Great American Smokeout says: kick the habit

by Maj. Phyllis Craft
Behavioral medicine

Tobacco-related illnesses — preventable illnesses — kill more than 400,000 people annually and account for more deaths than are caused by alcohol, illegal drugs, automobile accidents, homicides, suicides and AIDS combined.

Smoking is prevalent in about 32 percent of active duty Department of Defense members; 55 percent have never smoked and 13 percent are former smokers.

Sixteen percent of all DoD deaths, or one out of six, can be contributed to smoking. Typically, smokers die 15 years before nonsmokers. With an expected life span of 76 years for both sexes in 1995, 66 percent of all deaths in the DoD population for this year were before the age of 65.

Smoking-related illnesses account for an estimated $584 million spent on health care and over three million lost workdays.

The use of tobacco in all its forms is a learned behavior which is amenable to change and prevention. Although smoking depen-ency may be manifested in one or more ways, all of them can be identified, understood and conquered.

Perhaps the most obvious way of being "hooked" is the chemical addition to nicotine itself, that strong craving for periodic replenishment when the accustomed blood level of nicotine drops. The habit of association is a strong motivator for smoking such as the smoking paired with the routine cups of coffee, watching television or relaxing after dinner?

The psychological dependency of smoking is often heard in conversational statements like, "It helps relieve my stress," or "I think better when I smoke."

Smokers are at risk for multiple diseases primarily in three categories: cardiovascular diseases, cancer and respiratory.

Cardiovascular mortality accounts for 45 percent of smoking-related illnesses with an estimated indirect monetary cost of $78,187,981. Smoking-attributed cancers account for 35 percent of morbidity and mortality with a cost involvement of $59,960,954. Respiratory diseases such as emphysema and chronic bronchitis assume third position with 19 percent of smoking-related diseases. Other conditions such as premature aging of the skin, sinusitis and loss of vision are also smoking-related.

Over 100 poisons are found in tobacco and cause various harmful effects. Carbon monoxide prevents adequate tissue oxygenation and slows down brain activity. In depriving the heart muscle of oxygen, heart disease and heart attack are often triggered. Nicotine constricts the blood vessels causing impaired circulation and at same time acts as a stimulant to lead to increased nervousness in predisposed smokers. Tars in tobacco may start cancers growing.

The good news is that most of the damage from smoking is reversible.

Risk for heart disease dramatically drops after that final cigarette is smoked. Risk of a second heart attack is drastically reduced if the heart attack victim quits smoking.

The risk of emphysema or lung cancer, before it is acquired, decreases to that of a nonsmoker after less than seven years of having "kicked the habit." Even those smokers who develop emphysema report reduced pain after quitting. For many former smokers, chronic bronchitis disappears.

The American Cancer Society celebrates the 20th anniversary of the Great American Smokeout Thursday. Several activities are scheduled at Reese to help smokers kick the habit.

On Thursday nonsmokers are asked to adopt a smoking friend for the day, assisting them in making this a smoke-free day, and hopefully, a habit for life.

Reese personnel are encouraged to participate in Thursday's "Run Your Butts Off" 5K walk/run beginning at the Reese picnic grounds at 10:45 a.m.

Take someone to lunch at the Reese Club or bowling center for a "cold turkey special" (turkey sandwich, drink and fries or onion rings) for $3.95.

Also, remember behavioral medicine offers a five-week smoking cessation course. The class meets once a week and addresses the thoughts, behaviors and feelings of smokers and makes use of group interaction to encourage and support change.

Call behavioral medicine at 3739 to register for the class and get a fresh start on life during the Great American Smokeout!

(Editor's note: The following accident occurred at the 4th Street and Inler Avenue intersection, just east of the base, Oct. 9. The author, a pilot, has years of "rapid judgment training," but it almost wasn't enough. Luckily, he did what he could and seatbelts and a car seat also helped. 64th Security Police Squadron officials continue to urge that extra caution be taken by all at this dangerous intersection.)

Traveling west on 4th Street back to the base, I was blocked in with "zero favorable options" by a van facing east and waiting to turn left toward Shallowater.

The van didn't move until I was within two seconds of the intersection. With no room to the left (oncoming traffic) and asphalt to the right (the Shallowater route) I swerved right instead of broadsiding her. Had she stopped during that two seconds, I could have slipped by unharmed.

After the loud crashing noises, flying glass and skidding stopped my only thought was, "I've got to get myself and my daughter away from this mess in case there's a fire."

I was able to do that, but help came in the form of many "good Samaritans."

I had sat down in the dirt and a bystander — Senior Airman Brian Ledlow from the Reese Pediatric Clinic — asked me how I was doing. He helped me stop the bleeding from cuts on my arm. A young woman in a passing car called 911.

Staff Sgt. Ben Quintanilla was with Ledlow.

My daughter was shivering and Quintanilla gave her the blue sweatshirt he was wearing to keep her warm. In this "cold" world, this act of kindness was a big deal to us. When the chips are down, there's nothing better than a caring touch of humanity.

I'd like to also thank Senior Airman Thom Watts and Airman 1st Class Lina Schrieber from the Reese ambulance team, Senior Airman Melanie Watson who manned the phones during this emergency, and Dr. (Capt.) Michael Paston who helped patch me up during follow-up visits to the Reese Clinic. There's also a number of unnamed people who helped that dreadful night.

I received professional, compassionate care from all involved. MANY THANKS to each of you from me, my wife Julie and our children, Jennifer and Joshua.

Commitment vital to sexual harassment prevention

by Gen. Billy Boles
AETC commander

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AETCNS) — The U.S. military services have thousands of men and women doing an outstanding job in recruiting, training, and educating everyone from new recruits to senior NCOs and officers.

I know that our Air Force people have high standards, are technically qualified, and understand and support Air Force policies on sexual harassment and discrimination.

On the other hand, we recruit and commission more than 35,000 new airmen and officers each year. These people need to be taught and reminded of our stand on harassment and discrimination. We also need to highlight for them the special trust that exists between instructor and student (and recruiter and recruit), and how easily that trust can be violated.

Recent events also underscore the need to ensure all personnel assigned to this command—permanent party, students and recruits alike—clearly understand Air Force and Air Education and Training Command policy regarding sexual harassment.

That policy is clear: any conduct that involves unwanted sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or any other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature that creates an intimidating, hostile or offensive environment for any Air Force member will not be tolerated.

AETC instructors have been carefully screened and selected to perform special duties involving the training and education of Air Force and Department of Defense students. We have placed enormous trust and confidence in you and count on you not only to teach specific subjects in the classroom, on the parade field, on the flight line and in the cockpit, but also to teach Air Force values by your personal example. This means maintaining a learning environment that protects human dignity and prohibits sexual harassment of any kind, in any form, at any time.

AETC recruiters and ROTC and Officer Training School instructors have also been hand-picked and entrusted by the Air Force to be a representative of the service to the young men and women of this country who are considering military service. You must take the extra step to avoid any possible perception of impropriety.

AETC students and cadets have an absolute right to a learning and living environment free of sexual harassment—24 hours a day, seven days a week. If you are a victim of sexual harassment, it is vital you report it immediately; tell anyone in your chain of command. If you're uncomfortable using your chain, contact the social actions office, the inspector general, AFOSI or security police, or call 1-800-558-1404

If you report sexual harassment, I commit you to three things. First, your allegation(s) will be investigated promptly. Second, any Air Force member who commits sexual harassment will be held accountable. Third, all victims of sexual harassment will receive every service and assistance the Air Force can provide for their protection and well-being.

AETC commanders and supervisors should note the successful accomplishment of the command's education and training mission demands every aspect of every instructor/student and recruiter/recruit relationship be professional and beyond reproach. I expect you to establish, maintain and publicize the channels to report sexual harassment; and ensure these channels are "user friendly" to our students, recruits, and cadets.

It is vital that every member of this command be fully committed, by both word and deed, to the Air Force policy of prevention and intolerance of sexual harassment of any kind. We owe nothing less than total compliance to our people, our institution and our nation.

Sexual harassment inquiry hotline

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AFPC) — For the past two years, the Air Force has maintained a 1-800 Hotline to further ensure military and civilian members could easily and freely report any concerns of sexual harassment or other improper behavior by military and civil service members.

In light of the allegations at the U.S. Army's Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland, the Air Force is reminding all members the hotline number to call is: 1-800-558-1404.

This 1-800 number is in addition to other established processes for reporting allegations of misconduct, including local chains of command and base social action offices. The number is located at the Air Force Personnel Center here and will be manned 24 hours a day, seven days a week from Nov. 13 through Nov. 27. After that time, the number will return to being manned during normal duty hours, CST.

All calls taken at the hotline are handled by the proper authority and investigated to proper conclusion. The Air Force for years has set a "Zero Tolerance" standard for sexual harassment and discrimination by any of its members, military or civilian.

Walking a tightrope: mentoring vs. unprofessional relationships

Note from Gen. Billy Boles, Air Education and Training Command commander: "The story below does an excellent job of clarifying the difference between mentoring and unprofessional relationships. Mentoring is essential for our young folks, but it must be accomplished at the right time and right place. By using common sense and professionalism, you'll provide a valuable service and not put yourself in a compromising position."

by Col. Ronald Yaggi
17th Training Group commander

GOODFELLOW AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AETCNS) — There has been a lot of attention recently on accountability and professional conduct. Every week in the Air Force Times, you can read of people being court-martialed for having unprofessional relationships.

At the same time, some permanent-party personnel, to include instructors, are being encouraged to go to the base clubs on Fridays for "mentoring" sessions. In fact, some enlisted permanent-party members are housed in the same dorms as students. Are these "accidents waiting to happen?"

Before we set out to answer that question, we obviously have to look to the Air Force instructions for guidance — in this case, AFI 36-2909, September '96, and perhaps AETC Regulation 30-4, January '92. According to the AFI, an unprofessional relationship is one which detracts "from the authority of superiors or reasonably creates the appearance of, favoritism, misuse of office or position, or the abandonment of organizational goals for personal interests."

Notably, reasonable perceptions of favoritism or misconduct can be as important as reality. AFI 36-2909 also gives a clear definition of professional relationships: those that "contribute to the effective operation of the Air Force." The Air Force leadership goes one step beyond and "encourages personnel to communicate freely with their superiors regarding their careers, performance, duties and missions," in other words, mentoring.

How can a permanent staff at a training wing, to include instructors, keep the relationship professional and mentor subordinates outside the classroom, particularly students? I assure you the cases we read about clearly step over the limits, such as sexual relationships. Many of these cases also involved excessive amounts of alcohol, where people's judgement was impaired. However, they don't have to be that blatant.

Activities like dating, dancing and frequent social gatherings with the same person can all give the perception of misconduct or displaying favoritism and, therefore, can be construed as unprofessional. Most of these clearly fall into the realm of common sense.

The AFIs were never written to prevent mentoring or professional socialization; again, they encourage it. No problem exists if an instructor or staff member wants to sit with a group of his or her subordinates or students at the club or at a local restaurant and talk shop.

Supervisors have valuable experience and advice to offer, and most new Air Force members are anxious to listen and learn. Just don't spend all your time mentoring the same individual week after week. Also, don't get caught up in too many one-on-one mentoring sessions, unless you're in a sterile military environment, like a classroom with open doors.

What about the situation where you live in the same dorm complex as students? Some people have the perception that you can't be sociable or friendly without violating policy or the Uniform Code of Military Justice. That is clearly not the case — you just can't be unprofessional.

When I first arrived at Goodfellow, I took a space-available room while waiting to move my family down from Washington, D.C. The room was flat in the middle of the officer student dorms. After a couple of days, everyone knew "a spy was in the camp."

Eventually, they learned I didn't bite. In fact, a couple of courageous lieutenants invited me to one of their outside dorm parties. I assure you, I remained "the colonel," yet I was able to discuss many experiences I've had over the years, advise

Observance committees close with style

Commentary by Capt. Eric Bass

Social actions

Super effort and participation allowed all Reese observance committees to close in conjunction with the end of fiscal year 1996.

All of the special observance committees combined into the 1996 Multi-Cultural Heritage Committee for one final event, held in September.

The committee exhausted all of its funds in providing a multi-cultural celebration for Reese personnel and their families. Free door prizes were donated by stores from Lubbock, the commissary donated a cake, the club provided outstanding food, Roscoe Kahumoku provided live Hawaiian music, and D.J. Duane Hurd mixed it up with a variety of music styles.

Remaining funds by the MCH committee were donated to the Company Grade Officer Council's Thanksgiving Food Drive.

Even though all Reese special observance committees are closed, there is still weekly information published in the Roundup recognizing contributions made by all in the form of "Equal Opportunity 101," here on page five.

Anyone can provide equal opportunity trivia questions and answers for publication by submitting a letter to 64 FTW/SA with your name, question and answer. The name is published along with the information provided.

Walking the tightrope

(Continued from Page 3) them on the intelligence career field, and share many of the hard lessons I'd learned. I would also occasionally strike up a conversation with them in the gallery. I am confident that no one ever got the perception I was having an unprofessional relationship.

Relationships can remain professional if we just use common sense and don't put ourselves in a compromising position. Some of the warning signs of a professional relationship going unprofessional include using first names, excessive "non-shop" conversations and going to purely social outings together. The general rule is to keep the conversation on shop and you'll be OK.

It is absolutely essential that supervisors mentor subordinates. These young troops need our guidance and perspective on military life and, most of the time, there is not adequate time in the office or the classroom to accomplish this. Take time out in the club, at the gym or on the ball field to mentor — just keep it professional.

Mentoring vs. unprofessional relationships — it all comes down to common sense.
