The Death of Infants.

How peacefully they rest, Cross-folded there on his little breast, e tiny hands, that ne'er were still before, But ever sported with his mother's hair, Or the plain cross that on her breast she wore. Her heart no more shall beat, To feel the touch of that soft palm :

That ever seemed a new surprise, Sending glad thoughts up to her eyes, To bless him with her holy calm; Sweet thoughts that left her eyes as sweet. How quiet are the hands That wove those pleasant bands! But that they do not rise and sink With his calm breathing, I should think That he were dropped asleep; Alas! too deep, too deep Is this his sluu ber!

Time scarce can number The years ere he will wake again. He did but float a little way,

Down the stream of time. With dreary eyes, watching the ripples play, Listening their fairy chime; Ne'er felt the gale; He did but float a little way. And putting to the shore,

While yet 'twas early day, Went calmly on his way, To dwell with us no more; No jarring did he feel. No grating on his vessel's keel; A strip of silver sand Mingled the waters with the land Where he was seen no more! O, stern word, nevermore!

Full short his journey was; no dust Of earth unto his sandals clave; The weary weight that old men must, He bore not on the grave. He seemed a cherub who had lost his way, And wandered hither; so his stay With us was short, and 'twas most meet
That he should be no delver in earth's clod,
Nor need to pause and cleanse his feet,
To stand before his God.

Enthusiasm in a Good Cause.

He was enthusiastic, too; Now whether this were false or true, Or good or bad, must be referred To the fixed meaning of the word. If to be warm and wisely zealous, Be what is meant, then plainly tell us, Did not the State of things require The ardor of this heavenly fire?
