VSI-SSB extended

WASHINGTON — Because of a lower than needed response to voluntary separation incentives from both officers and enlisted members, the Air Force will accept VSI and the special separation benefit applications through May 29.

Personnel officials said they're taking the step to minimize the tion in force, though one is expected on the officer side because of the low number of voluntary officer separations.

scope of any involuntary reduc-

Reese Air Force Base, Texas 79489

The programs are also being expanded to include more people not previously eligible in phase one of the program which ended April 15.

At Reese

SSgt. Kerry Eason, NCO in charge of separations at Reese said the following conditions exist under the expansion of the program: Officers eligible for VSI or SSB in phase one remain eligible in phase two.

Phase two expands eligibility to regular company grade, non-pilot line officers, and to once-deferred captains and deferred majors in selected medical and dental skills.

Officers eligible under the original phase one criteria may still apply to separate by Dec. 31. To help meet fiscal year end-strengths, however, new phase two eligibles must separate from the service by Sept. 29.

□ With the exception of some enlisted skills, which met their targets in phase one or in which further losses cannot be absorbed, most enlisted people eligible in phase one remain eligible in phase two.

Phase two expands eligibility to sergeants in tier one; therefore, all E-4 sergeants with nine through 19 years of service, regardless of skill or tier, are eligible. Staff sergeants in tier one nonselective re-enlistment bonus, non-medical and non-dental skills are also eligible.

Technical sergeants and above in tiers two through five are also eligible, unless they are in skills which already met their phase one target or from which further losses cannot be taken. For more information, call Sergeant Eason or SSgt. Jim Leonard at 3420.

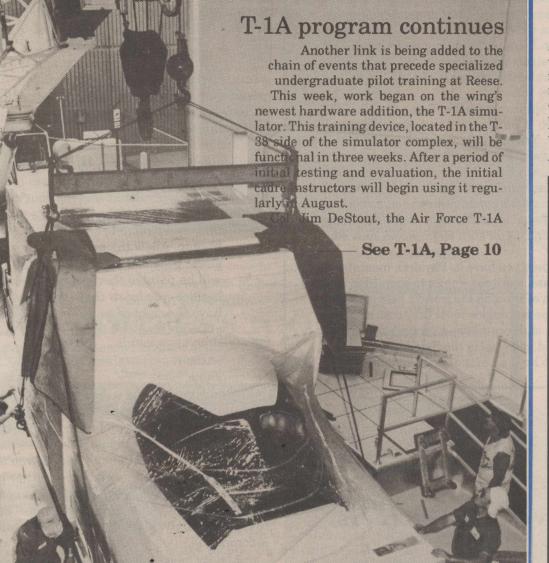

After closing the original VSI and SSB offer, the Air Force found it still needed nearly 3,800 officer applications and almost 2,800 enlisted applications. To meet required end-strengths, the Air Force was hoping to get 7,500 officers and 24,000 enlisted members taking the offers. Without extending VSI and SSB, these numbers would translate to officer and enlisted involuntary RIF requirements. Officials hope to reduce or eliminate these RIFs by getting as many volunteers as possible. Officials were particularly concerned by the low officer acceptance of the initial VSI and SSB offers. The incentive generated only 50 percent of the required number of separations.

Unless phase two generates additional applications, an officer RIF will be necessary, officials said.

"One of the major objectives in attempting to meet our congressionally mandated end strengths has been to avoid involuntarily separating any Air Force members," said Brig. Gen. Tony Robertson, Air Force director of personnel plans. "Our expectation, on the enlisted side, is that this expanded program will allow commanders were inducted into the "Janus Group" Wednesday Officers' Open Mess.

The Janus Group, 13 members in all, is part of the base-community relations program and is designed to help foster better understanding of the base and its people among leaders in the Lubbock community. The group was formed in Nine new honorary squadron 1988 and was named after the Roman god Janus.

People selected as honorary during ceremonies in the Reese commanders come from a variety of backgrounds according to Capt. Judy Burk, chief of public affairs. The current group includes members of the legal, medical, broadcast and education fields, to name a few.

From my perspective

by Col. Larry Driskill 64th Operations Group commander

eader's Digest ran a vignette L V citing the roles of the physical, mental, emotional and spiritual aspects of life. The article touched a chord. There is the reason flying is such a challenging pursuit.

Flying isn't a one-dimensional activity. It is all encompassing. It is partly physical, partly mental, partly emotional and even a bit spiritual. Viewing flying as multi-dimensional also helps explain why the pilot training business is so complex.

Physically, we are not talking superman or wonder woman skill levels. Given that the human physical structure is really rather poorly suited for the rigors of flight, the challenge is to maintain as high a degree of fitness for flight as possible. In addition to decent hand-eye coordination, the pilot requires near perfect overall health and proper rest and nutrition before each flight. Most of the responsibility resides with the pilot. In addition, the flight surgeon, the physiological training unit, food service, billeting and the fitness center folks play big parts. I'd like to claim all pilots are mental giants.

But some of my friends argue that any IQ over 100 is wasted on a pilot. Whatever the case, flying has always demanded a good deal of common sense. Today's aircraft are more complicated than ever and we spend a great deal of effort ensuring our pilot trainees have the mental tools to grasp complex ideas.

When it comes to emotions, we need an individual who is emotionally stable. We certainly don't want someone who operates as tight as a snare drum in the cockpit. We do want an individual who can subjugate emotions until after the flight and yet provide the needed jolt of adrenaline in an emergency. Many otherwise fully capable individuals never master flying because of self-induced stress. Again, the flight surgeon helps us train the proper response, as do the stress management folks. And, of course, the simulator instructors and instructor pilots play key roles.

The spiritual aspect of flying is a bit more difficult. It certainly isn't an every flight happening. You have felt the phenomena. Maybe it was a walk in the forest, alone, near sunset on a particularly beautiful evening, or sitting with a loved one watching a quiet slow rain from your grandmother's porch. Somewhere, sometime, you've been there. Flying seems to offer more opportunities for such feelings and such moments.

So there you have it. Physical, mental, emotional and spiritual. For us to succeed in our mission of training the world's best pilots, everyone on campus must take care of some portion of the equation. Every pilot who hopes to grow old and sage in the flying business must learn to keep all four aspects in balance.

> by Capt. Eric Marshall 64th FTW Safety Division

Drivers and

Here's a one-question safety quiz for you to take. It's designed to test your situational awareness when driving on base. The question identifies a condition that exists here at Reese, and if handled improperly, can easily lead to a mishap.

Now you're asking, "What do I get if I answer correctly?" The answer is this: answer correctly and you'll get "a warm feeling" that nobody else will notice. Yep, that's it! It's that same feeling of satisfaction you get from performing any job to the best of your ability. So here's your test. Good luck.

Scenario: You are driving on base when a pedestrian starts to cross the street in front of you. What do you do?

> a) Test the pedestrian's nerves by shifting to neutral and revving your car's engine (meanwhile, you brake to allow him or her room to cross).

b) Stop. Allow the person to cross the street because you know a crosswalk will be painted there in a week or so; besides, you know that pedestrians have the right of way.

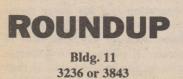

c) Do nothing and let him or her take their chances because crossing streets without crosswalks makes them "fair game."

The odds are that you chose "B." If so, congratulations; that was the approved solution.

As you've driven around base lately, you've probably noticed that many crosswalks have disappeared. Actually, they really haven't disappeared. The crosswalks have either been sandblasted away, or were removed as contractors prepare our roads for resurfacing. They'll reappear shortly, after the resurfacing contract is completed.

All levity aside, please remember this — no matter where you drive on base, pedestrians have the right of way. Please yield to them whether or not they're in a crosswalk. Drive defensively and neighborly.

ibrary captures two Air Force awards

Ms. Smith restacks books on the shelves at the base library.

The Reese Library has been selected as Air Force's outstanding library of the year (small category) and also captured the Air Force's best public relations program award.

NEWS 3

"Our children programs are what we emphasized when we submitted our package," Mac Odom, base librarian said. "It's good to know the Air Force liked our programs and acknowledged that by giving us these awards."

The library was notified in February that they had captured the Air Training Command outstanding library of the year award, but received honorable mention for its public relations program.

"We were shocked to hear we had won both awards at the Air Force level after winning one and receiving an honorable mention at ATC level," Juanita Beedy, librarian, said.

Among the programs that were chosen as outstanding were the story mobile and arts and crafts.

"The story mobile was an idea by Mrs. Beedy after the preschool kids stop coming to the library. She decided if they couldn't come to her, she would go to them," Mr. Odom said. "The children enjoyed this and the story mobile program has expanded from one class to three classes.

"Mrs. Beedy's public relations program was big reason we won the overall library award," Mr. Odom said. "She goes out of her way to involve kids as well as adults with books."

Other people who were involved with all the projects were Carol Smith and Jessica Leick.

Over the year, there was a 50 percent reduction in driving while intoxicated offenses, no drug identifications and only one formal EOT complaint at Reese. The key personnel briefing program remained a cornerstone for promoting social actions and their services to incoming commanders, first sergeants and over 700 wing members during commanders' calls, first duty station class, UPT briefings, NCO Leadership School and NCO Preparatory School and the newcomers' introduction briefing, which attests to their strong educational program.

Mr. Bell (left) poses by an AT-9 with fellow Tennesseeans from Class 42-D.

Veteran recalls Reese's first days

by SSgt. Mike Breslin editor

When Perry Bell arrived at Reese for pilot training, there were a few things missing from the base. Things like airplanes.

"Only the base commander's AT-6 was on the field," Mr. Bell, a member of Lubbock Army Flying School 42-D, recalled with a laugh. "So they rushed around and found a number of planes. I guess all they could find were (single-engine) AT-6s, because we were designated a twin-engine school.'

A member of the first class here, Mr. Bell and his 74 classmates started advanced flight training less than three weeks after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. He arrived following preliminary training at Randolph Field in San Antonio and Garner Field in Uvalde, Texas. The different phases of training had their simi-

"It was never what I'd call hazing, but they did try to make it rough," he explained, saying he enjoyed it anyway

Once at Reese, the problem of upper- and underclassmen was eliminated as 42-D was the only class here. The sense of urgency in training was pronounced, though, as the country was picking up steam in the early war effort.

"There were 75 of us, but the classes got up to 250 later on," Mr. Bell said, adding that about 7,000 people were trained here during the war years. His class finished two weeks early, such was the pace, and that extra time allowed the young aviators to get a few hours of flying time in twin-engine AT-9s that had finally arrived here.

The class's early finish wasn't the only indication of the urgency of the situation. Graduation day was another.

Day and Night Leased Wire Service An Meens "By Associated Press" VOL 18, NO. 168 LUBBOCK, TEXAS, "The Hub Of The Plains," WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29, 1942

The rushed movement didn't mean his graduation went without celebration. One of his fonder memories involved a "field trip" to Carlsbad, N.M. near the end of training.

Actually, Mr. Bell just missed out on combat. He was readying for a sortie during Japan's brief occupation of the Aluetian Islands when planes came back announcing they had repelled the Japanese.

> Looking at all the memories that he has of his training days at Lubbock AFS, one fond memory that jumps to his mind flies in the face of a commonly held notion about military food then and now.

"We had the best mess in the world. We could go to breakfast and have our choice of anything we wanted and we'd have two or three hot entrees for lunch.

A surge of stray cat and dog reports have prompted the 64th Security Police Squadron to ask Reese Village residents' help in catching the strays, as well as restraining their own pets.

According to SMSgt. Darrell Johnson, SPS operations superintendent, the number of dog bites and reported strays in base housing have warranted the concerns of housing residents.

"When school lets out at the end of the month, our children will be spending a lot of time outside in the housing area," said Sergeant Johnson. "We need to get hold of the problem to ensure their safety now."

According to Sergeant Johnson, the increased number of strays can be traced to pets being left behind when military members move and local people dropping their pets off thinking the military members will take them in.

"It's not legal to let your cat out to prowl at night," said Sergeant Johnson. "Pet owners have to be in control of their pets all the time."

The security police have already caught a dozen cats and as many dogs this year, but need the help of housing residents to keep on top of the. problem.

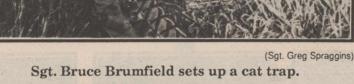

For starters, the SPs have been setting out cat and dog traps in areas where strays have been reported, and have traps available for housing residents to check out if they want to help.

Sergeant Johnson said residents can set up the traps themselves, or the SPs will set them. After a cat or dog is caught, the SPs will pick up the animal and the cage.

"Sergeant Johnson noted that if pets have an owner's. identification tag, then the owner will be notified and can pick up their pet. However, a report will be filed and sent to the member's commander. Animals not picked up are given to the local animal shelter.

"If you are moving and don't want to keep a pet, don't turn it loose," said Sergeant Johnson. "It only creates problems."

Are you prepared for a tornado?

Sgt. Greg Spraggins photo editor

Thunderstorms come, and thunderstorms go, however, our concerns about the dangers posed by tornadoes or other severe weather should be continuous.

"We haven't had any close calls yet," said SSgt. Ken Jacobsen, Reese Disaster Preparedness, "but this is tornado country and it's that time of year. Everyone should take the time to prepare for the possibility of a tornado. If you wait until the last minute, it just may be the last one."

The command post will sound the sirens when a tornado has been sighted within six miles of Reese and Reese is. in its path, but sometimes tornados strike without notice.

According to Sergeant Jacobsen, planning is the key to safety. During a tornado warning, persons in the area of its expected path should take immediate safety precautions. These include:

In addition, two aircraft arrived last week to bring the number of T-1As at Reese to nine. By Sept. 1, Reese is scheduled to have 20 aircraft to work with, according to Lt. Col. "The main thing to do is keep calm and go through the steps," said Sergeant Jacobsen. "The worst preparation for a tornado or severe storm is not to prepare at all."

Personnel officials are cautioning enlisted people in former tier one skills and in skills near their targets to apply early under this extension of the program.

"Applications in all open skills will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis," General Robertson said.

"As the numbers of applications in particular skills reach their target, we will close those skills to further applications and notify the field accordingly."
