The Disinthralled.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

He had bowed down to drunkenness An abject worshiper; The pulse of manhood's pride had gone, Too faint and cold to stir; And he had given his spirit up Unto the humblest thrall; And, bowing to the poison-cup, He gloried in his fall.

There came a change—the cloud rolled off And light fell upon his brain— And, like the passing of a dream That cometh not again, The shadow of his spirit fled, He saw the gulf before— He shuddered at the waste behind— And was a man once more.

He shook the serpant's fold away, That gathered round his heart, As shakes the swaying forest oak Its poison vine apart; He stood creet—returning pride Grew terrible within; And conscience sat in judgment on His most familiar sin.

The light of intellect again Along his pathway shone, And reason like a monarch stood Upon its golden throne; honored and the wise once mor Within his presence came, And lingered oft on lovely lips His once forbidden name

There may be glory in the might That treadeth nations down-Wreaths for the crimson conqueror-Pride for the kingly crown; But nobler in that triumph hour The disinthralled shall find When evil passion boweth down Unto the godlike mind.

The Death of a Doubter.

e vats chercher un grand Peu-etre."--- RABELAIS, (dying Over the dark, dark sea I must go, for the hour has come; But where shall my wandering spirit rest In its final home?

My hope is dim perhaps, From the rock of faith I am driven, No shining light in my clouded breast, Shall I rise to the Christian's world, With the pure and good to dwell, To live forever in joy and love ?— I can not tell.

Shall I be hurled in wrath To the penal flames below, For endless years to suffer and sin? It may be so.

What if this vital force
Should be spent, when the last breath flies,
And thought and feeling vanish in night, As the lightning dies!

Or what if the conscious soul Should be dammed, as was taught of old, To live in the body of bird or beast, Years manifold!

Into the gloom I go, With perhaps alone before The great sea rolling all around,

The earth lies warm behind, And my heart clings to its flowers, But a merciless hand is pushing me on To my last hours.

Farewell! my eyes now close On the light of certain day, And into the dark of death my soul Plunges away.
