Island of Prinkipo and Taormina, while the Greeks have suggested Geneva for both conferences in view of its central situation and also because of the role the league of nations is to play in the second conference.

For the first conference the Turks have suggested some place in Asia Minor, but in view of the number of intrests involved and the need for communications by the plenipotentiaries with their home governments many objections to this are being presented.

The personnel of the plenipotentiaries has not yet been decided upon except in the case of Greece which has selected former Premier Venizelos to head its delegation. Neither prime minister Lloyd George nor Premier Poincare will attend, according to present expectations.

It is improbable also that Lord Curzon will represent Great Britain as his presence is necessary at home in connection with many others.

It is not believed the Allied high commanders in Constantinople will be asked to participate in view of their previous attendance at the Mudania conference and the need for their services, in connection with the carrying out of the arrangements reached there.

Among the matters expected to be brought up at the first conference, if been crowded with callers all this only as preliminaries, are the execu- week. tion of the promise given Bulgaria under the treaty of Neuilly of a commercial outlet to the Aegean and the ginning to make preparations for anprotest already announced by the Greeks against Italy's resumption of better times than for several years title to the Dodocanez Islands.

One of the questions on which it is expected there will be important differences between the Turks and British is the cost of the British occupation of Constantinople and other areas in Asia Minor since 1918. The British have kept careful accounts of the expenditures which are regarded as an ultimate charge against Turk-ey. It is believed the bill will run into a hundred million pounds sterling, without regard to what claims might be advanced by France, which maintained 20,000 troops in these regions for a year and a half.

The Kemalists long have contended that the charges are unjust, claiming it was possible to give them peace three years ago.

When the first conference assembles this financial question will be introduced in conection with the Ottoman public debt in which France is a large sharer. Thus far the arguments of the Kemalists have been that Turkey has paid her war debts by the loss of two-thirds of her territories and therefore should not be asked to pay more. Likewise the Kemalists have consistently refused to print their own money, in order to preserve the stability of the Turkish pound.

This, it is well to remember, was the year which was to tell the story. It has told it. For the tre-mendous enrollments of 1919, 1920 and 1921 there were reasons not en-tirely academic. The education of thousands of young men had been in-terrupted or delayed by the war, and it was only to be expected that an abterrupted or delayed by the war, and it was only to be expected that an ab-normal rush to the colleges would follow in the years immediately after the cessation of hostilities. But now the last of the war classes has gone and the institutions of higher learn-ing are once more standing on their own feet and facing conditions which may fairly be regarded of typical. With what result? Freshman classes generally are larger than ever be-fore, and the total registration like-wise is breaking all records. All the way from California, where the state way from California, where the state university has some 6,000 new stu-dents and an undergraduate school body of nearly 20,000, to the small en-dowed colleges of New England, there is a numerical prosperity wholly unprecedented.

In view of all the circumstances, it may well be asked if there does not exist a danger that the situation will eventually get out of hand. Mass education, such as now obtains and will probably obtain in still greater degree as time goes on, is something which not all educators will wish to tolerate. Instruction to-day is admitted inferior. The number of men prepared to dedicate their lives to the slow routine of teaching has not increased at a pace commensurate with the growth in enroll-ments. Moreover, there is the consideration that registration may soon reach the saturation point, the place where the assimiliation by the colleges of all students becomes a physical impossibility. Even now great groups are prevented, by one reason or another, from living in dormitories and so participating in campus life. To be sure, they have places in the classroom and sit at the profes-sors' feet. If they are so inclined they may attend the athletic contests. But as for making those social contacts which have come to be regarded as an important by-product of higher education, they might as well be going to an evening school some-where or attending a course of publie lectures.
