WASHINGTON AND SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

that in these cities which receive Federal funds to carry on what is termed an economic opportunity program, the poor must have representation.

This has resulted in hassles to secure for representatives of the poor majority control of the funds to be spent. * * * C. W. Harder This is a very strange line of reasoning. While undoubtedly poverty is not entirely confined to lack of an individuals ability, a life long history of failure is not the best recommendation for direction of programs costing billions of dollars.

If this line of reasoning were to be carried through to its logical conclusion, all sorts of new developments could occur. Thus, instead of selecting a chief of staff for the armed forces that has shown merit ever since his youth, it would perhaps be best to search through the ranks for men of 20 years service who have never won a rank higher than private. As anybody with any military service at all knows, there are privates who claim to know more about how to run an army than the generals.

The same example could be given in regards to the insur-ance companies, but on the other hand, the biggest socalled insurance system, Social Security, is operated somewhat on this basis.

Billions of dollars are to be spent on this so-called war on poverty in this manner. Presumably the money is to develop new job opportunities, increase the standard of living.

Yet a big say-so in the direction of these programs is to be turned over to those who have never developed anything in their lives.

As brave and daring as the American astronauts have proved themselves to be, it is doubtful that any of them would be willing to try a ride into space in a device designed by a poet laureate . . . or a committee of representatives of the nation's poor.

These are strange times. Success has now become a vice, and failure a virtue.

It would all be quite funny except for one sad aspect.
