Director describes 'controversial' play as 'not even PG-13'

By Rachel Brown
Texan Staffer

After the cancellation of "Nice People Dancing to Good Country Music" last January due to questions over its content, why would WTC drama director Michael Endy decide to restage the play?

"It's a fun play," replies Endy. "It's for and about common people," he added. "It's 'Cheers' in Houston."

He also noted a more serious reason, saying that as an acaademic institution, WTC felt it had a responsibility to discourage censorship and encourage intelligent conversation in the community.

Last January, two phone calls to a member of the play selection committee of the Ritz Theatre prompted the cancellation of the play. Items questioned included that the play takes place in a bar and that a man and woman live together without being married. The play's dialogue contains also some profanity.

Regarding this, Endy calls the play "not even PG-13," and noted, "Other plays performed in the past by WTC could be considered much more offensive."

In the present production, he has changed profanity "which had no real use" to hecks and dangs in order to lighten the play.

According to Endy, "Nobody who read the play was offended.

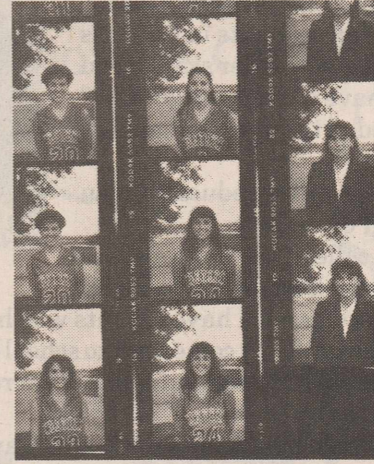

People rejected it based on a blurb in the newspaper, and judging a play based on one paragraph is at best dangerous."

He added, "The function of the drama department is not to upset people but to help people have fun and enjoy plays. The play is a comedy about five people in transition who wind up sorting their lives out in Houston, Tx."

Coping with depression is aim of campus event

By Chris McKamie
Texan Staffer

Mental health professionals from WTC will offer local residents and students the opportunity to learn about the signs and symptoms of depression as part of National Depression Screening Day.

WTC's chapter of PTK will sponsor the program, which will be held Thursday, Oct. 6.

Participants at the WTC Depression Screening will hear a brief talk on the causes, symptoms, and treatments of depression followed by a short video. Individuals will complete an anonymous written screening test of depression symptoms and have the opportunity to discuss the results with a mental health professional. The free program will be held in the Student Center from 8 a.m.-noon, 1-5 p.m., and 7-9 p.m.

National Depression Screening Day, which highlights Mental Illness Awareness Week, was developed by Harvard psychiatrist Dr. Douglas Jacobs. Last year, this four year old national effort attracted more than 56,000 people to 1,300 sites across the country. National Depression Screening Day inaugurated the concept of screening for a mental illness.

Depression strikes more than 15 million Americans each year.

Faculty member recalls heyday of NASA

By Sandra Hall
Texan Staffer

Where were you on July 20, 1969, when man first stepped onto the moon? It's a rhetorical question for most traditional-age college students since they weren't born yet.

But ask Jack Price, WTC government instructor, and he'll say, "I was sitting in my living room in Houston watching the lunar landing with four other NASA employees."

Price was employed at NASA from 1966 to 1971 and witnessed many historical events—including Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin's famous first steps—which most of us have only read of.

He was at NASA following the Mercury suborbital and orbital missions and during the final Gemini consecutive orbital missions as well as all of the Apollo lunar missions which included the first moon landing.

His position in the Crew Systems division involved monitoring contracts for the firms which manufactured the life support systems of the astronauts, including their backpacks and spacesuits. He later transferred to the personnel division.

In addition to these duties, Price also volunteered for overtime operational experience, during which he transported messages between the director's office and mission control during many of the famous space flights.

Fresh out of the military service, Price was in Houston when he learned of the position at NASA. "The majority of the work force at NASA was under 35 and very highly educated," he remembers. "Of the 4,500 to 5,000 employees, virtually every one was highly motivated and devoted to the space program objectives."

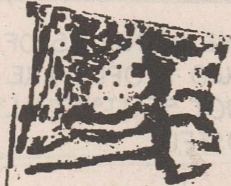

With the Vietnam War in full force and a great deal of political unrest and uncertainty, the Apollo program represented what Price calls "one of the few bright spots in an otherwise dismal decade."

He remembers it also as "a very exciting place to be."

He credits the success of the space program during this period to the support of the American public as well as that of the three consecutive presidential administrations of Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon.

In addition, he recalls the 1967 Apollo mishap in which three astronauts—Gus Grissom, Ed White, and Roger Chaffee—perished on the launch pad when an electrical spark ignited the pure oxygen environment of the capsule during a routine pre-flight check. Price notes that this tragedy led to consideration of a pure oxygen versus oxygen/nitrogen environment and initiated more extensive emergency back-up procedures to protect future astronauts.

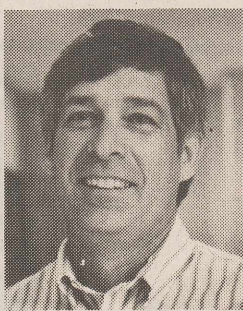

In regard to the degree of fear and unknown factors the astronauts were forced See PRICE, page 4

Feeling a little down about college? Here's a pep talk to help...

By Britt Canada
Associate Professor

After the first couple of weeks in a semester, some students begin to wonder if going to college was the right thing to do. The homework starts piling up, the first round of tests are taken and maybe one or two of their friends drop out. Next thing you know, they may consider leaving school themselves. This is seen as the easiest solution to the problem.

'...the yearly salary difference between a high school graduate and a college graduate is from $19,840 to $31,420.'

Why am I here? This is a question that we all must answer. I teach Computer Science courses and I often tell students in my class "Learning to use computers is not easy, but it is a good career skill. If you can do something that others cannot, then you have a marketable skill." You ask, "In college, you gain skills that are needed to survive in today's world?" Easy jobs do not pay well.

What is a college education worth? The value of a college education can be measured by skills learned or dollars earned or respect.

Most parents want their children to attend college. Sometimes, the recent high school graduate refuses to go to college because the parents did not go to college and they are doing OK. In my classes, I have parents who have come back to school because they want to be an example for their children. They come back to school because they want their children to realize that a college education is important and valuable. It increases their self-esteem, pride and respect. You may know someone who has done this.

In the Sept. 5 issue of The Dallas Morning News, there was an article on the average earning of people with different levels of education. In 1993, the average hourly wage for a high school dropout was $7.87, a high school graduate could expect $9.92. Working 2,000 hours a year (40 hours a week times 50 weeks), a high school graduate could expect to make about $19,840 a year.

to $15.71 on the average. So the yearly salary difference between a high school graduate and a college graduate is from $19,840 to $31,420. This is a sizeable difference, especially when you multiply 40 (the number of working years) by the $11,580 difference.

Education is one of the great equalizers. A person who has little money and the willingness to learn can vastly improve their lot in life.

Millions of people in Texas have low incomes and low education levels. Many are caught in the never-ending cycle of poverty. They must work to pay the bills, never have time to improve their job skills and are never able to advance. Many of these people are hard workers, but they worked with their bodies and not their brains.

Learning is hard work. It takes discipline and responsibility to study when others are going to parties. It takes perseverance and patience to do math homework when others are watching TV. Yes, getting an education is sometimes difficult, but the payoff is great. A little bit of hard work or extra effort can make a big difference in future earnings.

Western Texas College is in a unique location to serve. The instructors at WTC want the students to succeed. Unfortunately, instructors cannot force students to learn. Instructors provide the information and students do the learning. Learning is hard work, but the payoff is great.

A good education can help you earn more money, provide you with a job that you can be proud of and increase your self esteem. You may be that person who is from a family that has never had anyone go to college or that single mother who wants to improve her job skills or the father who wants to encourage his kids to go to college by going to college himself. You may be a recent high school graduate who really doesn't know what to major in or you may know exactly what you want to be. In any case, getting a good education has big payoffs for today and in the future. So, when the classes start to get a little difficult, hang in there and remember that you are building your future.

'Threesome' enjoyable, but adults only

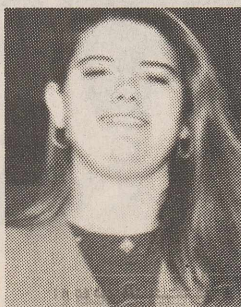

By Lindsey Northcott
Texas Staffer

"Threesome" is an erotic comedy about three college students who start out as the best of friends and end up becoming lovers. This movie seemed to be made primarily for college students and is definitely not intended to be shown to children.

"Threesome" is a very emotional movie. Throughout, you are feeling the feelings of three people who care a lot about each other. This movie will make you laugh in places, but it will also make you cry. It shows the struggles dorm students go through together, but also the fun times they can have. "Threesome" also shows how two friends deal with the other friend's homosexuality.

The acting is done very well and the characters are believable. They make you want to know more about what exactly is going on with their friendship. Lara Flynn Boyle does an excellent job portraying the cute, seductive, fun-loving best girl friend. She seems to truly feel what her character, Alex, is going through and she makes it become real for the audience.

Stephen Baldwin plays the hip womanizer who becomes the object of desire for his gay best friend and roommate. His character, Stuart, is very true to life. He acts and reacts like most young people his age would react.

I think "Threesome" is a movie which most college students would enjoy watching. College students would appreciate the things which happen during the film more than the "normal population."

Video

"Doppelganger" is an exciting thriller which will keep you half way confused. It is hard to understand unless you stay with it until the very end. The movie is not very believable, like most other "horror" films.

There is one scene at the end that is totally unreal. Drew Barrymore does a good job acting. She plays both a sweet, innocent girl and, as usual, she shows also how well she can play a sexy seductress.

Her co-star, George Newburn, plays a struggling screenplay writer who falls in love with his new roommate, portrayed by Barrymore. The audience starts to feel sorry for him because he is just as confused as they are throughout the whole movie.

The movie plot itself is not very believable. It doesn't explain what a doppelganger is until halfway through the movie, hence the confusion. The storyline is hard to follow because you never know when Holly (Barrymore) is going to be the "nice" girl and when she is going to be the "bad" girl.

"Doppelganger" is a good movie to watch if you enjoy figuring out mysteries. I would not recommend allowing young children to watch it since I don't think they would understand it. If you have a tendency to scare easily, don't watch it alone, because a lot of freaky stuff happens, especially towards the end of the film.

'Mortal Kombat II' meets expectations

By Mike Hughes
Texan Staffer

After much wait, the ever-popular fighting game "Mortal Kombat II" is out for the SNES and it certainly lives up to the hype.

Acclaim did a remarkable job transferring the coin-op version to the home cart. Very little was lost in the graphics and all of the players and moves were kept intact.

Game play is amazingly smooth and fast. All six buttons are used to give the gamer a lot of playability. The digitized voice is as good as I have ever heard in a home cart.

The best news for SNES players is this time all of the blood and gore that made "Mortal Kombat" famous were left in and you don't need a code to get to it. Each player has a couple of brutal fatalities, a humorous "babeality," and even a merciful friendship move to master.

The tournament road this time ends with Shao Kahn instead of Shang Tsung. The voyage also does not include the dreaded endurance matches but is not really noticed because of the 14 progressively tougher foes that must be conquered to become the victor.

A lot of options are available to handicap better players when playing head-to-head competition. The head-to-head tournament features of "Super Street Fighter II" are missing, however.

The only problem with "MKII" is not in the game but with the instruction manual. It does not list any of the combinations for the fatalities or other finishing moves. They must either be figured out by trial and error or obtained through the purchase of a game magazine.

Also, if you really want to master the game, a joystick or programable pad is a huge help.

to overcome, Price explains that they were. "by nature, willing to take the risk and knew the consequences." He adds that these men, were all former fighter pilots who had been in compromising situations before and "realized there were ways of getting out of trouble if they only kept their cool."

Although the spaceshuttle Challenger disaster in 1986 was a major setback to the space program, Price remembers NASA experiencing an "identity crisis" well before due to a post-Apollo "divergence into several different areas." These included Apollo applications (for other unspecified space missions), the Skylab Space Station, and interest in a mission to Mars.

Price states that he doesn't know where the space program will go next. He notes, however, that with the United States being the first nation to place a man on the moon, and the former Soviet Union holding the space endurance record, both countries have expressed interest in a manned space station and an extensive mission to Mars.

Price's memorabilia collection from his years at NASA includes a replica of the plaque which was left on the moon by Apollo astronauts, various certificates of recognition, and a commemorative coin composed of aluminum which was on board Apollo 8 (the first manned lunar flight). He is also left with the memory of famous men—the courageous astronauts—he once shared a goal with.

Baptist Student Union aims for campus growth

By Diane Rodriguez
Texan Staffer

A new face on campus this semester is Cliff Cooper, the new Baptist Student Union director.

Cooper, currently the pastor at North College Avenue Baptist Church here, says he plans to get more students involved with the BSU this year than any year before.

He has lived in Snyder for two years and became the BSU director as of Aug. 1. He has already conducted a "Howdy Party," which took place Sept. 1 at the Baptist Student Center. He has also conducted a "See You at the Pole" last Wednesday at the flagpole in front of the campus.

Cooper plans to have three or four more fellowships which will be open to everyone. In addition, the BSU membership will soon be naming its officers. Also, there is a free lunch served every Wednesday from 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m. at the BSC, and all students are welcome to attend.

Cooper graduated from Wayland Baptist University in 1984. He married his wife, Cheryl, in 1982. He has two children, Cassie, 10, and Clint, 7. He graduated from Southwest ern Seminary in 1990, where he earned his Master of Divinity Degree. Since leaving the seminary, he has pastored two other churches: Afton Baptist Church in Afton and O'Brien Baptist Church in O'Brien.

Cooper notes members of the Baptist Student Union will have many opportunities to broaden their horizons. Opportunities include the chance to go on summer missions, traveling to different parts of the world.

Home missions are served in the U.S. only, while foreign missions are served all over the world. Other opportunities may include a Bible study for all students.

The Baptist Student Center is open every day during the week. On Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, it is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. On Wednesday, the center is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The hours are set so students can attend church services.

In addition, BSU students are willing to give rides to church services if a ride is not available.

Phi Theta Kappa names board, makes plans

WTC has named its executive board for Phi Theta Kappa this year.

PTK is the only nationally recognized honors society for junior colleges. Executive board members are Ben Felan, Barbara Chappmen, Chris Gayle, Jennifer Beard, Jason Moorman and Micheal Hess, all sophomores from Snyder. Others are Matt Mickly, a sophomore from Claude, and Andrew Bert, a sophomore from Lovington N.M.

Plans for the Phi Theta Kappa include assisting with College Day Sept. 29. It will be from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. in the Student Center.

Also, PTK plans to host a Depression Screening Day Oct. 6.

Officers also have planned to go to the Leadership Conference for Texas and New Mexico in Austin Oct. 20-22.

Many other activities are planned for the fall and spring semester, notes sponsor Mary Hood.
