I saw the photos of his little four year old son. Spanking, regardless of the severity of the behavior that led to the spanking, should never, ever, draw blood and leave horrible bruises. They also should not be administered to the genitals, which was the case with his son. Adrian Peterson horribly abused his son. There is no doubt about that. What he did was inexcusable and he needs to be severely punished for his crime. He deserves to spend many years in prison contemplating the horrible things he did to his little son. The reason he gave for whipping his son was because the boy had pushed a sibling during a childish disagreement over a videogame.

Chance Jones, who was the same age as Adrian Peterson's son when he was beaten to death by his father, Robert Babcock, probably had a similar experience to Peterson's son in the beginning of his abusive treatment. Chance's grandmother knew that horrible abuse was being rained down upon her grandson's little body, yet remained quiet about the abuse.

Adrian Peterson is not much better than Robert Babcock. The biggest difference seems to be that someone stepped in to protect Adrian Peterson's son before he was beaten to death. Chance Jones didn't get that opportunity. Instead, he lies cold in his little grave, a testament to the fact that we must intervene when we witness child abuse in any form, regardless of how serious we think the abuse may be. All child abuse is deadly serious and must be stopped as soon as it comes to light.

Additionally, it has recently been noted that many of our professional athletes commonly abuse their spouses and girlfriends. Ray Rice brutally hit his girlfriend, now his wife, with a wicked left hook that knocked her several feet into the air and into the hand rail of an elevator. She was knocked completely out and it took several minutes before she regained consciousness. Yet, she married the man. I'm not sure what to think about that.

Another player with the Arizona Cardinals head butted his wife and broke her nose because she was not in the mood for love. The next day, he slugged her with a closed fist, adding insult to serious injury. This type of abuse has been going on for years, yet little is done about it. It's not just professional athletes that do these horrible things; everyday people also are guilty of these abuses.

Physically, mentally, and sexually abusing women and children, regardless of the circumstances, are inexcusable and must be dealt with by society in a stern and harsh manner. Prison time needs to be mandatory in every case.

CASA: True heroes for children

The arrests of several celebrated professional athletes who some may call heroes have made national news. With widespread criticism of the way the NFL has handled these initial cases of child and domestic abuse, more incidents are unfortunately surfacing. Until recently, these players have not only escaped accountability and sanctions on game day, but have also somehow retained their images as positive role models.

It seems that the word "hero" is thrown around quite loosely these days. A hero is defined as a person of distinguished courage or ability, admired for his or her brave deeds and noble qualities - someone who, in the opinion of others, has heroic characteristics or has performed a heroic act and is regarded as a model or ideal. Though it's important to remember that there are indeed athletes who are heroic away from their sport and sacrifice time or money to help others, there are many others who are not deserving of the title.

In spite of recent events, many children will continue to view these athletes as heroes. But for more than 46,600 children in the Texas foster care system, their dream is to have a loving, safe and permanent home, and all they need is an everyday hero to fill that role.

CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocate) volunteers are empowered by the courts to help make these children's dreams a reality. CASA volunteers are everyday community members that are specially trained and appointed by judges to advocate for children in the child welfare system to ensure that children have a voice in court. They get to know a child or sibling group and any relevant contacts in the children's lives in order to gather information about their physical, emotional and educational needs, and they strive to help the children move out of the temporary foster care system and into safe, permanent homes as quickly as possible.

Research has shown that children and youth in foster care who have CASA volunteers spend less time in foster care, perform better in school and are less likely to return to foster care after a permanent placement. CASA volunteers are often the only adults consistently present in these children's lives after they enter state custody.

Each of us has an obligation and an opportunity to break the cycle of child abuse and neglect. If you see abuse, report it to (800) 252-5400 or go to www.txabusehotline.org. If a child's life is in danger, call 911.

You don't need to be a sports star, actor or celebrity to be worthy of being called a hero. With 46 children being removed from their homes every day due to abuse or neglect, there's a growing need for heroes to enter into these children's lives. Be a hero for children in foster care by becoming a CASA volunteer. Call CASA of the High Plains at 806-669-7638 or visit www.BecomeaCASA.org today for more informa-Janet Watts, Executive Director CASA of the High Plains

Take charge of your life I just read an article in the Amarillo

Globe-News that is one of several published during Hispanic Heritage Month. The article featured one of my former partners of 25 years, Jose Ignacio Rael. Knowing Jose and seeing how he functioned, I note the following. First of all, he worked hard at everything he did. He was early at the office to prepare working with his clients. He was well prepared, as stated in the article, when it came to the independent school board meetings. He was dedicated to helping kids become knowledgeable. He promoted Opportunity School, and even served on the Catholic School Board.

To me, it was a blessing to know and work with Jose. I'm offering this article in hope that it might influence someone to take charge of his or her life and not depend upon others to take care of him or her. America is the land of opportunity, so take advantage of that opportunity.

Drugs in the News

Medication May Reduce Asthma Flare-Ups

According to research published in a recent issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, two clinical trials show evidence of the effectiveness of mepolizumab in a very specific type of asthma. The research showed that this investigational biologic drug may help reduce asthma exacerbations, or flare-ups, and also reduce the use of steroids in those with a condition called severe eosinophilic asthma. This particular asthma type is characterized by severe damage to the airways from eosinophils. These are a type of white blood cells. The clinical trial further showed that the asthma symptoms were better controlled in people who were taking mepolizumab than those who did not.

Mepolizumab is classified as a monoclonal antibody. It is administered into the veins or under the skin every month to help control flare ups in eosinophilic disease states. Mepolizumab works in the body by blocking chemicals from interacting that may lead to an allergic reaction. It is still undergoing clinical tests before it is approved by the FDA.

Broncos fall to Gruver last Friday

Bronco JV game ends in tie with Gruver

The Bronco Junior Varsity football squad played the Gruver Greyhounds to a 6-6 tie at home last Thursday night in Bronco Stadium.

The Broncos' lone score came in the second quarter when Mikeal LaRoe scored on a three-yard run. The two-point conversion failed and the Broncos led by six. The Broncos held that lead until late in the fourth quarter when the Greyhounds were able to find the end zone. They, too, failed to convert the bonus, so the game was tied at six all and that is

According to coach Brandt Lockhart, Broncos several made a good showing in the game. Demarjae Cortez had two interceptions on defense and Justin Christopher had a fumble recovery. Playing an outstanding defensive game were Nick Shadle, Nathan Shadle, Andy Davis, Randy Aguilar, Raylyn Shelton and Kade Hunsaker. Lockhart also noted that Laroe and Cortez did a good job running the ball. "I was pleased with our effort," Lockhart said.

As of this time, the Broncos will not have a junior varsity game against Booker next Thursday night.
