

Colonel Sams to join Air Staff; Colonel Henny to head wing

The 64th Flying Training Wing will get a new commander when Col. William C. Henny takes over for Col. Monroe S. Sams Jr. during a June 25 ceremony.

Colonel Henny is currently commander of the 64th Air Base Group. Colonel Sams has received orders to The Pentagon, where he will be deputy director of personnel programs on the Air Staff.

Colonel Henny's replacement as base commander will be Col. William R. Bean Jr., currently the deputy commander for Operations in the 71st FTW, Vance AFB, Okla.

"Although my new assignment will carry broad responsibilities, nothing can compare to the privilege of commanding a wing as fine as the 64th FTW," Colonel Sams said.

Colonel Henny said he is looking forward to the challenges of his new command.

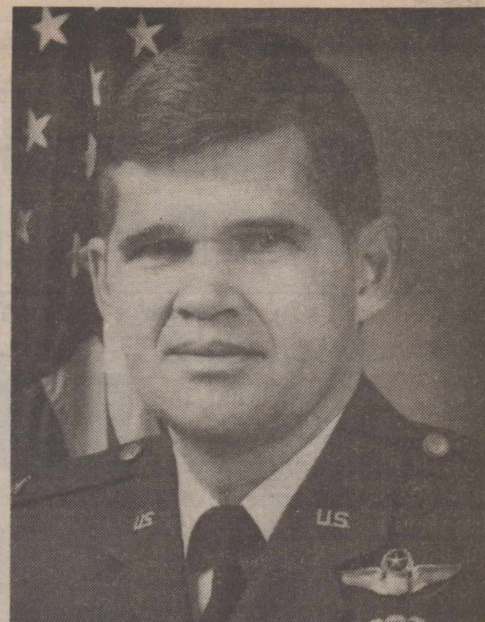

"I am grateful for having had the opportunity to serve as base commander. We have tried to continue my predecessors' efforts to improve the quality of life here; and, in many areas, I think we have been successful," said Colonel Henny. "I have had the benefit of strong support from Colonel Sams and the people of Reese."

A command pilot with 3,000 flying hours, Colonel Henny came to Reese in January 1989. Prior to Reese, he was assigned to Pacific Air Forces Headquarters, Hickam AFB, Hawaii, where he was the command's director of assignments.

Colonel Henny entered the Air Force in 1967 through the Reserve Officer Training Corps at Arizona State University. He earned his wings through undergraduate pilot training at Williams AFB, Ariz. Some of his

Spouse day observed Monday

They may not be on the government payroll or wear a uniform, but they're still one of the most important parts of the military community.

Spouses.

Monday has been designated Armed Forces Military Spouse Day, and several events are scheduled on Reese:

□ A tour of base facilities will run from 9:30 a.m. to noon. People interested should meet at the Mathis Recreation Center.

□ The Enlisted Open Mess will offer a reduced lunch special ($3) from noon to 1 p.m.

□ A program entitled "How to Make Your own Wardrobe" will be held from 1-3 p.m. in the EOM.

□ A second program, "Benefits for Air Force Spouses," will take place from 3-4 p.m. in the EOM.

These activities are open to all base spouses, according to the Reese Family Support Center. In addition, the Commissary and Main Exchange will be running specials in honor of military spouses.

"Spouses play a vital role in mission accomplishment, and Military Spouse Day is designed to acknowledge that," said Phil Thierry, Reese Family Support Center director. "In addition to the support they give to the active-duty member, they also play many important roles in the base community."

For more information on the day, call Margaret Ramey, FSC, at 3305.

Aircraft program cuts will save $16.8 billion

Four Air Force aircraft programs have either been reduced or delayed following the results of a four-month review on major aircraft-buying programs.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney told Congress April 26 that the Pentagon plans on cutting back a total of six major aircraft for a savings of $16.8 billion in the Department of Defense's five-year budget ending in fiscal 1994. In the fiscal 1991 budget before Congress, the cuts mean a reduction of $2.41 billion.

Secretary Cheney has proposed buying fewer B-2 bombers and C-17 transports, and delaying buys on the advanced tactical fighter and advanced tactical aircraft.

"Throughout the review, our goal was to ensure that we have the flexibility and the capability to protect vital U.S. interests," Secretary Cheney said.

In reaching his decisions, Secretary Cheney said he also took into consideration defense needs, available technology, acquisition efficiency and tight budgets.

Secretary Cheney proposes buying 75 B-2 stealth bombers instead of the 132 originally programmed. Reducing the number of bombers saves $14.4 billion over the life of the program, he said. Only two bombers will be bought in fiscal 1991, rather than the five currently proposed.

The C-17 transport program will be reduced from 210 aircraft to 120, saving $12.6 billion over the life of the program. Instead of the six aircraft planned for production in fiscal 1991, only two will be built.

The transport has twice the capacity of the C-141 Starlifter it is intended to replace, can use shorter runways and can carry any large equipment that can fit into the C-5 Galaxy — the military's largest transport.

The advanced tactical fighter is the Air Force's next air superiority fighter, replacing the F-15 Eagle. It is designed to counter improvements in Soviet aircraft and surface-to-air threats.

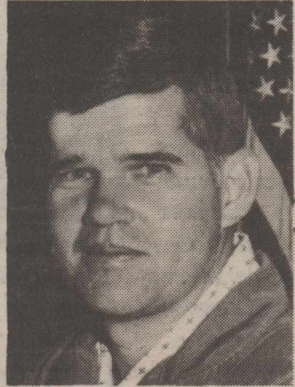

The advanced tactical aircraft is the Air Force's version of the Navy's A-12 all-weather, medium attack aircraft. The ATA would be used for the deep attack mission now handled by the F-111 and F-15E. (Air Force News Service)

Commander's perspective

By Col. Monroe S. Sams Jr.
64th FTW commander

Well, now that the smoke has cleared and the announcements have been made, it's time to say "congratulations" to Col. Bill Henny and his wife, Susan. Colonel Henny will assume the position of wing commander when I leave for the Pentagon June 25. He'll be replaced as 64th Air Base Group commander by Col. Ray Bean, currently the deputy commander for Operations at Vance AFB, Okla.

Obviously, I'm pleased with Air Training Command's selection of Colonel Henny to head the 64th FTW. We have worked closely together the past year and a half to continue the tradition of excellence that Reese is famous for. Many of the improvements you see throughout the base can be traced to his leadership.

I'm equally pleased with the selection of Colonel Bean as base commander. He's no stranger to the command, having served at Sheppard AFB as a Euro-NATO instructor pilot, operations officer and squadron commander in addition to his stint as deputy commander for Operations at Vance, AFB, Oklahoma. He'll be a welcome addition to the leadership team at Reese.

While Lisa and I are excited about our upcoming assignment, we are also sad to leave the people at Reese we have grown to know as a family. I've never seen a wing pull together harder to make good things happen. Reese will always be a special place in our hearts.

The Reese Honor Guard

Continuing with my effort to identify Reese "centers of excellence", let me brag this week about some ambassadors of Reese, all volunteers, who supported more than 400 events over the last year.

They are, of course, the Reese Honor Guard, and anyone who has attended an official ceremony here has seen them in action. They are the very image of military professionalism and precision as they support graduations, retreats, promotion and retirement ceremonies and a hundred other events here at Reese.

The daily business (and there's a lot of it) of this elite corps is handled by Sgt. Coylen Brinkerhoff, the unit's noncommissioned officer in charge. Providing strong leadership for the Honor Guard are Officers-In-Charge 1st Lt. Dwayne Whilwhite and 2nd Lt. Patrick Perkins. Capt. Stephen Governale, 64th Services Squadron commander, doubles as Honor Guard commander.

Maintenance conversion has hit the Honor Guard hard. There are currently 26 members — normally the unit carries 35. Only Sergeant Brinkerhoff and former NCOIC SSgt. Douglas Thomas, have more than one year's experience. Nevertheless, they have not reduced their commitment one iota. They are still this wing's most visible example of esprit de corps. In addition to their duties on base, they are also color guards for a variety of off-base functions as well. The Honor Guard also has an elite rifle drill team, which is considered to be the best in the command.

This is not a recruiting pitch, but if you're interested in joining the Honor Guard, go to Bldg. 16 and get an application from Sergeant Brinkerhoff. Applicants must have a five-level in their respective specialty and have at least one year's retainability at Reese.

To all of you serving or having served on the Honor Guard, my hat's off to you for representing the wing so well. You're truly another Reese "Center of Excellence". Thanks.

Public service recognized

by Sgt. Mike Breslin
editor

They're everywhere. They live in our neighborhoods. They sit next to us in church. They're behind us on the grocery check-out line. Their children attend school with ours. They're some of the hardest-working people in the country, so it's no coincidence who they work for. They're government employees, and Monday through May 13 belongs to them — it's Public Service Recognition Week.

According to Romeo Garcia, chief of the Reese Civilian Personnel Office, one of the main purposes of the week is to give people outside the government a better understanding of how public employees serve them.

"Public servants are industrious people who work for the betterment of society," Mr. Garcia said. "Unfortunately, some taxpayers don't realize the extent of their efforts.

"One common misconception is that public servants make 'the big bucks,'" he said. "That may have been true several decades ago, but no longer." For example, Mr. Garcia pointed out that federal salaries lag an average of 20-plus percent behind the non-government work force.

Mr. Garcia also pointed to the selflessness shown by many federal employees.

"Some estimates show that government workers lose one million days of leave annually," he said, citing how some employees stay on the job despite the fact that they have "use-it-or-lose-it" leave.

"Federal employees are here to serve the American people — each (federal employee) believes public service is a high and noble calling," said President George Bush. "They work hard, they sacrifice and they deserve to be recognized and appreciated."

This year's recognition, which is sponsored by the Public Employees Roundtable, marks the first time a concerted nationwide effort has been put together for the observance. The roundtable is a politically neutral, non-profit group of organizations, representing more than 950,000 public employees and retirees.

Public celebrations are scheduled in all 50 states and hundreds of cities, with Washington, D.C., serving as the focal point.

For the past three months, people using the Reese Pharmacy have had their visits made easier. A prescription board allows people to leave the pharmacy area without worrying about when their names are called, and it also provides an estimated waiting time for prescriptions. Also, since names no longer have to be called out, the board provides a quieter atmosphere in the adjacent hospital lobby.

Hospital committed to excellence in care

by Col. Edward McGovern
USAF Hospital Reese commander

USAF Hospital Reese is committed to providing the best medical care in the Air Force. We have several programs to help us achieve this goal. Following are summaries of some of these programs:

Mammography

The hospital acquired a mammography unit last summer, which has allowed us to expand this important service to many more women.

Who should have a mammogram? Any eligible beneficiary with a provider's recommendation. Mammography is an important way to help protect against breast cancer. It is a safe, fast, low-dose x-ray that can find breast cancers too small to be identified by physical examination.

The American Cancer Society has published some guidelines regarding mammographies. If you are female and:  35-40 years of age — the American Cancer Society recommends that you have a baseline or initial mammogram to serve as a basis for future comparisons.  40-50 years — have a mammogram every one to two years, depending on findings, risk factors, and what your physician recommends.  Over 50 years — have a mammogram every year.

If you have a personal or family history of breast cancer, you may need more frequent examinations. Call the Obstetrics-Gynecology clinic at 3593 for more details.

Your medical record

All patients treated at the hospital have a medical record. This record is a comprehensive summary of health care provided at government facilities or at government expense.

It is used by the providers as a reference and record of past treatment. Therefore, it is very valuable. It is important that all information regarding your care be annotated and included within.

If you have your medical records with you, please return them to the Outpatient Records Section, and we will be happy to make copies for you.

Health Care Finder Program

The hospital has set agreements with numerous physicians downtown to accept assignment from CHAMPUS, the Civilian Health and Medical Plan of the Uniformed Services, for services they provide. These providers agree to accept the CHAMPUS allowable charge (along with your cost share and deductible, if any) as the full fee for your care. Individual providers participate on a case-by-case basis. Check with Carolyn Johnson at 3581 for more details regarding providers who accept CHAMPUS assignment. Of course, you can save the cost of your CHAMPUS deductible by receiving your health care at the hospital here.

Dependent Dental Insurance Program

The Reese Dental Clinic wants to help as many patients receive dental care as possible. Abiding by the AF Regulation that requires dependents who are enrolled in the Dependent Dental Insurance Program to have a civilian dentist provide the treatment that is covered by DDIP helps accomplish this objective. Treatment that the dental clinic is currently able to provide that is not covered by the DDIP includes extractions, denture relines and immediate dentures (a waiting list is used).

If you are enrolled in DDIP, you may disenroll if you have been enrolled at least two years; or if you have arrived at Reese within the last 60 days; or no longer have any eligible dependents (for example, recently divorced) by going to customer service at Consolidated Base Personnel Office. If you have any questions, please call the dental clinic at 3321 or the CBPO at 3276.

FIRE and WATER

Wing family learns importance of fire prevention

by MSgt. Roy D. Napper
Reese Fire Department

On March 8, the Reese Fire Department received an emergency call of a kitchen fire in the Reese Village.

The fire department responded as did the USAF Hospital Reese and the 64th Security Police Squadron. Upon the arrival of the fire department, smoke was showing.

Assistant Fire Chief Lawrence Million immediately directed firefighting and rescue operations. Fortunately, the fire was already extinguished upon arrival, but there was still smoke in the house.

The real aim of this article is to center on the family in the home where the fire occurred—Mrs. Jessie M. Crawford, the mother; Edward Crawford, the young man who took actions to extinguish the fire; Melinda Crawford, who dialed 911 to report the fire; and a younger son, Emsy Crawford Jr.

A grease fire ignited while cooking french fries. In an attempt to extinguish the fire, Edward grabbed the pan, moved it to the sink and put water in it. At this point, the fire reached the exhaust hood, but self-extinguished when the burning grease was removed.

However, Edward now had burn injuries to the right hand, and was in severe pain.

Edward was taken to the hospital. He had to return several times for continued treatment but will fully recover. I visited Edward and his mother on April 26 to see how he was doing and to ask him what his thoughts were about that day and what he would now do differently.

"I've given a lot of thought about what I should have done—simply put a lid on the pan and turned off the heat," he said. "Believe me, if it happens again I will do it right."

Edward has learned a lesson the hard and painful way. Believe me, I know how he feels, having received the same type burns the same way many years ago.

Even though Edward did not follow the right method to extinguish the grease fire, he and his family are my heroes. If he had done nothing, the fire could have quickly spread to the rest of the house and further injury could have occurred. Edward knows how to extinguish a grease fire now.

I personally invite any base residents to call the fire prevention section at 3686/6339 for a one-on-one fire prevention briefing.

Please help us to stop needless, destructive fires. Remember, the real incident you just read about didn't happen at another base. It happened right here to one of our friends and neighbors.

Learn not to burn all through the year. Have a fire safe day.

Lawn watering, conservation go hand in hand

by MSgt. Jerry Newsome
64th CES

Contrary to popular belief, it is possible to conserve water and take good care of a lawn.

Excessive and improper watering can be the cause of many grass problems. Some examples are:

□ A common mistake is to water lawns lightly and frequently, rather than waiting until it's really needed and then saturating it. Holding back on water until it's really needed causes the development of deep grass roots, which help grass maintain its appearance better and longer than shallow roots.

□ The amount of water needed to keep soil moist will vary. During the growing season, two inches of water should be applied in hot, dry weather.

□ Since most home sprinklers water at a rate of one-half inch per hour, watering for four hours should be enough during the hottest weather.

However, most soil won't absorb one-half inch of water per hour, so it will probably be necessary to move your sprinkler around. This will allow each area to absorb all the water it gets.

□ The time of day when water is applied affects how much water is needed to replenish the moisture in the soil. The best time to water is early in the morning, before temperatures begin to rise. This will cut down on water wasted through evaporation.

It will also cut down on foliage disease, since water applied early in the day will evaporate as the day heats up, rather than remaining on the ground to provide a fertile host for disease-causing organisms.

□ When grass starts turning yellow, people tend to water it more. In fact, there are many reasons why grass turns yellow. One common reason for this occurrence is a shortage of nutrients in the soil—particularly nitrogen. Well-nurtured grass uses far less moisture than poorly fed grass.

Maintaining the level of nutrients in the soil through fertilizing is a good way to keep lawns looking good without wasting water in the process.

□ The height of your lawn mower is also important. If you set your mower at one-and-a-half inches in the early spring and slowly raise it so that it reaches one-and-a-half to three inches in midsummer, soil evaporation will be reduced.

With the need to be cost-conscious nowadays, it's imperative that everyone use as little water as possible to maintain their lawns.

Proper water techniques can keep your lawn healthy, while keeping water usage down.

SrA. George Goehring
ATC crew chief of year

Former Reese maintainer best in ATC

A recently departed wing maintainer has been selected as 1989's best crew chief in Air Training Command.

SrA. George M. Goehring, part of the 64th Organizational Maintenance Squadron until departing for Cannon AFB, N.M., in February, was cited for his work as a dedicated T-37 crew chief.

His ability and dedication were credited by wing officials for keeping a T-37 he was responsible for at a 93.6-percent mission-capable rate, as well as a 0.3-percent delayed discrepancy rate.

Prior to this award, the 24-year-old Pennsylvania native was selected as crew chief of the quarter (July through September) by student pilots in the 35th Flying Training Squadron. Other achievements include below-the-zone promotion to senior airman, T-37 Maintenance Branch airman of the month and wing airman of the quarter.

Reese achievers

Top mobility unit named

USAF Hospital Reese has captured the Reese Mobility Unit of the Quarter Award.

The hospital, under the guidance of Capt. Robin Lake and SSgt. Lynne Davenport, consistently projected a sense of urgency in preparing hospital members to meet Reese's mobility mission, according to wing officials.

IM awards given

Three wing members were recently cited as the base's outstanding information managers over a six-month period.

□ Capt. Douglas White was selected as the best in the officer category. The captain was credited with Reese IM officials with superbly programming and implementing the fiscal 1989 end-of-year spending plan.

□ TSgt. Diane Peets was cited in the senior enlisted/civilian category. IM officials said Sergeant Peets managed to transfer a vehicle program — consisting of 23 vehicles worth $257,000 — to Lockheed "without a hitch."

□ A1C Shane Ware took honors in the junior enlisted/civilian category. At one point in the award period, Airman Ware managed his office by himself, ensuring that all section tasking were completed on time. This was in spite of the fact that his office is normally manned by four people.

Members excel on CDCs

The following wing members achieved outstanding scores on their Career Development Course end-of-course exams, according to the Reese Consolidated Training Office:

□ SSgt. Kenneth Oakes, 64th Civil Engineering Squadron — 96.

□ A1C Shashi Jairam, 64th Security Police Squadron — 95.

□ Sgt. Yolanda Jones, 1958th Communications Squadron — 92.

□ Sgt. Randy Greene, SUPS — 91.

□ Sgt. Keith Filmer, MSS — 90.

HOSP announces top troops

USAF Hospital Reese has announced its top performers for the second quarter of fiscal 1989.

Safety awardee picked

A member of the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron has snared the quarterly individual safety award.

According to wing officials, Lubbock native Jerry Gregory was recognized for providing an innovative approach in solving several serious electrical problems on base.

Suggestion award won

The Reese Contracting Division's Floyd Taylor was presented with a suggestion award certificate for an idea that directly benefits Reese.

Mr. Taylor suggested that a T-37 landing light be recovered, repaired locally and reused after one failure. Previously, such lights were used for scrap metal.

IMA

Reservists play "active" role in Reese mission

by Sgt. Kimberly Nelson
assistant editor

"I-M-A reservist."

An Individualized Mobility Augmentee, or IMA, is an Air Force "Ready Reservist" assigned to a specific active-duty counterpart's position, which they assume during mobilization. Along with the Air National Guard, these reserves provide first-line backup for the Air Force in the event of war, national emergency or disaster. Reese currently has 19 enlisted and nine officer IMAs assigned, and 14 enlisted and 16 officers attached.

"The Air Force's mission in peacetime is readiness," stated Bill Orr, Reese Readiness Division deputy chief and Air Reserve Management Officer. "To an IMA, this means that they are prepared to meet their contractual agreement, which is to report for duty and be prepared to fight within 24 hours of notification."

"Therefore, during peacetime, an IMA's primary reserve job is to train — to acquire new skills, to upgrade their level of qualification and to maintain their readiness for wartime," Mr. Orr said. Augmentees are required to participate in periodic training activities to maintain proficiency and be ready to serve in their Air Force specialty. Training can be accomplished on the job, through correspondence courses and in residence at technical and professional military schools.

Additionally, augmentees are required to ensure their ancillary training — nuclear, biological, chemical warfare, small arms and buddy care — is current. They should also be able to perform special missions within their career field that aren't normally done in a peacetime environment.

Some IMA readiness responsibilities are:

Planning for mobilization; ensuring that their families are ready to carry on without them — many times on short notice; and keeping their military supervisor informed on changes in their status.

IMAs are managed and paid through the Air Reserve Personnel Center, and they do not receive pay until the signed active-duty orders are processed through ARPC, often a month after the tour. "If there's a 'glitch' in the system, it could take longer," added Mr. Orr.

ARPC notifies IMAs when to take a physical, when promotion boards are due and when to get shots. Since this organizational structure is often missing or located thousands of miles away, this can and often does create problems. Therefore, as an IMA, a person should be resourceful, independent and someone who can take the initiative, Mr. Orr pointed out. "If an augmentee does need help or advice, they can call the Reese Personnel Section or myself."

IMAs have tremendous flexibility and freedom in scheduling their training so they can work around peak demands in civilian jobs or school schedules with relative ease. "On the other hand," he said, "IMAs must be willing to take on greater responsibility in managing themselves.

"IMAs often think that their active-duty supervisors are responsible for initiating all important personnel actions, and claim that 'These actions are out of my hands.' That is not only untrue, it is dangerously wrong," said the ARMO.

Active-duty supervisors are just that — active duty. Augmentees might even be their first encounter with IMA management and the Air Force Reserves, Mr. Orr added.

ARPC Pamphlet 45-22, "Guide for USAF Reserve Individual Mobilization Augmentees and Their Supervisors," is a helpful tool dealing with IMA personnel needs. When used by a motivated IMA, it can show the way towards enhanced promotion opportunities, special schools and other interesting information to help an IMA demonstrate his or her own worth to a unit. To make the most of their augmentee, IMA supervisors should:

□ Remember, an IMA is an individual with wants and needs the same as active-duty members. But unlike an active-duty member, an IMA often has a civilian career and must constantly balance civilian life with military responsibilities.

An example of this is Maj. Claudine Vasilo. A four-year IMA, Major Vasilo augmentees as assistant chief of nursing services at the USAF Hospital Reese and works as a registered nurse at a Lubbock hospital. "Being on an on-call schedule at a civilian hospital, I often don't know my work schedule until a week or two in advance," said Major Vasilo. "Sometimes the staff will also call me up the day before and ask me to work — but if I'm already scheduled to serve as an IMA, I have to turn down the request."

□ Be prepared to challenge IMAs when they come to work. IMAs provide their supervisors with another set of hands, so supervisors should reasonably fill the IMA's schedule and expect results.

MSgt. Daniel Villegas, a Lubbock Law Enforcement Agency patrolman, spends his reserve time as assistant to the Reese Law Enforcement superintendent.

"While on reserve status, I work with SMSgt. Derrald Johnson, law enforcement superintendent," said Sergeant Villegas, a 25-year IMA. "I assist with overseeing all operations, but in events like the recent mobilization exercise, I also act as a patrolman or work the 'LE Desk'. 'If Sergeant Johnson should mobilize, I'd take his place."

(Sgt. Kimberly Nelson)

Maj. Claudine Vasilo, an IMA in USAF Hospital Reese, also works at a local hospital.

□ Continually prepare IMAs for military duty. Write notes, call or send material — keep them up-to-date. "Showing initiative is a quality supervisors look for at report card time. An IMA could be recalled to active duty right now and needed to step into a unit as a supervisor. Without knowing ahead of time what's going on, this could become a very trying tour for the augmentee while on station, and for the active-duty member upon his/her return," Mr. Orr pointed out.

"My active-duty supervisor will occasionally plan to take leave or will be away on a temporary-duty assignment during my reserve time. 'Consequently, it heightens the professional challenge,'" added Major Vasilo.

"IMAs are important assets to the armed forces. As the active-duty force continues to dwindle, it only makes sense to make use of every available hand to accomplish the mission," concluded Mr. Orr.

Light years Ahead

Reese Readiness Division on the cutting edge

by Sgt. Kimberly Nelson
assistant editor

Light years ahead. That's the state of Reese Readiness Division's computer technology and exercise planning. There are two areas in the division that computer support is heavily felt. Feeling the shortfall of manning in wing augmentee, disaster preparedness and shelter teams, the readiness division must rely on advanced computer technology to maintain the standards that wing members normally would be responsible for. Additionally, the staff's computer expertise enables them to keep the wing commander up-to-date on both world-wide and local news at all times.

"With the advancement of computers and the diminishing 'blue-suit' community at Reese, within the next three to five years Reese will have to convert readiness into strictly a training division for base personnel," said Maj. Russell Jenney, readiness division chief. "By further developing the concept of readiness into a liaison between the base and the surrounding areas, Reese can continue to look towards the outside for support — and vice versa — in the event of an emergency situation." Support will no longer stop at Lubbock, Wolfforth and Levelland, but can extend to communities further away, such as Ropesville and Shallowater, said Major Jenney.

"By ensuring that local civilian agencies know Reese's capabilities and Reese knows theirs, disaster assistance can become a combined effort, which would result in better efficiency and less cost to all parties involved," the chief added.

The readiness division no longer operates on a "we versus them" attitude (we being readiness and them being the other organizations on base), asserted the major. The division has designed an annual training calendar focusing on situations unique to a specific time of year. "Specific training exercises are scheduled during the times anticipated for those emergency situations," he added. "These exercises include natural disasters such as tornados or strong winds from March through June, or robbery or hostage situations during April (this reflects the end of income tax time, when those who owe must pay up — occasionally a person will take extreme actions, such as robbery, to ease the burden of paying, the major pointed out). No-fault exercise training is conducted twice monthly and there's a week-long readiness exercise held quarterly. "Members who feel they need further or updated training do not need to wait until their squadron schedules them — they can attend any of the planned training sessions on their own," said Bill Orr, readiness division deputy chief.

The division publishes 78 calendars a year for base distribution. On the 15th of each month, the readiness staff updates the calendar with specifics of who will do what (and where and when) and highlights any changes that are reflected over the next two months. "This way, everyone knows when to be prepared and for what," said the major.

Also included in the calendar is a wing-wide master contingency training program. "This program also designates weeks specifically scheduled for training and a day for readiness awareness," added Mr. Orr. Staff members have developed locally directed contingency training films and incorporated them with Air Force generated films to make it possible for the wing commander to view and compare simultaneously.

Reese's readiness division, in conjunction with Air Training Command, is devising a new training plan known as "CONEX" (contingency employment exercise). The CONEX plan places mobility augmentees in real-to-life training exercises that will focus on chemical mask donning, task qualification training and self/buddy care, stated Mr. Orr.

The number of field training exercises will also increase and expand to allow for more in-depth training of war skills, such as damage-assessment reporting and damage repair, warfare, field survival skills and rapid runway repair. "The concept of CONEX is to make it an integrated exercise held annually at Reese that will entail the deployment of wing members to a designated area for 24 hours or more. The sole purpose of this plan is to test and better enhance members' skills," Mr. Orr said.

"Although these programs are designed to revolve around exercises, the readiness staff want to ensure wing members are trained well in the event of a real-world situation," added Major Jenney.

"The future of the Reese Readiness Division is to keep the wing on top of today's matters. Through inspector general reports and the interaction with other installations, Reese is already far ahead in the effort to stay ready," Mr. Orr concluded.
