A 64th Supply Squadron airman finds an item in the warehouse. The squadron is one of three finalists in the Air Force Daedalian competition. The Air Force Supply Effectiveness Daedalian Award inspection team, headed by Brig. Gen. Richard L. Stoner, director of maintenance and supply, headquarters USAF, is touring the squadron today. The team is talking with the squadron members and reviewing all supply facilities. Pope AFB, N.C. and Luke AFB, Ariz., are also in competition for the award.

McGuire crew aids famine victims

McGUIRE AFB, N.F. (AFNS)—A C-141 and crew from the 436th Military Airlift Wing here has logged the first U.S. military aircraft mission supporting Ethiopian famine relief efforts.

The crew, from McGuire's 6th Military Airlift Squadron, flew two C-141B Starlifter missions to Kassala, Sudan, where more than 122,000 refugees have crossed the Ethiopian border.

The "European Floater" crew left McGuire Dec. 20 on a routine flight to Ramstein AB, West Germany. Heavy fog at Ramstein, however, forced the crewmembers to divert to Sigonella, Sicily.

Shortly after arrival, they were told to prepare their C-141 for a high-priority humanitarian mission.

The state department and the Agency for International Development requested the mission following a plea from a United Nations team working at Dassala. The cargo was tents, water tanks, and blankets.

Loaded, serviced and refueled, "Relief One" departed from Sigonella for Sudan, landing at Dassala on the morning of Dec. 22.

Representatives from the U.N. high commissioner for refugees and the International Red Cross met the crewmembers and informed them that an additional 26,000 refugees had arrived at the camps in the past 24 hours and more were coming.

"It was amazing to think people would go there as a refugee from anywhere else," said Maj. John F. Bauer, aircraft commander. "It was a desert; it seemed like the kind of place you'd want to go from, not to."

Finding flour mills to grind grain posed a major difficulty for relief efforts, Red Cross representatives informed the crew. Another problem was transporting water from the city to the refugee camp, Major Bauer said.

The second mission was flown the following Saturday evening from Rhein-Mein AB, West Germany, with a C-141 carrying dried milk and vegetable oil. To make space available to carry food, the crew decided to leave the forklift behind and use people power to unload the aircraft.

"They had about a dozen and a half people working with the United Nations down there to help us, and about seven trucks," Major Bauer said. "We hand-offloaded 64,000 pounds of cargo in two and one-half hours."

This is not the first humanitarian relief mission for Major Bauer. Since he joined the Air Force in 1967, he has helped airlift relief supplies to tidal wave victims in Pakistan in 1971 and to a hospital in Managua, Nicaragua in 1974.

Get your career in high gear

By CMSgt. Max E. Lantz
64th FTW Senior Enlisted Advisor

Some months ago, I wrote a few words concerning promotions. Since then, I have been asked "how can I be more competitive—how can I increase my chances for promotion?" The answer is not a short one and the method is not easy. Probably the bottom line is self-improvement—doing everything you can to be more valuable to our Air Force.

Air Training Command's goal is to promote only quality people. This means monitoring Airman Performance Report ratings and overweight status; requiring promotion recommendation for all grades; insuring only deserving airmen are recommended; checking duty performance, training progress, and UIF; and soliciting unit supervisor comments.

Well, what can I do, you say? First and foremost, you can continue to perform your duty to the absolute best of your abilities, then you can concentrate on your Specialty Knowledge Test and Promotion Fitness Examinations and study! The most recent statistics from ATC reveal the following average test scores: staff sergeant: SKT—62.3, PFE—61.36; technical sergeant: SKT—63.75, PFE—59.51; and master sergeant: SKT—67.92, PFE—60.75. These are scores of selections! Are you close or should you start your study program now? Start anyway.

For senior master sergeants and master sergeants, the average supervisory exam scores are 60.6 and 56.65, respectively.

What other areas can I concentrate on, you say? Professional Military Education! Here is what our PME commandant, MSgt. Loyd Sheppard, has to offer: "PME has been referred to as a 'square filler' by many enlisted personnel over the years. An NCO who has completed all available PME courses normally scores 10 to 15 points higher on his Promotion Fitness Examination, enhancing promotion opportunities considerably. The PME curriculum itself—leadership, management, military studies, communicative skills and world affairs—broadens an NCO's outlook and helps him see more of the 'big picture.'

"PME also helps the Air Force by helping develop quality personnel who know what's required of them, and know how to accomplish the mission. Subordinates gain because their supervisors are better prepared, more capable, and more knowledgeable about the Air Force and their responsibilities. Professional Military Education benefits everyone—the individual, their subordinates, and the Air Force. Yes, it's a square to fill, but possible the most important square in the NCO's career."

To support Sergeant Sheppard's comments let's look at some more statistics: Senior master sergeant selections need 33 out of the 35 available points for PME, and the chief selectees need all 35! For those unfamiliar with the point system, the NCO Academy is worth 15 points, and the Senior NCO Academy is worth 20 points, whether taken in-residence or by correspondence. Of the 1195 chief selectees, 1192 had the SNCOA. Get the picture? What else can help me get promote, you ask? Education!

The whole person concept includes education—the level and utilization. Community College of the Air Force is a program for our benefit. A tremendous advantage is that you can continue wherever you are stationed and you do not lose any credit. You can get an associates degree in your career field area and increase your promotion potential in one program. The Air Force selected 22.6 percent of eligible senior master sergeants for chief and 72 percent of them had two years of college or more.

Let's look at the whole person concept and how the senior master sergeant and chiefs promotion boards evaluate each:

FACTOR	BOARD EVALUATES
Performance	APRs
Leadership/supervision	Command/staff
Breadth of experience	Where/what/when
Job Responsibility	Scope/exposure
Professional competence	Expertise of specialist
Specific achievements	Award decorations
Education	Level/Utilization

You may not be concerned about promotions to senior and chief now, but you will be later. So, if you're sitting back waiting on promotion based on only your duty performance, your peers are passing you by.

Get your career in high gear and keep it there!

Followership as important as leadership

EDITOR'S NOTE: Brig. Gen. Robert P. McCoy, Air Force Logistics Command's deputy chief of staff for maintenance, recently spoke to the graduating class of AFLC's Noncommissioned Officers' Academy at Robins AFB, Ga. Following is a condensed text of his speech.

If I gave each of you a few minutes to think about the one thing you believe the Air Force expects from you—I believe I'd have a list of answers that would be liberally sprinkled with "leadership" and "management" with perhaps an "integrity" or two thrown in.

Let me tell you what the Air Force has expected of me for more than 25 years. "Followership" is the hands down answer! That's right—the ability to follow. I am not unique. Whether you're a flight chief, loadmaster or supply specialist—whether you're in accounting and finance, personnel, avionics or recruiting—whether you're a tech sergeant, chief or general, we all follow orders.

Followership is not second nature to us. As we are thrust into roles of leadership and management, we find ourselves torn and begin to rationalize away the guidance, the regulation, or the order—"My unit is special" or "This regulation doesn't apply to us" or even "Those guys who wrote this policy are typical headquarters people; they don't know what it's like in the real world out here." We selectively follow our leaders or—even worse—believe that we are above the law because we know more than those misguided souls at the top.

Is that a harsh assessment? Perhaps so, but let me tell you what comes across my desk: IG reports, aircraft accident investigations, safety incidents. One can do sophisticated analysis and tabulate reasons and causes, but I submit to you that the underlying fault in nearly every case is not so much a fault of leadership but the "failure to follow."

Units are rated marginal or unsatisfactory by our command IG team because the people in that unit failed to follow prescribed policy and guidance. An aircraft crashes on a training mission on the bombing range at Nellis—one fatality and a $21 million aircraft destroyed. Cause: The pilot failed to follow the ordnance launch parameters and flew the aircraft beyond safe recovery conditions. We lost an F-4G due to a mechanic's error. He failed to follow the tech order. Result: A national treasure lost—fortunately the aircrew escaped. Last year a civilian employee was fatally injured at one of our air logistics centers. He was using a forklift as a work platform and fell nearly 15 feet. What caused the accident? Failure to follow basic safety precautions.

That's day to day followership at your level and my level. It's not romantic. It's not exotic. And it calls for us to put others above ourselves. But it is precisely that last role of followership that sets us—military men and women—apart from other professions.

We have dedicated ourselves to a life of followership. The oath of enlistment sets us apart—"To support and defend the Constitution of the United States." There are no qualifications to that oath. It doesn't say "support and defend the Air Force or the Department of Defense or just part of the Constitution. We have sworn to support and defend every ideal embodied in that document.

Be sure to think of your followership responsibilities as you move through your careers, as you continue to advance in rank and responsibility. You'll be challenged more and more with leadership roles. But remember how much of your day's activities end up in the followership category.

We expect and demand leadership from our officers and NCOs—but we also pay them for their followership. (Courtesy of LOGNEWS)

Selective re-enlistment bonuses up

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AFNS)—The maximum selective re-enlistment bonus has been increased from $16,000 to $20,000. The change, with an effective date of Nov. 20, was announced by personnel officials in Washington Jan. 25.

The bonus is paid to enlisted members serving in certain critical military specialties who re-enlist for additional obligated service.

Manpower and Personnel

Center officials said the bonus helps improve or maintain manning in key military skills.

The fiscal 1985 Department of Defense authorization bill contained provisions for the higher bonus ceiling. Officials said a Nov. 20 memorandum from the Deputy Secretary of Defense allowed the services to raise the bonus ceiling pending revision of DOD regulations governing the bonus program.

Anyone who re-enlisted in a bonus skill on or after Nov. 20 whose SRB was capped at $16,000 will be identified by the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center, officials said. The total bonus amount is to be recalculated and the difference paid within 60 days, they added. Further annual installments will include the increased amount.

Earns suggestion award

A simple suggestion earned 1st Lt. Kelly Eytcheson $792 through the suggestion program.

Lieutenant Eytcheson, USAF Hospital Reese, proposed leasing an echocardiogram machine, instead of sending patients downtown for the service. The cost of each echocardiogram downtown was $536.

After paying the lease fees, the base will realize a savings of approximately $7,920.

Lieutenant Eytcheson first submitted the idea through Model Installation program channels. After it was approved there, he was advised to file the suggestion with the Suggestion Office for consideration.

While the MIP proposal will result in savings over many years, the suggestion program awards are based on the savings realized during the first three years may be averaged and the cash award computed on the average savings.

All MIP proposals may be submitted for consideration under the suggestion program. The suggestion program is the only program authorized to pay cash awards for approved ideas submitted under various programs, including the office supports, Zero Overpricing, Project Rightwrench, PRAM, FASCAP, and several others.

Family Services needs cooperation

The Family Services office is experiencing problems in getting loan-out items returned on time and in good condition.

When an item is not returned on time, another person is denied the opportunity to use it. This can be an especially bad situation if the article needed is for a child, such as a porta-crib or car seat, according to Family Services officials.

The same holds true if something is returned in poor condition, they say. Borrowers are financially liable for all damage to an item while it is in their possession.

The Family Services loan locker offers a variety of kitchen and household items for loan-out to any military member on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The goods are available to PCS and TDY personnel for one month with a copy of orders. Permanent party personnel may borrow items for two weeks. Infant and toddler car seats may be borrowed for one month. Extensions may be given on a case-by-case basis.

When an item is overdue, the military member is called by the Family Services staff. If that call produces no response, the borrower's first sergeant or squadron commander is called. Family Services officials say they will pursue the matter until the item is returned.

For more information about the loan locker program, visit the Family Services Office, northeast of the main gate, between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Friday or call 885-3305.

Dealing with child abuse

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

It is an unfortunate fact of life that there are people out there who abduct and molest children. Tragically, 50,000 children were affected last year. Although it is difficult for many parents, talking to their kids about the problem is one of the best ways to reduce the chance of their becoming victims.

Here are some guidelines that have been recommended by many authorities to help protect children from abduction and molestation.

- First of all, don't scare your children. Let them know that most friendly adults really do like them. However, just because most houses don't burn down doesn't mean you don't need a smoke alarm and regular fire drills.

- Tell your children to avoid going alone to isolated places—short-cuts through the woods, down the alley, etc...

- Teach your children that no one should touch their bathing suit parts: except for legitimate hygiene purposes.

You might want to talk about "good touch" and "bad touch." Even very young children can sense "bad touch"—it makes them feel uncomfortable. Encourage them to tell you about any "bad touch" experiences.

- Don't dress your children in clothing with their names on it. Young children can be taken in by a stranger who calls them by their first name.

- Some potential abductors will tell the child, "Your mother is in the hospital—she asked me to get you." Have a special code word that only you and the child know, and tell the child not to go with anyone unless they use the code. In fact, it is a good idea to have an emergency plan of action and "drill" your child so he or she will know what to do.

- Some molesters will ask for some kind of assistance, something as seemingly innocent as asking for directions. Tell your child to tell them to ask an adult for help.

- Most molesters are relatives or are known to the child. Be suspicious of adults who seem unduly interested in your child and who want to spend a lot of time with him or her. If a young child wants to avoid a particular relative or babysitter, try to find out why.

- Children who look unkempt and uncared for, and young children who smoke or hang out in video arcades are particularly vulnerable.

- Adolescents can be lured by the promise of a high-paying job, with interviews often held in a secluded place. Tell your teen-agers you want to know who is interviewing them and where.

- Perhaps the most tricky ploy for luring children is the individual dressed as a policeman or other authority figure. Some even have false badges and identification papers.

- Teach your children to run or scream "No!" or even "Fire!" if they are approached or touched by a molester. Most say they will flee if the intended victim runs or screams.

- Finally, assure your child that if "something does happen—a bad touch or a strange remark by an adult—the child should tell you or, in your absence, another trusted adult about it and not keep it to himself or herself.

News Briefs

Security Police recover lost property

The Security Police Investigations Section has several items of abandoned or lost property, including a watch and masonry tools. Persons who believe they can identify the items should contact the Security Police Investigations Section at Ext. 3999.

To extend hours

The Consolidated Base Personnel Office Customer Service Center, and Pass and ID will extend hours of operation from 7 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays beginning Feb. 13. During the two extra 30-minute periods, persons may be issued ID cards, and register a vehicle.

The rest of CBPO will continue operating at regular duty hours.

The extended hours will be conducted on a trial basis for one month.

W-2 problems?

Anyone who has not received their W-2 must inquire at the Military Pay Section, Building 800, for reissuance.

Persons not agreeing with the figures on their present W-2 should contact the pay section to see about getting a corrected copy.

Education Office has information

What do 2,000 colleges and universities have in common? Their current catalogs are now available for review at the Education Center.

The microfiche collection contains all information on virtually all schools located in the United States.

Stop by the Education Center, Building 920, to view the collection.

Cub committee to meet

There will be a meeting of the committee members of Cub Scout Pack 548, at 7:30 p.m. in building 32 today. Committee members are encouraged to attend.

Anyone wanting more information on scouting, should contact Rick Burgard at 885-2410.

AFSA to install officers

The Air Force Sergeants Association, Chapter 1068 Counsel, will install officers at a luncheon Feb. 12, at the enlisted club at 11 a.m. Members are encouraged to attend and anyone is welcome.

Hospital appointments can be cancelled

The Hospital's appointment desk has a telephone recording device, which, after duty hours, can be used to cancel hospital appointments.

Ext. 3245 can be used to make or cancel appointments during duty hours.

Hospital officials say that when people make an appointment and don't show up, that appointment time is wasted. Cancelling the appointment allows the possibility of re-filling the time.

Red Cross to hold advance first aid course

As part of its on-going effort to improve the quality of emergency care in the region, the South Plains Red Cross has scheduled an advanced first aid course for Lubbock, March 6-21. The course is oriented toward those who are not health care professionals who may be called upon to provide emergency first aid.

Although the course provides the essential first aid information required of policemen, firemen and industrial supervisors, it is open to anyone wishing to improve their emergency readiness. Requirements include current CPR and First Aid certification and a minimum age of 15.

The course will be taught in five evening and two Saturday sessions. The class fee is $15.

Those wishing to register to receive further information should contact Kayla Roberts, director of CPR and First Aid Training, at 765-8534.

Advance pay not so good

By MSgt. John Broussard
CBPO Chief of Customer Service

Advance pay is designed to be taken in conjunction with a PCS assignment to help defray the additional costs incurred as a result of a change of station.

Advance pay is exactly that—an advance payment of your salary. And it normally will be paid back in six months.

Before you go to the Accounting and Finance office to request advance pay, you should ask yourself three important questions: Do you really need the money at this time? Will it actually be used to defray PCS costs? And will you be able to repay it and have enough money left to defray costs at your new duty station?

Advance pay should never be used to purchase nice-to-have items that normally can't be fit into the budget.

When you arrive at your new duty station you will have several expenses not normally incurred. Each one must be considered and budgeted for carefully.

You'll need a temporary place to stay, as well as advance rent and security deposits, phone installation and deposit, deposits for home utilities, and many other miscellaneous costs including your first trip to the commissary there.

You arrive at your new assignment and receive your check with the advance pay taken out and it looks small compared to previous checks, doesn't it?

You have rented a place to live and obligated your money based on what you received previously and now you don't have enough money to go around.

Money can be very limited or non-existent if not budgeted carefully.

As the Air Force Aid Officer, I see many cases where advance pay was taken, used unwisely, and now set-up costs at the new assignment can't be met. In many of these cases, individuals requested advance pay just because it was available and not because they really needed it.

If you're thinking of taking advance pay, think about it real hard, take a close look, and make sure a real need exists. Be aware that you'll have a reduced income at your next duty station.

These problems know no age or grade restriction. It can happen to anyone.

Advance pay is a loan; it must be repaid. Plan and budget for the unexpected, and if you don't need advance pay don't take it.

If you do, spend it wisely.

OER changes take effect

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AFNS)—Some comments are no longer required on officer effectiveness reports, according to manpower and personnel center officials here.

Officials said comments regarding an officer's unsatisfactory progress in weight management or fitness improvement training programs may be deleted from OERs closing on or after Jan. 1.

Comments about confirmed allegations or charges of discrimination or mistreatment may also be deleted, although such incidents should be considered when preparing reports and included when appropriate, officials added.

The changes, outlined in Air Force regulation 36-10, will allow commanders to have more discretion and flexibility when evaluating performance, officials said.

Teeth don't heal, need help

Dr. (Capt.) Lisa D. Jones
Preventive Dentistry Officer
Reese Dental Clinic

Tooth enamel is the strongest material in the human body, but it can't repair itself once it has been visibly damaged.

Because of this, one of the primary responsibilities of a dentist is to restore teeth injured by accidents or decay. Without the dentist's help, damaged teeth would keep getting worse.

To restore teeth, dentists must first prepare the cavity; removing not only the decayed area, but the area immediately around it. This area may have been affected by the decay. The cavity is then shaped to hold the filling material.

Depending on where the filling will be in the mouth, they can be made of tooth colored porcelain and plastic materials, or metal such as gold and silver amalgam.

Toward the front of the mouth, amalgam or composite resin, in a soft mass, is tamped into the prepared cavity. In the back of the mouth, where looks aren't so important, an inlay or onlay is cast to fit the prepared cavity. These are usually made of gold or silver amalgam.

When a tooth is badly decayed and little of the structure remains, or is weakened by a large filling, the dentist may opt to use a crown, which covers the exposed surfaces of the tooth. Crowns strengthen and improve the color and shape of badly damaged teeth. Porcelain, metals, and even porcelain fused to metal can be used to make a crown.

In some cases, if a tooth is badly fractured or has a deep cavity, the pulp within it dies. Nerves, arteries, veins and other vessels make up the pulp in a tooth. When it dies, an infection called abscess can spread to the tissues that surround and support the tooth in the jaw.

Root canal therapy, or endodontics, is used to treat teeth with dead pulp. This is done by first making an opening in the crown of the tooth, then carefully removing the dead pulp.

The root canals are cleaned, enlarged, and shaped to be easily filled. After the infection is eliminated, the canals are filled, and sealed with a material that will keep bacteria out. The crown of the tooth is then restored usually by using either gold or porcelain crowns.

General dentists may perform the root canal therapy, or may refer the patient to a specialist in the area.

Damaged teeth don't get better by themselves. In fact they usually get worse. If you suspect that your teeth need professional treatment, don't delay. By calling your dentist immediately, you can save yourself time, money, and discomfort.

(Note—This is the second of a four-part series in observance of February's National Children's Dental Health Month.)
