A CIRCUS PARADE WORTH SEEING.

The Hagenbeck-Wallace Display of Horses, Animals and Cages Is Beautiful.

The movement which was attempted a few years ago to eliminate the parade feature of circus day has signally failed, and the Hagenbeck-Wallace Combined Shows were instrumental in retaining that part of the circus which is enjoyed by thousands who are not able to attend the performances. When this enterprise visits this city Nov. 6 the population will turn out en masse, for they have the reputation of making a street parade well worth taking time to see.

While only a small percentage of the people can own automobiles and appreciate them, every man, woman and child admires a beautiful horse. For years the name of Wallace has been synonymous for "fine horses," because he himself has always personally taken a pride in horse flesh. When he first embarked in the show business he adopted as a slogan "The finest horses of any show on earth," and that he has lived up to it is attested by the millions of people who have seen the Wallace

The Carl Hagenbeck Trained Wild Animal Shows have always been credited with having the best trained wild beasts ever exhibited, and since these two shows have combined the display of the wild animals in the open cages adds an unusual feature to a parade that had already gained a national reputation because of its brilliancy and novelty.

According to the daily schedule it is the plan to have the parade on the streets at 10 o'clock and this is generally done. The very nature of the circus business, however, subjects them to unexpected delays at times and they can not always guarantee to be right on the dot. But rather than miss the grandest street parade, the most pleasing one ever witnessed, the public is urged to be in good positions to view it at the usual hour of 10 o'clock.

Take Your Common Colds Seriously.

Common colds, severe and frequent lay the foundation of chronic diseased conditions of the nose and throat, and may develop into bronchitis, pneumonia and consumption. For all coughs and colds in children and in grown persons, take Foley's Honey and Tar Compound promptly. I. W. Sweet.

Deception.

Be not deceived, lest ye suffer physically, mentally, financially or otherwise.

If you were told that a man climbed a 100 feet greased pole backwards and fell from the top without injury, that would be a falsehood.

And if your reliable friend were to tell you that upon his word of honor that he saw the Lord take Ananias' life by striking him upon the top of the head with a bar of Clairette soap, that would be another lie.

Then, again, if you were told that a person fell off the planet Jupiter, landed on the rainbow, and slid to earth on it, you would hardly believe that, and if you were assured by a great display of beautiful literature that some firm was going to give you $3.00 worth of goods for $1.50 or had cut the price on honest goods half, you could hardly believe that, and if you did, you would likely be badly deceived.

There are only two places from which legitimate merchandise can be bought, from the manufacturers and jobbers; that being the case, all merchants get their goods from the same place, so in buying no one can give much better bargains than the other, and it solely depends upon how much he wants to make.

As we do not want the earth, or to deceive you, we will name a few prices that are as low as any emory would be daring enough to make.

Good heavy cotton blankets, 54 by 74, at 45 cents each. Better grade, bound edge, 60 by 76, at 50 cents each. Heavier grade, bound edge, 64 by 80, at 87½ cents each.

Full line of wool and wool nap blankets from $2.00 to $5.00 per pair.

Extra heavy comforts at $1.00. John B. Stetson hats from $3.50 to $4.50 in all latest styles.

Full line of other style hats from 25 cents to $3.00.

It will pay you to inspect our line of shoes, it is complete and can give you anything from a 40 cent shoe for the baby to an 18 in bootee for men.

The largest stock of sweaters in town from 40 cents to $2.50.

Fair Managers Hold Meeting at Dallas Fair.

Dallas, Texas, October 21.—A meeting of Fair Managers from various sections of the state was held in the Fair Grounds Auditorium in this city to-day and matters of mutual interest were discussed. Fair managers realize that the old-fashioned idea of a county fair with its freaks and fakes is generally dying out and that the new idea necessitates an exhibit of the material products of the county, supplemented by clean and wholesome entertainment features. The public is demanding that the county fair shall indicate the development of the county. The meeting of fair managers was for this purpose and they hope by concerted effort to attain the desired end.

There will be forty-two county fairs held in Texas this fall, giving 13,021 premiums which amount to $116,960.24.

White Rose.

In Memory of a Departed One.

On September 30 the soul of our beloved sister, Miss Pearl Satterwhite, left the tabernacle of clay, where it had dwelled for 17 years, and went to God whom she had served for 4 years with an undaunted faith.

She was a daughter of Bro. and Sister James Satterwhite. Hers was a happy home and one that served God daily.

Miss Pearl was loved by all who knew her, and was held in high esteem for her devotion to her father and mother. This was in keeping with God's Word as well as a fruit of righteousness.

At the age of 13 she accepted the Lord Jesus as her Saviour and joined Walls Chapel Baptist Church, of which she was a member at her death.

She was ill only a short time and stated in the early part of her illness that she would not get well, but expressed a willingness to go when it pleased God to call. We thank God for such evidence of faith in Him.

We mourn her loss from the Church and join her loved ones in mourning her loss from the family circle, yet we know He doeth all things well. It is our loss but Heaven's gain.

"She went up to celestial gardens, Where angels watch and seraphs are the wardens. She saw a hand we could not see, Which beckoned her away, She heard a voice we could not hear, Which would not let her stay."

Much loved by her brother and pastor, Jas. E. Stack.

DEADLY RACE RIOT IN OKLAHOMA TOWN.

County Attorney Beavers Dead and Two Other Whites Are Fatally Wounded.

Muskogee, Okla., Oct. 22.—One white man, J. D. Beavers, city attorney, was killed, two more whites are fatally wounded and two negroes were shot in a race riot in Coweta, a town twenty miles north of here, this afternoon. A lynching of one negro was narrowly averted and tonight the town is in a state of terror because of threats of the negroes to wipe the town off the map before morning. Negro emissaries have been sent out to neighboring negro towns and settlements asking them to aid in the fight on the white population of Coweta. The negroes have threatened to set the town afire. There is little or no fire protection in Coweta.

The trouble started late yesterday afternoon when a young man named Swazer, a telegraph operator of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, was walking along the street with a young lady. A negro, Ed Ruse, in passing, pushed the girl off the sidewalk into the mud. Swazer immediately struck the negro and another white man, whose name is being kept a secret, seized the negro and Swazer and he gave him a beating.

Today the negro has been walking the streets with a long knife in his pocket looking for the man who held him when Swazer struck him. When City Marshal Hurt went after him and ordered him to give up the knife the negro attacked the marshal, who shot him. Ed Suddeth, another negro, at that moment opened fire from a house on the opposite side of the street with an automatic revolver, killing city attorney Beavers, an onlooker to the marshal's effort to arrest Ruse, and wounded two other white men.

The shooting then became general and forty to fifty shots were exchanged in rapid succession between negroes and whites.

Suddeth, who had shot the white man and killed city attorney Beavers, then fled to a house and barricaded himself, but was surrounded by a posse and shot, but not fatally. He was then captured.

At 7 o'clock tonight Suddeth, the negro who shot three white men, was turned over to Deputy Sheriff Flowers. Flowers had an automobile and endeavored to take Suddeth to Wagoner tonight to get him away from the scene of his crime, fearing a lynching. Just as the negro was lifted into the automobile the mob broke loose and the negro was literally riddled with bullets. There were probably fifty shots fired into his body.

SKETCHES AND NOTES

AND BATTLEFIELD

BY W. B. PAGE

We cannot close these sketches and more especially the references to the Lee family without drawing the attention of fathers and mothers to a book which should be in the hands of every boy and girl of the South. We refer to the "Life and Letters of Robert E. Lee" by his son, R. E. Lee, Jr. Besides a summary of the great man's life, it contains also the letters written by him during the war to his wife, to his daughters, to his sons, all of whom were in the ranks and to many friends. And such letters! They are noble specimens and models of his rare gift of letter writing. Nothing finer can be found in any language, nothing purer, sweeter, nobler, more elevating and refining in tone and sentiment or couched in chaster, more elegant language than these epistles of Robert Edward Lee to the noble woman who pledged her vows at the marriage altar to share the fortunes of life as they came. Here can be seen the frank outpourings of a great soul in the camp, on the march and even on the grim lines of battle. There runs through them, instinct in every syllable, a love worshipful in depth and breadth, a devotion which marks her as the idol of his soul, and suffusing and pervading all a chivalrous gentleness and consideration which victory nor defeat ever changed. His noble wife and her daughters were ever uppermost in his mind and heart, and he prayed and hoped for the day when all of them could once more gather around the family hearthstone and share again the joys of domestic bliss. There are vivid glimpses here and there behind the sacred veil of family life and one sees pictures of a happiness sweet and unalloyed. We know of no book which can be read and studied by girls and young men just entering the impressionable period of young womanhood and manhood equipped in so happy a degree with all the elements for exalting, ennobling and refining character. Such a book by its gracious sentiments and elevating spirit fulfills a divine mission in diffusing cheer and sunshine and illuminating many a solemn evening hour around the library fire. There is an Attic grace and flower in the chaste, decorous wording of these epistolary effusions which shows that the Great Captain was not alone a master of strategy but could handle with masterly skill and exquisite discrimination the English language as well.

We referred in our last article to that immortal, world renowned expression of Light Horse Harry Lee, and said as we say now that that ringing, undying phrase which encircles the brow of Washington like a coronet of trophies might be diverted from Washington and with pre-eminent fitness be applied to the son of the man who is the author of the expression. If an honest expression could be had from the people of the old Mother Commonwealth, the son around whose name would gather and cling the halo of "First in war, First in peace and First in the hearts of his countrymen," would be, not George Washington, but Robert E. Lee. There are some who would assume to vindicate Washington's title to the reverence and homage of the people as the first and greatest of Americans, but the overwhelming voice of the great multitude of Southerners would proclaim Robert E. Lee as the son deserving the crown of almost universal love and devotion. Washington triumphed, as did the cause in which he fought. Herein was a passport to immortality. He was hailed and acclaimed hero and victor and the most illustrious of patriots. Lee, at the head of his invincible squadrons and leading a forlorn hope, was overwhelmed by numbers. His star, as did that of the cause for which he had fought, went down in disaster at Appomattox. But it rose again in fadeless lustre, and to-day throughout the wide world wherever the name and fame of his matchless infantry has penetrated and the history of their heroic deeds is known, his star shines in peerless splendor. If Washington had tendered his sword at Yorktown to Lord Cornwallis that would have been the last of Washington. Yorktown was the final act in the historic drama that had held the stage for seven years. It was the culmination of a struggle during the entire period of which the killed and wounded in all the battles barely exceeded the number killed and wounded in some of the skirmishes of the late civil war. If Washington had succeeded Joe Johnson as commander after the battle of Seven Pines, he might have managed to have stumbled through the first of the Seven Days battles, but he would never have been in the second. And it would be humiliating and mortifying to speculate on the outcome of the Chancellorsville campaign if George Washington had been in command of the army of Lee. What had been considered by military critics as the most brilliant victory of any war in any time would have been a second Waterloo or worse. It was not Washington's towering genius for war nor his skill as a great commander that gave him the standing as first in war, nor his commanding gift of statesmanship that made him first in peace, but a happy combination of great events under the supreme direction, as it were, of destiny that lifted him to the eminence he occupies in the eyes of mankind.

"The past is now like an Arctic sea
Where the living currents have ceased to run.

But out of that past the fame of Lee Shines out as the Midnight Sun."

In the capitol at Washington there is a hall designated by resolution of congress as the Hall of Fame. The same congress which set apart this hall also passed a resolution inviting the several states to place therein busts or statues in bronze or marble of two of its citizens distinguished for signal achievement in war, statesmanship or other fields of intellectual endeavor. Responding to such invitation the Virginia legislature caused life-sized bronze statues of her two great sons to be set up in this Hall of Fame—Robert E. Lee and George Washington. The instant it became generally known that Robert E. Lee's statue was there and in the uniform of a Confederate general "Rome set up a howl." The remnants of the old tattered, mutilated garment—"the bloody shirt"—were at once dragged from its dusty repose and such blood and thunder shriekers as Heyburn of Idaho howled and screamed until they frothed at the mouth. The Grand Army of the Republic, which had been living in luxurious idleness ever since the surrender at Appomattox at the expense of the country, also indulged in wild denunciation of the Virginia legislature and appealed to congress to eject the bronze replica of R. E. Lee from the building. Resolutions here and there through the North were adopted imploring congress to punish such treasonable conduct by having the statue of

Lee removed. Then the other side began to be heard and the language was strong, vigorous and to the point. Governor Mann of Virginia in a speech declared that if that state had to remove the statue of Lee it would also remove the one of that other rebel by his side, George Washington. Then the sober second thought of the more conservative element began to assert itself; some of the Confederate veterans in public life administered a little soothing oil to fellows like Heyburn and this tempest in a teapot subsided. The writer has visited this Hall of Fame often of late years and like many others from the South had to blush with mortification at the thought of some of the company among whom that of Lee had to stand. In this connection we wish to remark that if the people of Virginia could have had a voice on the question as to which of the state's sons should be represented in that Hall of Fame, the two chosen, as it were, by popular plebiscite, would never have been Lee and Washington, but Lee and his great Field Marshal, "his right arm," as he aptly called him, that meteoric phenomenon which flamed athwart the military skies—that thunderbolt of war, Stonewall Jackson. Limited to a choice of only two of her sons from that long and brilliant roll of great names in her history, these two would have been almost unanimously acclaimed as the two to stand in that hall as the supreme representatives, as the faithful exponents of a sentiment nearer and dearer to the people of the South than any great achievement in military or civil life for which the sage of Mount Vernon stood. We will be pardoned for pursuing this digression further along these lines and commenting on the criticism at the time—a criticism which seemed just and proper—of the action of the southern states and more especially of Virginia's, in accepting the invitation embodied in the resolution named. There were sons of the Old Commonwealth who were indignant at the action of the Virginia legislature in complying with the purpose of the congressional act. True it is that if any section of the country had a right to be represented in that so-called Hall of Fame, the right of the South and especially of Virginia was pre-eminent and sovereign, when measured and judged by the precious lives and priceless treasure which she had sacrificed on the field of battle from Bunker Hill to Yorktown. And this right is multiplied many times over when it is considered that it was the constructive statesmanship of Virginia, the creative genius, the masterly intellects of such men as James Madison, George Mason, John Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, George Washington and a host of others who had framed and laid in eternal bond as they thought the fundamentals of popular government and erected thereon the framework of a republic to stand as they again thought for all time. But the overthrow of Lee had also overthrown the verdict of history, and Virginia and the South had about as much influence then at Washington as a statesman from South Sea Islands. The indignant Virginians referred to above felt that their state should spurn with contempt the invitation for the images of her sons to sit among the representatives of such states as Kansas and Ohio, whose sons had scourged the South with torch and sword, had created in the language of Tacitus a solitude and called it peace. These indignant sons had demanded that the Old Commonwealth should make a heroic effort to erect in her state capital a Hall of Fame, a Pantheon of her own in which could be assembled statues and busts and paintings of her sons distinguished in every field of intellectual achievement for nearly two hundred years. There are scores and scores of them, standing out and shining forth in the history of that Old Commonwealth like great flaming beacon fires, pointing out to posterity the true path and bidding them to follow. Before the time even when that peerless pro-consul of the people, Patrick Henry, arose in the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1765 and in words electric-winged and magnet-touched stirred the slumbering patriots from Massachusetts Bay to Charleston Harbor, there were great names, the peers of those of any time. And from that very day when Henry, in matchless eloquence, was pouring forth a torrent of invective against George the Third and drawing down on himself the cry of "treason" from all parts, there begins a long array of great men, a general muster as it were of great names. The fearless defiance which this Roman Tribune hurled at the crown in his vehement denunciation of the Stamp Act, acted like the rattle of the long roll in calling forth those divinely endowed and equipped for the heroic drama. There is not only one or two or three men who tower above the common multitude, but scores and scores of them—men who achieved greatness because they could command it. A host of immortals they are and their immortality deserves public recognition, not in books so much as by the sculptor's chisel and the painter's brush in some great state Pantheon or Westminster Abbey. For 500 years after the battle of Marathon the descendants of those Greeks who followed Miltiades could read the names of their ancestors blazoned in immortal characters in the Portico at Athens.

When we think of this great galaxy of great names, men whose fame is as imperishable as anything mortal can be; when we think of the brilliant achievements of these men in statecraft; when we think of the framework of this republic which men like John Marshall, James Madison, Thos. Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, George Mason and a score of others who were collaborators with them in the great work of constructing a form of government to stand the strain of every storm, we blush to think that there are those in these days of wild-eyed heresy, conceited dogmatists, self-seeking demagogues, reckless dreamers who fancy they have received a divine commission to overthrow and overhaul the work which these Master Mechanics at constitution building in their collective wisdom accomplished at the Philadelphia Convention over a hundred years ago. We sometimes read of some clerical gentleman or other writers on ethics stating a moral issue thus: "What would Christ say or do if he were to appear in such a place or city?" Let us present the picture in another form, thus: There is a convention in session called to revise the constitution of the United States. Men of the caliber and persuasion politically of Bryan, Woodrow Wilson, Champ Clark and Bob LaFollette are in control. They are addressing the convention in advocacy of all the wild policies and theories of government such as these men just named are in favor of: "The Initiative, the Referendum, the Recall" and other revolutionary doctrines. All these gentlemen just named want to be President though the Constitution go to smash. They admit that all revolutions begin in reform and are warned they are loosing the forces of riot and disaster which their policies lead to. In their dreams of an Utopian Republic they feel that they are the anointed and ordained instruments to effect certain organic reforms. These speeches are greeted with applause from the proletariat—the mob. Just at this point in fancy there appears in the galleries overlooking these self-seeking statesmen the forms of those who were in the Philadelphia Convention, men who were intellectual giants in their day beside whom the tinkers like Bryan, Wilson, LaFollette and Clarke are dwarfs. There is old John Marshall, the first to declare and settle for all time, in the Dartmouth College case, the principle of vested rights. Geo. Mason, too, is in those galleries, the man who wrote the Virginia Bill of Rights; James Madison, the Father of the Constitution, also appears. Others of that Philadelphia Convention appear and finally the president of it, George Washington, stalks on the stage and gazes at this Convention, called to revise the work of these sages. While we are indulging our fancy we may go a step further and then study the air of supreme disgust and scorn portrayed in the faces of these old members who constructed the original constitution. Then we may go another step and draw a parallel between what takes place in the hall when these old spirits appear on the scene and what happened when Christ appeared over 1,800 years ago in a certain temple not far from the holy city. Prodigious never cease and the presumption on the part of Woodrow Wilson and others of his set that they can improve on the work of the creators of the present constitution is monumental in its depth and scope.

Gave Up Hope

"I suffered five years, with awful pains, due to womanly troubles," writes Mrs. M. D. McPherson, from Chadbourn, N. C. "They grew worse, till I would often faint. I could not walk at all, and I had an awful hurting in my side; also a headache and a backache.

I gave up and thought I would die, but my husband urged me to try Cardui, so, I began, and the first bottle helped me. By the time the third bottle was used, I could do all my work. All the people around here said I would die, but Cardui relieved me."

The Age of Electricity.

"Thirty years ago," said a member of Congress to a newspaper reporter, "I walked six miles over a hot and dusty road from my country home to the county-seat to see a circus that advertised to have on exhibition a light made by electricity. There were scores of others in our neighborhood who went, not to see the circus, but to get a sight of this new marvel, the electric light."

"That was thirty years ago. Last month, on advice of my physician, I went out to a suburban sanitarium for treatment for a rheumatic trouble. At the corner I took an electric car that carried me to the suburbs. There I entered an electric automobile that whisked me a mile farther, to the sanitarium. Having arrived there, I was taken by an electric elevator to my room, where the attendant turned on the electric light and switched on the electric fan. A moment later the house physician came in. On leaving me, he said that I would be notified when to come down to the treatment room. Soon after his call an electric sign on the walls flashed the words, 'Treatment Room.'

"On going down to that apartment, I had an electric-light bath, after which the physician applied electric sponges to my aching joints. When I returned to my room the electric telephone at the head of my bed rang, and lying there I talked to my secretary in the House office-building in Washington. He had called me up to ask after my health."

"Just before day the next morning I awakened, and desiring some hot milk, summoned the night attendant by pressing an electric button. When I made known my wants the attendant retired, returning in a few moments with a small electric stove, on which he soon heated a palatable drink. Before rising that morning I had an electric massage. The nurse told me that he had just been attending a patient with a chill, and had materially relieved him by packing electric bed-warmers about him."

"During the forenoon I had a slight attack of nervousness. I was placed in an electric chair—not the electric chair—and its gentle vibrations soon sent me off into a soothing sleep."

"During the afternoon I had occasion to communicate with a colleague on a matter that I did not care to trust to the telephone. Accordingly, I telephoned my secretary to have the member in question call me on the telautograph punctually at a certain minute. This he did, within a quarter-minute of the time I had set, for the clock at the sanitarium and the clocks in the House building are both connected by electric wire with the government official clock at the national observatory, and regulated to the second each day. Then I sat down and carried on a secret correspondence on the electric telautograph, by means of which the words were written by electricity at a distance of eight miles."

"When I recovered sufficiently to walk, I strolled one day up the valley to the source of all this power. It was a humble little stream that tumbled down through an iron pipe to a turbine wheel. I do not know which excited my admiration more, the numberless uses to which I had seen electricity put, or the simplicity of this falling stream that was the moving power of it; but I do know that my emotion did not compare in intensity with the amazement that I felt thirty years before, when I first beheld that glowing glass bulb—under the canvas of the old circus tent in Indiana."—Youth's Companion.

Raise Calves on the Farm.

One reason our supply of stock cattle is scarce is because of our barbarous habit of butchering calves as soon as they are old enough to take from their dams. Receipts of the packing houses show that there are thousands of calves slaughtered for beef every year. This is a great loss, since animals are of little value for beef at this age. The results are a great economic waste of our beef cattle.

Perhaps lack of pastures is largely responsible for butchering calves. The cattleman or the farmer with a few animals finds his facilities for keeping young animals limited, and to save time and trouble, sells his calves at low prices. Many dairy cows are kept where pasture is not available, and as it is not profitable to raise calves in a dry lot without grazing, the young animals are sacrificed.

We, as farmers, have not realized the value of pasture. We have too many acres in general crops and too few in pasture. More grazing and less expensive feed for our animals is needed. Why not provide plenty of pasture, build a silo and provide for young animals? By doing this, you will be in a position to buy your neighbor's calves and raise them for profit. With the above mentioned advantages the cost of raising calves, colts, lambs and pigs will be insignificant, and with ordinary business management, the profit should be commensurate with the effort.—Farm and Ranch.

James C. Dahlman, "Cow-boy" Mayor of Omaha, "Throws the Lariat."

Mayor Jas. C. Dahlman started his career as a cowboy, and is at present Mayor of Omaha, and has the following record. Sheriff of Dawes Co., Neb., three terms; Mayor of Chadron, two terms; Democratic National Committeeman, eight years; Mayor of Omaha, six years and in 1910 Candidate for Governor of Nebraska. Writing to Foley & Co., Chicago, he says: "I have taken Foley Kidney Pills and they have given me a great deal of relief so I cheerfully recommend them." Yours truly, (signed) James C. Dahlman. I. W. Sweet.

Cut Out the Whine.

Get the whine out of your voice or it will stop the development and growth of your body. It will narrow and shrink your mind. It will drive away your friends; it will make you unpopular. Quit your whining; brace up; go to work; be something; stand for something; fit your place in the world. Instead of whining around exciting only pity and contempt, face about and make something of yourself. Reach up to the stature of a strong, ennobling manhood, to the beauty and strength of a superb womanhood. There is nothing the matter with you. Just quit your whining and go to work.—Comanche Chief.

Lame back is one of the most common forms of muscular rheumatism. A few applications of Chamberlain's Liniment will give relief. For sale by all dealers.

Hard on Affinities.

Reno, Nev., October 15.—"When it comes to the knowledge of the court that the plaintiff in adverse action has an affinity, the court will refuse to act in the case," emphatically declared Judge John Orr in open session of the district court yesterday, and there upon he immediately ordered the case of Landers against Landers dismissed without prejudice. The fact that Mrs. Landers arrived in Reno from Canada with a man whom she intended to marry as soon as she was granted a divorce, came to the attention of the judge, and the above sensational declaration and order were the result. There is a great stir in the colony over this latest phase of local divorce situation as its scope is far-reaching. It is estimated upon good calculation that of the number of applicants for divorce coming from out of the state, conspicuously those from Atlantic and Middle States, fully 60 per cent are either accompanied by affinities, with whom they spend much or all of their time during the average of eight months here; in some instances notoriously intimate or have affinities waiting elsewhere, some of whom make occasional visits, or find affinities here after their arrival.

Poisoned Sardines Purchased.

Lawton, Okla., Oct. 16.—After having lost four members of his family who were poisoned by eating sardines, S. W. McAlexander will make an investigation and criminal prosecution will be made against those guilty of selling goods in violation of the pure food law. Mr. McAlexander started today for St. Joseph, Texas, where the sardines were purchased, and will make a vigorous investigation. He knows the store at which the spoiled sardines were purchased. If proper evidence can be secured either the grocer who sold the sardines or the company which prepared them will be prosecuted criminally for the deaths of McAlexander's four people.

Mrs. McAlexander was the first victim, then Yancey, Ethel and Kash, the three children, died within twenty-four hours of each other.

Foley's Kidney Remedy vs. a Hopeless Case.

Hon. Ark. J. E. Freeman says: "I had a severe case of kidney trouble and could not work and my case seemed hopeless. One large bottle of Foley's Kidney Remedy cured me and I have never been bothered since. I always recommend it." I. W. Sweet.

Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could; some blunders and absurdities crept in—forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day. You shall begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense.—Emerson.

Vine and Fig Tree.

A few days ago an uptown family moved a good deal further uptown. You would have thought it the wrong time of year to move, but they had a good reason for it. They were moving into a home of their own.

The father and mother of this family have been married so long that their children have all grown up, and some of them are married, and now the grandchildren are growing up. And all this time they have paid rent. They have lived in one house so many years that the trees they planted have had time to grow into fine young trees, giving abundant shade, and their huge oleanders were the pride of the neighborhood. Yet they had planted these things in a rented yard.

At last the spirit of longing for something of their own took possession of them, and they bought a lot in that mystical land known as "uptown," and had a house built on it. Never did a house take such a hold on a family. They have gone back and forth, watching it grow, until the street car company must have felt the increase in business. It was only a six-room house, with galleries—you would hardly notice it, perhaps, if you should be passing—but it was theirs! What a fine thing it will be to plant trees and flowers now!

Better a tent that you can call your own than all the dwellings of luxury in which you are but a shadow, passing and leaving no trace.—New Orleans Times Democrat.

I was obliged to void the kidney secretions four or five times during the night, and the passages were very painful. Another symptom of my trouble was a pain across the small of my back. Several months ago I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, procured from I. W. Sweet's Drug Store, and since that time have been in much better health. This remedy certainly lives up to the claims made for it."

TWO IDEAS OF EXTRAVAGANCE.

Why a Magazine Writer Couldn't Sell His Farm.

Frank Parker Stockbridge, the magazine writer, bought a farm not long ago. Somewhat later, after having made various improvements, he decided to sell it. As it is somewhat out of the line of summer travel he advertised it for sale in the country weeklies nearest. "I began to think I'd have no difficulty in disposing of it," he said. "Farmers would come in, all over smiles and exultation, and begin to talk farm values to me. Then I'd take 'em over the place, and the farther they went the better they liked it. Then I'd show them through the house—and their enthusiasm would drop to below zero. I couldn't figure it out for a long time. At last I penned one old chap.

"Isn't the farm all right?" I asked him.

"He allowed that the farm was excellent.

"Isn't the house all right?" "The house, he thought, was a right peart sort of a house.

"Then what's the matter?" "The old chap warmed up," said Mr. Stockbridge; "I handed him a hip full of hard cider and a Connecticut filler, and we sat down and talked it over.

"It's them dum extravagant ideas of your'n," he said, "that scares a feller off. That barn is fac—latest improved stanchions and automatic feeders and unloading devices and all them things. And the kitchen is good. No dum foolishness there. But when a feller gets up in the attic and you show him your bath-tab—well, when he looks up, he's bound to see right through the window that the creek ain't more'n half a mile away."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

It was the custom of the congregation to repeat the Twenty-Third Psalm in concert, and Mrs. Armstrong's notion of joining was to keep about a dozen words ahead all the way through.

A stranger was asking one day about Mrs. Armstrong.

"Who," he inquired, "was the lady who was already by the still waters while the rest of us were lying down in green pastures?"

A Medicine that Gives Confidence

Is Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. Mrs. T. J. Adams, 522 No. Kansas Ave., Columbus, Kas., writes: "For a number of years my children have been subject to coughs and colds. I used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and found that it cured their coughs and colds, so I keep it in the house all the time." Refuse substitutes. L. W. Sweet.

Three Times and Out.

He—Is Miss Smith in?

Maid—No, she's out.

He—Well, then, call Miss Smythe.

Maid—She's out, too.

He—I guess I'll sit by the fire and wait.

Maid—I'm sorry, but the fire is out.—Sphinx.

You are not experimenting on yourself when you take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a cold as that preparation has won its great reputation and extensive sale by its remarkable cures of colds, and can always be depended upon. It is equally valuable for adults and children and may be given to young children with implicit confidence as it contains no harmful drug. Sold by all dealers.

DANCE THERE FOR DIGESTION.

A New York Restaurant Has a Terpsichorean Annex.

Whether dancing aids digestion or digestion dancing is a question that never bothers the people who go to a restaurant not far from Wall street for luncheon.

If you don't know the place count yourself among the Philistines, for there you see dancing that is dancing. That is, you see it after the popular downtown hostelry have partaken of their "ham and—," their pickles and milk and butter cakes and other "dainties."

"Quick lunch" is followed by quicker dancing from desert until 2:05 o'clock every afternoon. The menu consists of dreamy waltzes, two-steps, Bostons and cotillions. Four young men assist in providing the music which, with the click of high heels, the laughter and slide, slide of shifting feet, floats down to the diners below.

Of course, if you can resist this enticing combination of sounds you can sit and eat to your heart's content and miss all the fun. If you are a stenographer or a clerk you will have the good sense to go up three flights and take a chance in the maddening whirl of dancers.

You don't need an introduction. That's the beauty of it. If you are a stranger you can always ask the girl next to you if she likes to dance, and if she says "Yes," you both scramble through your pie a la mode, pay your checks and take the elevator to the third floor.

You will be just a trifle embarrassed at the platform of spectators watching the turning couples, but in a few moments the music begins tickling your toes, the slippery tiled floor seems to glide out from under you—and there you are!

Perhaps you have only a half an hour lunch and can't stop to divest yourself of your jacket and hat (if you are a girl), but that doesn't spoil your pleasure one bit. Most of the other girls are dancing in their raincoats and sailors, you notice, and so you dance down your luncheon.

The majority of the dancers are from 16 to 21, judging from their graceful, girlish forms, flushed faces and hair tied with ribbons. The ages of the beaux match those of the girls.

"Will you dance with me?" The girl in the kimono shirtwaist and the porridge-pot hat smiles "All right," and glides into the young bank clerk's arms.

"Can you two-step?" A little, sad-faced stenographer who had been yearning to have one of these stalwart youths ask that very question, flushed. She was so afraid that she would be overlooked in the gay throng that she could have almost wept when her opportunity came.

"Say, you can dance some," he told her as they were wafted away on the strains of the latest popular air.—Viola Justin in the New York Mail.
