Fraud in the Air Force

Maj Pasierb HQ AFOSI/PA DSN 297-4728

The Air Force Office of Special Investigations investigates all types of fraud cases against the government. Fraud costs the Air Force millions of dollars annually. Many AFOSI fraud investigations are in the procurement arena: product substitution/diversion/mischarging, conflicts of interest and bribery. Other types of fraud involve military and civilian members who have been caught cheating the Air Force. Here are some examples:

Receiving Unauthorized Cost Of Living Allowance

SUBJECT: Active Duty USAF Colonel.

SYNOPSIS: Air Force Office of Special Investigations received allegations that the individual had fraudulently completed recertification for overseas housing allowance and cost of living allowance. A review of the officer's recertification statement and request for dependent student travel forms indicated he received money for two children who were attending college in the CONUS and not physically residing with him.

RESULTS: The officer was required to pay back $2,192.37 and retired.

Defense Firm Subcontractor Guilty Of Defrauding The Air Force

SUBJECT: Civilian Construction Company President

SYNOPSIS: Based on information provided by a former employee of a major defense contractor, Air Force Office of Special Investigations conducted a joint investigation into allegations that the former employee was paid more than $15,000 for favorable treatment on construction subcontracts between his company and the subject's company. Preferred treatment included awarding sole-source contracts and substantially increasing the dollar amounts via change orders of contracts that were competitively awarded to the subcontractor.

RESULTS: The construction company president plead guilty to conspiring to defraud the Department of Defense. He was ordered to pay a $200,000 fine, to spend $50,000 renovating a downtown halfway house, and serve 3 years probation. In addition, the subject continues to cooperate with investigators as part of an investigation into further allegations of fraud.

Electronics Contractor Supplying Defective Parts

SUBJECT: USAF Electronics Contractor

SYNOPSIS: Air Force Office of Special Investigations received allegations that officers of an electronics manufacturing firm authorized the delivery of defective parts assembled on Maverick missile launchers. To support these allegations, testing was accomplished on three main components of the launchers suspected of being defective. Twenty percent of a randomly selected number of launchers were found to be significantly out of tolerance and failed testing.

RESULTS: The contractor pled guilty to one count of conspiracy to defraud the US Air Force and one count of mail fraud. While sentencing is scheduled for a later date, there is a maximum fine of $500,000 for each count. In addition, civil litigation to recover damages of between $2 and $5 million is still pending.

Conspiracy To Defraud, Falsifying Testing Of Circuits

SUBJECT: Top 100 Contractor.

SYNOPSIS: A joint investigation by Air Force Office of Special Investigations and the Defense Criminal Investigative Service was initiated after it was alleged that a major US manufacturer shipped electrical parts to the Department of Defense that did not pass quality assurance tests or that documentation did not accurately reflect the part's manufacturing history. Air Force programs which used these circuits were the F-15, Phoenix missile, F-4, and the AMRAAM missile.

RESULTS: The company was found guilty of conspiring to defraud the government and was fined $3.5 million and a special assessment of $200.

It's obvious these offenders chose to commit criminal acts against the Air Force due to a powerful motivator — greed — which is becoming more prevalent in these budget-tightening days. The impact is felt throughout the Air Force, and we should all accept the responsibility to prevent fraud, waste, and abuse at every opportunity. Mutual command/AFOSI support and teamwork are essential for successful prevention, detection, and neutralization of fraud. →

Being 'cool'

by Chuck Gerrior
Wing Safety

On a hot summer day, a cool beer or drink with some type of alcohol added can make you feel better. The only problem is the first cool one tastes so good that the next one (and those following) go down even better.

After a few "cool ones," the problem with overconsumption of alcohol starts to rear its ugly head. Most of the time people are restrained or someone gives them a ride home. But occasionally, people lose their senses and think they can do anything; make that hard running slide or chase that ball at full speed with the fence just in front of them.

The most tragic thing that can happen on a hot day with alcohol is a swimming accident. If the water is a little bit cool and you dive in, your body can react by immediately cramping, causing you to drown. If you don't drown from cramping, you may believe you can swim farther than your body is able with the same results, drowning a few yards from the shoreline.

The final problem with having too many cool ones is trying to drive your car. This is especially prevalent on weekends when people go to the beach, ball game or picnic and overconsume alcohol. Fifty percent of all fatal automobile accidents involve alcohol — the statistics always go up on hot weekends.

Play it "cool" this summer. If you must drink a lot of cool ones to cool off when playing in the sun, make them non-alcoholic and survive to enjoy another summer.

Burning for you?

by MSgt. Luis Lynch
Reese Fire Department

The task of storing and handling flammable liquids safely is not a difficult one. With a little common sense and knowledge, this goal can be achieved. Always remember the following:

- Use flammable liquids for their intended purpose. Never use them as a substitute for approved cleaning solvents or as a replacement for charcoal lighter fluid.
- Never store flammables in basements or enclosed areas where pilot lights or other heat sources may ignite vapors.
- Don't smoke while refueling any gasoline-powered equipment, including your car.
- Keep gasoline in an Underwriter's Laboratories-Factory Mutual-approved container with a tight-fitting lid. Don't store or transport gasoline in glass or unapproved plastic containers.

□ Always store flammables in a well ventilated area.

□ Children, matches and flammables don't mix.

□ Don't keep a spare can of gasoline in your car. Fill the tank more frequently to ensure you don't run out of gas.

Anyone can be injured by the careless use of flammable liquids. Most accidents happen when one or more of the above safety rules are ignored or disregarded.

The importance of following these safety rules can be realized if you remember that gasoline and other flammable liquids ignite with explosive force; in fact, one gallon of gasoline is equal to 10 sticks of dynamite.

Give flammable liquids the respect they deserve.

Wing earns mishap reduction award

by SSgt. Mike Breslin
Editor

The 64th FTW led the command in mishap reduction in 1993, earning the ATC (now AETC) Ground Safety Programmed Reduction Award in the large unit category.

Command officials said the year's safety record at Reese and other command bases was "one of our best, reflecting a superb effort on everyone's part to preserve our precious people and valuable resources." Wing safety officials echoed that sentiment.

"Command influence, supervisor influence and the hard work of the unit safety representatives — all these things made a difference," said Chuck Gerrior, ground safety manager. "It's not just our program; it's everybody's program."

Reese cut its reportable mishaps by two-thirds during the award period, going from 12 to four. The award covered Oct. 1, 1992 to June 30. The cut-off date concurred with the stand-up of

AETC, which means next year's award will cover a 15-month period.

Individual statistics at Reese have been equally encouraging. For example, there has only been one on-duty military injury in the last two years according to Gerrior. Also, there have only been two on-duty civilian injuries this year as opposed to four at this time last year.

Unit safety representatives, better known as USRs, have worked to carry the safety message.

"We really try to emphasize the information we get from safety in the weekly flight briefings," said SSgt. Martin Bustos, ground safety representative for the 54th Flying Training Squadron. Barbecuing, diving in unfamiliar water, boating safety were several areas he cited, noting that the ongoing "101 Critical Days of Summer" make those topics "hot" at present. Sergeant Bustos added that the commander support he gets is key to his unit safety program's success.

"Predeparture safety briefings, keeping people current on their safety responsibilities, in particular, making sure that supervisors stay involved — these are some of the things we stress," said 2nd Lt. Teresa Forest, USR for the 64th Mission Support Squadron. Like Sergeant Bustos and other wing safety representatives, she praised her commander's emphasis on safety.

All these efforts started paying off long before the wing won the 1993 award.

"The number of mishaps have slowly been coming down over the last four years," said Jon Hataway of ground safety. "But that doesn't mean we can let up now." Gerrior added that the mishaps the wing has had in recent years have been due to unsafe acts, not unsafe conditions.

"We can put out the word on what to do and what not to do, and we can do inspections around the base, but it all comes down to the individual," said Gerrior. "It's up to them to make the decisions not to drink and drive, not to overexert themselves during a sporting event and so on. The basic responsibility rests with each one of us."

Recruiters sought

Special briefing planned for Thursday

Interesting, challenging, and rewarding work as a recruiter is available to Air Force NCOs.

"There is always a need for NCOs as Air Force Recruiters in communities across the nation," said CMSgt. Jerry Nelson, chief of recruiter selection at Hq. Air Force Recruiting Service at Randolph AFB, Texas. All Air Force specialties are eligible.

"The Air Force recruiter is a specialist in every sense of the word, and recruiting duty is unlike any other Air Force job. Air Force recruiters are top-notch NCOs who are self-motivated, with a mission to recruit the high-quality men and women needed in tomorrow's Air Force," said Chief Nelson.

"Recruiters get the job done by being part public relations expert and part career counselor," he continued. "Recruiters represent the Air Force in civilian communities where they often work with leading citizens, educators and the media to tell the Air Force Story."

Recruiters receive up to $275 per month in special duty assignment pay, reimbursement of up to $75 in out-of-pocket expenses monthly, a stabilized tour and assignments to their area of choice.

SSgt. James Leonard, Reese Military Personnel Flight, said staff through master sergeants with less than 16 years in service and two years time on station can get more details by attending a briefing at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday in the enlisted open mess. The two-hour briefing will answer "everything you wanted to know about recruiting duty — but didn't know whom to ask." Spouses are also encouraged to attend.

For more information, call Sergeant Leonard at 3082 or MSgt. Normando Febus at 3823. (Some information provided by Hq. Air Force Recruiting Service.)

NCO retraining program enters secondary phase

from Air Force News Service and local staff reports

Phase II of the fiscal 1994 NCO retraining program started Aug. 10 and will continue through Oct. 1, Reese and Air Force personnel officials said.

The Air Force needs about 2,000 staff sergeants through master sergeants to retrain from overmanned career fields to those currently short of people. Sgt. Lei Carter, NCO in charge of classification and training in the Reese Military Personnel Flight, said only 602 applications (29 percent of the goal) had been approved by Aug. 5 in phase I, the voluntary phase of the annual program.

"The only difference between phase I and phase II is that individual notices will be sent to NCOs who are at risk for possible involuntary retraining," said Sergeant Carter, "encouraging them to consider voluntary retraining into a skill of their choice."

Air Force officials said people eligible for retraining will be retrained mandatorily in a third phase if phase II target numbers are not met. Phase III will be used only for those skills where phases I and II target numbers are not met.

Throughout the Air Force, the following skills and ranks fall under phase II (boldface indicates skills and grades at Reese):

122X0 staff and technical sergeants, 233X0 staffs and techs, 301X1 techs and masters, 303X3 techs and masters, 324X0 staffs and techs, 361X0 staffs, techs and masters, 362X4 techs and masters.

Government issues new ethics rules

Legal officials offer clarification on new guidelines for members from Air Force News Service and local staff reports

The Office of Government Ethics has issued new rules governing standards of conduct that apply to all military officers and civilian employees, Air Force officials said.

While the rules use the term "employees," that term is specifically defined to include military officers. According to officials in the Reese Legal Office, the new rules supplement Air Force Regulation 30-30, "Standards of Conduct," which will soon be amended to make similar rules apply to enlisted members as well.

Some new rules are identical to those in the regulation, some expand upon the old rules and some are entirely new.

"The rules start with the basic assumption that public service is a public trust," said Capt. Cheryl Thompson, chief of military justice at Kelly AFB, Texas.

"From this premise flow the basic principles that the new rules seek to implement," she added.

As general provisions under the new rules, employees:

- Must place loyalty to the Constitution, laws and ethical principles above private gain.
- Shall not hold financial interests that conflict with faithful performance of duty.
- Shall not use non-public government information to further a private interest.
- Shall not use public office for private gain.

□ Shall not give preferential treatment to anyone.

□ Shall not seek or engage in outside employment that conflicts with public duty.

□ Shall satisfy all just financial obligations.

□ Shall avoid creating the appearance that they are violating the law or the regulation.

Regarding gifts from outside sources, the new rules say employees shall neither solicit nor accept gifts that come from a "prohibited source" or that are given because of the intended receiver's position.

Maj. Edmund Bloom, Reese staff judge advocate, said a "prohibited source" is a government contractor, anyone seeking any type of official action by the Air Force or anyone who is potentially in either of these situations.

"A 'gift' is anything of value, including services. But the prohibition doesn't include modest items of food, such as coffee and doughnuts, that are not part of a meal," he said.

Also accepted are exchanging greeting cards and presenting plaques. Additionally, government employees may accept nominal gifts appropriate for the occasion, worth $20 or less and worth less than $50 total per year.

When it comes to gifts between employees, generally an employee may neither give a gift, make a donation for a gift to a superior nor solicit a contribution from another employee for such a gift.

As before, Major Bloom said there are exceptions. A superior may accept: nominal gifts (not cash and worth $10 or less) from a subordinate on occasions where gifts are traditionally given, such as Christmas; food and refreshments shared in the office; and personal hospitality provided at a residence."

A superior may accept from a subordinate, without strict adherence to the $10 limit, gifts "appropriate to the occasion" at infrequent events of personal significance. These events include marriage, illness, childbirth or on occasions when superior-subordinate relationships end, such as retirement or transfer. "Of course, under no circumstances may a superior coerce the offering of a gift," Captain Thompson said.

Concerning outside activities, she said the basic rule is employees shall not engage in them if they conflict with their official duties. These rules are covered more fully in AFR 30-30.

The Air Force requires employees to coordinate, in advance, all outside employment, including work done for their own business. Other subjects the new rules cover include conflicting financial interests, impartiality in performing official duties and misuse of a government position.

"In general, the rules are not that much different from the rules we have followed in the past; some specific dollar guidance has been given and some honorary civic organization memberships have been curtailed," said Major Bloom. "We have always required ethical conduct and will continue to do so."

Specific questions on ethics rules can be directed to the legal office at 3505. (Greg Ripps at Kelly contributed to this report.)

New JCS chairman named

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has nominated Army Gen. John M. Shalikashvili to be the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. If confirmed by the Senate, he would replace Gen. Colin L. Powell, who retires Sept. 30.

General Shalikashvili (pronounced Shah-lee-kas-VEE-lee) is currently the supreme allied commander for Europe and United States European Command commander in chief.

Clinton announced his choice for the top military post Aug. 11.

He called General Shalikashvili "a great American story," referring to the general's climb through the enlisted and officer ranks after immigrating from Poland when he was 16.

General Shalikashvili, 57, entered the Army in 1958 as a private and one year later was selected to attend officer candidate school.

Although most of General Shalikashvili's 35-year career has been centered in Europe — where he's held numerous command positions — he has also served tours in Vietnam and Korea. Most recently, he commanded the U.S. humanitarian mission for Iraq's Kurds.

The chairman-select is no stranger to the top military spot in the Pentagon, having been assistant to the JCS chairman from August 1991 to June 1992.

In the early 1980s, he also worked as deputy director of strategy, plans and policy for the Army's deputy chief of staff for operations and plans at the Pentagon.

General Shalikashvili has also served in four joint-service assignments. (Air Force News Service)

AT&T OFFERS CONVENIENT BILLING ALTERNATIVE TO SELECT CALLING-CARD CUSTOMERS

BASKING RIDGE, N.J. -- AT&T today announced a service that allows customers who receive their AT&T Calling Card bills directly from AT&T to have their monthly calling-card charges automatically debited from their checking accounts.

This optional payment service, AT&T Automatic Bill Payment, is part of 'The i Plan,' AT&T's personalized approach to serving its many different kinds of customers. Military personnel, college students and others who qualify can enjoy the ease and convenience of the AT&T Calling Card with the added benefit of having their card calls paid automatically, without writing or mailing checks.

"Not only will you get exceptional benefits with the AT&T Calling Card, but, no matter how busy things get, you'll never have to worry about sending in your payment," said Mike Roudi, AT&T product manager. "This is just the latest feature we're adding to our family of calling cards to give customers more value and more choice."

Customers who are eligible can choose to have their accounts debited on the third, ninth, 17th or 24th day of every month. They will receive statements each month, specifying the amount that will be debited from their accounts, a listing of their AT&T Calling Card charges and a reminder of their debit dates. Customers will have approximately 10 days to review their statements, call to report discrepancies, and make sure they have enough money in their accounts to cover the charges.

AT&T is the only major long-distance company that provides this kind of automatic bill-payment service. For more information on AT&T's Automatic Bill Payment Program, consumers can call 1-800-245-4673 weekdays, from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., or Saturdays, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Eastern Time. Callers from outside the United States can call AT&T collect at 304-341-4673.

South Plains Arts and Crafts Festival To Benefit Food Bank

The fourth annual South Plains Arts and Crafts Festival will be held Aug. 21-22 in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center. Approximately two hundred exhibitors from throughout the Southwest will fill the main exhibit hall with original art, limited edition prints and handcrafted items. There will also be a drawing to benefit the South Plains Food Bank. Hours for the show are Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge. Mel Prather, organizer for the two-day event, said he was pleased with both the quality and variety of items to be offered at the upcoming arts and crafts show. "For one, we've expanded our fine arts entries. We'll have such artists as Dan Brown of Fort Worth, Kenneth Wyatt of Tulia, David Brownlow of Fort Worth, and other well known artists on hand with their recent works."

The show will feature a number of newcomers. Those making their first appearance at the show will be offering original clay sculpture, quilts, jewelry, furniture, pottery, stained glass, gift items and clothing. Others will offer soaps, dulcimers, tole painting, nail art, quilted clothing, painted gourds, checkbook covers, wreaths, children's toys, dried flowers and potpourri.

Rounding out those entering the show for the first time include those with soft sculpture, handmade frames, lawn furniture and porch swings, cared fish, wood jewelry, cinnamon roasted almonds, wishing wells, stools, bookshelves, wind chimes, and fabric and wood dolls. Musical ceramics, candle pots, quillas, birdhouses, material baskets, handmade purses and candy will also be on hand.

A number of popular booths from previous festivals will be returning with clothing, jewelry, furniture in both finished and unfinished form, jackets, ceramics, tole painting, quilts, and wall decorations.

Also back will be dried floral arrangements, sculpture, cedar chests, hair bows and hats, and personal accessories.

In addition, there will be a drawing to benefit the South Plains Food Bank. A number of exhibitors will be donating items to be won in the drawing. Patrons can register to win those items with each can of food or fifty cents donated to this worthwhile organization.

The drawing will be held at 5 p.m. Sunday and the winners will be notified.

Cadets learn from Reese visit

by A1C Tabatha M. Eanes
Wing Public Affairs

They've been on base all summer, coming from all over the United States to get a taste of the active-duty Air Force.

They are Air Force ROTC cadets, here for the professional development program or ROTC flying orientation.

Capt. Stanley Allen, Reese project officer for the professional development program said, "The program is designed to provide cadets with an idea of what life in the active Air Force is like and give them greater appreciation for the duties, problems and training faced by a second lieutenant."

The program divides the summer into six two-week training periods; Reese has hosted from two to 10 cadets each period. The program ends Saturday.

When the cadets arrive, they are assigned to an organization on base where they partake in everyday taskings and problems. "This program is really helpful because you get to see how things are really done," said Cadet Darion Motivala, Boston University.

Unlike the professional development program, the ROTC flying orientation program lasts only two days; 220 cadets took part. The training takes place every year wherever the cadets have summer encampments.

The purpose of ROTC flying orientation is to "provide ROTC cadets with an idea of the mission of the Air Force and to motivate them," said Capt. Paul Johnson, who flew sorties for the program.

"The program is pretty intense," said Cadet Jason Janaros, Florida State University. "You get an idea of how tough pilots have to be."

Each group of cadets in the flying orientation program began their orientation with a bus ride from Sheppard AFB, Texas. Briefings began here at about 6:15 a.m. The cadets were then split into two groups of 55.

They were given air egress training, which prepared them should they have to eject during their orientation flight; ground egress training, in case something should happen while still on the ground; an aerospace physiology briefing; and life support training.

"The cadets experience an 18- to 20-hour day, which emphasizes the factors in undergraduate pilot training," said Lt. Col. Tim Philpott, aerospace physiology chief. The cadets can't get an orientation ride without a "boarding pass," and in order to obtain it, the (AP) instructor must be confident the cadet is prepared, according to TSgt. Tim Kepsel of aerospace physiology.

"I think it's a good program because you get good hands-on training, rather than just classroom lectures," said Cadet J. Michael Frazier, Southwest Texas State University.

Thanks to the program, not all cadets have to wait until they get their commission before they realize some of their goals.

"I have always been part of an Air Force family and it has long been a dream of mine to fly," said Cadet Gary Theiss, University of Florida. "Today that dream came true."

Sgt. Joe Friday of "Dragnet" fame looked for "just the facts" during his fictional law enforcement career. Getting the facts is also crucial in the real-life career of Freddy Gonzales, this week's quality performer. Gonzales, a court reporter in the Reese Legal Office, is responsible for recording and transcribing the trials that take place on Reese. His is a lengthy task at times — a recent case extended more than five days and contained more than 30 defense motions, the recording of which complicate his task. Despite such demands, he performs his job in an "amazing" fashion.

"He is, without question, the most capable, thorough and meticulous court reporter in the Air Force," said MSgt. Marsha Ptomey, legal office manager, who used others words like "stellar," "efficient" and "outstanding" to describe Gonzales' work.

Keeping track of everything that is said in a proceeding can be tough according to Gonzales, a Colorado native. Before becoming a civil servant in 1991, he worked as a freelance court reporter, using the machine shorthand method that most people associate with his work. The "steno-mask," or closed microphone, he uses these days is something he became familiar with once at

While he described military proceedings as very professional and subdued, his civilian court experiences as a free-lancer "was a different story."

"One time, I was taking a deposition; there are no judges at depositions," he said. "It got so bad at one point, the two lawyers were on their feet, shouting obscenities at each other. I pushed my machine aside because I thought they were getting ready to 'duke it out.'"

"It could get pretty nasty, but in 99 percent of the cases things are handled professionally," he said.

His work has landed him in other "interesting" situations, such as in 1990 when he was brought into a meeting of the Comanche Tribal Council in Lawton, Okla. He found himself surrounded by elders of the Comanche nation as they hashed out matters of finance and policy.

When he's not meeting the rigors of court reporting, Gonzales, 29, likes "most" outdoor activities, particularly horseback riding, camping and fishing.

Gonzales and his wife, Toni, have one child. Their daughter, Sarah Liza, turns 3 Aug. 27.

MEDS wins running away Logistics takes second

The 64th Medical Squadron "ran away" with the show at the annual base track and field meet, amassing 70 points toward the Commander's Trophy competition.

MEDS' 117 meet points easily surpassed all contenders. The 64th Logistics Squadron took second with 74 points in the meet, earning 60 points toward the Commander's Trophy. The 35th Flying Training Squadron and the 64th MWR-Services Squadron took distant third and fourth places to earn 50 and 40 points, respectively, in trophy competition.

The meet saw three records fall. Capt. Dave Sumrell, 35th FTS, and Capt. Sara Taylor, MEDS shattered the men's and women's marks in the mile run. He turned in a 4-minute, 45-second performance; she crossed the wire at the 6:32 mark. The record for the 440-yard women's relay fell to the MEDS team of Captain Taylor, Amn. Melissa Miles, Sgt. Rosa Hawthorne and Sharon Glover, who clocked in at 1:11.00.
