wed a letter last week from ding, a friend of our British friends. She was interested in the newspapers when we were visiting, and we sent her, per her request, a copy of each one.

The letter was so humorous, yet it opened my eyes to look at our routine world through a different view. Things we take for granted can be pretty mysterious to those not accustomed to our ways!

Here it is: "Thank you so much for the papers. I found them fascinating, worrying and puzzling. All will be revealed.

Your editorial is in the first category. You write beautifully. Although I have never seen a crepe myrtle, I think I would recognize one te a book, I'd buy it! (of his made me feel very good.)

The adverts (advertisements) were very interesting. Doesn't Thomas do well. Day to day necessities seem to be a bit cheaper with you, but what a tractor and truck pull is, I have no idea. Does one pull the other? Oh, I give up...it sounds impossible.

Worrying? Have you found homes for the two kittens? I guessed it was vour own advert.

Keeping me awake at night, has anyone found the Beefmaster bull? How on earth did he come up missing. Would he have food and water wherever he went? Oh dear, do they still have cattle rustlers?

He sounds like such a nice bull. I would have joined in the search for him, as I do here for cats. Since cats come up missing in Fincheley, I suppose a bull could get lost in a place as big as Texas!

Puzzling: Why on earth do you take covered dishes to church functions? Does the church collect them? Or does it have something to do with food. But why covered? Couldn't I take a pizza?

The expression covered dish is unknown here.

a nice day. The letter made my day completely, I'll say that for sure. It provided a rare opportunity to look at our daily lives, habits and speech, as it must appear to strangers!

Trip Wound Up With Super Surprises!

travel series. To all who have taken the time to call and tell me you have enjoyed it...thanks, I've enjoyed sharing it with you:

On Thursday we all set out for downtown London once again. We were told to put on dresses and ties, as we had a surprise waiting. We took the underground in. More on that Westminster Abbey was quite an imagination. experience. Seeing the burial spots of Edward the Confessor, Mary Queen of Scots, all the other famous people, was sobering. It made us aware of the multitude of generations that have gone ahead of us.

My favorite part was the poet's corner. There T.S. Eliot, Alfred Lord Tennyson, W.H. Auden, Milton and so many more of the authors that helped to shape literature, lay at rest.

We walked through Whitehall, an area people with private (very private) residences of royalty. We were clowning with a pair of bobbies when Thomas stepped into the road to take a picture. One of the bobbies said "Move over a bit, chap, you're blocking Princess Margaret" Thomas thought he was joking. He went ahead, snapped the picture, then turned around to see that he actually HAD been blocking the Princess Margaret! Embarrassing!

We strolled on toward Buckingham Palace. Noticing some policeman setting up to block traffic, Mic politely inquired "Who is coming out?"

"The Queen Mum" he replied...."in about five minutes.

So we stood as a stately, chauffeured driven black Rolls Royce limo pulled out, with a spry, smiling 85-year old Queen Mother (Queen Elizabeth's mother) swept past!

The changing of the guard was yet another example of the pomp and pageantry the British are proud of. Bright reds, flashing brass, shiny horses completed the morning. We were then told why we had to dress up...what our surprise was. Lee had written to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher about a private tour of the Houses of Parliament. Mrs. Thatcher, understandably, was too busy. But Sir Fergus Montgomery, a member of Parliament and aide to the Prime Minister, was to give us a tour!

We sauntered by about 150 people standing in line at the gates for the

Editor's Note: This is the last in my public tour. My scalp crawled just a One had it's mouth shut, the other's little at the angry glares we got! We seated ourselves for a short wait, then Sir Fergus appeared.

A white haired, pleasant man, we felt very comfortable with him. We went to St. Stephen's crypt, the chapel which members of Parliament can be married in, and their children christened in. A magnificent marble baptismal font staggered the mouth was open with the tongue out.

This, he explained, was done in early times when people could not read. The lion with his mouth closed meant in....the one with his tongue out exit!

We chatted with him amiably, overcoming a slight tremor of awe at our special treatment, and were treated to a tour most people could only dream about!

After that, I'm forced to admit that the quick lunch and cruise down the Thames seemed a little tame! The cruise, however, was nice, since it offered the opportunity to see London as it should be seen, for the river that has been her lifeblood.

Then it was home on the underground...a situation I never hope to encounter again. For two people used to open spaces, the hundreds of people pressing on was a bit disconcerting! Every time those doors opened, I swore there wasn't room for another body...and ten more squeezed in.

Steak and Yorkshire pudding at Mic's house made up for it, though, and on Friday our friends had yet another treat in store. Pam took us that morning to the British Museum. It is counted as one of the world's finest...and ha been a goal on my list for many years. I strolled happily through gallery after gallery filled with Greek marbles, Egyptian artifacts, oriental treasures, etc.

Then we went to the Royal Tournament. It was something, indeed. Each year the branches of the military compete, and the winner sets the theme of the show. The Navy had the honors this year. The whole afternoon was non-stop pageants, military bands, tests of strength and skill, and special effects to take the breath

There were horse drill teams of amazing precision. There were bands from Australia, bands from the Army, Navy and Marines.

In one race, which was serious competition, a group of young men pitted themselves against another group in dismanteling a gun carriage, transporting it across obstacles piece by piece, reassembling it, and then firing it three times. They could do this in under three minutes. The whole thing was strenuous, and precise to the point where if any one person had failed to execute their part, someone would have been crushed, killed or hurt.

The finale by the Navy was awesome as hoardes of seamen ascended 90 feet up the rigging of a ship's mast in time to drum beats.

The whole afternoon was a look at the traditions, pride and love the British have for their country. It was a fitting close to our stay

Sadly, all that was left to us was a dinner (our treat) at the Manor Cotage and an early to bed before flying home on Saturday.

Saturday was a long, dull day in the air, and the heat at home slammed into us with the force of a hammer.

Even now it's hard to realize that for 11 days we were cool and damp in the middle of a hot, dry summer.

We can never begin to explain how wonderful our friends were to us. We can never explain what a beautiful trip we had. We can hope they will return to us so that we can try and give them a wonderful time, too....but that is all.

For some education isn't that special...it is something to be gotten through.

Others will make up the bulk of the educational system...those students with fairly good grades and the ability to learn and develop into the adults they must become.

Some will be brilliant, making top grades, entering in all kinds of competition.

For all of them, now, it is back to school time. Time for one mor eyear,

DIABETES: A THREAT TO YOU?

Are you at risk for diabetes? About 12 million Americans have the disease and each year it strikes 600,000 more. Here's important information from the Diabetes Research & Education Foundation on the warning signs of diabetes. See your doctor if you experience any of these symptoms

• Frequent need to urinate. • Blurred vision.

· Recurring skin infec-• Tingling or numbness in legs, feet or fingers. Diabetes occurs when the body can't make normal use of sugar. It causes more deaths than any other disease, except for cancer and heart disease. With proper care, most diabetics can enjoy essentially the same lifestyle as non-diabetics. According to Donnell Etzwiler, M.D., boardmember of the Diabetes Research & Education Foundation, "Early detection is crucial. Undiagnosed diabetics may feel fine until they develop a specific complaint such as kidney or vision prob-

Excessive thirst or hunger is one of the signs of diabetes.

There are two types of diabetes. Type I usually strikes youngsters and requires daily insulin injections. Type II is the milder form of the disease. About 80 percent of all diabetics have Type II. The initial therapy is often a proper diet and regular moderate exercise with many patients later

The good news? Researchers are seeking a cure. One drug company, Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceuticals, Inc., donates a percentage of sales from its diabetes products to the Diabetes Research & Education Foundation. This donation allows the Foundation to grant nearly a million dollars each year to researchers looking to prevent, treat and eventually cure diabetes.
