The experts tell us that fantasies are normal and natural...and that just about everyone has them.

Some people apparently live almost in a fantasy world, but most of us ly have professions, scenarios or about what we wish we were or what we wish we did instead of what we really do!

One friend of mine wishes she lived back in the old days...when desperadoes rode the range. Of course, she knows it wouldn't really be likeable, with no antibiotics or medical care and the limited freedom women had back then...but none the less, the idea persists.

My own fantasy is that someday friendly aliens will take me on a tour of the galaxy ... or that I could travel forward into the future several hundred years. Of course, I know that the aliens would probably have me for lunch...with me as the main course! Or that thrust into the future I would hopelessly inadequate for the nology available. But still, it's an interesting idea to ponder. Others dream of a life with all the components of a soap opera...beautiful clothes, gorgeous figure, breathtaking house, no money

Fantasies or wishes are as varied and different as the individuals that create them. Some people can put these ideas into words...we call them

Others have more down-to-earth ideas...my husband for instance.

The other evening we were discussing the whole idea of what kind of life we would live if we could have it exactly the way we wanted it ... and I discovered that what Thomas has always wanted is for someone to play the piano while he sits in a comfortable chair and does nothing but

He swears that's his "fantasy". Okayyy...so it's not dramatic...it might be achievable, which is more than can be said for most people's Apparently, he's a whole lot better adjusted and satisfied with life than most of us! Still, I think I'll stick to my own dreams and ideas!

It's Time For A True Thanksgiving

Day. Almost every civilized nation amiss. has it's equivalent of Thanksgiving ... a holiday set aside for the citizens of that nation to take a little time to appreciate their blessings.

Sometimes it is easy to lose sight of the real reason behind the celebration.

With the nation's economy looking rather frightening, with the health problems and job problems and everyday worries that beset usu all, it's easy to feel cynical and unthankful.

For many, the day has deteriorated into a chance to watch football all day

The original pilgrims gave thanks quite literally for their survival...they had very little food, very little shelter. We've all heard the story from childhood.

It's easy in today's world to lose sight of what we do have.

Commercials scream at us to buy, buy, buy. Sales campaigns present the American family as having new cars, new furniture, new VCR's, new TV's, new clothes and lifestyles that few can really live.

But what do have to be thankful on an elemental basis? An uncounted number of things, obviously. Hunger does not stalk our children by the millions. Suffering and disease do not

> On a more personal level, most of us will gather with family and friends in a warm, dry room this Thanksgiving to partake of more food than is truly good for us.

Oh, yes, we have many, many things to be thankful for.

For there will never be a time when problems do not abound in our ives...but we have so much more than just problems ... and that is indeed a blessing to count.

Selecting Superior Herd Bulls

Many of the area beef producers are attending bull sales, visiting registered breeders and making a telephone call in search of the next herd bull for their cattle operation. The selection of the herd bull is one of the most important decisions made on the farm as the bulls influence, either good or bd, will be apparent for 20 to 25 years

The All Breed Bull Sale has become the place to purchase herd bulls for many over the last 10 years. The date is Tuesday, December 1 at 12 noon at the Paris Livestock Commission Company. Approximately 80 bulls are consigned to the sale.

Dr. Randall Grooms, Extension Livestock Specialist, Overton, has the following thoughts on the subject of selecting the superior herd bull. When selecting a herd bull, the first decision that should be made is whether the bull is to be used as a terminal sire or whether you want to save daughters from that bull. If you are saving replacement heifers, certainly you need to select a bull that is more moderate in size, rich in maternal traits and will provide a heifer calf that maximizes heterosis through crossbreeding

On the other hand, if you are selecselect growthier bulls that provide extra frame size and growth ability. Select bulls with smalelr birth weights to avoid ealving difficulty. To select for maximum advantage in the weaning weights of calves produced in a terminal sire program, selection criteria should center in the yearlinng. date; that is yearling weight, yearling weight ratios, weight per day of age, expected progeny difference etc., in addition to calving ease criteria.

Much of the guesswork has been removed in many breeds because many of the breeds are now printing sire summaries. When performance data is included with the pedigree information on a bull and expected progeny differences can be calculated and accurate selection pressures can be exerted. If this information is not available, then you should require basic performance data, such as birth weights, weaning weights, weaning weight ratio, yearling weights and yearling weight ratio, for the bulls you might select.

Regardless of the amount a quality of performance data on a he sire, major emphasis should also be placed on the balance, conformation and especially the structural soundness of the bull. Bulls must be smooth and fluid in their movement.

Another equally important trait to select for in the young bull is scrotal circumference. Scrotal circumference in yearling bulls should be taken at approximately 12 months of age. The larger the scrotal circumference, the earlier the bulls reach puberty, the greater their sperm production, their fertilization capacity and the less the abnormal sperm count. An additional benefit in selecting bulls with a larger scrotal measurement at a year of age is the fact that their daughters reach puberty earlier. The minimum acceptable scrotal measurement at 12 months of age is 111/2 inches. Many breeders and cattlemen who have tried this selection technique, have raised their ting a terminal sire breed, you can selection criteria to a minimum of 131/2 inches at 12 months of age. The benefits and reproduction efficiency built into the daughters will yield benefits for years in the future.

Selecting the right herd bull is not an easy job. It takes time, study and an understanding of the economically important traits. Progressive cattlemen take advantage of heritability, heterosis and superior young sires. It's a hard job. Start early.

DON'T Let An Electrical Accident RUIN Your HOLIDAY SEASON!

An electrical accident can ruin the joy of the holiday season. Here is a handy checklist to follow when decorating your home so that you can avoid such accidents.

- Never place electrical lights on a dry, brittle natural Christ-
- Do not use 120 voltage lighting on a metal or aluminum L. tree. Off-the-tree spotlighting is preferred for this type of decoration.
- Use only holiday lights that have the Underwriters' Laboratories (UL) listing mark for safety standards.
- Before plugging in holiday lights, check for broken or cracked sockets, frayed or bare wires and loose connections.
- Don't overload circuits. If your lights dim when turned on, you have too many lights on that circuit.

When hanging outside lights, use only those approved for

O. outside use. Do not install near overhead power lines. Don't leave your holiday lights on when you're away or > Never assume that your holiday lighting is safe. Make it a standard practice to inspect all lighting each year. When it comes to holiday lighting, if in doubt - throw it out. It is much better to replace holiday lighting than to risk spoiling the season with an accident.
