But Davis' teams are trying to compete with the Florida State's and Florida's of the college football world with fewer numbers.

The list of fallen giants is hard to ignore. Texas A&M won four consecutive Southwest Conference Championships in the 1990s but was slapped with a one-year bowl and television ban in 1994. The Aggies also were limited to fewer than 10 scholarships in 1994. Texas A&M has yet to win another conference title.

But if Tech wins its final three games of the season, the Red Raiders will still be crowned divisional champion.

University officials said the self-imposed postseason ban is the only action Tech officials currently plan to take regarding the NCAA allegations.

The self-imposed sanction is the second time in less than a year that a Tech athletic team has removed itself from postseason consideration.

The Tech men's basketball team removed itself from NCAA Tournament consideration last season after officials found two ineligible athletes on the squad.

Student reaction to the statement released by Montford and Haragan was mixed.

"I think it sucks because we weren't totally sure as to what the NCAA was going to do in terms of penalizing Tech," said Tech junior Matt Tucker.

"We really should have just ridden out the ride as long as we could."

Despite the sanctions, Tucker said he still was going to root for some of the Red Raiders.

Montford kicks off Tech rodeo with $10K donation

BY CAREN CARNEFIX

The University Daily

Texas Tech Chancellor John Montford kicked off the Texas Tech Intercollegiate Rodeo Thursday night by presenting the Tech Rodeo Association with a $10,000 check from the Old Timer's Rodeo Association.

The money will go toward the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources' goal of raising a $125,000 scholarship endowment for students involved in the rodeo association at Montford pledged to match the funds raised.

This will make the total endowment $250,000.

The money used to match the endowment fund will come from the Proctor Ranch endowment which is about $12 million designated to finance general scholarships for the university, Montford said.

"I'm excited about our rodeo association," Montford said. "There's no reason why our rodeo association can't be the best.'

Tech Rodeo Association alumni have secured about $70,000 worth of pledges to contribute to the rodeo endowment, said rodeo coach Chris Guay, an instructor of animal science and food technology.

"It's phenomenal how much (alumni) want to help," Guay said. "Without Montford and the alumni, the revitalization of the rodeo program and hiring me would've never happened.

Guay is the first person the university has hired to coach the rodeo

Members of the rodeo association experienced difficulty in recent years raising money to compete and cover expenses, Guay said.

Ranches in the area were reluctant to contribute to a cause that did not receive much university support, and until this year, students participating in the rodeo association were responsible for raising money, Guay

"We never had any university support before," he said.

"(The students) did everything on their own. We've got to have administrative support."

Having the chancellor's support has helped contributors recognize the rodeo association as a legitimate cause, Guay said.

Luskey's Western Wear and Boot City each pledged to contribute $5,000 to Tech's rodeo endowment as a result of Montford's involvement,

"We've got a ways to go, but Chancellor Montford is helping us," Guay

"It's great because we've really never had much support over the years," said Stewart, a sophomore communication studies major from San Angelo.

Graduate Council discusses admission policies, 99/130 hour rule

BY JASON BERNSTEIN

The University Daily

Changes to the admission policies currently in effect for Texas Tech's Graduate School was the main topic at Thursday's Tech Graduate Council meeting.

The discussion focused on the large emphasis placed on test scores when admitting students to the graduate school.

"The way in which students are evaluated is of paramount importance

"The key is to make sure we are looking at the full variety of factors in making admission decisions," said Troy Johnson, Tech's director of graduate admissions and enrollment management. "Such factors include faculty recommendations and motivational factors

The council also discussed the effects of the 99/130 hour rule that is set to take effect Jan. 1.

The rule will penalize graduate students who have accumulated more than the maximum 130 hours by charging them full tuition.

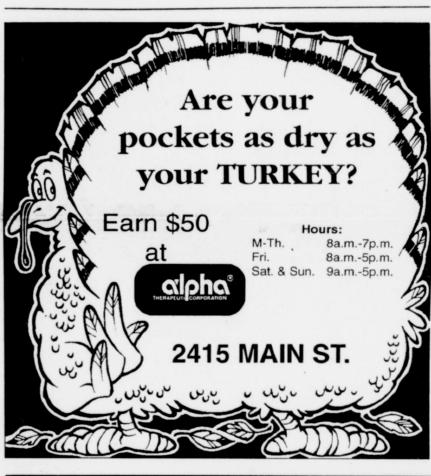

"Students will not be penalized the semester of the infraction," said Monty Strauss, senior associate dean of the graduate school. "The penalty will occur in the semester after the hours exceed the maximum."

Students that are in excess of 99 hours as of September 1998 will be charged the cost of full tuition as well.

"We have done a bad job in educating the Legislature on the true impor-'tance of graduate education," Schmidly said. "They don't understand the decisions they're making and how they are changing graduate education."

Tech lacking key element: accountability

CHARLES MELTON/ COLUMNIST

Texas Tech needs to return to one of the most fundamental attributes of a champion — accountability.

In light of the recent NCAA allegations and general state of affairs on this campus, the need for accountability shines like the sun on a hot tin roof in the middle of July.

Students need to be accountable to one another, the faculty and the administration. The faculty needs to be accountable to the students, themselves and the administration. Administrators need to be accountable to the students, faculty and themselves.

Accountability starts with one person making a solemn commitment to be held to a higher standard in every aspect of life and seeking someone to hold them to that standard in a one-on-one relationship.

Those two people then join with others who have made that same commitment until the whole entity, in this case Tech, is held to that higher standard.

Lies, deceit and oneupmanship are as much a part of accountability as a pleasant odor is to five-day-old roadkill. They just aren't part of the deal. Truth, honesty, integrity and sacrifice combine to form the backbone of accountability. They are the nails that hold the house of accountability together. Tech has made an attempt to establish an international image as the "Home of Champions" with a mixed bag of success. Things like the quality of faculty, proposed higher admissions standards and the amount of research done have been the Bit O' Honeys in the bag, but it only takes a few sour candies like the NCAA investigation to leave a bitter taste in people's mouths.

Accountability can be the wire that aligns all the posts together in a straight line for all the world to see.

A lack of accountability amounts to nothing more than a tangled mess of wire that leaves everything in disarray.

Being the "Home of Champions" requires accountability, and it only takes one individual to show the way. Maybe then Tech officials can call The Wall Street Journal and ask it to send one of its reporters back to Lubbock and give Tech the type of coverage administrators and alumni so greatly desire. Charles Melton is a senior journalism major from Salina, Kan.

much because this has occurred since the dawn of movie making. What bothers me is the deception and total lack of imagination put forth by the entertainment think-tank. The movie that particularly disturbs me is the upcoming "Starship Troopers." I think

I have no real problem with this original plot line though. It is the title that upsets me. The title of the movie is misleading. I suggest they change the name of the movie to "The Onslaught of the Ridiculously-Sized Praying Mantises." It would give the movie more legitimacy. It would allow the public to know what the movie is about. I doubt people will be walking into the theaters to see the fine acting abilities of the actors and actresses in this movie. They want to see, including me, the special effects - bugs being blown up, intergalactic battles, lasers and all. My proposed title name merely tells the public who the actual stars are - the praying

Call me old-fashioned, but I like to know what I'm watching. If names like Clooney, Segal and Van Damme appear in the credits, I immediately know what quality to expect from the movie. But there are no such indicators with a generic title like "Starship Troopers." I don't know who or what to expect. I'm just tired of being lied to, and I would appreciate some honesty from the moralistic people of Hollywood.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tech should look at all applicants

To the Editor: There is a place in the mountains of Colorado at an elevation of about two miles where gold was discovered and a mining town developed. Much excitement grew from the discovery, and people skilled in prospecting and mining the gold resource were employed. The focus was on gold — a rare and valuable resource. Considerable value was added to the local and state economies because of the gold mining operation.

A problem, however, soon developed. A nearby gray material found with the gold interfered with the separation process. Much of this heavy mass had to be moved to extract the small amounts of gold. People bragged about the gold and complained about the piles of gray mate-

One day a paradigm shift occurred. Someone discovered that the gray material was rich in lead and silver. New mining techniques were developed to extract lead, silver and gold as part of the mining process. The piles of mine tailings were reprocessed to extract the lead and silver. While the gold was a valuable product, much increase in value occurred from the additional products of silver and lead. The experts had been foolishly looking only for gold and had overlooked a diversity of valuable re-

With the new discovery, the town grew to the second largest city in Colorado at the time of peak mining operations. Denver was the only city with more people. To this day, the town is known not as Goldville but as Leadville. Much economic value resulted from the diversity included in the mining operation.

Are we foolishly looking only for gold in higher education? Have we overlooked the value of work ethic, citizenship and creativity? Have state legislatures focused only on the "gold" students in their wisdom to save money, "represent" the people and get reelected? The evidence is growing that we as a people are thinking short-term and have gold fever in terms of admissions to higher education institutions.

Consider a recent proposal to change admission standards to restrict enrollment to achieve 50 percent of incoming freshmen in the top 10 percent of their high school graduation class, 80 percent in the top 25 percent of their graduating class and 20 percent not identified. Presumably, the 20 percent would allow admissions for athletes, musicians and other people with special talents not necessarily associated with the academic mission of the university. This proposal discards 55 percent of the high school graduates from direct admission to this university. In a state like Texas, where the graduation rate from high school only is about 60 percent, the net result is 27 percent of the general population has direct admission to the university in question. Of course, the graduation percentage should increase for the few that attend college, and of course the cost for higher education should decrease since more than 70 percent of the population is denied direct access to the opportunities available at this university. There is a short-term value with this proposal, but the long-term consequence is a poorly trained workforce, a low tax-paying population and social unrest between those who do and do not have opportunity. In fairness to the proposal, nothing was said about limiting admission for transfer students. Therefore, indirectly, anyone has access to higher education. Of course a question of quality of education arises. Some would argue that the quality of education of average students is better at a junior college. This argument certainly implies poor quality teaching at the university in question. If the university offers a better quality of education than is available at a junior college, then we are back to the issue of fairness to the citizens of Texas and the admissions selection process contained in the proposal.

There also is the problem expressed by many companies that they need a diverse workforce. Many companies will not recruit from universities that do not promote diversity and provide a diversity of students in the graduating classes. Some companies even have associated pay for their managers and executive officers based on the attainment of diversity. They argue that there is strength in diversity, especially in global economy. Thus, any admission policy must be fair and practical to all. The proposal correctly assumes that financial support for higher education is very limited for the job that needs to be accomplished. It correctly assumes that many students graduating from high school have not been taught how to study efficiently. Therefore, a selection process is needed to control student numbers for the limited space and teachers available with the current resources. It correctly assumes that either a very selective process or a learning how to learn process must be used to improve student success in higher education. The proposal does not consider the student qualities needed after graduation. There is considerable evidence that success after graduation is not dependent on GPA in college except for the first job. Instead, success depends on many other factors - many of which tend to be discarded through the education process in grade school, high school and college. It appears from the evidence about learning and success on the job that much value could be added to society if the selection process included traits needed after graduation, and the education process included learning how to learn for these people.

People who are successful in tasks such as developing solutions to problems, management and upper management must have the following traits: creativity, confidence, commitment and citizenship.

High class rank or high SAT/ACT scores may provide some information about how clever a person is and should provide information about the self confidence of the individual. On the other hand, the person with strong leadership abilities who does not always accept the teacher's way of doing things may earn average or low grades and will often not be in the top 10 percent of his or her class.

The value of these traits can be illustrated with Intel. The company almost failed because the Japanese were able to duplicate early chips produced by Intel and manufacture the chips with a much higher success. As a company, Intel learned from the Japanese how to manufacture with high reliability and efficiency. Intel realized their competitive advantage was their ability to be creative and develop new more advance chips. Thus, they built their new company on traits of high self-confidence and creativity.

It seems logical, therefore, to look for these traits in people who apply for college. It may take more time to graduate students with these traits, especially if their high school experience has been marred. It certainly will be more work to properly asses these traits instead of using class rank or SAT scores. Although many professional and graduate schools have questions and assessment indicators that related to many of these traits.

It appears that admissions driven by class rank will cause difficulty in obtaining or maintaining diversity in higher education. It also appears that an admission policy based only on class rank does not consider many of the traits that will be important to the graduate when he or she begins to work in industry. W.E. Deming, who has been responsible for many of the principles in total quality management and the success of many Japanese and American companies has noted the following:

First job of a leader is to optimize the system. It is impossible to advance based on short-term thinking.

Should ask how do I help people. Ranking is wrong. It makes top people scarce.

The proposed new admission standard certainly is in conflict with the ideas of Deming on how to optimize higher education. The proposal is based on ranking, looks only for "gold," is similar to other university admission policies and is not based on proven quality management principles.

Pantera hits coliseum stage Sunday BY SEBASTIAN KITCHEN The University Daily

The cowboys from hell are com-

Texas' own Pantera, one of the world's most popular heavy metal bands, is beginning the second leg of its Official Live "101 Proof" Tour in Lubbock Sunday.

"It's a blast," said drummer Vinnie Paul from his home in Dallas. "Anywhere in Texas is like playing at home. We have made Lubbock a permanent market. It is quite a bit of fun for us."

The band took three weeks off after the first leg of its tour.

The tour is in support of the band's first live album, Official Live: 101 Proof, which was released July 29.

"The album is nearly gold," he said. "I think that is a hell of an accomplishment."

The album reached No. 15 on the Billboard Chart, an accomplishment rarely seen by metal bands or on live albums.

"You got to have expectations and dreams," Paul said. "If you don't think you will be successful, you won't be successful."

Pantera is one of the biggest sellers in Lubbock, said Gary Stone, an employee of Ralph's Records. "T-shirts, posters, CDs — we can't keep them in stock," he said.

Pantera will release its third home video later this month. The video contains scenes on-stage, backstage and on the road with the band.

"This is a continuation of our first two (videos)," Paul said. "It is a lot of fun. I know our fans are going to appreciate it."

With the band's five albums, Pantera has gradually gained in popularity around the world.

"Right now, they are the best and the coolest metal band in the world." said John Bush, lead singer for Anthrax, a band touring with Pantera.

The name Pantera is Spanish for "panther," but it means something the past few years.

different to the band. "To us, it means four guys who play hard, heavy, aggressive music," Paul said.

Pantera played at a free concert in the Soviet Union in September 1992. The concert was the Soviet Union's first concert with western bands and was government spon-Pantera will perform about 200 dates this year, but its three-week break at home allowed band members some time to themselves. Paul said he likes to relax and even went to see some other bands perform.

"I go to bars, golf, go fishing, try to keep from getting in trouble and have a good time," he said.

He enjoys being at home, but he is ready to go on the road and do what Pantera does best.

Despite names, running backs very different

BY KRISTIE RIEKEN

The University Daily

Texas Tech's Ricky Williams and Texas' Ricky Williams share a name and are both starting running backs at Big 12 schools, but that is where the similarities end.

Tech's Williams, a Duncanville native, sports a short shaven hair cut while Texas' Williams, a San Diego native, has dreadlocks he has been growing for more than four years.

"He looks kind of weird with the dreadlocks and all," the Tech back said of the other Williams. "But I don't know, they may have crazy nia, but we don't have too many people with dreadlocks in Dallas."

When the Texas back found out Tech also had a Ricky Williams, he was quick to comment that it was his

"I can't believe it - he stole my name," the Longhorn back said jokingly. "I want to be the only Ricky Williams."

When told Texas' Williams said Tech's Williams took his name, the Red Raider did not hesitate to point out that Ricky is in fact his given

"He might think I stole it because things like that going on in Califor- he is older," said the Red Raider starting I-back. "But it was the name given to me, and I feel it is my name."

> The name on Lubbock's Williams' birth certificate is Ricky Antwon, while Austin's Williams' real name is Errick Lynne, but Ricky is a name he has used since childhood.

> One other noticeable difference between the two backs is their very different sizes.

Tech's Williams, a true freshman, stands 5 feet 9 inches and weighs 175 pounds, while Texas' Williams, a junior, is 6 feet tall and weighs 215 pounds.

The Red Raider back said the like to start out slower and accelerate pair's difference in size leads to distinct variations in the two backs' running styles.

"I like the way he runs, but he has a very different style than I do," the Tech back said. "He is a more powerful runner, and I am more of a quick, cut-to-the-outside runner.'

The Longhorn back, who saw Tech's Williams in action against North Texas, was complementary of his running and said he enjoys watching the young back play.

"He's is small and good but is very different from me," Texas' Williams said. "He takes off full speed, but I when I see a hole. I like his style."

Texas' Williams leads the nation in rushing entering the game against Tech with 1,419 yards this season.

Tech's Williams has incentive to do well in the Texas game also, but for him it is more for the good of his team than for individual accolades.

"I hope he does well, but I really hope I do well," the Red Raider said. "I know they will hype up the Ricky Williams-Ricky Williams thing, but I just want to have a good game and help my team win."

The two players have never met one another, but both Rickys said they would like a chance to meet.

"I would like to meet him," the Red Raider back said of Texas' Williams. "Maybe we can talk for a minute after the game or something."

Texas' Williams said it would be fun to meet the Red Raider back.

"I want to talk to him," Texas' Williams said of Tech's Williams. "Just to say 'hi' and see what he is

The Longhorn back has said Tech's Jones Stadium is one of his favorite stadiums to play in, and if all goes well for Tech's Williams Saturday, then he just might be saying the same thing about Darrell K. Royal-Texas Memorial Stadium.

Volleyball takes on Big 12's top teams

BY CHARLIE RAPIER

The University Daily

The Texas Tech volleyball team will return to the road this weekend as the Red Raiders face the Big 12's two top teams.

The Red Raiders will face No. 14 Texas A&M at 7 p.m. today at A&M's G. Rollie White Coliseum in College Station.

Tech will then face No. 8 Texas at 3 p.m. Saturday at the Recreational Sports Center in Austin.

The Texas match will be broadcast by Fox Sports Southwest, and it will be aired at noon Sunday and again at 1 p.m. Wednesday.

The Red Raiders (19-6 overall, 6-5 Big 12) enter this weekend's competition in need of victories to help stunt a berth for NCAA postseason competition.

Tech currently ranks seventh in the Big 12 with a 6-5 record. Earlier this season, the Red Raiders matched up against the Longhorns and Aggies in Lubbock and were defeated in both matches 3-1.

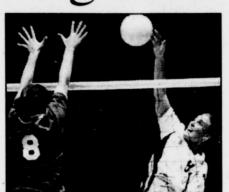

Tech coach Jeff Nelson said Tech really needs a win this weekend.

"We are going to have to play our best volleyball of the year to win this weekend," Nelson said.

"Texas has surprised me in their performance this year by leading the conference undefeated and will be very tough to play against. Texas A&M is dominated by a very athletic senior squad and will prove to be a very physical match."

Texas A&M (17-5 overall 9-3 Big 12) enters this weekend's competition having won its last three matches.

The Aggies are led by Kristie Smedsrud (3.63 kills per game) and Wes Underwood/The University Daily Take That: Red Raider outside hitter Cristine Martin looks for a kill against Kansas.

Stacy Sykora (3.85 kill per game). Nelson said he is expecting a strong outside attack from the Aggies in the form of Sykora.

Texas enters this weekend's match against Tech at 18-3 overall and 12-0 in Big 12 competition.

The Longhorns lead the conference by three matches and have only lost five games in Big 12 play.

The Longhorns are led by All-American Candidate Demetria Sance with 3.99 kills per game and Katie Austin with 3.06 kills per game. Texas is currently cruising on a 13-match winning streak.

Tech junior setter Lisa Hilgers said in both matches the Red Raiders must improve their defensive output.

"We've played these guys before and lost 3-1, but I think we know what needs to be done because we blew a lot of leads in our last meeting here in Lubbock," Hilgers said of the Aggies and Longhorns.

The Red Raiders will return Sunday to prepare for a rescheduled match against No. 13 Nebraska Tuesday in Lincoln, Neb.

Spurs coach Popovich not worried about critics

SAN ANTONIO (AP) - Gregg Popovich says he isn't out to win popularity contests in his first full season as coach of the San Antonio Spurs — just basketball games.

Popovich, the Spurs' general manager since 1994, surprised players and fans last year by firing coach Bob Hill and putting himself on the sidelines after the Spurs opened the season 3-

Hill had become the winningest coach in franchise history after taking the Spurs to consecutive Midwest Division titles with regular-season records of 59-23 in 1995-96 and 62-20 in 1994-95.

Many fans felt the only reason Hill got off to such a lousy start was because David Robinson missed the first 18 games with back trouble.

Reports said Popovich didn't think the team was playing hard enough, even without Robinson in the lineup. But Popovich won't say why he fired Hill.

"It's a totally irrelevant situation at this point," Popovich said.

"Unfortunately, I'm never going to be able to give all the details of the situation because I don't think it would be fair, so I'm just going to have to let people say what they will or think what they will."

Tech hopes to brand Longhorns in Big 12 battle

BY HEATH ROBINSON

The University Daily

The Texas Tech Red Raiders begin a win-or-bust stretch of their season at 6 p.m Saturday in Austin against an old and hated rival, the Texas Longhorns.

Tech (4-4, 3-2 Big 12) must win its final three games to possibly win the Big 12 South title.

The Red Raiders have lost two in a row to the defending conference champion Longhorns, but Texas is playing well below its prior standards. The Longhorns (3-5 overall, 1-4 Big 12) are coming off a stinging 23-21 loss to Baylor and must win their final three games to make a bowl.

"It's a must-win for both teams," Texas coach John Mackovic said of the games.

"Our players know that all they can play for is a trip to a bowl. So I think they'll be playing with a lot of emotion, as will Tech."

For the 'Horns, the game plan is simple on offense: establish enough of a passing game to open up space for all-everything junior running back Ricky Williams.

Williams is attempting to tie an NCAA record with his fifth consecutive 200-yard plus rushing game.

The San Diego native is leading the nation in rushing yards (177.35 a game) and scoring (14.5 points a game), and he is third in all-purpose yardage (191.5 yards per game).

Tech coach Spike Dykes said Williams is a very tough running back to corral.

"Everyone compares him to Earl Campbell," Dykes said. "He's a bruiser. He'll run over you, and then when he gets past you, you can't catch him."

Williams has led the Longhorns to 48-7 and 38-32 wins over Tech the last two seasons.

Red Raider defensive end Montae Reagor

He rushed for 113 yards in 1995 against Tech and 143 last season in Lubbock.

Tech defensive end Montae Reagor, who leads Tech in quarterback sacks and pressures, said containing Williams is the key to the game.

"They're not having their usual success throwing the ball, so if you can contain Williams, you have a chance to win," Reagor said. "They're still a dangerous team. If you let your guard down, they'll score a lot of points on you."

The Longhorns' high-powered running game will face its stiffest test so far.

The Red Raiders have held their last two opponents, Kansas State and Texas A&M, to under 300 yards of total offense.

Mackovic said his offensive line will need to play its best in order for Williams to run the ball.

"They attack the line really well," Mackovic said of Tech. "They put more bodies up there than you can block. I think for Ricky (Williams), he might have to grind out yards in this one."

Under Mackovic, the Longhorns built a balanced offense in the past and got a lot of big plays from quarterback James Brown and his receiving corps.

But Texas ranks just 79th this year in passing offense, and the focus seems to be slipping more and more to Williams.

"James is trying to do too much out there," Mackovic said. "He's frustrated because we've never struggled like this when he's been here. It's been awful tough."

For the first time in the last four games, Tech's offense will not be going against a nationally ranked defense.

Against Nebraska, Texas A&M and Kansas State, ranked third, 17th and fifth in defense, respectively, the Red Raiders have struggled, averaging only 153 yards per contest in the last three games.

The Longhorns rank 94th in the nation in total defense under first-year defensive coordinator Bobby Jack Wright.

The Red Raiders again likely will be without the services of leading receiver Donnie Hart.

Hart reaggravated his strained hamstring in the Nov. 1 13-2 loss to Kansas State.

"I don't think he'll be out there," Dykes said of Hart.

"He's been a little frustrated by it, and we've had some problems without him in there."

Despite recent struggles, Tech senior quarterback Zebbie Lethridge said Tech needs to keep its head up.

"We just need to keep working," Lethridge said.

"We've been really close to mak-
