

Raids no longer alien to Permian Basin

EDITOR'S NOTE: Recent reinstatement of Border Patrol raids on illegal aliens has had a broad effect. This is the first of a six-part series.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

From a distance, the rising sun in Midland is reminiscent of daybreak in the Sierra Madres, framed as it is between the towering peaks of steel and concrete, though one vast difference exists — its reflection is caught in girder and glass and scattered in a multitude of directions.

On the morning of March 5, 1981, the glare descends on a construction yard in the downtown area, leaving four sets of eyes squinting within a cement truck which pulls inside to unload laborers for another in a seemingly endless line of days of sweat and thirst and aching muscles.

One employer, three employees — four persons who had struggled side by side for months. And yet entire worlds separate them, for two are Americans, the other two illegal Mexican aliens living and working in the United States in defiance of federal immigration laws.

Since April, 1980, when the U.S. Attorney General's office imposed a ban against the raiding of private employment sites by the United States Border Patrol in order to assure an accurate census count, the two Mexican nationals had lived and worked without fear of being apprehended. The ban, they realized, virtually shut down Border Patrol operations in Midland-Odessa, as well as elsewhere beyond the U.S.-Mexico border.

APPREHENSIONS dropped 70 per cent in the 92,000 square mile Marfa sector alone. The Cuban refugee crisis and fuel shortages further hampered Border Patrol operations. Only along the mud of the Rio Grande did the possibility of capture still plague mojados — wetbacks — but they had successfully made the journey northward and now felt safely harbored against apprehension by la Verde — "the Green." After all, they felt, they were committing no crime, unless it was wrong to put callouses on their hands, to seek a chance in life, hope for the future and for the families they had left behind in Mexico.

But something had happened Jan. 15, 1981, that on this day was to affect their lives forever. Perhaps they were aware of the events that had transpired in Washington, but probably not. Even if someone had told them, they likely would have continued working the construction site rather than return to the hopelessness born of economic disaster that awaited them in Mexico.

SO WHAT IS IT that is so different about this morning? The ban has been lifted.

The Big Spring Border Patrol Station again is engaged in "detail" Raids.

The ignition switch is no sooner turned off when a cactus-colored van pulls up behind the truck and two Border Patrol agents jump out. They approach the vehicle while all four are still inside, and ask who is in charge. The employer responds. The agents tell him they are there to check for illegal aliens. He does not resist. Had he, the agents simply could have obtained a court order to allow them within.

They question the three laborers, all of whom are brown-skinned. Two can produce no citizenship identification. It is obvious they are "wet."

One agent approaches the side of the truck where the laborer of Mexican-American descent sits. "You speak English, boy?" he demands.

Voters pass school bond

By LOREN BERGER
Staff Writer

Results of Saturday's school bond and board trustee election proved there was little indecisiveness among Midland voters who gave overwhelming support to Ann Page and Gary Hopper, Place 3 and 4 candidates, and a $6.6 million bond allowing construction of two new elementary schools and high school improvements.

While results from the six polling precincts were called into city council chambers, MISD School Superintendent Dr. James Mailey and board members Ed Runyan and Bill Jackson stood by expressing relief as incoming figures began to follow a favorable course.

Proposition 1 on the school ballot, which called for construction of a new elementary school in northwest Midland and one near the De Zavala Elementary School site received 64 percent favorable review. Proposition 2, the allocation of $1.05 in improvements to Lee and Midland high schools was passed by 57 percent of the voters.

chase to direct their votes toward the school bond issue.

"I believe the people in the community have recognized our needs," Mailey said, adding he was elated the school bond had received such favorable approval. "I felt Proposition 1 would pass but I didn't feel as strongly about Proposition 2."

Mailey said positive press coverage of the bond issue was in part responsible for its passage, in addition to voters being allowed to approve or strike down a two-part bond. This was not the case in 1979 when a $10 million bond lumped elementary school construction and high school improvements together on the same ticket. The previous bond was overwhelmingly rejected by voters due to opposition over the school district's proposal to combine both high schools.

"The community was telling us they wanted to maintain two high schools," Mailey said. Thus, voters in this election expressed their support for continuing high school maintenance.

City Council contests 'not even close'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

When it came to the final minutes and the last count, the races for two places on the Midland City Council weren't even close.

Carroll Thomas had more people standing in his line for Place 3 when the polls closed than did his opponents, George Veloz and John Phipps. And Jesse Hatfield found himself with a bigger stack of votes over that of his opponent, Giffert Alstrin, for Place 1.

Final figures showed Thomas to have more than doubled his winning take by garnering 3,359 votes to 907 for Phipps and 1,633 for Veloz.

Hatfield, with 4,270 votes, grabbed almost three times more affirmatives than did Alstrin, who received 1,509. Gordon Marcum II, unopposed for a third two-year term to Place 2, gathered 4,675 votes — not quite unanimous when looking at the 6,652 voters who pulled levers on the voting machines Saturday.

The city races this year were quiet compared to those last year when a record-setting 10,081 persons voiced their opinions.

Thomas, who has been sitting in the Place 3 chair for six years, had been challenged on the basis that new blood was needed. Both Phipps and Veloz had served on the city's Planning and Zoning Commission. Phipps focused his campaign to a need for more parks while Veloz turned to developing the stagnated south and east sides of Midland.

Shortly after hearing the final vote tally, Thomas remarked that he had been apprehensive about the voter turnout, hoping instead to see 8,000 to 9,000 voters.

The immediate problems he foresees the council attacking are the lack of downtown parking and need for coordinating traffic. "I hope we can solve the problems we have now and make some intelligent decisions."

In the current term, Thomas has riveted his attention to the budget and how the city spent its revenues. He plans to continue his watch on the budget, nor will he change his stance on keeping the tax rate at its current level.

Although a housing shortage apparently could dampen the city's growth, Thomas said, "The city doesn't have any business being in the housing business. That should be left to private enterprise."

Overall, he noted, the "campaign has been the most enjoyable I've had with the people who volunteered to help and contribute."

Veloz congratulated Thomas, but added that he doesn't plan on hanging up his political hat.

"I feel very fortunate being able to compete in the political process and in the voters who had enough trust in me to vote for me. I feel very good about the election."

Redevelopment of the south and east sides is a pet project that Veloz doesn't plan to dissolve. Instead, improving that area is a goal he will work toward, and already has offered his help to Thomas.

Phipps couldn't be located for a comment.

In only two polling places did

city council

Thomas lose his wide lead on the race, and in those cases Veloz was the top vote grabber. Those places were at South Elementary School and at the fire station on North Edwards Street in northeast Midland.

Place 1 was an open seat this year with incumbent Doris Howbert stepping off the council. Alstrin, president of Western State Bank, was first to file. Hatfield, owner of No. 1 Sports Place, stepped into the contest near the end of the filing period.

Both men pointed out their concern in getting a handle on Midland's booming growth now, and in resolving the downtown parking and traffic problems.

In acknowledging his landslide win, Hatfield commended "a lot of people who worked real hard to make it happen."

Living with violence

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The week just ended must have aroused many mixed emotions among all Americans.

First must have been shock, followed immediately by concern for the president's condition — then anger at the perpetrator, followed surely by admiration at the president's bravery and good humor during and after the event. Finally relief as the news that he was not fatally injured became certain. The president's signing of a bill canceling higher dairy-price supports at 7:15 the morning after the shooting spoke louder than words of his amazing stamina and his capacity to recuperate.

Our nation's history of assaults on presidents has been shocking.

HEARST

Four of our presidents have been killed while in office, namely Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield and William McKinley and, of course, in our own time our beloved young President John F. Kennedy. President Reagan is the fourth president in this century to be the target of an unsuccessful assassination attempt.

It is often argued that living with violence is a condition of a young country. That theory has it that the United States might be considered 18 years old, thus more violence-prone, while older nations like England, France and Germany experience fewer tragedies.

But in all our assassinations and attempted assassinations no clear patterns as to motivation have emerged. Nor have assassins shown any political preferences.

Tighter control over the licensing of handguns certainly is desirable.

Inmate recaptured after drowning, shooting officials

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A maximum security inmate apparently drowned the warden of a state prison in a shallow ditch Saturday after fatally shooting the manager of the prison's farm, a Texas Department of Corrections official said.

The prisoner, a 30-year-old convicted robber who was serving a 12-year term, was captured within 15 minutes of the incident, which occurred shortly after noon Saturday at a farm area of the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections.

The body of Wallace M. Pack, 54, warden of the 3,000 inmate unit, was found face down in a shallow ditch in about two feet of "dark, muddy water," prison spokesman Rick Hartley said.

He said there was no blood on Pack's body, but he had apparently been beaten and drowned.

The body of prison farm manager Maj. Billy Max Moore, 49, was found about 40 yards away near his flatbed truck. He had been shot once in the head, Hartley said.

"Apparently, after Mr. Moore was fatally struck," said Hartley, "the inmate became involved in an altercation with the warden. They scuffled from the original scene, across a road, down an embankment and apparently into the water," a shallow ditch that runs through the prison farm in an area known as "the bottom."

Both men were pronounced dead at the scene. Their bodies were taken to Houston, about 75 miles south of Huntsville, for autopsies.

Officials declined to identify the inmate, but said he had permission to work outside the prison walls and was assigned to the farm shop, where tractors and other equipment were kept.

Hartley said the incident involved only one inmate, and said all was quiet Saturday evening at the Ellis Unit. The unit houses 137 death row inmates, as well as other maximum security prisoners.

"The inmate had been taken from the farm shop of the unit to the garden shop because he had violated a disciplinary rule," Hartley said. "He was in the truck with Mr. Moore."

Hartley declined to say what rule had been violated.

"At the same time, the warden drove up and apparently, the inmate bolted out of the truck and that's when the scuffle took place."

Raids not alien to Permian Basin

"Get out."

IT IS ONLY after anxious moments and the display of specific identification that the Mexican-American is told he is "clean."

As for the two Mexican nationals, they are herded into the back of the van and taken away without further comment, leaving the employer standing there dismayed, bewildered, angry. They had worked hard for him, been honest and dependable. He had paid one more than $13,000 last year, and now, in an instant, they are gone, and in all the confusion he failed even to get an address to mail their final wages to them.

This is a true example of a scenario that is happening more and more frequently in Midland, and it is having an effect, in some degree, on everyone.

People are angry. Employers are angry because they are losing their labor. Mexican-American activists are angry be-than a criminal problem, we might begin to find a solution to it," says Ruben Sandoval, San Antonio attorney active in Mexican-American civil liberties. "The majority of people don't come over here to create crimes; they come over to work."

No one close to the situation denies that. It's just a matter, they say, of enforcing U.S. immigration laws, which have been established by the federal government to protect its own people. The feeling exists — and has been accepted by the general populace — that Mexican nationals who enter the country illegally contribute to the spread of disease, deny citizens jobs which rightfully belong to them and lessen the overall quality of life for everyone.

"THE LATEST Harris poll I saw claimed 78 percent of the American people want to see immigration laws enforced," notes Marfa Border Patrol Sector Chief Hugh Rushton. "We've received excellent cooperation from the owners and operators of the places we've checked in Midland-Odessa."

While sources indicate 7-10 million aliens are in the U.S. illegally, no one knows for certain how many live and work in the Permian Basin, but it runs into the thousands. A Marfa Border Patrol spokesman indicated there are at least 5,000 in Midland-Odessa alone — perhaps many times that number — and as a result the metropolitan area again is a primary target area for immigration service operations.

"For nine months," says Big Spring BP supervisor Charles Hensley, "all we could do was check the jails and the freight trains.... There's not much you can do if you can't go where they live and where they work.... Our instructions now are to focus on employed aliens and their places of employment."

Since the lifting of the ban, says Hensley, the Big Spring station has noted a vast increase in apprehensions, from 70 in December to 229 in February, with Midland responsible for 80 percent of the total.

But while most persons tend to look at the illegal alien situation in terms of sheer statistics — how many are here, how many are caught per month, how much is lost in revenue through welfare programs and displaced jobs — the real problem is on an inner level, involving the personalities and dreams of Mexican nationals, Border Patrolmen, employers and all American citizens.

"THE SITUATION is really affecting everyone," says Oralia Corrales of Midland, active in Hispanic affairs. "There's such a tremendous demand for the type of work they do."

Sandoval agrees. "The wages they work for and the jobs, most people who are citizens wouldn't take," he says. "And the citizens wouldn't take the abuses as well."

But the root of the problem — as well as the potential for solution — lies not within the United States but within the Republic of Mexico, where poverty and malnutrition are accepted ways of life. The population is growing at a rate of a million and a half per year. Almost one million additional persons enter the work force every 12 months. In many of the remote villages, from which a sizeable number of mojados migrate northward, every-day living is a matter of sheer existence.

Wages average less than $6 a day. Several generations of families may live in the same mud-bricked home, grinding maiz (corn) for tortillas over the same hand-chiseled metate. The morning, noon and evening meals consist of variations of three basic foods — tortillas, frijoles and chiles (peppers). The tortilla is the basis of the Mexican cuisine, serving as bread, plate and even napkin. Frijoles provide protein, and the chiles — which add the hot, explosive quality associated with Mexican food — supplies the vital nutrient vitamin C.

While these three basic foods used in conjunction provide the necessary nutrients for extended survival, they come to many villagers only at the expense of long hours in the blazing sun, which often dictates whether crops yield or die.

Furthermore, everyday life in the more desolate areas of Mexico is so primitive that a villager may share his clay-floored jacal (adobe hut) with chickens or goats.

Survival, according to authorities on the interior of Mexico, is the one word that best describes life for a man and his family.

"We came (to the United States) because there's a better way of living here," said one illegal alien now residing in Midland.

Even the harshest of critics don't deny that.

Countdown to begin today for Friday's shuttle launch

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The new space shuttle Columbia sat like a pampered beast on its pad Saturday awaiting the countdown for a flight that will return Americans to space for the first time in six years.

"It looks like we still have a good shot at picking up the countdown on Sunday," said launch director George F. Page after assessing readiness reports from his crews on Saturday.

The countdown is scheduled to begin at 11:30 p.m. EST today for launch at 6:50 a.m. Friday, at the same Cape Canaveral pad that sent men to the moon.

If all goes well, astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen will ride the Columbia into space, orbit earth 36 times and land the ship 54½ hours later like an airliner on the dry desert lake bed at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

The flight will herald a new space transportation era, different from anything that's been done before. For the first time, in either the American or Soviet programs, a spacecraft can be used more than once.

Success would mean that no longer will satellites have to be sent into space atop $45 million rockets with a one-launch life. Instead, the shuttle will haul up satellites three at a time, unload them into space, and return to earth — perhaps bringing back satellites to be overhauled. The shuttle, pure and simple, is a cargo ship — a space freighter that can be rented by private firms for $35 million a trip.

It is also potentially a weapon in America's defense arsenal, a carrier of exotic military hardware to a future command post in the sky. The Pentagon has reserved the entire 60-foot cargo bay on 13 of the first 30 operational flights.

The first mission of the Columbia is strictly a test to see whether it can fly and land as it's supposed to, and whether its doors open and close properly after they are exposed to the temperature extremes of space. The astronauts will leave their pressurized cabin only if emergency repairs must be made while they are in orbit.

There has not been an American in space since three astronauts aboard a capsule left over from the Apollo program linked up with two Soviet cosmonauts aboard a Soyuz spacecraft in July 1975.

Young and Crippen were still at the space center in Houston on Saturday, practicing various phases of the flight in a computerized simulator and cramming with books for the big final test to come. They will fly here Wednesday to make practice runs on the Cape landing strip that will serve as an emergency runway in case they have to abort in the first minutes of flight.

The shuttle, its huge external tank and the two booster rockets on each side, were surrounded on the pad by service structures as workmen swarmed over them to remove excess equipment and all loose material.

All food, clothing, film, cameras and television equipment the astronauts will use were loaded aboard the orbiter.

cause they feel anyone brown-skinned is looked upon as a potential wetback. Mexican nationals are angry because once again they must live in fear.

THE BORDER Patrol may bear the brunt of the anger, but not rightfully so. Most persons who are knowledgeable in the immigration field say it is a situation in which right and wrong, good and evil, are so deeply enmeshed they are indistinguishable. Rather, it is a matter of intensely personal circumstances involving two nations millions of people, and, most tragically, the sacrifices and abuses endured by mojados in seeking what American citizens take for granted.

Effective answers to the problem are difficult to determine — if indeed they exist.

Answer Line
By Franchelle Moore P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702

This is being written not so much to ask a question, but to transmit a feeling that we hope you will share and will look into in order that an improvement may be made.

We have a beautiful city, but the approaches to it leave something to be desired.

Take, for example, the underpass on South Big Spring St. The debris that clutters it is far from beautiful. And the rights-of-way on the highways leading into our city seldom if ever get "groomed" or maintained.

And the street lights at the Garden City Highway and Interstate 20 hardly ever are all working.

These are the functions of the maintenance department of the State Highway Department, but for one reason or another they have been neglected in the past.

May we request your intervention and influence to correct these matters? — Max A. Schumann Jr.

ANSWER: The department will be notified. We will see what develops.

I have a question for Answer Line. Is there any business establishment in the Midland area that buys old newspapers?

It seems to me that when everyone is talking about conservation, destroying clean newspapers is certainly a waste.

I have called eleven insulation and drilling mud companies and no one is interested.

Where do the Boy Scouts and other youth groups dispose of papers taken in their paper drives? Many thanks for your help. — Jean Reid

ANSWER: Answer Line knows of only one establishment in Midland which purchases old newspapers. This is B&D Manufacturing Co. of Midland. The address is 3103 Front St., and the telephone number is 694-8854.

Could you tell me something about "angel dust"? — Mrs. F.B.

ANSWER: This information on "angel dust" comes from the Health Insurance Institute.

There's nothing angelic about "angel dust" — the drug phencyclidine (PCP).

And parents should be warned about its possible dangers. In fact, it can cause persons to become violent against others — and themselves — a study at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit has found.

Drs. M. A. Fauman and B. J. Fauman said three in four users who used the drug at least twice a week for a period of six months showed a strong tendency towards violence.

The researchers said this violence occurred while the PCP users were under the drug's influence.

Coast Guard on losing end in drug war, Bentsen fears

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Coast Guard may be losing its ability to cope with drug smuggling along the Texas coast, says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

"They tell me they intercept about 10-15 percent of the drugs that come in by sea," the Texas Democrat said. "And yet the Coast Guard has many duties, you know — intercepting drug traffic is only one of them — and we're seeing a massive increase in drugs coming into the state."

In an interview prepared for broadcast over Texas television stations, Bentsen noted that because of budget problems, the Coast Guard now uses boats it would not certify for anyone else.

He said the average age of the Coast Guard's boats is 27 years, while it should be about 25 years.

"You have the average enlistee has only been in there two years, so I'm asking the General Accounting Office to take a look at it, a survey, to see what we should do, perhaps cut back on some of the other responsibilities," Bentsen said. "Or else we're going to have to put more funds in it, in order that we can truly intercept some of these drug smugglers bringing in these drugs."

In a letter to Milton J. Focolar, acting comptroller general, Bentsen asked for an update of the year-old GAO evaluation of the Coast Guard.

"One of my immediate concerns is the capability of the Coast Guard to control drug smuggling, especially along the Texas coast," he wrote.

Autry tribute to conclude

ANDREWS — Finale of Andrews' and Mayor Louis Miller's tribute to Gene Autry, the singing cowboy movie star of the 1930s, '40s and early '50s, will be held this afternoon in the Andrew Civic Center and in the Andrews Senior Center.

But the 73-year-old Autry, a native Texan, is not showing up at the Autry fair, though Miller, an ardent Autry fan, is billing the tribute as the "largest exhibit" of Autry memorabilia anywhere in the world. He has declared Autry "An American Hero."

Andrews' mayor has decreed that today is Gene Autry Day.

The collections of Autry memorabilia is set up in the Andrews Civic Center.

Films to be shown this afternoon include "Head for Texas," "Ghost Ranch," "Cow Town," and "Blue Canadian Rockies."

Saturday's fare included such feature films as "Tumbling Tumbleweeds," "Oh, Susanna," "The Old Barn Dance," "In Old Monterey," "Gaucho Serenade," "Melody Ranch" and "Twilight on the Rio Grande."

The celebration here is Texas' first tribute to Autry, who was a contemporary of Roy Rogers, the King of the Cowboys.

Autry was born Sept. 29, 1907, in Tioga, southwest of Sherman in Grayson County in Northeast Texas. His "big break" was his recording of the song, "That Silver-Haired Daddy of Mine."

He was featured in 93 films, left the Hollywood scene, and became a multi-millionaire whose array of ownerships includes the California Angels professional baseball team.

McCamey pair wins debate

MCCAMEY — The brother-sister duo of Brad and Lynette Bolen won the University Interscholastic League's debate tournament at Big Lake by verbally overpowering the Christoval team.

The Bolen team debated this proposition: "Resolved, that the federal government should initiate and enforce safety guarantees on consumer goods."

The brother is a junior, and the sister a sophomore at McCamey High School. They are children of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol Bolen of McCamey.

Placing in debate were Tommy Taylor and Stanley Anglin. They netted a third place.

Daria Day placed third in spelling.

Benefit horse show slated

GARDENDALE — The Gardendale American Quarter Horse & All-Breed Show, which is put on annually to benefit the Gardendale Volunteer Fire Department, will be held at 8 a.m. May 9 in the Gardendale Arena.

Riders, workers and spectators can get a hearty day's start with a $2 breakfast at 6 a.m. in the community's new Fire Building. And the day's fare will be closed out with a barbecue feed in the Community Building. Tickets are $4 each for adults and $3 each for children under 12 years of age.

Riders and horse fanciers interested in entering the show may write to the Gardendale American Quarter Horse & All-Breed Show, P.O. Box 37, Gardendale, Texas 79758 or call 366-5230, 366-3438 or 366-6109, according to D.J. Ray.

Showers of the Over-All High Point horse will be awarded a silver tray. And money and trophy buckles will be given to showers of horses which rate high point in the show's various divisions.

LAMESA — E. Lee Harris' exhibit on nematology earned top honors in the Regional Science Fair here and assured him of his third trip to the International Science and Engineering Fair.

Harris is a senior at Lamesa High School.

His exhibit on nematodes, "bugs" which attack plants' root system and beset cotton yields, assured him of a trip to the fair at Milwaukee, Wisc., on May 11-16.

His science fair exhibits in his freshman and junior years also took top honors and gained him trips to the international exposition. He did not compete in the fair in his sophomore year.

Few appear at area redistricting hearing

LUBBOCK — A regional hearing for possible redistricting of state senatorial and U.S. congressional districts drew a low turnout here Friday as few West Texans showed up to voice opinions on the plan.

Harry Clark and W.H. "Bill" Collins represented the Midland Chamber of Commerce at the hearing conducted by a subcommittee of the State Legislature's Committee of Redistricting, of which Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland is a member.

Collins, who is chairman of the Midland Chamber's legislative committee, appeared before the panel conducting the hearing on senatorial redistricting, recommending District 25 (represented by Snelson) remain as it is, with the addition of counties to the south, if expansion is necessary to meet population requirements.

Clark, who heads the Chamber's subcommittee on redistricting, went before the congressional hearing group. For the last 20 years that Midland County has been included in the 19th Congressional District, he said, it has been and continues to be "quite comfortable in the district," and would prefer to remain in the district represented by Kent Hance of Lubbock. Clark continued to say Midland, the second largest city in the district, has had a fine relationship with Hance and with former Congressman George Mahon of Lubbock.

With only 11 persons testifying before the two panels — four in the senatorial hearing and seven in the congressional hearing, only a few changes were suggested.

Former Lubbock City Council candidate Paul Looney told the senatorial panel the 28th District, represented by E.L. Short, was badly drawn as it separates two heavily populated areas: Lubbock and Odessa.

Looney suggested Ector County be dropped from the district and Bailey, Lamb, Hockley, Hale, Floyd and Howard counties be added from districts 31 and 32.

Looney said the change would put Lubbock in a more centralized location so representatives would have more contact with their constituents.

Patrick Munn of the Odessa Chamber's redistricting committee addressed the congressional panel about destroying boundaries which split the city into two separate districts and allowing Odessa to become part of Hance's 19th District. Munn added that El Paso's population increase should allow for the further west district to remain strong after dropping the Odessa constituents.

Of 42 counties reporting population losses in 1980 census reports, 27 are in the South Plains or in the Panhandle. As a result, the three state senate and three congressional districts in the region will probably have to be expanded to comply with voting rights laws, which require a near equal number of constituents per representative. Because of the laws and the population shifts in those areas, redistricting hearings in major metropolitan areas like Dallas and Fort Worth later this month are expected to bring more heated discussions than the West Texas meeting.

House panel hears budget suggestions

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Members of the House Budget Committee, faced with the impending task of recommending where to apply the budget ax, heard Saturday from a parade of witnesses praising and condemning proposed fiscal cuts proposed by the Reagan administration.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright of Fort Worth brought six other members of the powerful panel to his hometown just two days after the Senate voted 88-10 to support President Reagan's plan to force $87 billion in budget cuts over three years.

Representatives of various programs, including those that help paraplegics, the mentally retarded, senior citizens, the unemployed and children, emphasized the "cost effectiveness" of their programs to the committee, which begins marking up a proposed budget Monday.

"This is an economic issue. We want to take care of children so people can work," said John Widner of the Day Care Association of Tarrant County. Widner told the committee to resist the temptation to be "pennywise and pound foolish."

Jim Grey, of the National Paraplegic Foundation, said some programs for the handicapped are cost effective and help the handicapped while others are "absurd." Grey suggested evaluating all programs by determining what a handicap costs society.

Jack Patton, head of Operation Outreach in Fort Worth, a Carter administration program designed to help alienated Vietnam War veterans, said the "cost of deleting this program will exceed the cost of continuing it" and will severely cut services available to troubled veterans.

Frank Barron, president of the Tarrant County AFL-CIO, said Reagan's proposed cuts threaten Americans with "returning to the dark ages of the 1930s."

Barron was especially critical of plans to trim public service jobs programs and changes in unemployment compensation. But he admitted the committee had a difficult task ahead.

"If I had a quick fix solution, I would be sitting up there," Barron said, pointing to the committee.

Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the committee, replied, "I can assure you there are no quick fix solutions from where I'm sitting."

Jones announced Friday a package of alternative economic proposals put forth by House Democrats that he said was aimed at eliminating government waste and inefficiency.

Other witnesses, however, voiced their support for the Reagan proposal, which includes tax cuts and incentives to stimulate the private sector of the economy.

Bill Serrault, board chairman of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce, warned the committee that if present efforts to revive the economy do not succeed, "we may not get a chance again, ever."

Serrault said Reagan has the right idea by supporting "tax cuts, a balanced budget and a stable monetary policy."

Jones asked Serrault if cuts in tax deductions for "business lunches" would be acceptable.

"If we cut the school lunch program by 10 to 15 percent, could we make the business lunch 85 percent deductible?" he asked.

Library worker overcomes handicap by helping others

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

To many persons, the mentally retarded are mere burdens on society, to be tolerated and sometimes avoided, without worthwhile qualities to offer the world.

Karan Smith of Midland is "bound and determined" to prove them wrong.

"The mentally retarded," she says, "need some encouragement; they don't need to be brushed away. I realize most of them aren't as capable as I am, but you've got to give them a chance to see what they can do."

Karan is not a social worker, psychologist or even a special education teacher.

She is mentally retarded. But rather than allow herself to plunge into self-pity and permit others to provide for her, she has risen above her handicap to help those in her predicament, to assist anyone "in need."

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS old, Karan lives alone and follows a lifestyle not unlike most persons. She works at Midland Public Library five days a week, drives her own car, and maintains her own household, except, as she jokes, "when the pipes burst." But what does set her apart is the intensity of her involvement in several groups whose aims are to assist the retarded, the deaf and others who are disabled.

She sits on this day in the offices of Midland Association for Retarded Citizens and responds to questions with a vocabulary surprisingly literate. Her chestnut hair is a sea of waves above large-framed glasses which veil blue eyes. When she speaks she often uses effective hand gestures, and an unmistakable alertness is evident in her scarlet-tinged features.

"I told my boss one time, I don't think you really realize what a handicap is," she recalls. "A person really doesn't know what a handicapped person goes through unless they've been through it themselves."

Karan knows. Born in 1955 in Dallas with cerebral palsy in addition to mental retardation, she entered school in regular classes in Baird. It was not until later, when her family moved to Coleman and Carlsbad, that she was placed in separate classes. In 1974 she graduated from the special ed program at Midland High, and when her parents moved from the Tall City more than a year ago, Karan decided to stay. For here was home, her job, and, most importantly, the one place she felt the most good could be accomplished for others.

"I'M REALLY interested in retarded people because I think they need somebody to show them what they can do," she says adamantly. "They need some encouragement, because if you brush them away, they're going to think you don't want them. This is my main goal in life — to help people — and they've either got to accept it or not accept it. That's why I'm here."

Karan is helping through her involvement in Midland Advocates, in which she serves as president. The organization, comprised of a score of retarded citizens along with two advisors, is involved in service work for the retarded. The council initiates social activities and sponsors programs on such topics as rape prevention, job training, and group home living. Its ultimate goal, she says, is to assist MRs in relying on self as much as their handicaps will permit.

"A parent, friend or anybody else (shouldn't ever) say a retarded child can't do something, because the child might pop up someday and show them he can do it," she notes. "My dad told me I couldn't learn to ride a bicycle, but I proved him wrong."

Karan's involvement in the self-advocacy group dates back to March of 1980, when the organization's state coordinator spoke in Midland. That was all it took, she says, to make her decide she wanted to assist others.

PERSONS SUFFERING from other kinds of disabilities also have piqued her interest, stirred compassion within her. The desire to communicate with a deaf friend led her to attend to sign language classes at Midland College — but Karan didn't stop there. In her usual, ambitious fashion she organized, promoted, and headed a signing class for residents of Apache Flats, an MR living facility.

"I just made up my mind I was...going to work with the deaf," she explains.

Karan also is involved in Midland Community Partner Committee of the U.S. Council of International Year of the Disabled Person. She jokes, "They should've invited me (to the organizational meeting) because I could've given them a shorter name."

MCPC, whose members are appointed by the mayor, is designed to assist persons suffering from all types of disabilities, whether physical or mental.

While Karan enjoys helping people — even in directing them to books in the library — she has other interests as well. Some are fun, she says, but others just "need to be done."

"Since I have a house to take care of, I like to pull weeds," she says, smiling. "I don't really like to do it, but I have to if I want a pretty yard." She also crochets, knits, does needlepoint and kicks up a heel or two in country-western dancing, time permitting.

Lately, she says, her involvement in aiding others hasn't left much time for her own recreation.

But one gets the feeling that's a small sacrifice. After all, she says, there are so many persons out there who need someone to help them, someone to care.

Karan, for one, is doing her part to make their lives a little more bearable.

Karan Smith shelves books in Midland County Public Library, where she has worked six years. "My main goal in life is to help people," she says.

Soviets may be readying intervention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials said Saturday a Soviet military airlift into Poland is heightening concern that the Soviet Union may be ready to intervene in force to crush Poland's independent workers movement.

"It all started with a troop exercise, but there is activity consistent with a move to go into Poland," said Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. "There is a lot of activity going on that is not consistent with a maneuver by the Russian troops that was supposed to end last weekend."

Weinberger told reporters at Heathrow Airport near London that "although there is no definite indication of a move to go in, the exercise is going on longer than planned and the air supplies being moved would seem to be more than those required for the units involved in the exercise — much more."

Warsaw Pact forces have been taking part in the "Soyuz 81" maneuvers for the past 15 days.

In Washington, U.S. officials, asking not to be identified by name, said the Soviet airlift is bringing in ammunition, helicopters and other war supplies to a long-established Soviet base in Poland.

"There are unusual movements of Soviet forces that are causing great concern," one official said.

"The situation as we regard it bears the closest scrutiny," Deputy White House Press Secretary Larry Speakes told reporters. "It bears watching."

The officials said that the situation is essentially unchanged from Friday when State Department spokesman William Dyess announced that the Soviet Union and other communist nations of the Warsaw pact had so increased military readiness in Eastern Europe that their forces could move into Poland "at any time."

"Their capability is unquestioned," an official said. "It is not clear what their intentions are. But we are concerned and we're looking at it closely."

Haig finds roadblock on first leg of trip

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., arriving in Cairo on the first leg of his Mideast mission, met some resistance Saturday to his proposed Persian Gulf "strategic consensus" stretching from Pakistan to Egypt.

The U.S. perception that outside threats to the Mideast are of global concern is not accepted by the Egyptians, said an Egyptian official who attended talks between Haig and Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly.

The official, who declined to be identified, said there was opposition to stationing U.S. forces in the Sinai Desert as a peacekeeping presence. He also ruled out a formal agreement for U.S. use of the Ras Banas navy and air base on the Red Sea for a rapid deployment force.

The official said this would be the same as giving the Americans a base, which the Egyptians are unwilling to do. "We believe this would not help the cause of peace," he said, adding Egypt sees outside threats to the Middle East as a regional, not global, issue.

But he said Egypt would be willing to let the United States store equipment and train people in Egypt to be ready in the event of a threat to the region. He said the United States should concentrate on building up its navy in the region and on helping other countries strengthen their armed forces.

Strong wind terrifies passengers

CHICAGO (AP) — Some injured and frightened passengers wept after a powerful downdraft sent their DC-10 jetliner hurtling a reported 2,000 feet toward Earth, but one passenger said there was "no real panic."

Just before the United Airlines jetliner dropped, the pilot warned of possible turbulence, asking passengers to fasten seat belts. But some people were caught in the aisles and bathrooms — including a man and his 13-month-old daughter.

Twenty-one of the 154 people aboard the United Airlines flight were injured, and seven remained hospitalized Saturday. The plane made an unscheduled landing in Chicago after hitting the turbulence Friday.

The big jetliner, bound for Newark, N.J., from Los Angeles, flew into a powerful downdraft over central Illinois, according to a United Airlines spokesman, hurling passengers about the cabin.

"There was duck and green goddess salad all over the place," said 35-year-old Ted Jurasik of Jersey City, N.J.

Striking coal miner accused

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

A striking United Mine Workers coal miner has been charged in the shooting death of a non-union mine worker in the first fatality apparently related to the 160,000-member union's walk-out, officials said Saturday.

The fatal shooting, in Pennington Gap, Va., occurred Friday night following an apparent argument in a bar, said Charles Janeway, a Lee County Sheriff's Department investigator.

The victim, Roy Manness, 25, had just completed work at the T&T Darby Coal Co. mine and had gone to a local tavern, Janeway said.

Raymond Lester, 41, was arrested at the scene and charged with murder and malicious wounding. Bond was set at $50,000 in cash and $100,000 in property, Janeway said.

The victim's brother, John Manness, 23, was wounded in the incident, Janeway said. Manness was listed in fair condition Saturday at the Lee County Community Hospital, in the southwestern corner of Virginia.

Janeway indicated the shooting was strike-related, but refused to say so specifically.

"I won't get into that, but I'll say this. The accused is employed by Westmoreland Coal Co., which is a union mine," Janeway said. "The victim and his brother are coal miners, but do not work for a union mine. The victim had been working that day. He still had his work clothes on."

Murder charged

ODESSA — Sandra Fay Gertz, the 23-year-old common-law wife of Odessan Ricky Dale Ray, 24, has been charged with murder in the wake of Ray's death late Friday in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital.

Initially, the woman had told Ector County sheriff's deputies that a burglar had broken into the house and twice shot Ray in the head as he lay in bed about 3 a.m. Thursday.

But late Thursday, she was arrested for attempted murder after she told lawmen that she shot her husband, who suffered two .22-caliber gunshot wounds to the head. The attempted-murder charge was dropped Friday, and Ms. Gertz was charged with murder.

She was released under a $25,000 bailbond, which was secured by Andrews attorney G. Bert Smith Jr.

Circle closed for bike-a-thon

The circle around Midland College will be closed from 1 to 5 p.m. today for the American Diabetes Bike-a-thon, according to city officials.

Persons who have been using the circle drive around MC as a bypass route from Garfield Street will have to find another thoroughfare. Garfield Street currently is closed while the bridge over the Northwest Drainage Channel is rebuilt and paved.

CRMWD reports deliveries up

"Customarily I come out and spend about two minutes making all the poses they want," James Robison jokes to the crowd in regard to a photographer. "But I don't want to look like a crazy man. And these guys are sharp, you know." The click of the camera at this instant brings a grin to his face, leaves laughter echoing through Chaparral Center.

James Robison holds a Bible aloft before an audience of almost a thousand, proclaiming that it teaches Christians are "supposed to be involved in the decisions of our country."

Evangelist blends unique brand of religion, politics

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

The voice is southern, flavored by "old time religion," and fueled with fire like that of a modern-day prophet crying in the wilderness.

It has been stilled, for now, by the reverence of a prayer from the midst of a group huddled deep within the shadows backstage in Chaparral Center. Although the head is bowed, the eyes closed, his is the profile that rises out of the masses, as though a tower of strength before a crumbling church.

It is 7 p.m., and in less than an hour the man with brown hair shrouding the furrowed brow will ascend the podium, face the glare of lights which will turn his tieclasp into silvery tinsel, and assume instant command of a thousand persons with an almost charismatic presence that evokes deeply submerged emotions.

In firm drawl reduced to a hush he will solace adults and children with expressions of hope, peace; in gradual crescendo suddenly exploding into Baptist, fist-pounding thunder he will pierce their collective conscience, leave them straightening in their seats, as he portrays the coming sword of judgment he believes will descend on a nation which has forsaken God.

Then he will become James Robison, the fiery 38-year-old evangelist. But for now, he is still James Robison, the man.

"I THINK I'M a truth teller, a proclaimer of God's word, a messenger to help the churches. I think He will allow me to preach to national leaders and world leaders, (bring) a word of truth to business leaders. Some will listen skeptically, but all who listen will be affected, hopefully in a positive way."

He sits slumped in a folding chair, his legs crossed at the thighs, and clasps his club-like hands across his kneecap. Within arm's reach lies his ebony-backed Bible. He clears his throat for clarity before speaking, and though a backwoods humor often seeps through, a certain hesitancy, self-consciousness, reigns over him, and he admits the press sometimes has looked upon his ministry with disdain. When a photographer's strobe blinds him momentarily he stiffens, fumbles with the lapel of his trim blue suit, and lokes, "I don't wanna sit here sprawled out like a drunk."

But there is a deep-rooted seriousness about him as well, in the way lines gash his forehead and his fingers seek the hand-notated pages in his Bible when questions are posed to him.

"You can't separate me from my faith, from my faith in the Bible," he says with confidence. "I believe the Bible is the word of God. I believe we have an absolute authority in the word of God. I don't believe it needs to be forced on anyone; I believe it needs to be proclaimed. There'll definitely be some who may not agree with me, but I'll defend their right to disagree. I don't want to make people believe what I believe — I just want to share what the Bible says."

IT IS 8 P.M., and Robison's 6 foot, 3 inch frame is poised over the speaker's podium, hands positioned along the wooden sides as though gripping a person's shoulders and demand his utter attention. The crowd is disappointing tonight, and as he looks out across the 7,000-seat facility he sees empty chairs, empty rows, empty sections. But also faces, young, old, lower class, upper class, and his dark eyes focus themselves on first one, then another, as though it were a face-to-face exchange.

When his voice booms — or whispers — over the public address system, it speaks to the heart, attacks the conscience, implores decisiveness. The hesitancy with which he approached the news media is gone. His words and demeanor take on the zeal of a turn-of-the-century tent evangelist tempered with intellectualism.

"Fire and brimstone" preaching ignites, blazes, dims to a bare spark awaiting to be re-kindled. Index finger tenses, gesticulates; hands sweep above head in an arc. Fist is grim anger crashing against the podium, then the same appendage become gentleness as it holds aloft at arm's length an open Bible.

The fingers curl around the pages with a definite tenderness, and the action speaks for itself — "Don't believe it because I say it; believe it because it's in here."

And the people listen.

"There's a lot of preachers right now that don't understand why another preacher would say y'all oughta be involved in political issues," he says quietly. "Don't be unkind to 'em. After all, we've been (taught) all our lives, 'separation of church and state'. When it comes to issues the church is supposed to play dead."

"The fact is, the Bible teaches that we're supposed to be involved in the decisions of our country. All you have to do is pick up the Bible."

The book becomes a powerful shield of black between him and the audience, and it captivates every eye as his voice lowers to a mere whisper. "The men in this book affected the decisions of the political rulers of the day, whether they were kings, dictators, or whoever they were. And if you study the Bible, you'll find that many of...the spiritual men of God became rulers of the land."

His eyes narrow, seem to become like piercing arrows aimed at the faces, and the PA system absorbs his cry: "We the people of God need to become involved in the things of our country or we're not going to have freedom to be involved very much longer!"

"NOW WHY DID I become interested (in politics)?" he repeats quietly the reporter's question as he relaxes backstage. "Well, you might say, frankly, because of personal reasons. First of all, I saw the degradation of the country. But then I saw me possibly losing my freedom...It was my confrontation with a major television station on the fact I had spoken on homosexual (sins) as it is in the Bible. (I wasn't trying) to be hateful to them, but believed it to be a very dangerous thing."

The 1979 confrontation was intense. WFAA-TV banished Robison from the Dallas-Fort Worth television airways, claiming his denouncement of homosexuality meant equal time would have to be granted advocates of the lifestyle.

Conservative Christian sentiment was aroused throughout the nation. The evangelist gained widespread support when he rebelled at what he felt was erosion of First Amendment rights of freedom of speech and freedom of religion.

"It really frightened me," he says. "I was threatened by the undercurrents that (implied) if I said ANYTHING, that I'd be put off all the stations 'cause there'd be sort of a co-op against me. I felt like I had to do something — I had to take a stand."

Robison's stand was to spur himself onward into a vast television ministry aimed at reaching America, saving it before the day of judgment falls.

"I think it's the responsibility of all people to be involved, a citizen's responsibility in a democracy," he stresses with urgency. "He has the privilege to change his leaders, and therefore, he has a responsibility to do it in a knowledgeable (manner). He shouldn't just believe what everybody says. He ought to get in there and learn. He ought to listen to the candidates, attend seminars and read books."

When Robison begins talking in depth about Americans and their nation, a touch of submerged tragedy surfaces in his voice, and sadness forms rays at his eyes.

"This is the last real stronghold of world freedom...We have the opportunity not only of freeing people who need help but of sharing the gospel to all the world. And if we fail, then it is possible there will not be the strength or the freedom to preach the gospel."

Three to five years, says the evangelist, is all the time the nation has to strengthen its position militarily. It has lost the respect of most of the world because less than totally honest policies have been pursued. Relations with our allies are strained because our leaders have failed to keep their word.

"If we turn to righteousness and stand for God, we'll be spared," he

Visiting wardrobe master cares about every detail

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

"This fits really well, we shouldn't fuss with it. Do you have long white gloves?" William Gonzales inquires, looking at Sherry Simpson with a quizzical glance. "You must have long white gloves," he adds and his words carry a quiet imperative.

At 2:30 p.m. April 25 the curtain will rise at Theatre Midland for the first public performance of Midland College's 1981 opera endeavor, "The Merry Widow." Two other public performances are slated for 8:30 p.m. the same day and 7:30 p.m. April 26. Tickets are $8 for adults and $5 for students.

The premiere $35 per-person invitational performance is set for 8 p.m. April 24 honoring outgoing MC president Dr. Al G. Langford and his wife.

No doubt Ms. Simpson will be wearing long white gloves with her white, trimmed with black chorus gown.

"I want to give you a wrap for Act III," Gonzales says, looking around for one.

The first one he picks up is yellow and, after placing it over Ms. Simpson's shoulders, he looks dissatisfied but says, "You wear this only for Act III."

He then begins rummaging around for a more suitable wrap, when Ms. Simpson says, "Where are we going in Act III?"

Pulling out a dark red one, he whisks the yellow wrap off Ms. Simpson's shoulders and replaces it with the red, saying, "You'll be in Maxim's...very elegant. Ah, that's nice."

It's apparent at this point that Gonzales knows his business. And as wardrobe master for the San Diego Opera Company, his job is creating a special look for each of those he outfits.

His recent Midland trip was to ensure the proper fitting of the San Diego Opera Company costumes that are to be worn in the Midland production. At this point in his day's fittings he had just finished with one of the principals, soprano Jane Huddleston, who has the role of Anna. Her costumes were originally designed and worn by Metropolitan opera star Beverly Sills in the 1977 production which was taped for the Public Broadcasting System.

Working with the costumes is "really a recollection for me," said Gonzales, who was involved in the original production. The actual costume and set designer for the production was Carl Toms of the San Diego Opera Company.

"The costumes were quickly rented out by the New York City Opera Company and have been around the country several times since then."

Although the costumes have been through a lot, "they were built to last. They still look very good."

The costumes were actually built by Grace Costumes in New York City, Gonzales explained.

"I think it's going to be a really good looking show," Gonzales said. His only concern is "it will all look good in this theater because it (Theatre Midland) is much smaller."

When a company is playing to a house large enough to seat 3,000 or 4,000, "you exaggerate the style so it will go across an orchestra pit. I hope that exaggeration will blur here."

Taking care to see to every detail, Gonzales finishes his session with Ms. Simpson.

He explains, "It's the accessories that complete the costume and really finish it off. The details give it a special look."

He checks off each item carefully. Dress, jewelry, wrap (dark red, of course), hat, gloves, shoes.

"Try to find a long hair pin. Do you have another strand of pearls that you can place right here? Yes, that's it. Good," Gonzales says with a smile as he hands her a mimeographed sheet.

"Can I give you a Xerox of the hair style?"

Sherry Simpson, left, is told by costumer William Gonzales to wear a pair of short black pumps with her chorus dress for the Midland College production of the opera "The Merry Widow" slated for 2:30 and 8:30 p.m. April 25 and 7:30 p.m. April 26 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The costumes are the property of the San Diego Opera Company for whom Gonzales is the wardrobe master.

Production manager Jackie Comola puts last minute touches on the Permian Civic Ballet Association's sets for the 8 p.m. Friday Lee High performance of "Coppelia." Sets were designed by Doris Bumpas. Tickets, priced at $10 for reserved seats, $6.50 for general admission and $2 for students and senior citizens, may be purchased at the door beginning at 7 p.m. For more information or to purchase tickets call Mrs. Jack Hopper at 683-6809.

'Three's Company' no longer Somers' crowd

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Suzanne Somers, who has been disputing all season with the producers of "Three's Company," has been dropped from the popular ABC comedy series, it was learned Friday.

NRW Productions declined to exercise its option on Miss Somers' services next year. Jenilee Harrison had already replaced her earlier this season, after Miss Somers' appearances were limited.

She had been one of the trio of stars of the series, including John Ritter and Joyce DeWitt, now in its fifth year, but a salary dispute had caused the producers to all but write her out of the show. Some weeks she was on for a minute and some weeks she was not on at all.

"There were too many problems involved," said Bernie West, a partner in NRW Productions. "There was too much unhappiness. She's been passing around T-shirts saying 'Free Suzanne.' Well, she's free now."

Miss Somers was out of town but a spokesman said, "Suzanne said ABC couldn't help it. The soothsayer made them do it." This was a reference to the revelation that ABC once had a psychic on its staff.

The spokesman said Miss Somers would now go ahead with plans for a situation comedy on CBS, probably as a mid-season replacement later this year.

A CBS spokesman said the actress is under contract to the network and that there was an ongoing relationship for movies and specials, and for a series as soon as she was released from her contract.

The dispute began last year when Miss Somers, then making $30,000 a week, sought a raise. At one point husband-manager Alan Hamel, himself a Canadian TV talk show host who known in Southern California for his role in supermarket commercials, demanded $150,000 a week and 10 per cent of the show's profits for his wife. After that, relations between the actress and producers worsened.

Mickey Ross of NRW contended that Miss Somers on at least two occasions failed to report for taping at the last minute. It was then that her appearances were limited to one minute and Miss Harrison was hired as a replacement.

"I feel they're trying to ruin my career. I really do," Miss Somers said in February. She said she feared the audience would forget her if she remained off the air too long.

Lightfoot performing in Odessa

ODESSA — Gordon Lightfoot, who has gained international acclaim both as a singer and songwriter, will appear in concert at 8 p.m. Saturday in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin gymnasium.

Lightfoot, who made hits of such songs as "Early Morning Rain," "Sundown," "Rainy Day People," "Cotton Genny" and "If You Could Read My Mind," has only recently received international acclaim although he has been a superstar in Canadian music circles for many years.

He has recorded 14 original albums containing 140 of his own songs plus five songs by other writers. Worldwide, he has sold 10 million records.

Concert tickets, priced at $9 for general admission and $10 for reserved seats, are available in Midland at the Midland College student activities office, Endless Horizon and both Music Haul locations. Tickets are also available in Odessa at the UTPB accounting office and Flip Side Records.

The seating capacity is only 2,500 so those who want to make sure they get tickets may be disappointed if they wait until the last minute to purchase them.

Mall displaying art by world's children

A unique display exhibiting life as seen through the eyes of children from countries around the world is on display at Midland Park Mall through April 20th in the J.C. Penney court area.

The "Showcase" is on a national tour this year, sponsored by the Texas Cultural Alliance, a non-profit organization.

The exhibit is the touring component of an international citizenship program called "Hands Around the World." This program encourages students to examine their lives and to paint pictures referring to their culture. These pictures are exchanged as gifts with foreign students.

The "Showcase" is composed of the best paintings from a collection of almost 3,000 paintings.

Pianist's performance brightens sad day

Monday was hardly a good day for a concert. The entire nation was off balance, trying to recover from an assassination attempt against President Reagan that almost succeeded.

The events of the day and the televised news coverage sent many back in time to 1963 when a similar tableau appeared on the screen from Dallas.

President Kennedy had been shot. It was almost like seeing the same nightmare twice, except this time the victim lived.

Two theories exist regarding what a performer should do in a case of this sort. One is the show goes on with no mention made of the tragedy. The reasoning is that people have come to escape and do not want to be reminded of what has happened.

The other theory also insists that the show goes on, but a reference to the tragedy can help ease the tension for the performer and the audience.

Monday night pops pianist Earl Rose chose the former.

His performance was the last Community Concert of the 1980 season. The 1981 season includes the Romanian Folk Festival, a Harlequin Theatrical production of "Camelot," the Warsaw Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra and the New Christy Minstrels.

Although Rose was extremely tense and had just come down with a noticeable cold, he made no mention of the day's events. It might have helped if he had.

Not that the concert was not enjoyable; it was. But it took Rose at least three selections to relax on stage. He hit several wrong notes throughout the concert, but he was more at ease as the evening progressed and thus covered his mistakes with more finesse.

His playing was adequate, but not generally inspiring. This may not have been all Rose's fault. Besides attempting to perform at the close of such a traumatic day, with a cold, the piano itself left much to be desired. It sounded flat.

When asked what he thought of the piano following the performance,

Rose said, "The piano was off in the higher registers which made the sound drop off."

He said it was very difficult to get the right sound out of it because it had "no colors" and did not hold its "tone." In short, it was flat.

Midland audiences go to be entertained and not to be critical of those performing. They want the show to be good. And it was Monday night, but it wasn't great.

Rose is the acting assistant musical conductor for NBC-TV's "Tonight Show," as well as composer, arranger and co-producer of featured songs for the Emmy Award-winning "Captain Kangaroo" television series.

As he said from the stage, being a part of these two shows "offers me the unique opportunity to go to sleep to my music at night as well as wake up to it in the morning."

And he played several original selections Monday night, including one very nice piece he calls "Love Theme in Search of a Motion Picture." His semi-serious while at the same time really joking suggestion that audience members write the powers that be and recommend it for a film theme song met with laughter.

This comment plus his humorous story about the trials and tribulations of trying to catch a bus at Houston Hobby Airport helped to relax the audience. Unfortunately both came after intermission and the latter at almost the end of the performance.

Other selections he played included "I Don't Know How to Love Him," "Morning Has Broken," "Love For Sale," "Just the Way You Are," "Bridge Over Troubled Waters," "Send in the Clowns" and a medley of Duke Ellington songs.

Born and raised in New York, Rose began his piano studies at the age of seven. A graduate of the Mannes College of Music in New York, Rose also has studied at UCLA and The Vienna

Earl Rose

School of Music. And he studied conducting at Juilliard School.

With all this training behind him, it would seem that his phrasing within renditions would be more defined. In several selections his timing seemed off and one received the impression that he was just playing notes.

As Rose said following the concert, "Simple is best."

And it is. But at times his playing sounded as if he was ad-libbing on the piano and puffing up the pieces.

However, all things taken into consideration, this reviewer withholds final assessment of Rose's ability as a pops concert pianist. After all, he mounted the stage Monday night with three strikes against him. And as the saying goes, "Three strikes and you're out."

Atlanta buries two more

Death toll now stands at 22

By NANCY KENNEY

ATLANTA (AP) — A city that has buried a score of young blacks mourned two more victims Saturday, as 125 searchers fanned out across rugged terrain seeking clues to the string of killings.

"Oh, Lord, please touch the murderers' hearts and let them stop these crimes against these children," said the Rev. Johnny Jones as white-uniformed nurses, wearing green ribbons symbolizing concern for Atlanta's dead and missing children, comforted wailing members of 13-year-old Timothy Hill's family.

Multi-colored flower arrangements filled the Mt. Moriah Baptist Church during a double service for Hill and his 33-year-old cousin, Jimmie Maddox, who died in a traffic accident Monday, the day Hill's body was fished from the muddy Chattahoochee River.

"How long will these attacks go on?" said Mayor Maynard Jackson at funeral services earlier in the day for Eddie "Bubba" Duncan, a 21-year-old retarded black man whose body was found in the same river last week.

"How long will the families of Atlanta be able to take it? How long will I, as mayor, be able to take it? How long will the police, working 24 hours a day, seven days a week, be able to take it? The answer is: as long as we have to.... We have no choice but to endure, to be tougher than those who would attack us," he said.

Duncan is the only adult on the list of a special police task force investigating the slayings of 22 blacks. The task force also is investigating the disappearance of two black youngsters.

A light-colored coffin covered with red, white and pink flowers held Duncan's body as his sobbing mother, Betty, was helped into Thornton Mortuary. He was buried on the hillside of a southwest Atlanta cemetery.

"Eddie's family today is citywide," said the Rev. Terry Moncrief, director of the Clark Howell-Techwood Baptist Center, in the housing project where Duncan lived.

Meanwhile, some 125 searchers spread out across an 81-square-mile area that encompassed stretches of the river where the two bodies were found. The area south of Atlanta included developed roads as well as dense, wooded areas laced with small creeks flowing into the Chattahoochee.

Searchers had lists of the clothes Duncan and Hill were wearing when they were last seen in March, as well as the clothes that one of the missing youths, 16-year-old Joseph Bell, was wearing when he was last seen March 2.

Hill and Duncan, like at least two other victims, were clad only in undershorts when their bodies were found.

Medical examiners said Hill, like most of the other victims, was asphyxiated before his body was dumped into the river. No cause of death has been established for Duncan, but authorities classified his death as a homicide because of similarities with some of the child slayings.

Also missing is 10-year-old Darron Glass, who vanished last September.

In other developments Saturday:

—Atlanta authorities said they will seek extradition of a 34-year-old black arrested in Hartford, Conn., last week as a fugitive from an Atlanta attempted robbery charge. Fulton County District Attorney Lewis Slaton said the man, Larry Marshall, may have known Timothy Hill.

"We will interview him because there is some indication he knew one of the victims," Slaton said.

But a spokeswoman for Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said the commissioner does not consider Marshall a suspect in the slayings.

—A source close to the task force said police have received information that as many as seven of the slain or missing youths were seen in the company of people who frequented a house known as a homosexual hangout.

"Police aren't going to say anything publicly until they have some evidence," the source said.

The source cited a report received by police that Hill had been spotted with a known homosexual about 10 days ago. But medical examiners have determined that Hill must have been dead at that time.

Investigators have speculated that there could be sexual motives in the string of deaths, although no physical evidence has indicated any of the victims were sexually molested or abused.

Some authorities also have speculated that the killer or killers "feed" on publicity surrounding the same day that a highly-publicized vigilante group armed with baseball bats and guns began patrolling his housing project.

Chaparral District honors its adult Boy Scout leaders

The Chaparral District of the Boy Scouts of America honored its adult leaders for their achievements in helping youth at its annual Leader Recognition Banquet Friday at the First Presbyterian Church.

Norman Henry, Chaparral District chairman, was the master of ceremonies for 110 adults present at the banquet.

Donald W. Teisberg, director of support services of the South Central Region, was the guest speaker.

A veteran pin for 50 years continuous service to the Boy Scouts of America was presented to P.K. Hurlbut.

The Award of Merit, the highest award given to an adult leader on the district level, was presented to Rosalee Smith, Bill Slattery and W.A. Gillum.

Ms. Smith has been a leader in Cub Scouting for five years. She has served on the district training team, was program director for Cub Scout Day Camp, Roundtable Commissioner, Den Leader Coach and Den leader for Pack 96 chartered by Burnet Elementary PTA. She also is a Sunday School teacher and is active in several civic projects.

Slattery has been a leader for 13 years. He presently is Scoutmaster of Troop 152 chartered by First Methodist Church. He has served as Cubmaster, Cub Roundtable commissioner, Scout Roundtable commissioner, Scoutmaster of the Year, Mr. Scouter of the year and in various positions within the district committee. He also is involved in PTA, Little League baseball and Lee High School bandoliers.

Gillum has been a leader for six years and is currently Scoutmaster of Troop 211, chartered by the Midland Optimist Club. He has served as Cubmaster, Webelos leader, commissioner, Cub Day Camp director and on various levels throughout the district committee. Other activities include past PTA president, Flag Football Association vice president, several civic committees and civic organizations.

The Chaparral District includes Midland and Martin counties. Doug Palmer and Gene Lantrips are Boy Scout executives in the district.

Charge downgraded to manslaughter

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The trial of a 13-year-old girl, who prosecutors say became a devil-worshiper after seeing the movie "The Omen" and shot her younger sister to death on Satan's orders, will continue on manslaughter not murder charges, a judge has ruled.

Superior Court Judge Mamoru Sakuma dismissed the murder charges against Kimberly Goytia on Friday, saying the prosecution had failed to show malice or premeditation.

Sakuma also ordered further proceedings in the Juvenile Court trial closed to the public and press, citing a new state law that opens juvenile trials in certain violent crimes, including murder but not manslaughter.

Lawyers for the Sacramento Bee said they would appeal Sakuma's order closing the trial, which is scheduled to resume Monday with the defense presenting its case.

Geoffrey Burroughs, lawyer for the Bee, contends the law says the case must be opened whenever a murder charge is filed. He also said the prosecution's case has received extensive coverage and it would be wrong to give the public "half a picture, and then shut it off."

Sakuma said he was opposed to closing a trial that has been open since it began more than a month ago but felt compelled to abide by the statute. He said the law does not permit public manslaughter trials.

To prove voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, prosecutors must show that the defendant shot her sister in the heat of passion, or during a dangerous act without intent to kill, the judge said.

Prosecutor Steve Secrest has argued that the girl shot her 11-year-old sister Stephanie on Feb. 3 in front of the family's apartment because she believe Satan had instructed her to do so.

The teen-ager had worshipped Satan since she saw the movie "The Omen" in 1976, Secrest said. She had many copies of the books "The Omen" and "Damien," he added. The central character in the books kills his relatives as they discover he is a son of Satan.

Defense lawyer Betty Rocker contends the shooting was accidental.

Third partial skeleton found on man's property

WEEKI WACHEE, Fla. (AP) — Investigators have found the partial skeleton of a third person on the property of jailed sex offender William Mansfield, but they do not yet know whether it was that of a man or woman.

Lt. John Whitman of the Hernando County Sheriff's office said a medical examiner identified the bones as human late Friday. The skeletal remains had been unearthed earlier in the day.

Further study was needed to determine sex, the examiner said.

Whitman speculated that the bones were those of a missing middle-aged woman, but would give no further details.

The skull, leg and knee bones were found under a foot of sandy soil beneath a trash pile, Whitman said.

The remains were being sent to a Florida Department of Law Enforcement laboratory in Tampa.

Robison says western civilization doomed apart from divine intervention

Persons flock toward the pulpit to "make decisions" as James Robison lifts an arm in leading a group prayer for their spiritual futures. The nationally recognized evangelist appeared in the Tall City Tuesday to deplore the dangers of humanism.

His fingers flip deftly the pages of his Bible with a rustling sound, until they come to rest on a passage in Jeremiah: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations."
He pauses for a moment, letting the quotation take its full effect, testing hearts. Then his voice penetrates, examines. "How many future prophets and presidents have we killed in the last nine years?"
Dead silence. Then the definitive fire of his rhetoric.
"God will not hold us guiltless for the blood of the innocent on our hands!"

THE FACT HE was not aborted, he tells the reporters in the shadows, is not the reason he feels a special sense of destiny. That comes from his faith. Rather, he says, it has instilled in him a certain feeling of privilege, in that he was granted the opportunity to live while millions of others were not.

"I always felt like a rejected child. I think I had all the trappings to be a problem to society, to people, rather than a help. But because God changed my life it's been a joyful experience."

Then his expression turns solemn, his voice foreboding. "The same people who cry out in behalf of the snails and the porpoises and the seals are the same ones who cry out to let us kill the babies."
He then relates, with effective metaphorical gestures, a story that is sure to bring tears to a congregation.

"The lady that just spoke got a call from a woman out here in West Texas who was hysterical — she was screaming. She was standing in the room with an aborted baby that wouldn't die and it had been trying to die for three hours. And it was CRYING. She went nuts listening to that baby die."

The sanctioning of abortions by the government, he adds, is just another sign of a troubled America sinking deeper into the mire by the minute.

"I believe unless we have a national spiritual revival, which naturally will come through the church, this nation's finished...Our system's in a state of turmoil. Our kids can't read or write or do arithmetic. They're trying to learn values, but whose values are they learning?"

"We've had some ideas forced on us that are not good in the education process — humanistic principles which say that man is his own source, that God is not important. The result of our rebellion against God is leading us toward a crisis, a nuclear confrontation. I think some radical, perhaps communist-inspired government might fire upon this nation. The Soviets are probably smart enough not to do it right now. Pretty soon, they may not care."

Apocalyptic visions seem inherent in Robison, and one does not doubt the tells the reporters. "If we refuse and rebel, God said you will be devoured by the sword. And I think we'll be devoured by the sword of God's judgment and the sword of the enemy."

THE MIDWAY POINT in his sermon has come and gone now, and yet the doors remain closed, the eyes still are fixed on the evangelist whose political involvement last year, he believes, was instrumental in ousting Jimmy Carter from the presidency.

Robison does not shun controversy, but thrives on it, attacks it with savagery. He fires a volley of harsh condemnations toward pro-abortionists, because, he says, persons such as they came close to denying him the basic, God-given right to live and seek fruition through spiritual and secular means.

"My mother didn't plan to have me," he says with sadness. "She was 41 years old and she went to three doctors to try to get an abortion. One doctor told her she might not even live through childbirth."

But he was allowed to live, he tells them, and displays his large frame as proof that for all time only one James Robison can exist.

"Now there's nothing special at all about one James Robison," he is quick to add, lest some may think him egotistical. "But there is something special to God about one unwanted child...Through (legislative) means we sanction the taking of life of millions of innocent, unborn infants. Now when does God look upon you as being important?"

United church only hope for world: Robison sincerity of his belief that the world rapidly is approaching Armageddon. "I think we're in the last days," he says bleakly, but his faith instills a ray of hope in his eyes. "How long those days are no man can predict. I can't say if it's three years, five years, 30 years. It could be today, tomorrow. I think the countdown has begun. Most people say western civilization is doomed. Historians say it's doomed. Politicians say it's doomed. Spiritual leaders tell me it's doomed. I say it IS doomed apart from divine intervention."

"WE HAVE THE answer," Robison assures the crowd as he clasps the open Bible. "It's not simply an ethic, it's not a philosophy. It's not simply good sound principals. The answer is a personal relationship with Jesus Christ."

And then, through the simile of his own ministry, he illustrates how the world may reject, shun, destroy those who decide to cling forever to "the answer."

"I've been a blessed preacher," he begins quietly. "I guess people would say kind of a successful preacher. God gave me a message to preach...but there's two things that might destroy me because of it: One, fear for my family, especially my children. I had to have my windows measured for bullet-proof glass last year. And two, knowing there'd be a lot of people, a lot of Christians, who wouldn't understand and wouldn't like me because of it."

He raises his head, stares into the thousand faces. "So what am I to do?" he asks them. Only silence in response, silence and anxious fidgeting. "I must preach what God put in this book, and in my heart, regardless of the consequences!"

THE "CONSEQUENCES," however, often mean tiredness, utter exhaustion. Five hundred crusades in 20 years, a dozen books, millions of miles and the constant uncertainty of what lies ahead take their toll on him.

"We schedule farther ahead than I can count. I don't go farther ahead than 18 months — there's too much in my life changes. I don't know what I'm going to do for 10 years; I didn't know last year I was going to be talking about issues the entire year, but I know God wanted me to. This year I'm doing crusades. I just closed a crusade in Jackson, Miss. I'll be in Huntsville, Ala., a week from Sunday. I'm very tired now. I don't rest during a crusade. I just got home Saturday and since then I haven't stopped."

Robison never intends to stop. He will preach till he dies, he says, because it is his life.

"This is a lifetime job, and it's too big for me — I have to have help," he sighs deeply. "I have a good staff, and I have to have God's help."

It is Robison's reliance on divine assistance, he notes, that sees him through troubled times, picks him up when he falls. And nothing short of a similar Bible-based faith reviving the Christian church, he believes, will salvage America for future generations.

He inhales deeply, his chest filling out his suit coat. "We tend to struggle against one another rather than reaching out to people in need," he says adamantly.

"As long as our church is divided then our ministry will be greatly limited. Social ills (have been) shunned by the church. Both of the assassins of the two presidents came right here from Texas, in Fort Worth where I live, and Dallas. There's people like this all over the world that need to be reached. A guy has to have a pretty low self-esteem to reach a point where he doesn't care what happens to him, what happens to others. (That shows) we haven't evangelized like we need to. In the church we're a weak body; we're a weak force. If we get together, we can make a positive effect."

IT IS 9 P.M., and outside, darkness reigns. But for a while, hope seems to cast a dim glow across the audience.

A fist slams against wood, stiffens the congregation. "I want to say to you that the revived church is the only hope the world has, the nation has!" he cries. Then the shadows seem to creep inward from the walls, sweep over the throng, and his voice is reduced to a murmur. "In light of that fact, the day looks dark."

Robison's dark, fiery eyes suddenly seem riveted into heart, mind, soul, and as his voice quietsens to a whisper, his Isaiah-like wrath pricks consciences with memories of sin to be forgiven, instills awesome responsibilities to be fulfilled, summons faith to give courage and sustain.

As the darkness swallows a thousand people as they file outward into a chilled night, more than a few find mutual warmth in the entwining of fingers, the clasping of palms. And someone prays.

Baseball opens Wednesday

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Tie a yellow ribbon around the 1981 major league baseball season, arriving this week in a splash of patriotic salutes to the 52 Americans who spent 14 months as hostages in Iran.

At least a half dozen former hostages will be throwing out first balls to start a season. Baseball begins the season with some trepidation because of a May 29 strike deadline set by the players. But the labor problems must take a back-seat, at least for the time being, as the sport stages a star-spangled return to the American sports scene.

PRESIDENT RONALD Reagan's hospitalization will prevent him from handling the first ball chores at Cincinnati Wednesday when the Reds host the world champion Philadelphia Phillies in the season's first game. As baseball's oldest franchise, the Reds traditionally get the honor of playing each season's first game.

Tom Seaver, hoping to bounce back from a so-so 10-8 season in 1980, will pitch for Cincinnati against Cy Young Award winner Steve Carlton, whose 24-9 record helped the Phillies win their first world championship last season. A capacity crowd of 55,000, including Commissioner Bowie Kuhn will jam Riverfront Stadium for the game, which marks the beginning of National League's 106th season.

At the same time as the Reds and Phillies are officially starting the 1981 season, a handful of spring training exhibition games will be played. The final spring exhibition, between the St. Louis Cardinals and their Little Rock farm club, is scheduled for Thursday when four games open the American League's 81st season and four more contests are scheduled in the National League.

The Thursday AL openers are Toronto at Detroit, Texas at New York, Oakland at Minnesota in day games and California at Seattle for the season's first night contest. In the NL, it will be Montreal at Pittsburgh, the New York Mets at Chicago, Houston at Los Angeles and San Diego at San Francisco.

ON FRIDAY, Atlanta plays at home against Cincinnati in the lone NL opener, while Chicago visits Boston and Kansas City plays at Baltimore in AL openers. All 26 teams will be under way by Saturday when St. Louis gets started at home against Philadelphia in the NL and Milwaukee plays at Cleveland in the AL.

At Pittsburgh, former hostage Regis Regan of Johnstown, Pa., will throw out the first ball for the game between the Pirates and Expos, and 50,000 miniature U.S. flags will be distributed to the fans.

On Friday night, the Braves will honor Col. Charles Scott of Stone Mountain, Ga., another returned hostage, and there will be a fireworks show after the game against Cincinnati.

Former hostage Rocky Sickmann, who visited the Cardinals' training camp in St. Petersburg, Fla., will handle first-ball duties Saturday in Busch Stadium when St. Louis hosts Philadelphia.

When the White Sox return home to Chicago April 14 against Milwaukee, hostesses Leland Holland, Rockford, Ill., and Sgt. Paul Lewis of Homer, Ill., will be honored. Representatives of World War I, World War II, the Korean and Vietnam conflicts will appear and 40,000 American flags will be distributed to the fans.

Milwaukee's home opener is scheduled for April 16 against Cleveland and the first ball chores will be handled by Sgt. Kevin Hermening of Oak Creek, Wis., another returned hostage.

BASEBALL HOPES the openers signal the start of another record-breaking season at the gate. The game, enjoying a surge of popularity in the last decade, has soared over the 43 million mark in attendance for each of the last two seasons.

But a labor crisis cloud hangs over the sport and unless negotiations can solve the tangle, baseball could be burdened with an unprecedented mid-season shutdown in late May. At issue is management's demand to require replacement players from teams signing free agents. The players fear such a system would restrict the marketplace which has produced a host of lucrative contracts since 1976.

Five new managers are on the job with Ralph Houk returning after a two-year retirement to pilot the Boston Red Sox. He succeeds Don Zimmer, who's moved on to the Texas Rangers. Frank Robinson gets his second major league managing chance at San Francisco and Frank Howard at San Diego and Gene Michael with the New York Yankees make their bench bows.

SEVERAL VETERAN stars go into the season shooting at important milestones.

Gaylord Perry, now with Atlanta, is just 11 victories short of 300 for his career and Philadelphia's Pete Rose needs 74 hits to break Stan Musial's National League record of 3,630. Boston's Carl Yastrzemski needs 67 games to move into second place on the all-time list, behind only Hank Aaron's 3,298. Yaz has 2,967 games going into 1981.

Nolan Ryan needs nine strikeouts to move past Bob Gibson (3,117) and into third place on the all-time list. Three other hurlers Tom Seaver (2,988), Steve Carlton (2,969) and Ferguson Jenkins (2,899) are within shooting distance of 3,000 career strikeouts, a plateau reached by only four other pitchers in baseball history.

MHS Bulldogs romp, Winless San Angelo Bobcats rack up seven errors

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Through the first three games of District 5-5A action, Midland High has been the team to boot the ball and give up the easy run. Saturday the shoe was on the other foot as the Bulldogs took advantage of eight errors by San Angelo to post a 20-3 win over the Bobcats at Memorial Stadium baseball diamond. The victory evened the Dogs' district mark at 2-2 while San Angelo slips to 0-4.

After Joel Castaneda and Zeke Barron matched zeros through the first two innings, the Bobcats pushed across two tainted runs to grab a 2-0 lead in the top of the third. It was the way that the Cats scored that made Purple Pack fans wring their hands in worry.

San Angelo's Gary Clare walked, and a comedy of errors followed. Barney Castro bunted and Castaneda threw his ball past first, Tal Jackson walked and again Castaneda threw wildly to first, Henry Kelpac bunted; Castaneda was wild to first for his third straight error. Johnny Ross bunted and Castaneda fielded the ball and made a perfect peg to first only to see Jerry Zachery drop it for the Pack's fourth straight error.

With a run home and the bases full with no one out it looked like it could be a long inning for the Bulldogs. Castaneda decided to use a different approach to get the Cats out. He struck out Kel Crain, got Robert Bolin to foul out to catcher Frank Garramone and struck out David Ramirez to take the wind out of the Cats' sails.

If fans thought the top of the inning was exciting, they hadn't seen anything yet. Midland rapped out six hits and took advantage of seven San Angelo bobbles to push across 11 runs in the wild inning.

Kyle Ford started the inning innocently enough with a sharp single up the middle, Tim Davis followed by flying out to center and then Michael Feldt reached when the leftfielder dropped his fly. Zachery tied the game with a two-run double and he moved to third when the third baseman couldn't handle the throw from the outfield. Frank Garramone lined to the pitcher and it looked as if all the Dogs would get out of threat was a tie.

Before the Cats could secure the third out, 11 straight MHS batters reached base and nine runs rolled across the plate. For San Angelo it was a case of ineptness and more ineptness. The Cats would make an error, walk a batter and the Bulldogs would come up with a hit to drive a run or two home.

Midland iced the victory with a four-run outburst in the fourth stanza. Fabian Ramos walked, stole second, Ford walked, Davis walked and Zachery chased two runners home with a shot up the middle. Castaneda then delivered a two-run double to left to up the lead to 15-3. MHS added a single run in the fifth when Bobcat right fielder Ramirez let a drive by Davis get over his head and go to the wall. Ramirez tracked the ball down and threw to home, but on a close play at the plate the umpire called Davis safe.

Doubles by Garramone and Faustino Garanda, a single by Teddy Bartley and an error netted the Dogs four more runs in the bottom of the sixth frame.

Zachery led MHS' assault as he went 2-for-3 with four RBI. Castaneda added three RBI and Wayne Sims scored three runs and went 2-for-4. Davis turned in a 2-for-5 performance.

Castaneda won his second game against three losses while Barron's ledger dipped to 2-4.

Midland mentor Tim Whalen said, "We were just too tense in the early innings. After we got ahead everyone just relaxed and played like I know they can. We still have a chance to win the district and I think we can." The Bulldogs have a large obstacle to overcome Saturday if they are to stay in the district race. MHS faces the Bronchos of Odessa High in Odessa at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Steers nail Lee with run in 7th

BIG SPRING — Big Spring scored a run in the bottom of the seventh with one out to defeat the Midland Lee Rebels 4-3 in a key District 5-5A baseball game here Saturday. With the win, Big Spring remains tied for first with Abilene High and Abilene Cooper at 3-1. Lee drops to second at 2-2 with Odessa High and Midland High.

Big Spring scored the deciding run after Tim Shaver walked, Mark Warren hit into a fielder's choice and Ricky Wrightsil and Beef Armendariaz bounced back to back singles into left field.

The rally in the bottom of the seventh ruined a dramatic home run by Randy Velarde in the top of the inning. With two out, Velarde had driven a fast ball over the left-centerfield fence for a two-run homer to knot the game at 3-3.

Big Spring had scored single runs in the first, fifth and sixth innings while the Rebels scored once in the sixth before Velarde's blast.

Perhaps the run that hurt the Rebels most came in the sixth inning. Armendariaz struck out swinging, but the ball got away from Ron Smedley and before he could recover, Armendariaz was safe at first. He was bunted to second by Tommy Rodriguez and rode home on third baseman Chris Parker's throwing error to first.

Lee bounced right back with a run in the bottom of the sixth. Velarde singled, moved to second on a passed ball before Smedley singled him to third. On the second passed ball of the inning, Velarde scored the Rebs first run of the contest.

Lee coach Ernie Johnson said, "We didn't play very well and they did. We had defensive lapses, some poor baserunning and just some mental mistakes."

Johnson added, "Velarde pitched a good game. We just didn't play very well behind him."

Lee will be looking to bounce back when they entertain the Odessa Permian Panthers Tuesday at 4 p.m. at the Lee baseball diamond.

Lakers are feeling better

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers are feeling considerably better heading into today's showdown with Houston in their National Basketball Association playoff mini-series. As usual, Earvin "Magic" Johnson is a big reason.

Needing to beat the Rockets in Houston to stay alive in the playoffs, the defending NBA champions moved Johnson from point guard to forward for Friday's second game and he responded with a career-high tying 18 rebounds in Los Angeles' 111-106 victory.

That moved the series back to Los Angeles for today's game at the Forum, where the Lakers virtually are unbeatable despite last week's loss to the Rockets in the first game of their best-of-three matchup.

The Lakers admitted they didn't play well in that first game, and Johnson said afterward that they were playing more like individuals than like the team that forged a 54-28 record in the regular season.

But they were back in form for Friday's game, in which star center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 27 points, Jamaal Wilkes had 22 and Johnson had 15 points to go with the 18 rebounds — three more than Houston's muscular center Moses Malone.

Johnson's board play was surprising, at least to Houston Coach Del Harris.

"We didn't expect Magic to do that," said Harris. "We've beaten them on the boards the last seven times we've played them and we knew going in we would have to repeat that. We didn't and the figures speak for themselves."

Lakers Coach Paul Westhead moved Johnson to forward, replacing Jim Chones in the starting lineup with guard Michael Cooper. It was what Westhead calls his "throughbred" lineup — exchanging size for speed.

The result was that Los Angeles raced off to a 14-5 lead and never was caught. Houston should see the same lineup much of Sunday's game and will have to adjust to have a chance to take the series and advance to the Western Conference semifinals against San Antonio.

Spring baseball is great...if you can escape distractions

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

MESA, Ariz. — One of the attractions of covering spring training exhibitions is the relaxed atmosphere of the games in the desert spas. No one is uptight, everyone is optimistic about the approaching season and it shows through in the easy camaraderie.

It's also one of the major drawbacks to watching spring training games. It seems every time you pull out a scorecard in the stands, someone comes along that knows you.

The other day it was Doug Merrifield over in Tempe. Doug was the Midland Cubs trainer in 1977 and is now trainer for the AAA Spokane club of the Pacific Coast League, longing for a job in the majors.

Doug, while bringing us up to date on his adventures over the past three seasons, also dropped the bombshell that going to Hawaii for a weeklong series is not the same as going to heaven. "The first time, okay, but most of the players can't wait to get back.

"Remember Jim Beswick? He played over there with the Islanders and said he'd rather be back in Amarillo riding the buses."

Doug went on, "Teachers in the U.S. save up all year for a trip to Hawaii. Over in Hawaii, teachers save up all year so they can come to the Mainland."

"Spokane compared to Midland? Working with Bill Rigney was working with a Class AAA operation in the Class AA league. Spokane is a AA operation in the AAA league, in comparison...and, by the way, don't forget to say hello to Doc Dodson for me."

Anybody see who hit that last ball over the fence? And whose this guy pitching?

Sometimes it isn't always folks you know. The other day a man from Scottsdale showed up at Tempe and expressed surprise at the fact that no admission was charged and the Cubs and Mariners drew such a poor turnout. "At Sun City and Scottsdale the stands are always packed," he explained, "that although the uniforms were genuine enough, these were the Chicago and Seattle farm clubs. The big Cubs were back in Mesa playing San Diego, and if he hurried..."

It turned out he preferred to talk. He was 79, retired and lonesome and interesting. He was a fan back in the days of Babe Ruth, "I must have seen the Babe hit 50 homers," Lou Gehrig, Waite Hoyt and Bob Muesel...

We weren't listening too closely as he offered some advice on financial investments until he mentioned how he used to beat Ted Turner in yacht racing competition back in the 1940's.

How can you turn your back on a conversation like that...say, how did Jim Payne get on base and what happened to Tom Grant and the four guys between Grant and Payne? Isn't anyone around here paying attention?

Or, take today, out at Fitch...home at last and a chance to concentrate on what's going on on the field...This is great, two innings of pure, undiluted baseball...no interruptions, no diversions...

"Remember me," says the well-dressed man with the fine head of tan, settling alongside and extending a hand. "I'm Dick Nelson. I umpired in the Texas League with Scotty Harris back in 1974. Now I supervise all of the umpires west of the Mississippi.

"It's a year round job. The two umpiring schools turn out about 120 graduates a year. We take the top 15 from each school and we put 'em through our own school. Those who don't make it? They go back to umpire amateur, high school, semipro and college ball. They get some experience and go back to umpiring school two, three, four times, some of them, and eventually some get picked."

Nelson supervises 15 Pacific Coast League umpires, eight Texas, eight California League, eight Northwest and eight Pioneer league umpires, reporting and checking periodically.

In fact, Nelson was appraising the work of the two rookie umpires handling the Midland game. "I'll have to talk with the plate umpire after the game." Following a strikeout, the batter dropped his bat on the plate in silent protest as the teams changed.

Phils dump Reds behind Ruthven

By The Associated Press

Dick Ruthven teamed with a two relievers on a nine-hit shutout Saturday, and the World Series champion Philadelphia Phillies snapped a four-game losing streak with a 2-0 exhibition baseball victory over Cincinnati.

Ruthven went seven innings and gave up seven hits in the longest and most impressive outing by a Philadelphia pitcher so far in the spring.

Warren Brusstar and Sparky Lyle both pitched an inning of one-hit relief. Bake McBride drove in both Philadelphia runs.

In the Philadelphia sixth, Ruthven singled, snapping a string of 14 consecutive Phillies retired by Reds starter Mario Soto, and later scored on a sacrifice fly by McBride.

In other games, Tommy Boggs tossed seven shutout innings, allowing four hits, as Atlanta downed St. Louis 3-0. Rafael Ramirez drove in a run with a single, and two more Atlanta runs scored on an error and a wild pitch by Steve Busby.

Cesar Cedeno and Alan Ashby both drove in three runs as the Houston Astros scored a 7-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Cleveland got two RBI apiece from Joe Charboneau, Jorge Orta and Ron Hassey, and the Indians defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 7-2.

Wayne Garland went five innings for an RBI, scattering seven hits.

Al Oliver rapped an RBI single, his third hit of the game, in the ninth inning to give Texas an 11-10 victory over Kansas City. Jim Ellis had tied the game 10-10 with a single earlier in the inning.

Boston exploded for eight runs in the fourth inning—fueled by nine hits that included doubles by Dwight Evans, Tony Perez and Jerry Remy—and the Red Sox won their eighth straight preseason game, 8-3, over the Chicago White Sox.

Lee Mazzilli hit a run-scoring single in the seventh inning that boosted the New York Mets to their sixth straight win, a 4-3 decision over the Minnesota Twins.

Ernie Whitt and Lloyd Moseby slugged home runs, and Jim Clancy worked six strong innings to power the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-3 victory over the Montreal Expos. Clancy yielded four hits.

Rick Leach's two-run homer in the top of the 10th inning lifted the Detroit Tigers to a 4-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates. Vance Law hit a solo homer in the Pirates 10th.

COM grabs three seconds

DALLAS—Three City of Midland Swim Team members just missed grabbing titles here Saturday in the annual state-wide TAGS meet with three seconds. COM swimmers also garnered two third place finishes.

Michaela Hasek was second in the 10-under girls 200 freestyle with a 2:13.29 while Gretchen Koch was second in the girls 15-18 division 50 freestyle with a 25.10. The other second was posted by Lori Thompson in the 15-18 girls 200 freestyle with a 1:55.97.

Thompson also had a third in the 400 individual medley with a 4:40.79 and a fifth in the 50 freestyle with a 25.39. Hasek also placed third in the 50 freestyle with a 28.84.

Two COM boys also placed in their events in the 15-18 age division. John Franke was sixth in the 50 freestyle with a 22.54 while Cleve Carrens was seventh in the 100 butterfly with a 53.55.

Cooper, Eagles take 5-5A wins

Ablene Cooper, a preseason favorite, was rolling along undefeated until last Tuesday when Midland Lee knocked the wheels off the Cougar wagon, 19-0.

With that in mind, the Cougar roared into Odessa Saturday looking to take their embarrassment out on the Permian Panthers. When the dust cleared, Cooper had redeemed themselves with a 22-3 spanking of Mojo. The win leaves Cooper with a 3-1 district mark while Permian drops to 1-3.

After the first inning, the game was tied at 2-2 but Cooper scored five runs in the top of the second and never looked back as they raced to the win.

Billy Mitchell, 4-2, won for the Cougars while Brad Phillips, 2-5, took the loss.

In Abilene, Odessa High and Abilene High went into their District 5-5A clash with identical 2-1 marks. Abilene toppled the Bronchos, 7-4, to remain tied for the top spot in the loop at 3-1 while Odessa falls into second with a 2-2 district reading.

A five-run second inning keyed the Eagles' win. Pat Sigala came up with the big hit in the second; a bases loaded double that delivered three runs. For the day, Sigala went 4-for-4 and drove in four runs.

Rock Valley scores 45

ROCKFORD, Ill. (AP) — Rock Valley College was losing 10-8 in the third inning of Saturday's game against Kennedy King, so the Trojans needed a rally. But once they got started, they didn't know when to stop.

The Trojans paraded 37 men to the plate and exploded for 32 runs in the inning, burying Kennedy King 45-11 in the first game of a scheduled doubleheader. The nightcap was called off by mutual consent of both coaches.

Cartwright picks the Bulls

By The Associated Press

Bill Cartwright of the New York Knicks knows all about the powerhouse teams in the National Basketball Association playoffs.

There are clubs like Boston, Milwaukee, Phoenix and San Antonio, whose successful regular season records earned them first-round playoff byes. And there's Philadelphia, which won two straight in a mini-series to advance to the second round.

But Cartwright also thinks he knows a good underdog when he sees one and that's why he figures Chicago has a shot.

The Bulls eliminated Cartwright's Knicks in two straight games, finishing New York's season with a 115-114 overtime victory Friday night following a 90-80 decision in the series opener last Tuesday.

"I hope they go all the way," said Cartwright. "They can if they play like they did against us."

The Bulls' next hurdle comes today when they travel to Boston to open the Eastern Conference semifinals against the Celtics, who tied Philadelphia for the best record in the regular season with a 62-20 log.

The 76ers, who finished second in the standings because of intra-conference records, wiped out Indiana in their mini-series and advanced to the other conference semifinal against Milwaukee. That series also begins today.

In today's other games, Houston plays at Los Angeles and Kansas City is at Portland, wrapping up the two Western Conference mini-series which are tied at 1-1. In both best-of-three series, the home teams have yet to win a game. The Lakers stayed alive with a 111-106 victory over Houston and the Trail Blazers defeated Kansas City 124-119 in overtime Friday night.

Cartwright and Marvin Webster tried unsuccessfully to check 7-foot-2 Artis Gilmore of the Bulls. Gilmore had 25 points and Reggie Theus poured in 37 as Chicago advanced to the next round. "I've never been so physically worn out," said Gilmore, after battling New York's two big men. Waiting for him now is the Celtics' Robert Parrish.

Milwaukee, after a week off, goes back to work against Philadelphia in the other Eastern Conference semifinal.

MHS girls stage amazing rebound

AMARILLO — Fighting wind and sand Friday and then snow and rain Saturday, the Midland High girls golf team, which won the District 5-5A title and qualified for the Region I tournament later this month in Lubbock, battled from 34 strokes behind to capture the Amarillo Relays played on the Ross Rogers Municipal Course.

Amarillo Tascosa fired an opening round of 383 to open a 23 stroke lead over Amarillo High and 34 strokes over third place MHS.

Ann Coombes, who won the district medalist title, managed an opening round of 96 and was tied for third with Cle Carlson and Lauri Madden of Tascosa in the race for individual medalist. Tascosa's Jill Price shot a 92 to take the first-round lead with MHS' Kelle Mobley nipping at her heels with a 95.

In the final round Saturday, the Bulldogs rallied behind Coombes' 80 to edge Tascosa 758 to 769 for the team title.

Coombes' round also vaulted her to the top spot in the medalist race with a 176. Kelle Mobley turned in a second round score of 85 to claim second in the medalist battle.

MHS coach Mary Barid said, "I was real proud the way we came back. The playing condition were horrible Friday in the wind and then Saturday morning the tournament was delayed for a while because of the rain and snow."

MHS scores: Ann Coombes, 96-80-176; Kelle Mobley, 95-85-180; Janice Littlefield, 102-82-186; Teresa King, 122-84-216; Melissa Baldrige, 123-111-234.

Carter uncorks 67-11 in Texas Relays

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Southern Methodist sophomore muscleman Michael Carter, the NCAA indoor and outdoor champion, made the best outdoor shot put of his career Saturday and the 28-year-old tireless Tanzanian, Suleiman Nyambui, anchored Texas-El Paso to two relay victories in the 54th Texas Relays.

Carter uncorked a toss of 67-11 in the preliminaries, two inches better than his personal outdoor best which he had in the USA-Russian Junior Meet at Boston in July, 1979.

The 19-year-old Carter won the NCAA outdoor in the same ring last June with a toss of 66-11½. His best throw was 69-8½ in the NCAA Indoor this winter in Detroit.

"It's a PR (personal record) but that's about all I can say," said a slightly disappointed Carter. "I'm still rusty but it will come. I like this ring over all the others and the crowd helped a lot."

Besides the throw of 67-11, Carter also had tosses 67-4¼, 56-10¼, 66-7¼, 67-9¼ and 65-2¼.

Nyambui, who is just a junior, ran the mile twice in less than two hours as the NCAA outdoor and indoor champion Miners took the 6400 meter and distance medley relays. Nyambui turned in miles of 4:03.2 and 4:01.7, respectively in the two events won in times of 16:61.01 and 9:41.83.

Arkansas' Stanley Redwine had a brilliant anchor as he held off NCAA half-mile champion Sammy Koskei of Southern Methodist to give the Razorbacks a record victory in the 3200 meter relay. Arkansas was times in 7:22.86 which beat the old mark of 7:23.76 by Texas Tech in 1979.

Redwine ran his half-mile in 1:48.7 while Koskei turned in a 1:46.6, coming from some 10 meters behind.

"I knew that Koskei is a fine runner," said Redwine. "He is among the best half milers in the world. I have a lot of respect for him. Randy Stephens gave me a substantial lead so my job was just to hold him off. This is my first time running the half mile so I just gave it what I could. I've never run in that event."

Redwine held on although he was suffering from shin splints.

"It (the leg) was bothering me...it had been bothering me all week," said Redwine.

Koskei, who had anchored SMU to a sprint distance medley relay victory Friday night, said "he had a good lead. I was afraid I would tire...I'm not disappointed. Redwine is a tremendous runner."

The Texas Aggies won the unique shuttle hurdler relay in a Relays' record time of 56.14, beating the old mark of 57.11 owned by Baylor which was set in 1974. It was the third best time in the United States in the rarely run event.

Don't Be Misled

There are few things in life more important and of a more personal nature than providing life insurance for the protection of one's family. Because of the almost sacred nature that is usually associated with a family's life insurance program, it would only seem logical that a family would proceed very cautiously if anyone suggests that their insurance program be abandoned, in favor of something new. We have all learned that new is not necessarily better.

In recent weeks our local association has received notice that a sales force, mostly out-of-town people, is working in West Texas with a "new" way to provide a life insurance program. Whatever else their suggestions might be, the main thrust of their approach seems to be based on replacing policies that are already in force. Be very careful if someone approaches you with such a suggestion. In fact, the following guidelines might prove to be helpful:

(1) Contact your local insurance agent and get his opinion. Closely compare the benefits of both your present policy or policies with those you are being offered. It may surprise you to find out what benefits you may lose if the change is made. A comparison of this type should either confirm that you ought to make a change or that you might be making a mistake.

(2) If the salesperson represents himself as a Financial Planner, Consultant, etc., find out if he has a permanent license. Depending on individual circumstances, the person with a temporary license might not be around long enough to service what he sells. Since you are contemplating doing business with him, you owe it to yourself to find out.

Hill climbs to Colgate summit

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Carolyn Hill, one of the most promising newcomers on the women's golf tour, shot her third consecutive 2-under-par 70 Saturday to take a 1-stroke lead after three rounds of the $250,000 Colgate-Dinah Shore tournament.

Hill, a 22-year-old who finished second in the Ladies Professional Golf Association Rookie of the Year balloting in 1980, has a 6-under-par 210 total after 54 holes of the 72-hole event.

In second place going into Sunday's final 18 holes was Jane Blalock, who won the inaugural Dinah Shore tournament in 1972. Blalock carded her second successive 70 after an opening 71 over the 6,242-yard, par 72 Mission Hills Country Club.

Eight other players were within striking distance of the lead after 54 holes of the event, the richest on the ladies' circuit.

Lynn Adams, in her fourth year on the tour, chipped three strokes off par with a third round 69 that put her two strokes back of the leader. Two past winners of the tournament, Sandra Palmer and Midland's Judy Rankin, were another shot back at 213 along with Nancy Lopez-Melton.

Jan Stephenson, Amy Alcott and Susie McAllister were all four strokes off the pace at 214.

Myra Van Hoose, who had led the tournament since her opening 66, struggled to a third-round 77. Her score included a 2-stroke penalty for accepting a golf cart ride from a course marshal during the round.

Healthy Larry Nelson retains Greater Greensboro margin

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Larry Nelson, healthy for the first time in an injury plagued season, put together a solid 3-under-par 69 Saturday and retained a one-stroke lead in the third round of the $300,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament.

Nelson, who has been bothered at one time or another this season with tendon problems in the left ankle, chronic trouble with the wrist and elbow, lower back problems and muscle spasms in the upper back, had a 54-hole total of 206.

That's 10 under par on the 6,984-yard Forest Oaks Country Club course, and one in front of Mark Hayes, who cut one shot off Nelson's lead with a 68.

Lee Trevino, with a 70, was the only other man within seven shots of the leader. He was at 211, five back going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $54,000 first prize.

Tied at 213 were Jim Simons, Bill Calfee, Dan Pohl, Jim Simons and Nick Faldo of England, the current British PGA champion. Faldo and Fiori each had a 68, Calfee and Simons 69, Pohl 70.

Veteran George Archer, twice a winner of this old event, had the best round of the tournament, a 67, and was at 214. Also at that figure was defending titleholder Craig Stadler, who had a third-round 70.

Tom Weiskopf, needing a victory here to qualify for next week's Masters, managed a 70

Hypothermia proves to be major killer

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the first of a two-part series dealing with hypothermia, a state wherein the body temperature is artificially and abnormally lowered. These columns will deal with the prevention and treatment of hypothermia cases.

anglers to cold water temperatures. Believe it or not, there are very few people in this world who can survive in cold waters, no matter how good a swimmer they might be.

Tragic water related accidents, such as the latest drowning accident at Possum Kingdom reservoir in North Central Texas two weeks ago, always shock people at the news, but some people tend to forget those sort of accidents several weeks later. Most think it was just a misfortune, then tend to their own business. And of course, they think an accident on the water or a drowning of an associate or family member will not happen. And really it shouldn't. That is if you follow the rules of the water.

This time of year when all avid anglers hit the water in search of their favorite game fish specie, is probably one of the most dangerous times. The lakes are low across most of Texas for one reason, but this time of year introduces thousands of EVER HEARD of hypothermia? That means freezing to death. And it can happen in cold water. Hypothermia may be separated into two broad categories — chronic, or hypothermia with a relatively long onset; and acute or rapid onset hypothermia. The one we're talking about when related to boaters and fishermen is the acute type.

Chronic hypothermia, usually is associated with exposure to cold in inadequate clothing or shelter for a time that may range from a few hours to several days.

Acute hypothermia, normally is associated with immersion in cold water, kills 40 to 50 Texans each year. When a person is immersed in cold water, the skin and nearby tissues cool very quickly. However, it may take 10 to 15 minutes before the temperature of the heart and brain starts to drop. Unconsciousness may occur when the core temperature reaches 90 degrees Fahrenheit, and heart failure usually results at 85 degrees. But a person in cold water may drown before either of these stages occur because hypothermia causes the victim to lose the ability to coordinate the movements of his arms and legs and his mind becomes disoriented.

When the water temperatures are in the mid-50s, that's when boaters and anglers should be concerned.

The immediate disappearance syndrome, another phenomenon associated with cold water survival, aside from hypothermia, describes the person who falls into the water, sinks, and is never seen alive again. The shock of suddenly entering cold water can induce uncontrolled rapid breathing; cause intense physical pain, confusion and dizziness; and may stop the heat. Wearing a PFD (personal flotation device or life vest) is the only known protection against this type of accident.

IF YOU enter cold water, try to do so gradually in order to reduce the shock of sudden immersion. In an emergency, when you must jump, try to hold your breath, pinch your nose and clamp the palm of your hand over your mouth to prevent involuntary breathing and swallowing of water.

Hypothermia requires some time to take effect. The length of time depends on how cold the water is, as well as the physiological characteristics, behavior and clothing the victim has on. Large people take longer to cool than do small people, so children react faster than adults. Thin people cool faster than fat people, and men faster than women of the same body size.

The body may be compared to a bottle holding a certain amount of energy. The larger the bottle, the more it holds; and the better insulated it is, the slower it loses energy.

While remaining still in the water, the areas of greatest heat loss are the head, neck, sides and groin. Major arteries in other blood vessels in these areas generally are not well covered by protective layers of body fat, the blood flowing through them can be cooled rapidly.

Wearing many layers of clothing help reduce heat loss in much the same fashion as a diver's wet suit.

Leonard, Hearn near title bout

NEW YORK (AP) — A universal welterweight title fight between Sugar Ray Leonard and Tommy Hearn seems to be set but is not signed, promoter Bob Arum said Saturday.

There have been published reports that the fight is signed, and Enterprise Radio quoted Dan Duva, who is to co-promote with Arum, as saying Hearn and manager Emanuel Steward have signed and that Leonard and attorney Mike Trainer would sign within 48 hours.

"Not true" Shelly Finkel said Saturday. Finkel, a rock concert promoter who co-manages some fighters, is in charge of rounding up investment capital for the fight.

KENNY REDIN'S Fin & Feather

Wool and cotton hold heat better than synthetics.

One way to reduce heat loss is to keep as much of the body out of water as possible. Most boats will float even when capsized or swamped. Getting in or partially on the boat or anything else that floats will increase chances of survival. If for some reason you are not wearing a PFD, or should become separated from it, locate any floating objects which you can use to stay afloat. An accumulation of floats also makes it easier to spot you should the boat sink.

However, the key to survival is the conservation of energy, or heat contained within the body. Anyone not wearing a PFD must expend some energy to stay afloat, which increases heat loss. Since the head is a high heat loss area, it is important to keep the head out of the water. For this reason, downproofing, a technique developed for survival in warm water will, in cold water, accelerate the heat loss because it requires putting the head in the water.

A PERSON in a PFD can assume a fetal or "Heat Escape Lessening Posture" (HELP) so may areas of high heat loss can be protected. Also, if there are several people, huddling close together in a circle will assist in reducing individual heat loss.

In 55-degree water, you can expect to survive for about 1 1/2 hours if you are swimming. Floating still in a PFD you may survive for 3 1/2 hours and assuming the "HELP" position you may survive for 5 1/2 hours.

The victim without a PFD has a hard choice to make; either stay put and take his chances on being picked up, or try to swim to shore. If he elects to swim, his energy will be used at a high rate, which might not allow him to reach shore. He must consider that he also will start to feel the early effects of hypothermia — mental disorientation and loss of coordination — while swimming. Distances on the water are deceptive. It may be farther to shore than it looks; additionally, currents and tide may work against the swimmer.

A hypothermia victim can become unconscious, but remain alive if he is wearing a PFD. His unconscious, floating body can still be picked up and saved. However, without a PFD, he will slip below the surface and drown.

Wardrobe master faces golf crisis

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — There's extra pressure on the wardrobe master at the Augusta National Golf Club this year.

With Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson failing to exercise their authority, his task is a little more demanding. He needs a stock of wide-ranging sizes to insure the proper fit when the Masters champion slips into the famed green jacket in a traditional ceremony next Sunday.

Let's see. Probably the same size for Johnny Miller and Bruce Lietzke. And another size for Bill Rogers and Jerry Pate. Ray Floyd's jacket already hangs in the white, colonial clubhouse. Tom Kite and Lanny Wadkins: one size would fit them. Need something very, very large for the big shoulders of Andy Bean. Seve Ballesteros already has been fitted. Ben Crenshaw has come close enough that his measurements are on file.

But what about Hale Irwin? Lee Trevino? And, of course, there's always that chance — perhaps a better chance than usual this year — that it could be someone completely unexpected.

It's wide open. Nicklaus and Watson, the two outstanding players in golf, are having their difficulties in the early season. So there is no such thing as a clear-cut favorite for the 45th Masters, which begins Thursday on the 7,040 yards of flowered, rolling hills that make up Augusta National.

An elite, invitational, international field of 83 includes 66 American pros, six American amateurs, 10 foreign pros and one foreign amateur. They are expected to start in the annual spring rite, the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness.

There could be one addition. If not previously qualified, the winner of the greater Greensboro Open this weekend will join the Masters field. And if that winner is not Tom Weiskopf, then the four-time Masters runner-up will be missing from the field for the first time in 14 seasons. Only a victory in Greensboro can get Weiskopf in the Masters.

Although neither Nicklaus nor Watson has won this season and each appears to be struggling, they remain the central figures in the Masters scene.

The failure to win may not be significant for Nicklaus, now 41 and firmly established as the most prolific performer the game has known. He has had flashes of the brilliance that has marked his matchless career but has been unable to sustain that level of play for four consecutive days. But that was in regular-season play, which he regards as merely a proving ground for the majors — the Masters, the U.S. and British Opens, and the PGA.

It is around those four events that he has built his competitive life. He has won them 17 times, more often than anyone in history. That accumulation includes a record five Masters, a record-matching four U.S. Opens, a record-matching five PGA's and three British Opens.

That record, his single-minded concentration on the Big Four, his U.S. Open and PGA victories last year, make it impossible to consider any major event and discount Nicklaus.

"He is a much, much better player now than he has ever been before," said Phil Rodgers, the man who last season helped Nicklaus extend and enhance his career.

As always, this is his first big target of the season.

Nebraska takes NCAA gymnastics team title

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska scored consistently in every event and swept to its third consecutive team title Saturday at the 39th NCAA Gymnastics Championships.

Sparked by all-arounders Jim Hartung and Phil Cahoy and a brilliant floor exercise performance by Steve Elliott, the Cornhuskers became the first school to win three straight championships since Penn State accomplished the feat from 1959-61.

Championships in the six individual events were to be decided Saturday night.

Nebraska delighted the partisan crowd of 8,572 at the Bob Devaney Sports Center by compiling 284.60 points. Oklahoma, which defeated Nebraska for the Big Eight Conference title a month ago, was second with 281.95 and UCLA took third with 280.50.

UCLA had a chance to make the race closer when the Bruins trailed Nebraska by only 1.2 points heading into the final event. However, the Bruins faltered on the parallel bars and Nebraska turned in a strong performance on the high bar to win the title handily.

Nebraska scored at least 47 points in every event except the parallel bars and the Cornhuskers just missed in that, finishing with 46.90.

LSU's Brown decides to stay

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Recruiters for Louisiana State University's powerhouse basketball squad could breathe a sigh of relief Saturday, knowing they still had one of their major talents at the school — Coach Dale Brown.

Brown announced late Friday night his intentions of remaining at LSU, after a few days of soul-searching and considering other career options.

He said earlier that that he would have liked a month to mull over his choices, but that he did not want to leave LSU coaches uncertain of what they could promise young recruits.

Brown left Baton Rouge Saturday for Nashville, where he will coach the Southeastern Conference-Atlantic Coast Conference all-star game on Sunday.

"With this decision behind me, I have rededicated myself with every fiber in my body to keep LSU basketball on a high level," he said.

FARM-RANCH

Committee delays action on 'right to farm' bill

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate Committee on Natural Resources has delayed action on a bill that would ensure the "right to farm" for agricultural producers whose operations are annexed by cities or surrounded by newly-developed subdivisions. The bill, Senate Bill No. 488 and authored by LaGrande Sen. John Wilson, would provide an absolute defense against "nuisance lawsuits" for farmers and ranchers whose operations existed at least one year prior to being annexed by a city or before development of residential subdivisions in the area.

Commitment to conservation stressed

Farmers and ranchers have been called on by the nation's soil conservation chief to make a renewed commitment to the principles of resource conservation. "The application of new and improved techniques of conservation in response to new farming methods is a never-ending task," said Norman A. Berg, chief of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Soil Conservation Service. "Continuously increasing demands are placed on our farmland today to produce food and fiber for expanding domestic and foreign markets."

Russia leading agricultural research

LUBBOCK — Russia has plowed past the United States in funding world agricultural research, and the U.S.'s settling to second place "could have dire consequences" for meeting future human needs for food, said Jack E. McCroskey, chairman of Texas Tech University's Animal Science Department. "We are now behind Russia in the amount of money we put into agricultural research," he said. "In 1955," the scientist said, "10 percent of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's budget went into agricultural research. In 1980, only 2 percent of the USDA's budget funded agricultural research."

Element 'collecting' in livestock

COLLEGE STATION — Selenium, an element flushed into bays and marshes from salt domes which are being prepared for oil storage and by routine agricultural and industrial activities, shows signs of accumulating in animals which are low on the food chain. The element may be causing "blind staggers" in livestock which ingest selenium via plants. Build-up of the chemical in animals which may be eaten by humans seems "miniscule" compared with a fat-soluble organic pollutant such as DDT — a suspected cancer-causing agent.

King's death recalled; Widow issues challenge

By DAVID PACE Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Friends and relatives gathered at the grave of Martin Luther King Jr. on Saturday to mark the 13th anniversary of his assassination, and his widow called for an end to the "climate of violence" gripping the country. Elsewhere in the nation marches and rallies were scheduled to honor the civil rights leader who was shot to death April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn. Many demonstrations also mourned the unsolved deaths of 21 black children and one young black man here.

Meanwhile, Coretta Scott King told a group of about 30 people that the assassination attempt Monday on President Reagan "leaves us with an alarming but clear conclusion: No one is safe and secure and everyone is affected by the current epidemic of violence." Speaking at a news conference, Mrs. King said the climate in the country today is reminiscent of the racial turmoil before King's slaying. "The climate of violence which existed prior to Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination, and what is existing today, and what has been latent in our society all along, is something we have to continue to mobilize against," she said.

We Offer Complete Real Estate Service

The Capp Finish-It-Yourself House™
 Quality, Savings and a unique building concept.

Finish-It-Yourself™ means savings. By doing the finishing work on your new dream home you can save thousands compared to having an ordinary builder construct the same house on your lot. Capp Homes are custom-built by skilled craftsmen using quality construction materials. The result is a home you'll take pride in for years to come. Here's how it works.

Custom Homes In Every Price Range
 Your budget is our budget. Chances are it will go further with Capp than other custom builders. We can build from your plans, or you can customize any one of our many home designs. In 1980, 4 out of 10 Capp customers built their custom home from their own plans. Bring us your plans and we'll be glad to build yours too. Either way, your home will be completely personalized.

What We Do
 Capp custom-builds your home on the lot and foundation you provide using quality construction materials. We install sub-flooring, interior stud-partitions and exterior doors and windows. Your home is enclosed and ready for you to take over.

Brand Name Quality Throughout
 Capp provides the brand name finishing materials for you to complete your custom home. All the products we offer are made by quality, name brand manufacturers to add special value to your home. There are exquisite kitchen cabinets, designer flooring and carpeting, appliances and light fixtures, windows and doors. And much, much more. And the choice is yours. They are all included in the Capp price.

What You Do
 You decide which finishing jobs you want to do yourself, to save as much as possible. Of course, the more you do, the more you save. The rest you manage by hiring local tradesmen, pocketing the markup a general contractor would normally charge. The savings is yours.

Financing — The Perfect Partner
 Evans Financial Corp. a subsidiary of Evans Products Co. has various financing programs that are tailored to fit qualified customer's needs. A large down payment is not required—just a small deposit and your lot can get you started. See your Capp Representative for details.

"I despair of teaching the ordinary parent how to handle his child... They have no idea of the proper use of reinforcement. I would prefer to turn childraising over to the specialists." — B.F. Skinner, behavior therapist.

A group of kindergarteners at Bunche Elementary gathers around a small table to paint after accumulating enough tokens to barter for an activity or "spend." The Waukegan program at Bunche Elementary is the most flexible of the curriculums implemented at Washington, De Zavala, Crockett, Milam and Pease elementary schools. At Bunche, children are given more freedom in their daily activities and the program utilizes some of the school's own materials, contrary to the program at Washington which is a strict adoption of the Waukegan system.

Kathryn Riddles, a kindergarten teacher at Washington Elementary School, rewards a student with a plastic token after she successfully completes a reading page. Each individual child is allowed to move at his own pace and positive reinforcement is given for each correct answer.

Learning 'pays off' in Waukegan elementary program

Leonard, a kindergartener at Washington Elementary School, reads the sentence his teacher is pointing to — slowly and carefully. "This is Sam's hat." After faltering several times, the third try is successful and the teacher reaches into her apron and hands him a plastic token which he pockets in his own apron.

"I like it when La Vinya keeps her apron on and Nancy sits up tall," the teacher says, interrupting the reading lesson to dole out two more tokens.

The plastic tokens, which are passed from hand to hand, apron to apron all day, are the basis of a pilot program begun at six Midland elementary school kindergartens to heighten academic skills among disadvantaged children.

Patterned after a similar program at Carmen Elementary School in Waukegan, Ill., a system of constant positive reinforcement is used to spur children to work diligently in math and reading; allowing them to accumulate tokens and barter for selected "activities," such as painting or puzzle games, at the end of the day.

"We're shaping behavior and strengthening academic progress," said Mary Jo Killian, resource center specialist at Carmen Elementary. For example, in the first week of kindergarten when the kids are hopping around, they are given a token just for sitting there. Behavior is modified before it becomes a problem.

"One child who kept squiggling and squiggling in his seat eventually dropped all his tokens. The teacher ignored him and turned to the child next to him and said, 'Johnny, thank you for sitting quietly and listening to the reading lesson,'" Ms. Killian said. "This is the way we shape behavior. The inductive pressure is there."

The program in Midland was started several months ago, when concern peaked among school administrators over faltering test scores. "We were looking for programs for children who had not been achieving up to par," said Manuel Carrasco, MISD director of elementary education. "I went to Waukegan and came back very impressed. It did not have the regimentation that some other programs had."

With the help of aides from Waukegan who are provided to the school district free through a Follow Through federal program, the school district established Waukegan kindergartens in six Title 1 elementary schools.

"Here are all the ingredients of a normal curriculum," Carrasco said. "Nothing is left out, but we do emphasize and give more time to reading and mathematics."

Although intentions are to increase the standards and expectations of kindergarteners, Carrasco said the school district has met with some opposition.

"We do teach reading and mathematics at an early age, which a lot of people don't believe in," he said. "It's a philosophical question. Who knows when they're ready or not?"

A typical school day at a Waukegan kindergarten, such as the one implemented at Washington Elementary, flows like an exercise in military maneuvers. Absent is the "finger painting chaos" that usually presides over a room full of free-spirited 5- and 6-year-old children.

Children are marched in single file — 25 miniature first class privates — from one area of the classroom to the other in between reading and math instructions. Schedules for the day's curriculum are posted around the classroom; calling for changes in activities every 20 minutes.

"It's very regimented," Carrasco said. "In other words, you walk into a Waukegan classroom and you see the schedule to keep the teachers and kids going from 'a' to 'z' or from point 4 to 5. We have tried flexible classrooms before where the teachers go at it at their own pace. This one kind of locks you into it. There's no lost time. You get with it from the very beginning and you keep moving."

Although the intensity of the educational atmosphere in class seems to reduce discipline problems, when a child does misbehave he or she spends time "cooling off."

Teachers do not criticize, but tell a child in a positive way when he or she has stepped out of line. Then, in an updated version of the old "stand in the corner" disciplinary measure, a pupil sits in a chair apart from the group.

A timer is set for three minutes, then the child returns and can resume earning tokens.

While school administrators are hesitant to use the term "behavior modification," which carries images of Pavlov and his salivating dogs, they do not deny children from underprivileged backgrounds need more control in the classroom.

"Self-discipline, self-motivation, self-initiative. Some of these kids don't have it," Carrasco said. "Their day is so structured, they learn what to expect after three weeks."

Every two weeks, teachers report the progress of each child, turning in written notations of the book and page number completed in reading and math. The information is relayed to Waukegan, which sends back printouts recommending target reading and math goals for the next two weeks.

Since the program began in 1969, Carmen Elementary School children in Waukegan have exceeded national norms in reading and math scores every year.

While the program in Midland is being looked at with caution during its first year, school administrators have hopes it will be approved for seven additional kindergartens and be expanded through the third grade.

"The youngsters who have started this will then have an opportunity to finish it," Carrasco said. Kindergarteners, first and second graders will receive immediate rewards. By third grade the tokens will be phased out and children will sign daily contracts, for example, to read a certain number of pages in a reading book.

"Hopefully, by the time they're in the fourth grade, they're on their own," Carrasco said.

A kindergartener at Washington Elementary matches up his tokens with a numbered sheet to determine how many "spends" he is able to obtain. The student keeps the tokens in a plastic apron around his waste and is able to count them between reading and math instructions.

Students line up in single file to rotate from one area of the classroom to another. Each leader stands on a number and on cue from the teacher, the children transfer from math to reading instruction. The organized flow of traffic helps teachers to remain on a regimented schedule.

A child who has misbehaved is placed a short distance from classroom activities until a three minute "cooling period" is over. After the time is up, a bell goes off and he is allowed to join the group again.

Cake is made using applesauce

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: Last spring you used a cake recipe, calling for bought canned applesauce, that sounded so good. Now I want to bake the cake, but I've misplaced the recipe. Can you print it, or one like it, again? I know I can rely on you to say whether sweetened or unsweetened applesauce should be used. So many applesauce cake recipes omit this detail. — BAKER.

DEAR BAKER: I'm glad you reminded me of applesauce cake. Now that spring is here and we can look forward to fruit trees blossoming again and bearing fruit, it's time to use up last year's crop. Here's a recipe for Apple Blossom Cake that results in a delightfully moist dessert. — C.B.

APPLE BLOSSOM CAKE

- 1 cup all-purpose flour, fork-stirred in its container before measuring
- 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cloves
- 1/4 cup butter, at room temperature
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1 large egg
- 1 egg yolk (from a large egg)
- 1/2 cup applesauce (minus sugar and preservatives), from a 20-ounce jar
- 1/2 cup raisins, soaked in hot water until plump and well drained
- 1/4 cup finely chopped walnuts

Creamy White Frosting, recipe follows
Walnut halves or quarters for garnish

Grease and flour an 8 by 8 by 2-inch cake pan. On a sheet of wax paper or in a small bowl thoroughly stir together the flour, baking soda, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves. In a medium bowl with an electric beater at medium speed, cream the butter and sugar. Beat in the whole egg, then the egg yolk, until each is blended. Gently beat in the flour mixture in two additions, alternately with the applesauce, until the batter is smooth each time. Stir in the raisins and nuts. Turn into the prepared cake pan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — about 30 minutes. Cool on a wire rack for 5 minutes; loosen edges and turn out on rack; with another rack, turn right side up. Cool completely before covering top and sides with the Creamy White Frosting; garnish with the walnut halves.

CREAMY WHITE FROSTING

- 1/4 cup butter, at room temperature
- 2 cups (about) confectioners' sugar
- 1 egg white (from a large egg)
- 1 teaspoon (scant) vanilla

Beat together the butter, 1 cup of the sugar, the egg white and vanilla until smooth; gradually beat in enough more sugar, keeping smooth, to make a good spreading consistency.

You don't say?

NEW YORK (AP) — Could you differentiate between "etiquette" and "manners"?

Letitia Baldrige in her revised book on etiquette says, "Etiquette has to do with when you wear white gloves and how to unfold a napkin on your lap. Real manners are being thoughtful toward others and doing nice things for others."

"Manners really matter, they stem from kindness. Etiquette can be a bit starchy," she said.

Try these tips for coping with excessive stress

Copley News Service

Coping with excessive stress means managing stress with appropriate responses, according to psychologists.

"Given the increasing pressures of society, people have to approach life with a new awareness," said industrial psychologist Donn O'Neill.

"Are you promoting bad habits?" O'Neill advocates a paper and pencil exercise of writing down the things that cause you stress over a two-week period, then examining reactions to the stress-producing situations. Finally, you take steps to ease the situations causing stress.

"If you are to manage stress, you've got to find out what is stressing you," he said. "If you are aware of stress, you can start solving it."

"Most stress we bring on ourselves — like pushing the elevator button a couple of times, then attacking it furiously. With such behavior, you're the loser — not the elevator button."

O'Neill said one man who attended one of his stress reduction seminars later found much of his stress was due to a soft-top antique sports car with a discolored rear window that made driving a hazard.

"Every time he wanted to move into another lane to pass someone, he gunned the car up to 70 miles an hour or more, figuring no one else would be going that fast," O'Neill said.

"It took him hours to calm down after that risky maneuver."

"When he pinpointed the trouble, he cut out the old window and also cut out his stress."

Inappropriate responses are drug and alcohol abuse, smoking and overeating — all conditions that are said to hasten the onset of heart disease and hypertension.

Rhythmical exercises such as running, brisk walking, and swimming are seen as appropriate responses to stress.

O'Neill said stress injects large amounts of hormones into the system and causes a shortage of vitamins C and B complex, decreases white blood cells and lowers the body's defense to disease.

Twenty minutes of exercise daily rids the body of the secreted hormones and prepares it for the next day's battle with stress, O'Neill said. The vitamins lost during excessive stress, O'Neill said, should be replaced with supplements.

Exercise is modern man's response to stress that prompted primitive man to either fight or flee when threatened, the psychologist said.

"Without flexibility to adapt, stress will kill you," he said.

Angora rabbit

SHARON, Ontario (AP) — Sheep don't have a monopoly on wool.

Little Angora rabbits can each produce a pound of wool a year, says Leopoldine Meyer, who raises the animals in this Toronto suburb.

"The wool is very warm. In a rabbit's lifetime, about six years, an Angora rabbit can produce enough wool for 12 sweaters."

"Their soft, warm fur, is spun into yarn, then made into clothing such as gloves, scarves and hats, in addition to sweaters," Meyer said.

O'Neill has this word for managers:

"People have a need to talk. If you have a boss who doesn't listen, that is the single greatest demotivator and causes a stress."

"A supervisor must remain calm, and responsive. It has a soothing effect on everyone around."

Whether it be the boss or the spouse, O'Neill said, "You've got to find out what is stressing you if you are to manage stress."

"If you are aware of stress, you can start solving it. If you can learn to respond non-stressfully to stress-producing events, the payoffs are profound."

Exercise a fad?

NEW YORK (AP) — Is exercise just a modern-day fad?

Not according to Jack Shepherd, author of "Cannibals of the Heart: A Personal Biography of Louisa and John Quincy Adams."

In 1790, John Quincy Adams was told by his doctor to start a regular exercise program to overcome depression.

Every day, Adams rose before the sun, and strode briskly for four to five miles.

On warm days, while serving as secretary of state and then president, Adams also swam in the Potomac to keep himself fit.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's love story too full of facts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was heartsick, but not terribly surprised, to find birth control pills in my daughter's bathroom. Rhonda (not her real name) just turned 18 and is a senior in high school. She's been going steady with a young man since last summer. Rhonda is an excellent student and plans to start college away from home next fall.

In today's world, what are a girl's chances of being harmed permanently by premarital sex? Rhonda is my only daughter. I love her dearly and never dreamed I would have this problem. — A MOTHER'S PROBLEM

DEAR MOTHER: A girl's chances of being harmed permanently by premarital sex would be infinitely greater were she not taking precautions to prevent an unwanted pregnancy. Many mothers whose daughters have had an abortion or a child out of wedlock would have welcomed your "problem." I am not condoning premarital sex, but when it's a fact, it should be dealt with intelligently and responsibly.

DEAR ABBY: Apparently neither you nor PERPLEXED IN N.Y. has ever been to a dance where there was a considerable number of unescorted women. I have, and believe me, the burden on the escort is nothing compared to that of the woman who must sit smiling while those parasites "borrow" her husband.

My husband and I both love to dance, and in the 40 years of our marriage we have attended many dances and exchanged dances with other couples during the evening. Now, however, there are increasing numbers of widows and divorcees to be waltzed around the floor, and if my husband danced with each one of them once, it would leave me without a partner all evening, so now we attend dances for "couples only."

While I sympathize with women who don't have husbands, it doesn't follow that I should give up mine. — ADAMANT IN N.Y.

DEAR ADAMANT: Read on for another view:
DEAR ABBY: I am a widow and I love to dance. When I go to a dance alone with another woman and there aren't enough men to go around, it is torture for me to just sit and tap my toes while others are dancing, so I ask a woman to dance. It's not quite as

Musical collector

BALTIMORE (AP) — A 73-year-old Baltimorean has been collecting marimba and xylophone memorabilia since 1924. His collection, believed to be the largest and most complete in the world, is housed at Towson State University.

The collection, which has inspired interest from the Library of Congress, contains everything imaginable about the marimba and xylophone, including a 1903 Deagan Klyposerous bar xylophone, a 1925 Deagan marimba, over 500 records featuring the marimba and xylophone, books, music, cartoons and greeting cards.

much fun as dancing with a man, but it beats sitting.

Oh, I get a few funny looks, but that doesn't bother me. Do you see anything wrong with it? — LOVES TO DANCE IN HIBBING, MINN.

DEAR LOVES: No. But if two men started to dance together in public, they'd promptly be asked to dance out of the place. Unfair? Yes. But who ever said life was fair?

DEAR ABBY: I agree, the word "hopefully" is woefully overused—and incorrectly at that. It would be much simpler if "I hope" were used instead, because that is what is meant.

Another word that is overused is "very." I once knew an editor who told his reporters that he would fire any reporter who used the word "very" — they should substitute the word "damned" instead! But since it was a family newspaper, he blue-penciled all the "damned's" before the stories went to the composing room. — NOVELIST

DEAR NOVELIST: That's damned interesting — I hope!

Diet facts & fallacies

Diet Center No. 1
684-5081

Your feeling of hunger is controlled by your appetat, a nerve complex associated with the hypothalamus which is located at the base of the brain. The appetat is controlled, in part, by the level of your blood sugar. When your blood sugar level drops, your body chemistry will be stimulated and you experience hunger.

Diet Center suggests these two ways to help you control your blood sugar level:

1. Eat slowly and chew each mouthful thoroughly. It takes 20 minutes for your stomach to give your brain the message that you have had enough to eat.
2. Learn to eat natural nutritious, high-vitamin/mineral foods for "staying power".

Teaching children about money

By ERMA BOMBECK

When the history of guilt is written, parents who refuse their children money will be right up there in the top ten.

Most of us are sustaining members of the Sin by Indulgence Club. I serve — without pay — as its national president, having made every mistake in the book.

Nearly every child psychologist I read said you should set up an allowance system that would not only teach the basics of savings, but through work would give them a feeling of accomplishment and personal value. I paid my kids to sleep, blow their noses, breathe in and out, clean out their cages, pick up their own towels, go out and play, get their bicycles out of the street, keep their feet on the floor, pass something, and one New Year's Day offered one of them a blank check if he would stop smacking his lips.

By the time the kids hit puberty, they were filthy rich! Through loans and heavy interest rates, we were able to borrow from them enough to make the payments on their overbites and send them to camps where we gave them a candy allowance to rot their overbites.

The one thing the psychology books never pointed out was how long it would take to give them the basics of saving and that feeling of accomplishment and personal value. My children's first words were, "Do I have to use my own money?" I had to get rid of the guilt. Guilt because I got to go to the hospital for surgery and they never got to go anywhere. Guilt because I bought a new sweater and they traded theirs for a Bee Gees album. Guilt because I went out on Saturday night and left them home with an overpaid sitter and $2,000 worth of toys.

The breaking point came when we knew in our hearts we could never qualify for welfare as long as they lived under our roof.

We made a speech. "Children," we said,

"you won't understand this now, but someday you will. We no longer want to deprive you of the poverty you so richly deserve. The Happy Days Are Here Again Bank of Prosperity and Living Through Guilt is closed! Money is not related to love. It's only a shallow substitute. What you really need is a ton of self-respect."

Finally one of them said, "Do we pay for it with our own money?"

We smiled, "It's the 'only' way you can buy it."

Designer offers travel tips

PARIS (AP) — When travelling for business or pleasure, travel light. That's the advice of Guy Laroche, French fashion designer who says one suitcase and one carry-on bag should be enough luggage to handle.

Laroche's tips for looking good while travelling light include the following pointers:

—Limit yourself to three simple dresses, preferably in wash-and-wear fabrics.

—Take one blazer in a neutral color for daytime and evening.

—Take sandals that double as slippers and two pairs of shoes, one for walking and one for evening.

—Select a beach coverup that can double as a bathrobe.

—Keep makeup cosmetics to a minimum.

Pack a small hairdrier and a tiny travel clock.

And get a good haircut before you leave home.

Job hints
WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — Getting passed over for promotion is a warning signal that you should begin to consider the status of your current job and whether the time has come to look elsewhere, says Charles A. Durakis, manager of the Westport office of Richards Consultants Ltd., an executive recruiting firm.

Other signs that your future may be limited, according to Durakis, include:

Having to wait longer than a reasonable period to get a raise; not being given additional responsibility; having most of your suggestions rejected, and not being given the opportunity to display your creativity.

CIA meeting Wednesday

Christmas In April, Midland's only housing repair project for the elderly and handicapped, will hold its volunteer meeting for selection of the houses Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Flame Room of Pioneer Natural Gas Company, 511 W. Missouri.

There are 131 houses on the list to be repaired for 1981. CIA workday is April 25.

According to Bobby Trimble, CIA coordinator, there are all kinds of projects for every type of volunteer.

"We have houses to roof, houses to paint, houses where windows and doors need repair, and houses where plumbing is needed," he said.

CIA is in its ninth year of operation. During 1980, CIA repaired 88 homes with the help of 2,500 volunteers and a budget of $32,000. This year's goal is $40,000 for 110 homes.

"Due to the immediate need, we raised our house figure to 131," explained Trimble. "The names just kept coming over the telephone."

For each house to be repaired, there will be a detailed house appraisal explaining all repairs and listing the materials. Along with the appraisal, there is a picture of each house.

Food for thought

EMMAUS, Pa. (AP) — Some 950,000 gallons of fuel are consumed annually to help satisfy New Yorkers' taste for broccoli.

The fuel is used to transport the vegetable from the West Coast.

The cost of this distribution amounts to some $6 million annually, according to Robert Rodale, publisher of Organic Gardening and New Farm magazines.

Rodale is funding a non-government attempt to make a systematic study of America's food system.

"There are literally dozens of fruits and vegetables that could be — and should be — grown closer to the people who will consume them," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1981, office workers will drink more than 9 billion cups of coffee, predicts the National Coffee Service Association.

Midland Council of Camp Fire Girls celebrated the 71st birthday of the Camp Fire organization recently with a variety of projects.

Camp Fire was founded in 1910 by Dr. and Mrs. Luther Halsey Gulick and is the oldest non-secular program for girls in the United States.

In the early 1970's, Camp Fire membership was opened to boys as well as girls.

The Midland group was begun in 1965. Mrs. Lou Whitley was the instrumental force in establishing the local chapter.

Also involved were Vern and Martha Dwyer, Mrs. Pat Boone, Suzanne Johnson, Ernestine Shirey, Anne Gaston, John and Joyce Hammeth, Leo Mitchell, Berry and Carolyn Welton, Ann Westerman, Patti Galbraith, Kathy Chandler and Maurine Keefe.

Mrs. Whitley has been involved in Camp Fire for 34 years. She was a member herself and says she wanted to see the organization started in Midland.

First officers were Sam L. Evans, president; Melton Tanderson, vice president; Mrs. E.C. Caffey, secretary and Loyd Whitley, treasurer.

Watch word of Camp Fire is "Wo-he-lo," which stands for work, health and love. "Give Service" is the group's motto.

Youth members are placed into small groups at age levels from the first through the 12th grades. Camp Fire believes that small groups allow greater development of each child's individuality and creativity.

For children who are unable to participate in groups, there is a member-at-large program. Volunteer leaders who guide the girls are aided in their work by Camp Fire Council in Midland. With groups in Midland and Odessa, the council is now governed by the leaders who elect a board of directors.

As a council-wide service project, Camp Fire groups took green plants, hanging baskets and wall hangings to the two new homes of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens. Baskets and hangings were made by Camp Fire members.

Group is presently holding its annual candy sale through April 19. Each Blue Bird and Camp Fire Girl in Midland and Odessa will participate in the door-to-door sales, which feature three kinds of Heath candy and Planter's Peanut Crunch. Members will be striving for individual awards and prizes.

Sale proceeds will be used to finance the Midland council projects. Portion of the money will go back into each groups treasury for camp outs, field trips and other projects.

Organization is active year-round, with various camping trips, field trips, etc. Group has been on overnight camping trips to places such as McKittrick Canyon, and one day outings to nearby sites such as Carlsbad Caverns. Spring Camporee, which is for Camp Fire members and their families, is planned for May 1-3 at Flory Park in Andrews.

"Individual groups usually do at least one service project a month," said Trina Albright, executive director of the Midland council. Projects include taking cookies to the elderly and cleaning up parks.

For more information on the candy sale or the Camp Fire organization in general, contact the Camp Fire Office at 694-7704.

Uprooted pets need a pat to ease jitters, vets say

Copley News Service

If Bilbo the dog and Fancy the cat are developing a few unexpected neuroses — such as eating too much or sulking under the couch — you might chalk it up to that move you made into your new home.

After all, dogs and cats — like humans — don't usually appreciate unexpected changes all that much.

So, you should be understanding, say veterinarians.

It's not really an uncommon problem for pets, says Dr. Craig Marvil of Mesa Pet Hospital in La Mesa, Calif., who has treated animals experiencing "disorientation distress."

"House moving can be a very trying experience for pets, especially those who are high-strung, aged or invalid," he said.

Temperamental dogs most likely to suffer "moving trauma" would include terriers and Chihuahuas.

Least likely would be a hunting dog in its prime — and puppies of any breed.

And of course, dogs and cats of different breeds have different tolerances for the unexpected, said Marvil.

"What the disoriented pet needs," he said, "is companionship, assurances that he hasn't been forsaken by his master or mistress. Friendly pats on the head and other forms of personal attention are important under such circumstances."

The problem has been around for a long time. One lone-held superstition concerns putting butter on the paws of cats and dogs in new homes. That way they spend their time licking the butter, and forget they're in an unfamiliar environment, some people felt.

On the serious side, pets experiencing psychological stress in new surroundings may also be more vulnerable to physical ailments, including flare-ups of old problems, said Marvil.

And neuroses can be accelerated by pets who think they've been abandoned, according to Dr. Victoria Jordan of San Diego Pet Hospital.

"They may develop behavior modifications unless eased into their new surroundings," she said, "like chewing on furniture or barking excessively."

"Give the pets in new homes a little extra attention. Let them know they're still important."

Dr. Matthew Brady of the Mobile Vet Emergency Service early recognized the trauma a pet can suffer when placed in strange environments, such as a pet hospital, so he makes house calls.

"Pets can also get a little nervous in a new home," said Brady. "New sounds, new odors, new physical surroundings." They miss their old home, he said.

Dog saves British officer

LONDON (AP) — Police officer Christopher Read was chasing a car theft suspect when he fell from a fence into a quicksand-like drainage ditch filled with mud.

As he sank into the slime, his only hope was his German shepherd police dog, Bruno.

Read yanked on Bruno's 30-foot leash and the dog responded by digging his paws into the ground and pulling hard.

"This stopped me sinking and I was able to haul myself out," the 30-year-old officer was quoted as saying today in press reports of the weekend incident at Maidenhead, northwest of London.

"Without him, I would not be here today. My head went under several times. I could feel myself being slowly sucked under just like in quicksand. I thought to myself, 'this is it'."

Read, who keeps Bruno at home with him during non-working hours, said he gave his life-saving companion his favorite reward, some chocolate dog bones.

Here are some tips the vets offer for helping the dogs or cats that need a little help in adjusting to strange new worlds:

- Don't move the pet into the new home until the furniture has been transferred.
- If the pet is unfamiliar with vehicle travel, take it on short neighborhood car trips before embarking on that long ride to the new home.
- Allow the pet to be with family members while becoming oriented.

- Keep cats indoors until they adjust to the new surroundings, letting them out for short periods under supervision. Otherwise they may get lost.
- Walk the dog around the neighborhood to help it fit in.
- If you're moving to another city, check on pet diseases that may be prevalent there and take preventive measures.

Miners strike effects will reach beyond coalfields

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

The effects of a strike by 160,000 union coal miners could soon reach far beyond the coalfields — to American homes and factories, to other nations' fuel stockpiles and even to crisis-ridden Poland, according to officials.

A prolonged strike by the United Mine Workers could hamstring some industries, cause widespread layoffs, boost oil imports and cost billions of dollars in lost paychecks, profits and taxes.

"We don't know if the strike is going to last a month or six months," a senior Energy Department official said, asking not to be identified. "But things point to it being worse than the last time."

"The last time" was the union's record 111-day walkout in 1977-78. Before Tuesday's ill-fated ratification vote, by which miners rejected the proposed contract 2-to-1, UMW President Sam Church had warned rejection could lead to an even longer strike.

The 1977 strike led to power shortages, isolated blackouts and mandatory conservation measures. However, predictions the strike would cause tens of thousands of layoffs failed to materialize.

Indiana and other states already have said they will adopt emergency regulations and mobilize the National Guard to protect coal shipments and installations if this strike is severe.

Roving UMW pickets already have closed non-union mines in some Eastern coal states. When the UMW went on strike March 27, many non-union operations in heavily unionized areas closed automatically to head off picketing.

However, the nation's coal-fired power plants have an average fuel reserve that would last them three months and could get some additional supplies from mines in the West, most of which are not affected by the strike.

The strike comes amid growing domestic and foreign demand for coal. Many nations have been turning to the United States, the major coal exporter, because of problems in Australia and Poland, the next largest suppliers.

"It's going to increase prices on the world energy market," Barry Levy, a coal expert with the Department of Energy, said. "There'll be some pressure on oil. ... It'll probably put pressure on the dollar."

Australia, the world's second largest exporter at about 47 million tons a year, still is recovering from a seven-month miners' strike last year.

Internal strife in Poland between the government and the independent trade union Solidarity has cut so sharply into the nation's coal production that Poland now is importing coal. Some of the coal is coming from the United States, although the National Coal Association, an industry group, could not say exactly how much. Poland has been exporting about 44 million tons of coal a year.

Mines in Canada and South Africa, the other big coal exporters, are already near top production, and some nations refuse to trade with South Africa because of its apartheid racial policy.

"Suddenly those purchases have been diverted to the U.S. We've never experienced that much demand for coal before and suddenly we're overwhelmed," said William Kruppa, a Commerce Department official.

East Coast ports, unable to cope quickly with the increased flow of coal through their facilities, have become bottlenecks for foreign coal shipments. Some colliers have been waiting for up to 80 days to load.

But now the strike has cut U.S. coal production from 17 million tons a week to seven million tons, Kruppa said. Although UMW miners produce less than half of the nation's coal, picketing is expected to reduce non-union coal output sharply, he said.

U.S. coal exports, which rose from 64.7 million tons in 1979 to 89.9 million tons in 1980, had been expected to reach 97 million tons in 1981, according to the coal association.

"If it's a long strike you can knock that figure into a cocked hat," Kruppa said.

Electric power stations, which stockpiled coal in anticipation of a strike, have an average 108-day supply on hand, according to Commerce Department figures. But scattered power shortages could occur after a month, Kruppa said.

While some utilities, such as the American Electric Power System which serves seven Midwestern and Appalachian states, have reserves for 140 days, some plants have less than half that amount. David Boonin, an economist with the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, said Pennsylvania Power & Light, for example, has reserves for only 60 days.

Although some officials have predicted warm weather could soften the effects of a prolonged strike, Richard Newcomb, an economist at West Virginia University, noted that the biggest power demand usually comes in the summer because of air conditioning.

In this view from a tourist tower on the Canadian side of the Niagara River, water tumbles over the American Falls. Beyond can be seen a part of downtown Niagara Falls, N.Y., while in the distance wisps of smoke rise from smokestacks in the city's industrial area.

Pioneers set reunion

The 12th Biennial Reunion of Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers will be held here Oct. 30, with headquarters at the Midland Hilton.

The date for the biennial event, which is held on alternate years with the Permian Basin Oil Show, was set at a recent meeting of the association's reunion committee, which is headed by Jno. P. Butler. Other members of the panel are Harvey Herd, Les Weatherall, Fred Tyler and Bill Collins.

Tentative plans call for a visitation coffee to be held from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Hilton, which also will be the location for the men's luncheon. The ladies luncheon will be held at the Green Tree Country Club. Tours of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, and of Midland and vicinity will be scheduled during the afternoon.

The concluding event will be a reception and buffet for both men and women, starting at 6 p.m. at the Petroleum Club.

A guest speaker for the reunion will be named at a later date, according to Butler.

All persons who have been associated with the petroleum industry in the Permian Basin in one way or another for 30 or more years, prior to Oct. 30, 1981, qualify as Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers, Les Weatherall membership chairman, said. All men and women who qualify, and who have not previously registered, are requested to do so by contacting the Midland Chamber of Commerce, co-sponsor of the celebration.

Area rig count for week hits 425

The Reed Rock Bit Company's weekly survey indicates a rig count for the Permian Basin, West Texas and southeast New Mexico to be 425 over last year's total of 305 for this time.

Lea County is still leading the area with a final tally for the week of 50 rigs at work.

Eddy County still takes second place this week with a total of 29 rigs for the New Mexico county.

Pecos County is holding with a steady 22.

Other West Texas counties on the upswing are Dawson with 11 and Gaines with 13 rigs at work this week.

DENVER — A new monthly report covering new field exploration for oil and gas on a nation-wide basis is now available from Petroleum Information Corporation.

The report, National Wildcat Monthly, includes a narrative analysis of new field exploration and offers a complete record of every new field discovery well reported during the month of coverage. The discovery data includes operator-of-record, location, well name, producing formations and intervals, total depth and information on the well's initial producing potential.

The narrative section of the report includes a region-by-region look at exploratory successes, progress on significant wildcats being drilled and wildcats planned in remote locations.

The report takes advantage of PI's extensive network of reporters and a timely data accumulation system to provide current information to subscribers. The annual cost of the report is $300.

Petroleum Information is a wholly-owned subsidiary of A.C. Nielsen Company, Northbrook, Illinois. The firm offers, in addition to maps, comprehensive reporting services, data and data analysis, log and exploration and engineering consultation to the petroleum and related industries.

Niagara Falls — a mixed blessing

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Niagara, one of the most spectacular waterfalls in the world, draws millions of dollar-laden tourists each year and supplies a hydroelectric power lode that has been the region's economic backbone for almost a century.

But as tourists and honeymooners come and go, area residents worry about a problem as awesome as the falls themselves: millions of tons of toxic wastes scattered throughout the 130.5 square miles of Niagara County.

"It was the Niagara River that spawned the chemical industry with hydroelectric power. Now it's threatening to destroy us," said Joan Gipp, a Town of Lewiston councilwoman.

The chemical companies attracted by the cheap electricity had already dumped most of the toxic by-products by the time environmental legislation started outlawing such practice in the last decade.

Even so, state officials estimate that industries in New York state still generate more than 1.2 million tons of hazardous wastes a year — and 44 percent of it is produced in Niagara and Erie counties.

Niagara County is bordered on the west by the Niagara River, on the north by Lake Ontario, Buffalo, in Erie County, marks the other end of the Niagara River.

In both counties, state officials in 1979 counted 305 private, municipal, state and federal waste disposal sites. About half of these are located in Niagara County, according to John Spagnoli, regional director of the state Department of Environmental Conservation.

Some of the biggest corporate names — Hooker, Carborundum, Olin, DuPont, Union Carbide — and the worst cases of contamination are concentrated in Niagara County.

Asked how much toxic material is buried in the dumps, Spagnoli replied: "We couldn't even guess at it. It would be in the millions of tons."

The most famous former dump is the Love Canal, now site of an abandoned grade school and scores of empty houses. It was used for chemical storage between 1942 and 1953 by what is now the Hooker Chemicals & Plastics Co.

After reports of unusual numbers of health problems and miscarriages among residents of the Love Canal neighborhood, the state and federal governments declared it a disaster area in 1978, ultimately moving more than 700 families.

While facing multimillion-dollar lawsuits over the Love Canal, Hooker is also trying to settle other suits about a different dumpsite at the northern tip of the city of Niagara Falls.

The former Hyde Park dump is believed to contain 80,000 tons of toxic contaminants, four times the amount in the Love Canal, and nearby residents complain of health problems similar to those at the Love Canal.

Hooker has agreed to spend more than $16.5 million to clean the dump and the adjoining Bloody Run Creek, which runs into the Niagara River, and to move some of the residents away.

The two Hooker dumps, like others in the area, are products of an era of corporate — and public — indifference, said Mrs. Gipp.

"We've been in a false economy for a long time, where only the cost of production (and not waste disposal) has been passed on to consumers," she said. "So we, the residents, are bearing the brunt in two ways — both in dollars for attorney fees and with our health."

For Mrs. Gipp, the toxic waste battle has a personal edge. Her home is near the Lake Ontario Ordinance Works in Lewiston and Porter. During World War II the federal government used the 1,511-acre site for making TNT, and then for storing uranium residues from the Manhattan Project, which produced the atomic bomb.

Shell says additions exceeded production

HOUSTON (AP) — Shell Oil Co. reported Monday its 1980 additions to proved reserves of crude oil and natural gas exceeded production.

"We again were among the leading major oil and gas companies in replacing oil and gas production," John F. Bookout, president, said in his annual letter to shareholders.

Bookout said the reserves additions amounted to 137 percent of liquid hydrocarbon production and 113 percent of gas production.

He said Shell's oil and condensate production increased 8 percent over 1979 because of the Belridge Oil properties acquired in December 1979.

Since the end of 1979, Bookout said, production from the California properties has increased from 42,000 to 53,000 barrels a day.

Bookout said audited financial results confirmed the preliminary figures released earlier indicating that 1980 per share earnings increased 36 percent to $4.99, with total earnings of $1.5 billion representing a 22 percent return on shareholders' equity.

Sterling Co. completion announced

The H.G. Sledge Drilling Co. of Midland has staked a 8,200-foot offset location 13 miles west of Sterling City on the SH survey in Sterling County.

The No. 3 Jann is located 1,295 feet from the north and 2,020 feet from the west lines of section 19, block 22 of H&TC Railroad Commission survey in the Big Salute, North (Canyon) field.

It is located 500 feet north of the No. 1 Jann, a completed oil producer and 500 feet southeast of the No. 2 Jann, a projected offset. The Jennie Ray, another completed oil producer is in the adjoining Parochial Badew field and 1,500 feet northeast of the "Sledge Jann" another completed oil producer.

There are three oil producers in the Big Salute, North (Canyon) field.

Commission authorizes gas sale

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has authorized Napeco, Inc. to sell natural gas produced on an 852-acre state tract in Terrell County to an interstate pipeline company for ultimate sale and use outside Texas.

State statute requires a producer to obtain an exception to the Commission's Rule 69 in order to sell gas from state lands for out-of-state consumption.

Napeco's application for an exception to the rule — involving gas produced from the Allison A-1 well in the Wilborne (Detrial) Field — was recommended by Examiner Brian Sullivan during the weekly conference on Oil and Gas Division matters. Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Mak Wallace and Buddy Temple accepted the recommendation.

The General Land Office supported the application.

The RRC order granting the rule to exception limits the out-of-state sale until Dec. 31, 1984, without interruption, beginning with the effective date of the gas purchase contract between Napeco and Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America.

Sullivan advised the Commissioners that Napeco had contacted three intrastate pipelines in the area and all had declined to purchase the gas. The nearest municipal market — the city of Dryden — is 36 miles from the subject well.

Sullivan explained that Napeco would be denied the opportunity to economically produce the hydrocarbons under the lease if the rule exception is not granted.

Sharp energy cost increases shown

BOSTON (AP) — New England's household energy costs more than tripled in the last 10 years, underscoring an "alarming" energy gap between the cold and warm weather states, a congressional study said Friday.

The average 1980 household energy bill in New England was $1,325 compared to $386 in 1970, the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition said. New England energy costs are the highest in the nation.

Midwest residents paid the second-highest amount at $1,150. In the Mid-Atlantic states the average was $1,100.

The highest energy costs around the country were in New Hampshire, where residents paid an average of $1,450. The lowest were Washington state at $501 and California at $503.

The coalition, a bipartisan alliance of more than 200 members of Congress from 18 northeastern and midwestern states, said the figures "show that the energy gap between the regions is widening at an alarming rate, threatening any hope the Frostbelt may have for economic recovery."

DFW cargo activity up

Air passenger traffic was off slightly in January compared with the same month a year ago at the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport but cargo activity showed great strength, figures released recently show.

While overall passengers were down by 0.8 percent over January 1980, domestic cargo was up by 31.5 percent and 49.2 percent in international markets.

"Predictions for the industry generally indicate a flat year for passenger traffic and our figures certainly reflect that trend," said DFW Executive Director Earnest E. Dean. "The fact that cargo continues to grow at a rapid rate, though, is extremely encouraging for us."

State Board checking complaints

By Bill Kidd

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance is considering complaints from agents who charge some mortgage lenders are soliciting insurance for specific agents in violation of Insurance Code provisions — a controversy which has flared up before in recent years.

Independent Insurance Agents of Texas and Professional Insurance Agents of Texas argue the lenders (particularly some in metropolitan areas) may be in violation of provisions on unfair competition and trade practices.

But Texas Mortgage Bankers Association contends the letters have been examined prior to use by SBI officials, and that the letters aren't "solicitations" but are to inform borrowers where they may obtain coverage.

SBI Chairman William P. Daves says he feels there's enough evidence to indicate some violations may have occurred — and that "the board should do something about it."

Three staff members have been appointed to continue the investigation of the matter.

The Banking Section, State Finance Commission, has adopted final rules on adjustable rate mortgages for banks, tracking the regulations approved earlier through the Savings and Loan Section for use by savings and loan associations.

Commission members note that thus far, banks have shown little interest in providing such mortgages.

The section also adopted changes in rules regarding second mortgage loans, to state that such loans are personal and not real estate loans, and announced the choice of Gary K. Pool as the new deputy banking commissioner, replacing Daniel Flynn, who returns to a bank in Dallas.

More product liability cases were brought in Federal Courts in Texas in fiscal 1980 than anywhere else in the country, the Insurance Information Institute reports.

The 653 cases reported represented an increase of 37.5 percent from the 475 in fiscal 1979, the Institute reports.

Nationally, the institute says, there was an increase of 26.5 percent in the number of cases, with 7,755 cases in 1980.

The U.S. Fifth Circuit, which includes Texas, had the largest number of cases, 1,854, representing a 39.5 percent increase.

The Civil Matters Subcommittee of the Senate Jurisprudence Committee heard testimony on 19 bills involving worker's compensation insurance, but left all the measures, which are sponsored by Dallas Sen. Oscar Mauzy (D), as pending business.

Among the bills drawing opposition was SB 324, mandatory worker's compensation for all Texas employers. Austin attorney and worker's compensation expert Tony Koriath argued that mandatory coverage is needed to maintain the present system, reporting that more and more people are leaving the system — 1,000 employers having dropped out since 1977-78, the latest period for which figures are available.

Al Haig misinterpreted

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was the unwitting "victim" of instant reporting shortly after President Ronald Reagan was wounded by a would-be assassin Monday.

The furor over the Haig comment came close to getting out of hand. The secretary merely said "as of now, I am in control in the White House pending the return of the vice president." He went on to explain that "constitutionally, you have the president, vice president and secretary of state, in that order."

It has been pointed out that technically Haig was incorrect if he was referring to the order of succession to the presidency. Actually, the secretary of state is fifth in line in the order of succession, coming behind the vice president, speaker of the House and president pro tem of the Senate. But why would a television commentator think Haig was referring to the order of succession?

Apparently, what influenced some television newsmen Monday was the fact that Haig and Vice President George Bush had been involved in a well-publicized "power struggle" just days prior to the shooting incident. That confrontation ended when President Reagan named Bush to head a new crisis management team, a position the secretary apparently thought should come under his sphere of influence.

That "power struggle" apparently was still on the minds of some newsmen and they could have assumed that Haig's statements were guided by his interests in the controversy.

Of course, we realize that the electronic media has a difficult job and was operating in a pressure situation last Monday. And we have no argument with the fact that for immediate comment on a news event, the electronic media can't be beaten.

But the Haig affair is evidence of one of the dangers of instant reporting, that being an immediate lack of information. Unfortunately, Alexander Haig was the recipient of a "raw deal" this time around.

Newspapers have one advantage over the electronic media — they don't have to make instant analyses and evaluations. Rather, newspapers, while bringing the news to readers in a slower manner, can view the total situation and present more complete information.

Al Haig showed himself to be a quick thinker after the president was shot. He stepped in while Vice President George Bush was away from Washington and took charge during an emotional time not only to reassure the American people that their government was still in control of the situation, but also to show the rest of the world the nation was not weakened by the events of the day.

It's a shame Haig drew undue criticism for his actions and statements that were misinterpreted to mean something other than what he apparently meant. The electronic media has a responsibility to refrain from this sort of speculative reporting.

Better idea from Ford?

A reported agreement between Ford Motor Co. and Japan's Toyota manufacturers seems to be a profitable answer to the continuing conflict between American automakers and their competition from abroad.

The plan to build 300,000 cars a year in Ford plants in the United States will provide jobs for American workers. And 75 percent of components will be American-made.

Toyota will gain, too. Makers of Honda and Datsun are building plants in the United States as a hedge against U.S. attempts to cut back on imports. Toyota will be able to retain its share of the market.

And Toyota distributors will sell Fords. Ford dealers will sell Toyotas.

The design of the restyled car remains a secret. Ford is not putting a spotlight on all features of its "better idea."

Shooting made Reagan bigger man than he was before

WASHINGTON — The shooting of President Ronald Reagan now tells us more about what kind of person he is. As we absorb every last scrap of information about this violent, sorrowful event, Mr. Reagan emerges as a man blessed with a strong constitution, a coolness in adversity, and a wry Irish sense of humor which has universal appeal.

"Don't worry about me," he told distraught friends as he entered surgery. "I'll make it." When Secret Service agents diverted his presidential limousine from its White House destination to the hospital, he was calm and uncomplaining about his wound. Grace under pressure equals courage.

The morning after his surgery, Reagan was sitting up in bed and brushing his teeth. By 7:15 a.m., he was holding a meeting with senior advisers in his room, and signed a bill canceling a hike in dairy price supports. Reagan was back earning his presidential salary less than 18 hours after he was shot. By Thursday, he was eating jellybeans again.

The argument that Reagan is too old to be president (which faded considerably during the campaign) has about dried up. The medical voice of satisfaction and even surprise over the president's recuperative powers. Monday night, he was sitting up, talking with doctors and nurses. He was alert, and his condition had stabilized. Two quarts of bloody fluid were removed from his chest cavity, hence the need for a transfusion of 2½ quarts of blood.

The surgical opening of the rib cage and subsequent examination of the heart and lung is regarded as a severe strain on any 70-year-old, but in Mr. Reagan's case, the doctors came away saying he has the physiology of a man in his late '50s.

"What a constitution that Irishman has," said Sen. Paul D. Laxalt (R-Nev.), one of the president's best friends.

Through the years, Reagan spontaneously uttered thousands of quips which served to relieve a tense moment or to aptly summarize a situation. Anybody who has been around the Irish know that they love to offer such remarks — a sort of running narrative on the tragedy, joy, and incongruity of life.

"Honey, I forgot to duck," he cracked to Nancy Reagan, who stood grave-faced as he was wheeled into surgery. That's the kind of explanation an errant husband might make to his wife when he came home late at night after being in a bar fight. The humor of it.

What went through the president's mind before he looked up at the surgeons getting ready to operate, and said, "Please tell me you're Republicans?" Of course they smiled, and agreed they were — for that day anyway. Again, courage displayed, not anxiety. A medical technician holding

CIA wary of Soviets' South Pole interest

WASHINGTON — While U.S.-Soviet relations seem to be slipping back into the Cold War era, there is one place in the world where the two rivals have put their hostility into a deep freeze: Antarctica.

This peaceful coexistence is based technically on a treaty signed by the two superpowers and 10 other nations in 1959. It set aside the fifth largest continent exclusively for non-military scientific research.

The real reason for the sweet reasonableness, though, seems to be the fact that Antarctica has not been regarded as a vital interest for either the United States or the Soviet Union. Even in the days of Henry Kissinger's all-encompassing global strategy, the icebound continent was largely ignored — though Kissinger's aides at the National Security Council used to joke that he considered Argentina and Chile to be "a dagger aimed at the heart of Antarctica."

So the treaty provisions have been adhered to scrupulously. American scientists are allowed to work at Soviet bases; Russian scientists are welcomed at U.S. bases. The "Dr. Strangelove" paranoia that marks so many areas of U.S.-Soviet relations has been remarkably absent in Antarctica — at least among the scientific fraternity.

Lately, though, the ever-vigilant, ever-suspicious Central Intelligence Agency has intruded into this icy idyll. The discovery of oil, other minerals and enormous schools of tiny, high-protein shrimps called krill have made Antarctica suddenly worth scrutiny.

What has stirred the CIA's interest the most, however, is the Kremlin's increased interest in Antarctica. Anytime the Russians decide an area is worth greater attention, the CIA gets worried. Now, apparently, they are nervous about a Frostbite Gap at the South Pole.

So far, the CIA has resisted any temptation to send human spies out in the cold of the frozen continent. But the agency has been using its satellite spies and communications equipment to monitor Soviet activities in Antarctica, and has gleaned much useful information from what's on the public record about Russian expeditions.

A "Top Secret Umbra" document reviewed by my associate Dale Van Atta shows the extent of the CIA's interest in Soviet operations in Antarctica.

Although Russian activities in Antarctica date back to an expedition in 1819, the CIA notes, expanded Soviet interest began only in 1955. Seven permanent Russian bases have now been established there — compared to four permanent American installations.

An eighth, part-time Soviet base, Druzhnaya, is in operation only during the Antarctic summer, which lasts from November to March. Construction of that base touched off the first disagreement over the multinational treaty.

The Soviet announcement that the Druzhnaya base "would be used for geological and mineral exploration

ART BUCHWALD

Owning a foreign-made car isn't a status-symbol now

WASHINGTON — I am not as pessimistic about the American automobile industry as most people. The one thing that makes the U.S. consumer buy something is if the product is different from anything his neighbors have. This is particularly true of cars.

Americans consider their automobiles status symbols; something not only to drive, but to use to put down their friends and relatives.

For a long time, the foreign car has been the ultimate status symbol for someone living in the United States. At first, only a few people drove them. But in recent years it has become impossible to impress anyone with an imported model, because everyone has one of his own.

But now the pendulum may be swinging back, and because they are so rare, an American car is the fashionable thing to own.

Just the other day at a party, Jeffrey Doranz drove up the driveway in a strange-looking vehicle and honked his horn.

We all rushed out of the house to look at it.

"What is it?" someone asked.

"It's called a Chevette," Jeffrey said proudly.

Bob Elliott, who was the first one on the block to own a Toyota, was livid with jealousy.

"Where was it made?" he asked.

• Art Buchwald

"In the United States," Jeffrey said. "It was built in Detroit by this friend who lives in Grosse Pointe, and he tipped me off. He said it's going to be the car of the future."

Mrs. Elliott, who owned a Mercedes-Benz sports car, whispered to Bob. "Do you think it's true?"

"I don't know," Bob told her. "I heard they were toying with the idea of making cars in Detroit, but I didn't realize they had gone into production."

Burberry, who owned a Volvo and a Volkswagen, opened the door of the Chevette and looked inside.

"Would you like me to take you for a spin in it?" Jeffrey asked. "It's amazing what American engineers have put in a little car this size."

Jeffrey and Burberry took off, while the rest of us stood around depressed and sick that Doranz had put one over on us.

The wives were particularly furious. One said to her husband, "I thought you told me the BMW was the new status car in the country."

"It was, for a year. How did I know Americans would start making automobiles again?"

"I'm going to top Doranz," Elliott said. "I hear the Ford Motor Company has a new car called the Escort. If we move now, I'll be the first one on the block to own one."

My wife asked me, "What do we do with our Mazda?"

"We sell it, before Doranz makes a fool of us. I saw on television the other night that Chrysler is putting out a Dodge Colt. I'll make enquiries. But mum's the word. We don't want anyone in the neighborhood to get wind of it."

Doranz came back with Burberry. "Anyone else want a ride?" he said pompously.

We all declined, though the curiosity of driving around in an American-built car was killing us. Most of us left the party as soon as we could because we couldn't stand the smug look on Doranz's face.

Who would have dreamed that in such a short time the thrill of owning a foreign-made car would be gone?

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

On April 15, we observe the process in which the people pay the expenses of carrying on the government. The way the government is carrying on, they're lucky the people continue to carry on the process.

When looking for someone to prepare your taxes, it's best to ignore roadside signs which say, "Fresh melons, handmade quilts and tax returns."

Another good thing to remember is, try to avoid any tax expert whose first name is "Bugsy."

Your filing status is determined by whether you are married, single, divorced or dead. It's comforting to know that if you die on April 15, the IRS will give you an extension.

One of the curious things about tax law is, if you get married on Dec. 31, in the eyes of the tax collector, you were married all year long. Which is more than you can say for the girl's parents.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

White still considering costs—all of them—of political campaigns

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Mark White thinks everyone who grows up in Texas ought to run for governor — but he might add that they should wait a couple of years.

White's gubernatorial ambitions have come in for increasing speculation recently, fueled in part by his recent fundraiser in Austin to eliminate the remaining debts from this 1978 campaign.

That campaign was one that White wasn't expected to win, since he was a relative unknown — although he had served more than four years as secretary of state under Gov. Dolph Briscoe — going against the late speaker of the house, Price Daniel Jr., whom most polls and observers had picked as the winner.

White's victory didn't surprise him, although the conceder he missed the amount of money which would be required by more than $1 million. Which is, perhaps, why he's not anxious to discuss what it would take for a gubernatorial race, either for himself or for someone else.

White indicates that he'll be deciding this summer, or perhaps later, whether he'll try for re-elections or some other office.

"It's too early now," he insists.

And, he adds, he's really got more on his plate than he can say grace over with the work the attorney general's office is doing.

"I don't know anyone up here that has any more business than I do now," he jokes.

Much of that business has kept

White prominently in the public eye — the fights with U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice over bilingual education and the Texas prison system, the on-going Howard Hughes estate case and numerous lawsuits involving state agencies.

But all of that hasn't necessarily been beneficial for any future political efforts.

White, should he run for governor, whether against Gov. Bill Clements or any other Republican, will have to perform something of a political tightrope act to avoid offending minority groups whose support he enjoyed in his attorney general's race, while gathering support from the majority of more conservatively minded Democrats.

Or, as an aide puts it, "we have to show them that we may be conserva-

...but we're not heartless."

White has come under criticism from a number of Mexican-American leaders regarding the state's position on the bilingual education and prison lawsuits, both of which, White's office notes, were inherited from other administrations and which White is obligated to defend.

White also has been attacked for defending the state provisions for tuition charged to children of illegal aliens — despite the fact that the prohibition was proposed and supported by Mexican-American lawmakers from South Texas.

But White's supporters are sure he can overcome any displeasure generated by his defense of causes unpopular with minorities.

What they're not sure of is whether he can generate the funds he would need to take on Clements — if Clements decides to run — or some other GOP candidate who presumably would have access to large amounts of funds.

And with Clements having spent $7 million in his race against former Attorney General John Hill, the prospects are that the 1982 gubernatorial race will be a costly one, regardless of whom the contestants turn out to be.

At the moment, White appears to be the most likely candidate for the Democrats — although some others, including Hill, are mentioned.

And Clements will be, beyond question, the GOP nominee, if he wants a second term.

So far, Clements hasn't said that he does — and has told reporters and White that he hasn't made up his mind.

Legislators haven't been overly swift to act on some of Clements' anti-crime proposals, although it appears that many of those bills will be moving to floor action this month. But regardless of what the Governor has or hasn't done as far as getting his programs enacted, Clements enjoys favorable marks from 64 percent of Texas voters as shown by a recent statewide poll.

That kind of support will be difficult for any Democratic candidate to overcome — and without lots of money and lots of work, any challenge of Clements would be political suicide.

Should Clements not run, things could be quite a bit different, and the picture could be very bright indeed for one of those kids who grew up in Texas wanting to be governor.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A moving movie

To The Editor:

I want to express my appreciation for the CBS movie "Berlin Tunnel 21."

There is a growing attitude around the world today: "Better Red Than Dead." This attitude grows from ignorance of the truth.

We need more media coverage of this type to educate the young and remind the old of the horrors of a non-free society like communist Russia.

We will live to regret the generation of Americans that do not know why men and women have died for freedom.

Perturbing pets

To The Editor:

May we use your newspaper to remind owners of pets that the city has a leash law, and failure to use this on pets in public places (parks, streets, etc.), can lead to a penalty of a fine?

Also what can we do about animals excreting on our yard and romping through our new flowers and plants? (Our back yard is fenced where our pets are). We cannot fence our front to any degree of satisfaction to keep these animals from intruding.

Are you guilty of letting your pet roam around leashless?

Name Withheld

Undue influence

To The Editor:

To have access to the public through national television is a strange and powerful weapon (unlike the "Saturday Night Special" handgun, it works all the time). Strange because public awareness can be and is manipulated by inference usually disguised as "information" and powerful because it touches so many people.

Dan Rather's suggestion that Alexander Haig acted in any way contrary to his responsibility following Monday's assassination attempt on the president burns me up. Not only did he "sue" that Haig was perhaps in a "power" struggle with George Bush, but continued to harp on the subject as though he was still on "60 Minutes." Thank God for assertive individuals like Alexander Haig and others in our present administration who act positively during crisis.

With the president in the hospital, the vice president in the air on the way to Washington, one would think Rather could see the need for Haig or someone to reassure the country that the business of government (especially our defense capability) was being looked after by someone "in charge."

For my money, (and I'm a former working member of the media) Rather should worry more about his own "succession" (or maybe that's his problem) and stop exerting his influence by suggestion and inference. There are still those of us out here in "TV land" that believe most of what we see and hear is truth especially when lauded by those we are told to consider as "leaders." A lot of what is wrong with our country is in the heads of those like Hinckley, but a lot of his confusion comes from the "second guessing" that goes on in the media daily over almost every move that is made by public figures. "Simple reporting" of the "news" is not all that simple...and not always "news."

Anyone who thinks that "slanted" news stories can't influence the masses need only watch and listen closely during an election year. ABC and NBC made a concerted effort to report Monday's happenings; CBS, one must assume, concerned with rating points, felt it necessary to scape some goats. Fortunately, for all of us, the two knobs that clear up these problems (albeit temporarily) still work...the one that changes channels, and more importantly, the one that turns "the influence peddler" OFF.

Handgun hunting

To The Editor:

In your Letters To The Editor, March 22, 1981, Mary Ann Caki states, "No one hunts wild game with handguns." Well, Ms. Caki, you are dead wrong. I, along with an estimated 3,600,000 other Americans, do hunt wild game with handguns.

You are partially right when you state, "Handgun control will not bring an immediate end to all crimes of violence," because gun availability has no relationship with murder or suicide rates.

According to criminologist Don B. Kates, "Handguns are used in 50 percent of murders; 85 percent of murderers are drunk." Therefore, using the theory that additional gun laws will prevent crime, why not stop 85 percent of all murders by prohibiting alcohol?

Sad commentary

To The Editor:

The recent headlines reporting that 157 very diverse special interest groups had banded together to oppose President Reagan's proposed "NEW BEGINNING" in federal government may be a very clear comment on the sad condition of our national government.

Just over one hundred years ago, President Lincoln spoke proudly and truthfully to the nation of "...a government of the people, by the people, and for the people." In the past fifty years, the gradual, and some not so gradual, changes in our society and national government have corrupted the systems of Lincoln's era into what could now be called "...an exploitation of the people, by the bureaucracy, and for the special interest free-loaders."

The people who established our constitutional government almost two hundred years ago were committed and dedicated to the system that Lincoln proudly described as "of the people, by the people, and for the people." You must decide now if we the people have the courage, commitment and dedication to help President Reagan wrest control of our lives and earnings away from the bureaucracy and over 157 diverse special interest groups and to reestablish the system Lincoln described so eloquently.

You must decide if you are willing to assume the duties and responsibilities of living in a nation, state, county and city governed "...by the people and for the people." Of course, it is much easier to sit back and let the bureaucrats for life and special interest groups continue to dominate your life and future and that of your children. The special interest groups are often well organized and financed with your tax dollars so they are tough enemies to overcome. Do we the people have the courage and determination to stand, speak and be heard as did those that forged our "First Beginning" only two hundred years ago? Now is the time to find out!

POSITIVE THINKING

Success best built on foundation of success, not one of failure

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

"Why am I so dumb? Why do I make so many wrong decisions? Why do I do so many stupid things?" demanded an agitated man. "It isn't that I'm lacking in education — I'm a university graduate. I have a high enough I.Q. In fact, I graduated with academic honors. But believe it or not, I've lost six jobs in ten years, and all because of my stupidity." So ran this man's acid self-condemnation.

"Well," I remarked, "at least you're making progress, for you do admit your stupidity — if that is what you wish to call it. The man who's really in a bad way is the one who is dumb and doesn't know it. Anyway, you aren't really stupid. Maybe you just haven't got your mental faculties organized correctly."

I reminded him that all of us make mistakes, but we shouldn't let that discourage us. People famous for outstanding successes are no exception, either. Dale Carnegie, author of the famous book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People," one of the all-time best sellers, once told me he thought of writing another book, "Dumb Things I Have Done by Dale Carnegie." I told him that if I set forth on such a project I would have to produce a whole series of books entitled, "Dumb Things I Have Done by Norman Vincent Peale."

But if you repeatedly make mistakes, if you constantly blunder in situations when you really try to do things right — this is something else again. This unfortunate mistake tendency will need to be corrected.

Some persons are accident prone; that is, they tend to get hurt repeatedly in circumstances where the average person would rarely sustain injury. In industry this is well known and carefully taken into account, especially at plants where people work with dangerous machines. Similarly, a person can be error prone. And this can spell continual failure and frustration.

There is a two-fold remedy for error proneness. First, learn from your successes. We are told that we should learn from our mistakes — and of course mistakes can be teachers. But by dwelling too much upon the mistakes you have made you can keep yourself in a sort of error groove. Mistakes can be teachers all right; but they can also be leeches, clinging to your thinking, conditioning you to make the same mistakes again. It is all too easy to let yesterday's mistakes ruin today.

By training your mind to emphasize your successes you will develop a deep tendency to succeed. A golf pro told me, "The best way to improve your golf game is to practice the same shot over and over until you hit a real good one — one that gives you that clean click of the club's impact on the ball, the ball going just where you want it to go. Then stop right there and try to get the feel of how you played that shot. Do it again, and again, to get your muscles educated to that special feel. Learn from your successful shots not your errors."

The same applies to relationships with people. When you hit it off just right with somebody, that is the time to study what you did right in that contact. Make a mental note of what made for that good reaction. Then try the same approach in other personal situations. In this manner single successes can help you achieve a success pattern in getting along with people.

Learning from your successes is one way to overcome error proneness.

Another and perhaps even surer way is to get your mind filled with truth. Do that and there will be less and less room for error in your thinking. This is essentially a spiritual process. Cultivate your understanding of truth. This will ultimately develop a condition of inner rightness.

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," the Bible tells us. When I do dumb things I read the Bible and let its truth sink from my conscious mind into the unconscious mind. In time as truth takes hold of the mind that old mistake tendency passes off. Right thinking takes over.

Add it up — sense is built on nonsense

Numbers people, including mathematicians, accountants, electronic wizards and oafs, and the telephone company, have nothing — absolutely nothing — over lexicographers and word wielders.

Of course, the numbers people have only 10 digits to work with and to scramble up. You can play the numbers games on the telephone or your calculator and easily be baffled by rates or higher mathematics.

Now, wordsmiths and the dictionary compilers have 26 characters with which to make sense and nonsense, to jumble up and make verbiage hay. In theory, exacting writers and cunning manipulators of the written word have more opportunity to stumble like drunken printers and to scatter type than do numbers people.

Each plays the role of his fancy or lets the plays play him.

Those who live by the printed word call their mistakes "typographical errors," word misuse, abuse and disuse, or, if they get honest enough, just plain ol' goof-ups. The latter simply is a credit to being less than perfect.

Now, there's nothing basically wrong with being imperfect; without it, man could not labor the "I-wish-I-were-such-and-such" fantasy. Were men born the epitome of perfection, how they could he strive for perfection?

A perfect being could only seek to be something more than he (or she) isn't or to search for nothing at all; but, alas, that trait might betray perfection.

The whole world lives by words and numbers. And the reasonings, rationalizations and statements made by those tools often lead to misunderstandings, human error and domestic and world-wide wars.

Man's knack for imperfection makes a comic out of a meticulous and brilliant scientist who tries to devise a fail-safe system.

Somehow and somewhere in that system, however "perfect" in theory, something will go wrong. And Murphy's Law, as usual, reigns supreme: "If anything can go wrong, it will."

Man's use of words and numbers bears that out.

Hate-full comment

To The Editor:

I was aghast at Bob Monaghan's comments concerning the attempted assassination of President Reagan. Apparently his statement, carried in your paper that, "I feel like so much hate stirred up by the Democratic leaders caused this to happen..." was made before the suspect in this awful event was identified as the son of an oil-related, upper-middle-class conservative Republican family.

Perhaps Monaghan's prejudices are showing.

I happen to be politically independent, but I think Monaghan owes all Democrats an apology for his unfortunate statement. Henceforth, he should check his facts before he expounds his own rhetoric.

Yea, Yucca

To The Editor:

My family and I were so pleased with the article on the Yucca Theatre and its restoration program in a recent edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Each member of my family was very much involved for many years with this theatre. My late husband, Delmar, was manager of the Midland Theatres in its beautiful era, from 1945 until August, 1969.

We all worked at the Yucca in all phases of work. The Yucca Theatre has so much beautiful history and we think it will be an asset to the city of Midland and its growing stages. Jim, my oldest son, performed with the Community Theatre and the Summer Mummies during two summers.

So from each member of my family, Pat, Judy, Jim, Ron and Don we salute you and thank you.

The whole story

To The Editor:

Your editorial of March 30, 1981, "Midland's Housing Need," is worthy of comment, both for what was said and what wasn't said.

It is true that Midland has a severe housing problem as does the entire nation. The Midland Housing Authority, staffed by a small dedicated group, has expounded on this subject for some time with little success.

Had the editorial writer taken the time to check his facts (something newsmen often avoid these days) he would have noted on the petition submitted that the objections we West Midlanders voiced was not building of apartments or apartments for the elderly and handicapped. Our objection was implementation of Section 8, Rental Assistance for the Able Bodied, on 40 of the 86 units to be built.

True, it would be to the best interest of the owner to keep this apartment complex well-maintained, but what will the next owner do, or the one that follows? For selling and reselling of apartment complexes is very popular today — given the existing tax laws. How would those who pay their own way feel about those who are subsidized? What if the free (those who pay their own way) decided to move and the complex stood half empty? Would the total complex then be used for Section 8 housing?

Briefly, let us look at Section 8, Rental Assistance. To qualify for rental assistance, you must be (1) paying more than 25 percent of your income for rent; (2) making 80 percent or less of the median income of your area. With just these two requirements, let us look at Midland, Texas. The average income for Midland is $22,000-plus, thus you can make $1,500 per month or $18,000 per year and qualify for rental assistance. We all know that the editor and Regional Planning Commission do not advocate rental assistance for people making these salaries, but when you accept federal dollars, you get federal control. The choice belongs to HUD, the city has no say in the matter and the citizens in this case (West Midlanders) are left with no protection.

'Situation' Armageddon

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Cole Park looked like Armageddon last week as dozens of select police officers and sheriff's deputies from throughout the Permian Basin crawled through weeds and swarmed across hills in preparation for what they hope will never come to pass: a "situation."

Wearing gas masks, fatigues and body armor, they learned the fine points of "Preserving lives through containment and negotiation" — which is what SWAT units are all about, despite television shows to the contrary.

Under the tutelage of FBI instructors from El Paso and Midland, they spent five days on exercises ranging from rappelling off buildings to locating and isolating a mock sniper who had been terrorizing people in the park.

It was strenuous work that left even well-conditioned policemen wishing they were back in their patrol cars or sipping coffee in restaurants.

It's not easy running up hills in full battle gear or having to dash 150 yards just prior to competition target practice with two separate weapons — one of which has to be loaded with trembling fingers before it can be leveled at targets that seem miles away.

"It tests accuracy and speed," said one of the FBI instructors. "And the running simulates the breathing and adrenalin flow of real action."

But there were some light moments, too. Like when the wind shifted and started wafting into their faces from the nearby holding ponds of the city's sewage treatment plant.

"Whew," said one cop as the contrasting boom and bap of shotguns and service revolvers echoed through the trees. "Now I know why we've got these gas masks."

Between stints at Cole Park, they were either sliding down ropes at the fire training tower or doing calisthenics and learning the latest arrest and defense techniques at the YMCA on Big Spring Street.

"Nightsticks aren't nightsticks anymore," said an instructor. "They're called batons now. Use them with a quick snapping motion, then dance back."

"Use them across the collar bone, the shins, or the side of the knees. The suspect will go down, believe me."

"Try to avoid the head. These things can kill a person."

"They're good against attack dogs, too. I like dogs, and I don't like to shoot one just because it's doing what it was taught to do. Use the baton on his snout or legs. It'll stop him."

By the time the training finally ended Friday afternoon, individual officers had learned to work in teams — which is precisely what the ordeal was intended to accomplish.

"They did an excellent job," commented Vince Conklin, a member of the Midland Police Department who heads up the Permian Basin Law Enforcement Training Academy on Ohio Street.

"In fact, for this short a school, and with five different departments who never worked together before, they did a fantastic job."

The FBI agreed: "The entire operation was a complete success," said one instructor.

Problems remain, however. Local police and sheriff's departments lack much of the expensive, sophisticated gear a tactical unit requires. (A lot of the equipment used last week was obsolete, borrowed or worn out.)

What's more, tactical teams need time off from their regular duties to train at least once a month — something financially strapped cities and counties might also be hard-pressed to provide.

"But they're (SWAT units) being employed more and more these days," said one of the FBI agents.

"In addition to hostage situations, like the one in Carlsbad two years ago and the attempted plane hijacking in El Paso four months later, they're being used on drug raids and in situations where guns are involved."

"They're a great inducement for a person to surrender. They save lives and keep people from getting hurt."

There's a right way and a wrong way. This is the best way to position a suspect prior to handcuffing him.

Duck! I think he spotted us.

'Solidarnosc' hits the streets

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — "Solidarnosc," the first independent union weekly in the Soviet bloc, hit the streets Friday with a bright red, hand-lettered logo and a promise from the editors.

The purpose of the newspaper, the editors said in a front-page message, "is to tell the truth, and if it is not always able to tell the whole truth, it will not lie."

The 16-page paper's name translates as "Solidarity," same as the 10-million member independent union born during a shipyard workers' strike last August in the Baltic port of Gdansk. The newspaper was promised in the agreements that created the union, and appears just after a spirit of cooperation between the union and the government nearly collapsed into a crippling nationwide strike.

The paper, with a first press run of 500,000 copies, will be sold at the same kiosks that carry the Communist Party paper Trybuna Ludu and Warsaw's leading newspaper Zycie Warszawy. And it too will be subject to official censorship.

"Sometimes our silence will be as expressive as our printed columns," the editors predicted.

Solidarnosc emerges in a journalistic climate that differs from what it was last summer. Newspapers, television and radio include items that were once taboo, such as texts of agreements and reports of developments in the independent labor movement.

But Solidarnosc differs from the leaflets and daily newsletters union chapters have published for months. It appears to be less radical, and even moderate, in tone.

The Pabst Building arch lost its position in downtown Milwaukee Wednesday to a planned office and retail complex. The arch was pulled to the ground by a wrecking crew after final attempts to preserve it failed. Because of damage in the demolition and the cost of repairing that damage, the arch cannot be reassembled elsewhere. The stone archway was built in 1892.

Money immaterial in child's potential

Dear Dr. Solomon: I attended a Parent-Teachers Association meeting last night at which a school psychologist was the featured speaker. We had a brief discussion about whether intelligence is inherited or acquired, and she remarked that children are born with a certain potential; however, whether or not they develop this potential depends on the kind of family in which they are raised. I'm not certain I understood the point she was trying to make. If the family is as important as she says, it seems to me that people with more money would have smarter children. Am I correct about this, or am I missing something in her explanation? — Mrs. R.B.N.

Dear Mrs. N.: Not having been at the meeting, I can only speculate about the content of the discussion; however, I would question your implication that all a family has to offer a child is money. Wouldn't you consider the relationship between parents and children to be much more important? These relationships may be good, bad, or indifferent, regardless of the family's financial status.

While educators and mental health professionals, in general, have been aware for some time of the importance of parent-child relationships in stimulating intellectual curiosity and developing a desire for knowledge, a recent study has added support to the theory. The findings of this survey indicate that children who are held, talked to, and praised tend to develop intellectually more rapidly than children who do not receive as much warmth and affection.

The study was conducted by Dr. Jack Pascoe, a pediatrician at the School of Medicine at the University of North Carolina. He studied the families of 80 children, all of whom had been born sick or premature, and who had been cared for in the intensive care nursery of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital during the years 1975 or 1976.

Dr. Pascoe visited the families, examined the children, and interviewed the mothers, noting in particular the amount of family and social support the mother received, the environment in which the child was being raised, and the child's level of intellectual development. He concluded that mothers who reported a high degree of emotional support and community involvement appeared to provide their children with more tender, loving care and encouragement. The most important source of support seemed to be their husbands and other members of the family. On the other hand, relatively isolated mothers, regardless of the family's level of income, provided their children with an environment that apparently tended to be less warm, safe or interesting.

Many of the families included in the study lived in rural areas. A number had financial problems, and all had had the added burden of having to care for a sick baby. Despite these obstacles however, Dr. Pascoe found that even though many of the families lacked a great deal in terms of material wealth, they could still enjoy their children and do a good job of raising them. In addition, the children who were exposed to a greater degree of stimulation scored higher on intelligence tests.

A practical result of the study may be the development of sophisticated evaluation methods to identify families that need help in providing their children with a more stimulating environment.

Don't misjudge that person: He's only 'plenty-nine'

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Think old.
If you think in terms of conventional stereotypes — poor, inactive, confined to a nursing home — you're on the wrong track.

"The picture that is traditionally given (of older Americans) isn't at all right," says marketing consultant Carole B. Allan of Washington, D.C.

In a recent article in "American Demographics" magazine, Ms. Allan said there is a vast, untapped market among people over 55 whose buying power and needs have, in the past, gone largely unrecognized. Forty-six million Americans, about 20 percent of the population, are over 55. More than one-third of the households in the United States are headed by someone 55 or older. And the median age of the population is gradually creeping up; it is expected to rise from 30 to 35 in the next 20 years alone.

"Historically," Ms. Allan said, "middle-aged and older consumers have been the forgotten generations in consumer marketing."

Ms. Allan said in an interview that there are several reasons why marketers have largely ignored older people. "The United States has always been a youth culture," she said. "Traditionally, the marketing industry has said, 'Let's stop things at age 49.'"

Ms. Allan also said the young "can't conceive of what it is to be an older person." Misconceptions are numerous. Here, according to Ms. Allan, are some of the fictions and facts:

Fiction: The elderly live in nursing homes or with their children.

Fact: Fewer than 5 percent of all people over 65 are institutionalized; half the people 65 and older live in husband-wife households; only a small percentage are with their children.

Fiction: Older Americans are sickly and inactive.

Fiction: Most older people are poor, with little discretionary income.

Fact: The 28 million households headed by people 55 or older account for 30 percent of the total income in the United States and have 28 percent of the discretionary income. Households headed by someone 55 to 64 have a total income of about $240 billion a year and an average annual income of nearly $20,000 each — more than $2,000 higher than the national norm. Households headed by someone over 65 have a total annual income of $162 billion and an average income of $10,291 a year each.

Fiction: Even if older people have money, they don't spend it.

Fact: The 28 million households headed by people 55 and over account for more than 25 percent of total consumer expenditures. People over 65 spend more per capita than average on such varied products as vacation travel, women's hair care, clothing, mobile homes, newspaper subscriptions and food.

Ms. Allan says that "the single most pervasive stereotype" — and one of the most mistaken — is the idea "that older persons are all alike." In fact, she says, the population becomes more heterogeneous with age.

There are importance differences among different groups. As might be expected, Ms. Allan notes, families headed by someone 65 to 71, for example, are better off than those headed by someone 72 or older; married couples are better off than single people; whites are better off than non-whites.

Ms. Allan said manufacturers and service industries are only beginning to recognize the importance of the older market. "They're just delving into it," she said, noting that selected companies are beginning to use older people in their commercials.

"The needs of older persons are not being fully served," Ms. Allan said, and added that marketers may have to change not only the way they sell their products, but the products themselves.

Companies should recognize, Ms. Allan said, that "the process of aging is a continuum — there is no set chronological age at which one suddenly becomes old, loses interest in lifetime pursuits or stops being open to new ideas."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dennis O'Leary, the physician who reassured an anxious nation last week that the wounded president would be all right, has a secret he hasn't told the White House.

He is not a Republican. "My family is staunch Democrat," said O'Leary, a native of Kansas City, Mo.

"I guess I am correctly classified as an independent. But my political philosophy is more Republican than anything else. And my basic job involves a lot of politicking. But nobody's asked me that all week."

It was President Reagan who, joking as he lay on the operating table at George Washington University Hospital, first raised a question about the political persuasion of his doctors. Moments before he was anesthetized, Reagan looked up and quipped: "Please tell me you're all Republicans." To which one of the doctors responded, "Mr. President, today we are all Republicans."

It was only hours after the president was shot in the chest in an assassination attempt Monday that O'Leary was thrust into the limelight. The hospital administrator suddenly was given the job of translating complex medical jargon into language everyone could understand.

Night after night, the 43-year-old doctor appeared on television across the country to relay the latest developments in the treatment of Reagan and two other men wounded by the same gunfire, White House press secretary James Brady and Secret Service agent Timothy McCarthy. A wounded District of Columbia policeman was recovering in another hospital.

"It's been a hectic week," O'Leary said during an interview at week's end. "All of it hasn't really sunk in yet. It's been tight."

O'Leary, a trim man with a tightly controlled manner who is the hospital's dean of clinical affairs, said he was in a meeting in a nearby building when word came that the president was being rushed to the hospital emergency room.

"As it turned out, we didn't know he was shot until he got here," O'Leary said. "But my first thought was, 'I'd better get there — fast.'"

O'Leary said he arrived five minutes after the president.

"I knew from reading about President (John F.) Kennedy's assassination that traffic control at the hospital would be important, that there shouldn't be anyone around who wasn't needed," he said. "That had been a serious problem in the Kennedy situation. It had interfered with the treatment of the president. I didn't want that to happen here. And it didn't."

The hospital has been showered with telegrams, letters and phone calls praising O'Leary's cool, collected performance. In an editorial, The Washington Post called him "the nation's chief hand-holder."

Clearly, O'Leary is proud of his performance, but said he won't let the praise go to his head.

"I've been very flattered and touched by it all," he said. "But I have a trait that sometimes bothers people. I don't take very much very seriously. I've taken the activities of the week very seriously, but I won't change personally as a consequence."

O'Leary said his most vivid memory of the week was walking into a classroom across the street from the hospital Monday night to brief the press after Reagan underwent surgery to remove a bullet from his left lung.

"I'd lectured there many times," O'Leary said. "But it was totally transformed, a sea of television cameras, photo equipment, microphones and these incredibly bright lights. I thought I'd stepped onto the planet Mars."

It was at that briefing that O'Leary calmly told Americans their president was in stable condition and awake, that "he was in no time in any serious danger."

Several days later, when it was reported that doctors had feared Reagan might bleed to death, O'Leary defended his original statement, saying he would "flatly" deny Reagan was ever in danger of dying.

But O'Leary was not present during the first, anxious moments after the president was brought into the emergency room. He also conceded he was relying on second- and third-hand information from other doctors who weren't there either, until after the bullet wound was found and treatment begun.

O'Leary is a specialist in internal medicine and hematology, or blood diseases. In recent years, the Cornell Medical School graduate has become interested in the administrative and public policy aspects of medicine.

Study says students learn more in private high schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major new study concludes that students learn more in private high schools than in public high schools.

Sociologist James Coleman also said his research indicates that although private schools enroll fewer minority students their classrooms are less segregated than public school classrooms.

The report was paid for by the government as part of a larger study of high school students conducted last spring by Coleman's National Opinion Research Center. It is based on surveys and tests given to 58,728 high school seniors and sophomores.

The findings could influence the debate over whether Congress should give tuition tax credits to parents who send their children to private schools. President Reagan promised during last year's campaign to seek such aid, and Coleman also has supported tuition tax credits.

An official of the National Education Association sharply criticized the report and challenged Coleman's findings. Sharon Robinson, the NEA's director of instruction and professional development, said private schools can choose to admit students who are motivated to learn while public schools by law must be open to all.

Coleman, a University of Chicago professor, said evidence shows "that private schools do produce better cognitive outcomes than public schools. When family background factors that predict achievement are controlled, students in both Catholic and other private schools are shown to achieve at a higher level than students in public schools."

About 1.4 million, or 10 percent of the nation's 14.9 million high school students, attend private schools, including 900,000 in Catholic classrooms.

Coleman said Catholic schools in particular are doing a good job in educating students from different family income levels.

"The evidence is strong that the Catholic schools function much closer to the American ideal of the 'common school,' educating children from different backgrounds alike, than do the public schools," he said.

He acknowledged his results are "subject to a caveat: despite extensive statistical controls on parental background, there may very well be other unmeasured factors in the self-selection into the private sector that are associated with higher achievement."

Ms. Robinson of the NEA, in addition to taking issue with Coleman's study, criticized the sponsoring agency, the National Center for Education Statistics in the Department of Education. The NCES released what it called draft copies of Coleman's report and has scheduled a seminar on it for Tuesday.

Nancy Stubbs, NCES assistant administrator, said the agency was currently conducting its own in-house analyses of Coleman's report. "When you contract out for reports researchers have the right to manipulate the data in what they think is the most accurate way," she said.

Scott D. Thomson, executive director of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, said Friday, "The most talented public school student can compete successfully with even the most selective private school student."

He cited statistics showing that 92 percent of the finalists from the Westinghouse Corp.'s annual science talent search in the past five years were from public schools. He also said 86 percent of those who entered college last year were public school graduates.

Coleman said that opposition to tuition tax credits "is frequently based on the assumption that the private schools function as a means for whites to escape the racial integration that has been imposed in the public sector."

But he said his evidence suggests that giving families $1,000 in a tax rebate or other form would decrease segregation "primarily through the shifts of minorities — especially Hispanics and higher-income blacks — into the Catholic schools."

His survey found that among public high school seniors, 78 percent are white, 12 percent black, 6 percent Hispanic and 4 percent other. Their private school counterparts are 86 percent white, 5 percent black, 6 percent Hispanic and 3 percent other.

But he said that "over half of the black students in the private sector attend schools that are less than 20 percent black, while only about a fifth of the public school blacks attend such schools." He added that 45 percent of the black public school students attend predominantly black schools compared to 17 percent in private schools.

He found that 4.9 percent of public school students are handicapped, compared with 1.5 percent in private schools. The mean family income for public school students was $18,700, compared to $23,200 for private school children.

Coleman said there was strong evidence that private schools "provide a safer, more disciplined and more ordered environment than do public schools."

Secret Service men were competing with gun, bullet

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When George Bush made his first public appearance since a gunman took six shots at President Reagan, the security was tight. Very tight.

At one point, Secret Service agents cleared a hotel ballroom to make sure conditions were safe for the vice president.

After an assassination attempt, the bodyguard business becomes an especially tense one. For good reason: One attempt often breeds another; already the Secret Service reports an increase in the number of threats.

When Reagan emerges from the hospital and slowly but surely begins to make public appearances, his protection will likely be tougher than ever.

The public, kept behind rope barriers; reporters herded into special "secured" areas; his bullet-proof limo parked a little closer to the door.

The White House staff, always eager to encourage public access to Reagan, will agree to hold crowds at a greater distance during presidential public appearances. Reporters, who always clamor for proximity, will muzzle themselves. The Secret Service will take every precaution, then one more.

But only for a while.

AS MEMORIES FADE of Monday's incident, the balance between security and public access to an elected leader will change.

"This whole issue is a pendulum that will swing back again," said one Secret Service official who requested anonymity.

American presidents have walked this road before. "Anyone who wants to exchange his life for mine can take it," John Kennedy once said on the subject of assassination. Of his bodyguards, he added: "They just can't protect that much."

Kennedy's words proved prophetic for both himself and Reagan. They also demonstrate why it is unlikely that there will any long-term significant changes in the way presidents are protected following Monday's incident.

Senior Secret Service officials say they can find no fault with the way agents subdued the man accused of shooting Reagan or the speed with which the president was hustled away from the scene.

"It was done as rapidly and expeditiously as it could have been done," Secret Service Director H. Stuart Knight said. "That is my judgment after watching videotape after videotape after videotape."

Spokesman Jack Warner said the agents protecting Reagan "were competing with a bullet. They moved as quickly as they could."

"The fact that we live in a democracy has to be taken into account," Warner said.

Reagan's top adviser, White House counselor Edwin Meese, was asked last week if the attempt on Reagan's life would cause the president to lower his public profile.

Meese said he'd known Reagan a long time and figured the president wasn't about to change now.

AS FOR HIS protectors, spokesman Warner said Friday, "We do not at this time anticipate any changes in procedure."

Nonetheless, there are lingering questions about actions of the Secret Service, the White House and the FBI, which could lead to changes in the way agents protect the president or other officials.

And, he said, pending an internal investigation of Monday's assassination attempt and changes "in the state of the art" of presidential security, it is possible that some things could be done differently.

Testifying before a Senate subcommittee, Knight repeatedly was asked how John W. Hinckley Jr., the alleged assailant, got within 10 or 15 feet of Reagan.

Every presidential public appearance is different, and planning for it depends on the size of the crowd, the importance of the event and the physical layout.

Knight said an advance team composed of a Secret Service agent, a White House official and a representative of the event's sponsor met routinely before Reagan traveled to the hotel Monday.

It was decided that outside the hotel a rope would be put up between 25 and 30 feet from the point where Reagan was to walk from the side hotel door to his limousine. Behind the rope, Hinckley mingled with reporters, photographers and members of network camera crews.

"This was not a designated press area," Knight said, repeatedly. The issue is relevant because in an assigned press area, reporters wear visible credentials and agents know a threat to the president is unlikely from their direction.

ALTHOUGH SECRET Service officials deny it, it is possible that if Hinckley had been forced to watch Reagan from a spot where there was no confusion between reporters and the general public, he might have been spotted.

There were complaints from reporters about the mingling of press and public, but Secret Service officials say they were conveyed to White House press officials, not to them.

Photographs can be deceiving, but there are White House pictures showing Reagan and those around him just before the shooting started. Only one Secret Service agent, Timothy McCarthy, who was wounded in the liver, is seen to be close to Reagan. Again Secret Service officials say they can detect no lapse in the "envelope" of agents who usually surround Reagan.

At some stops, the Secret Service goes to great lengths to park the president's limousine where it is closest to wherever Reagan is appearing, thus limiting the time the president is exposed.

At the Washington Hilton, the car was off to the left about 25 feet, several feet more distant than the closest point from door to curb. That was done, according to Secret Service spokesman Richard Hartwig, because of the horseshoe-shaped driveway outside the hotel.

If the car had been parked at the closest point to the hotel door, Hartwig said, the configuration of the driveway would have made it impossible for the driver to turn right, thus giving him only one route of escape in event of an attack by more than one assassin.

SO, HE SAID, the limousine was parked facing the street, giving the driver the option of going either east or west on T Street, which in turn leads to Connecticut Avenue, a major Washington thoroughfare.

As a result, however, Hinckley was closer than he would have been to Reagan and also had more time to prepare to fire his .22-caliber "Saturday Night Special."

Knight was also asked about Hinckley's arrest in Nashville, Tenn., last Oct. 9 for attempting to carry three handguns through an airport security checkpoint.

Both Knight and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said the FBI knew of Hinckley's record and — especially in the midst of a campaign year — should have passed on the information to the Secret Service, which maintains a computerized list of about 20,000 people believed to be a potential threat to presidents.

It is possible the 25-year-old drifter might then have been detained and questioned by the Secret Service, which may have prevented the attack. But it is also true that none of the six people involved in major attacks on presidents since 1963 were identified as potential threats.

Tighter controls urged on Social Security cards

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government investigators are calling for tighter controls on issuance of Social Security cards after finding that nearly half of all cards issued in New York City and Washington go to aliens, 20 percent of whom are here illegally or without permission to work.

The inspector general's office in the Department of Health and Human Services released a report Wednesday sharply criticizing the Social Security Administration's control over its number system and cards.

The auditors said they studied the cards issued in New York and Washington between January and September 1980 and found that 20 percent of those issued to aliens were "incorrectly coded." Immigration records indicated 8 percent were illegal aliens and 12 percent were not authorized to work, the auditors said.

They also were sharply critical of Social Security's practice since 1974 of issuing nonwork Social Security numbers to aliens not permitted to work but who needed the number for a driver's license, bank account or other purpose. These non-work cards look the same as regular Social Security cards, and the investigators found that 24 percent of those who got them in 1977 had earnings reported to Social Security.

The audit criticized the agency's controls over blank cards, which it said may have a street value of more than $100 among illegal aliens.

"An undocumented alien can type his name and a number on a blank card and use it to obtain employment. The Social Security number is an unverified 'passport' to employment," the report said. "No one checks to see if a Social Security number is valid and, if it is valid, if it belongs to the individual who has it."

The report cited five cases since 1977 in which Social Security employees have been charged with schemes to sell or process card applications for illegal aliens.

The investigators said that in an office they checked "a stack of over 1,000 blank cards was found lying on the floor in an unlocked and well-lit area accessible to the public." One of the investigators removed 995 cards from this stack without being noticed.

They said blank cards also "were found in surplus desks sent to a warehouse for disposition."

In their recommendations to Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker, the auditors said a task force should be established "to address the impact on the Social Security Administration and the Social Security trust funds of the emergence of the (number) as a universal identifier and HHS as the de facto National Enumeration Agency."

The task force also would seek an alternative to issuing the non-work Social Security numbers to aliens. The auditors also called for stiffer penalties for fraudulent use of the numbers.

The Social Security Administration, in comments appended to the report, said it already had tightened up some of its controls. But the agency urged caution in any move to make the Social Security number a worker identification number.

"The paramount message of the (inspector general's report) seems to be that the Social Security number does not now represent an effective worker identification number because it does not prohibit aliens from working when they are not authorized to work," the agency responded.

"We think this approach begs two fundamental questions: Is the Social Security number really the best way to control alien employment? Are the Social Security trust funds the proper vehicle for financing alien work control?"

It added that the department "has always shied away from endorsing the idea" of a universal work identity card.

Last year the department estimated it could cost up to $1 billion to issue a secure, counterfeit-proof Social Security card suitable for worker identification. Former HHS Secretary Patricia Roberts Harris was a vociferous dissenter on a presidential panel that studied the problem of illegal immigration and recommended a worker identification card.

Schweiker had no immediate comment on the report.

House gets bill on criminal offense

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence sent to subcommittee last week a bill by Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, which would increase the penalties for offenses against the elderly.

House Bill 1459 calls for doubling the minimum sentence in felonies involving violence against elderly persons. The bill also would raise a Class A misdemeanor to a third-degree felony, a Class B misdemeanor to Class A and Class C to Class B in offenses against the elderly.

"I hope that by making the punishment more harsh... we will discourage these attacks or assaults," Gibson told the committee.

Representatives from the attorney general's office and the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyer's Association appear in support of Gibson's legislation, as well as three other bills which propose similar changes in the law.

Earthquake rattles Colorado

DENVER (AP) — Dishes rattled, pictures fell, houseplants fell over, doors opened and burglar alarms went off when an earthquake rumbled through Denver Friday.

It felt like "a bump and a thump," said Shirley Shepherd, dispatcher at the Northglenn Police Department.

The quake measured 4.0 on the Richter scale, which means it was capable of causing moderate damage.

But virtually the only damage reported was at Thornton City Hall, which was evacuated as a precaution but reopened quickly. Examination of the building showed two hairline cracks in the basement walls, said Devere B. King, director of physical plant maintenance.

The quake was felt as far north as Boulder, 30 miles northwest of Denver, and as far west as Idaho Springs, a Rocky Mountain community 20 miles west of the Denver metropolitan area.

House approves interest rate ceiling increase of 24 percent

Austin Bureau
AUSTIN — After several hours of debate, the House last week gave final approval to a bill to increase the state interest rate ceiling to 24 percent, but two Houston senators failed to get their colleagues' consent to take up bills concerning "right to work" and restoring the right to vote for convicted felons.
 The House voted 91-54 to engross House Bill 1228, increasing the interest rate ceiling, after the bill's sponsor, Belton Rep. Bill Messer, successfully defended the measure against dozens of amendments.
 Messer's bill originally proposed a 30 percent ceiling, but Lubbock Rep. Froy Salinas gained approval for his amendment reducing that figure to 24 percent.

Salary increase proposed

Austin Bureau
AUSTIN — Midland Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson has introduced legislation that would increase the salaries of justices of the state courts of appeals.

Senate Bill 947, sponsored by Snelson, would set the salaries of associate justices of the appeals courts at $3,000 less than salaries of justices of the Supreme Court of Texas.
 The salary of the chief justice of an appeals court also would be set at $3,000 less than the chief justice of the Supreme Court.

Appeals court justices currently are paid about $6,000 per year less than their counterparts on the Supreme Court.
 Snelson failed in an attempt to tack the measure onto a bill by Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, that gives the state's courts of civil appeals criminal as well as civil jurisdiction. That bill has been approved by the Senate.

Hospital expansion authorized

Austin Bureau
AUSTIN — Midland Memorial Hospital received authorization Thursday from the Texas Health Facilities Commission to expand its laboratory and medical records departments.

At its weekly voting session, the commission approved the hospital's plans to expand the laboratory from 3,900 sq. ft. to 6,850 sq. ft., including the relocation and expansion of its blood bank.
 The commission also approved the plan to relocate and expand the medical records department by 1,150 sq. ft. and the purchase of an automated record storage retrieval system.

Pecan Insects, Diseases will be meeting topics

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Pecan Insects and Diseases will be the topics discussed in an information meeting to be held in the County Extension Office (218 W. Illinois, Courthouse Annex), on Monday evening (April 6) at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Harold Kaufman, Area Extension Pathologist and Charles Neeb, Area Extension Entomologist, Fort Stockton will be present to present the program. Kaufman will give results and observations of his research on pecan disease over the area during the past year. Neeb will give instructions on how to identify pecan insects and determine proper treatment levels and timing.

This will be the regular monthly meeting of the Midland Pecan Grower's Association. Anyone interested in the growing of pecans, homeyard or commercial, is welcome to attend.

Midland county cotton producers are exploring every idea and scheme to increase efficiency, reduce costs and maximize production in 1981.

In order to assist growers in devising production strategies for this crop year we have planned a Cotton Information Meeting to cover some important considerations.

The meeting will be held Thursday, April 9, at 7:30 p.m. in the Valley View Community Center located on FM Road 1213.

Program topics include: Cotton Insects: How to Avoid the Situation We Got Into in 1980; Nematodes: Update on Methods and Materials for Reducing Losses; Cotton Budgets: Cut the Fat and Leave the Lean; Soil Testing and Cotton Fertilization: Facts and Fallacies.

Speakers include Dr. Kenneth Lindsey, Agronomist; Dr. Harold Kaufman, Plant Pathologist; Dr. Gary Condra, Economist-Management; and Charles Neeb, Entomologist — all Area Extension Specialists from Fort Stockton, and Leon New, Area Extension Agricultural Engineer from Lubbock.

I'd like to urge every cotton producer to attend this meeting. I believe the program topics are addressed to important considerations in producing cotton in the most efficient manner in Midland county.

If you are a non-Texan recently moved to Midland or even a transfer Texan needing a refresher course in West Texas ways don't forget the "How To Be A Texan" series — a program set up by our county extension staff — to start this coming Tuesday evening at Midland Civic Center.

There will be four Tuesday nights packed full of information and tips on how to select and grow plants in the home landscape and gardens, indoor and outdoor plants in the hostile (at times) West Texas environment, cooking Texan, dressing Texan, investing Texan and dining and dancing Texan.

If you're interested there's still time to call the County Extension Office (682-9481, Ext. 435) for registration information.

Seeds are one of nature's miracles and are responsible for carrying the life of a plant species from one season to the next. But seedling disease can interfere with this process.

Seedling disease causes plant seedlings to decay or wither before a new plant can become established. Gold, wet soils are thought to be responsible for seedling disease in both field and garden crops. But, this is only partially true because the actual cause is a community of disease-causing organisms in the soil.

Generally, if you plant seed of warm season annuals when the soil temperature is between 60 and 70 degrees F, seedling disease will not be much of a problem. Corn, beet, and radish seed germinate and grow well in cool soils, but okra, peas, beans, squash, melons and peanuts need warmer soils.

Chemical seed treatments can be used to protect planted seed from decay. However, once the shoot and root systems grow out of the protected zone, the chemical no longer offers protection. Where seedling disease is a consistent problem, applying a fungicide (such as Captan) in the seed furrow and mixing it with the covering soil can be highly effective.

Juror says marijuana 'high' impaired his judgment

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — A judge has been asked to order a new trial for two convicted murderers on the ground that a juror said he was "high" on marijuana during the proceedings. "I assume there will be some kind of inquiry" before the court decides what to do with the motion, Charles M. Oberly

III, an assistant state prosecutor, said. The motion for a new trial was filed Wednesday in Wilmington Superior Court by defense attorneys Eugene J. Maurer Jr. and James A. Rambo. They also filed an affidavit from 23-year-old John C. Duffy, the juror. The defense motion says that Duffy smoked marijuana before coming to court and that he consumed alcoholic beverages at the luncheon recesses during the nearly month-long trial. In the affidavit, Duffy admitted smoking marijuana before coming to court in the morning, and said he had a "few drinks each day" during the luncheon recesses. The trial in Judge Robert C. O'Hara's court ended in 1978 with first-degree murder convictions against Richard F. Massey, 33, and Robert J. Martin, 26, for the shooting death of Nancy C.P. Repman during a burglary at the woman's home in fashionable Greenville north of Wilmington. The two men are serving life sentences with no chance for parole on the murder conviction, and are serving lengthy sentences on related charges.

Smauley

During the 11-week training cycle, they learned the basics of battlefield survival. They were introduced to the typical daily routine that they will experience during their enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

Wells

They participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

Marine Pvt. Dwayne Wells, a 1980 graduate of Andrews High School, joined the Marine Corps in November 1980. Wells is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Billy G. Wells of Andrews.

CONSUMER TIPS

Agency handles more than complaints

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

Many people only think of turning to a government agency when they wish to complain about an advertisement. Yet since 1912 when the first Vigilance Committee (later to become a Better Business Bureau) was formed to review local advertisements for truth, self-regulation has proven to be extremely effective.

Your local Better Business Bureau is funded by those businesses in the community who prefer self-regulation to government regulation, including a review of local advertising. Since most of us are affected not only by local advertising but also national advertising, in 1971 the Council of Better Business Bureaus (with which all BBBs are associated) formed its National Advertising Division to seek out, hear and investigate complaints about national advertising.

Investigations are stimulated by either outside sources or by the NAD as a result of its own monitoring of print and broadcast advertising. In 1980, 37 percent of the cases opened by the NAD came from competitor challenges, while 45 percent were self-initiated through NAD's monitoring program.

The NAD staff logged over 758 hours of television and radio broadcasting in reviewing network and national spot commercials. At the same time, print advertisements were reviewed in over 592 issues of national magazines and newspapers.

Out of 138 NAD decisions reported in 1980, 41 percent ended with confirmation that ad claims were backed by adequate advertising data. With 57 percent, the advertiser confirmed that the ad program had been discontinued or that the claims would be modified.

The National Advertising Review Board (NARB) functions as an appeals body on advertising matters investigated originally by NAD. Five-member adjudicative panels drawn from NARB's 50 advertiser, advertising agency and "public" members evaluate advertising referred to the Review Board by the NAD, an advertiser or a complainant. Only one decision in 1980 was the subject of an appeal to the NARB and it is still under review.

Recently the NAD investigated the California Avocado Commission's magazine ad of Angie Dickinson posing with a slice of avocado. The campaign claimed that there were only 17 calories in a slice of avocado and that California avocados contained quantities of vitamins A, B1, C and E, plus potassium. However, the size portion that would justify the vitamin claim is half a fruit, which actually contains 132 calories.

Although self-regulation is extremely effective, it will not lead to perfection in advertising for several reasons. In a recent Gallup survey, it was found the majority of complaints dealt in matters of personal taste, and reflected no unsatisfactory experience with the products being advertised.

If self-regulators were to try to regulate taste in advertising, it would seriously interfere with the advertiser's right to free speech. Although false and misleading advertising has no First Amendment protection, it is not certain whether private restraints in relation to tasteful advertising violate the Constitution.

If you have an objection to untrue or inaccurate statements in local advertising, call your BBB at 563-1882. To complain about a national advertisement, write to the National Advertising Division of the Council of Better Business Bureaus, 845 Third Ave., New York, N.Y., 10022.

Drug usage could be reduced

CHICAGO (AP) — Abuse of amphetamines — one of the nation's most serious drug problems — could be drastically reduced if more states passed laws limiting use of "speed," researchers say.

Writing in today's edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association, the researchers said restrictions that worked in Wisconsin should prove successful in other states as well.

Wisconsin officials stopped allowing patients to use Medicaid to pay for amphetamines, prescribed as legal diet-control pills, and threatened doctors with the loss of their licenses if they prescribed the pills for anything other than a few medical purposes.

Amphetamine sales dropped in the Milwaukee test area from an average of 27,000 doses a month in 1976 to 700 in January 1978, noted Dr. Darold A. Treffert, chairman of Wisconsin's Controlled Substances Board, and David Joranson, a social worker.

Some 2.5 million Americans regularly use amphetamines, the article noted.

Billions of amphetamines are produced and prescribed annually, a fact which the authors termed "incredible" because there are only a handful of "relatively rare" conditions for which the pills should be used — such as depression, hyperactivity in children and uncontrollable falling asleep.

RINGING THE BELL

Black Church is now in state of transition

With Bob Tuel

The Black Experience: The Black Church in Transition — "The Black Church is in the midst of change. All around us are signs announcing the imminence of things to come and/or already upon us," states Raymond Campbell in his new book on the Black Church.

The Black Church finds itself doing big business financially but somehow we are separated from the masses and their problems. We are on an island in the middle of the city called complacency, indifference, selfishness and hypocrisy.

Jesus Christ is manifest not in dogmas, creeds and ecclesiastical formality, but primarily through social change. Jesus was involved in the affairs of people in their daily lives.

The Black Church must see significant accomplishments, especially in the fields of evangelism, Christian education, and ecumenical concern. We must stop fishing in shallow waters and launch out into the deep because as long as the Christian church is divided along racial, ethnic and denominational lines, it cannot perform its function as the true church.

Campbell concludes: "The storm is gathering in the Black Church. The tempest is raging around her. The billows are tossing her high. The leadership is overshadowed with darkness. But one thing we can be sure: help is in sight if we have faith. The Black Church needs to re-discover the historical Jesus. People with their backs to the wall are not coming to church unless they are challenged.

Couple gives $25 million to SMU

DALLAS (AP) — Trustees at Southern Methodist University voted to name their new undergraduate course of study Dedman College, in honor of Nancy and Robert Dedman of Dallas.

It was the least they could do, they decided, after the Dedmans gave SMU $25 million — the largest single gift ever given the university and one of the largest personal contributions in the history of U.S. higher education, school officials announced Thursday.

"As the old saying goes, 'You can't take it with you,' and we think it's fun to give our resources away now to see some of the fruits of our lifetime efforts while we're still alive to enjoy them," Dedman said.

"The black preacher must be strong, well educated, well read, a good moral man alive to the needs of the people of his parish. The problems of the black community do not admit complacency or self-satisfaction. Christianity is not primarily an idea, a creed, a form of worship but is basically concerned with human relationships. To love thy neighbor as thyself," he reaffirms.

The Wall Street Journal recently said: The country has been treated to five years' worth of elite opinion explaining that poverty and its accompanying social pathologies grow out of large social inequities that could be cured by large expenditures on social programs. Government acted on this opinion; crime and civil disorder increased anyway."

Carl Rowan in one of his widely circulated columns said in response to the Journal's quote: "How simplistic to say that we gave the wretches food stamps, subsidized housing, public service jobs and college tuition money, but crime didn't disappear, so to hell with them. The absurdity here is the pretense that this country really committed itself to finding out what happens if we reduced poverty, joblessness, hopelessness in meaningful ways. Racial polarization grows more intense because blacks know what the far right is up to. First they declare that poverty is no factor in crime and that blacks commit a disproportionate amount of crime, thus there is something inherently criminal about black people. Blacks have long been the greatest victims of violent crime."

Rowan added that crime is not a racial issue, except that institutionalized racism provokes a lot of it. He states that ultra-conservatives will find out that when they legislate more misery for the poor, they will never be able to hire enough policemen or build enough prisons to make even the most privileged neighborhoods safe again.

The United Negro College Fund is made up of private Predominately black colleges, is planning a $12 million fund-raising program for 1981, according to Christopher S. Edley, executive director. Educational aid grants of $1.2 million to support minority education were announced recently by the Du Pond Company. The World Methodist Conference will be held July 21-28 in Hawaii. A communion service will be conducted from 20 altars with Senator Danel Inouye scheduled to take one of the main talks to the body, it is reported.

SMU. We believe that the university is the finest asset Dallas has and that it deserves our generous support."

The gift, endowing the newly created undergraduate college, lifted SMU's $153 million capital gifts campaign past the $100 million mark, said president L. Donald Shields and Board of Trustees chairman Edwin L. Cox.

Shields said the "benefits will accrue to Southern Methodist University in perpetuity."

"Words are inadequate to express our elation and our appreciation for this magnificent act of generosity," added Cox.

The couple contributed $1 million toward the Dedman Center for Lifetime Sports, which opened on campus in 1976.

Quadriplegic father regains custody of sons

COMPTON, Calif. (AP) — A paralyzed man who lost custody of his two young sons because a judge doubted his ability to care for them has regained custody of the children after a 3½-year legal battle.

William Carney, who was paralyzed from the neck down in a car accident, lost custody of his two sons in 1977 when a judge in Los Angeles said, "He can't do anything for the boys except maybe talk to them and teach them."

He fought the decision to the California Supreme Court, and a Compton Superior Court judge granted him physical custody of his two sons and joint legal custody with his ex-wife, Ellen.

In ruling in Carney's favor, Judge Stephen Gale said the father "is better able to give the boys emotional guidance" than their mother and "can do more for them," despite his handicap.

Carney's sons, Eddie, 10, and Willie, 11, who lived with their father until 1977, were elated with the decision. Willie said he was "really happy Dad won." His younger brother concurred with a simple "Yup."

Carney's attorney, Mason Rose, who is also in a wheelchair, wiped tears from his eyes after the decision and said it was an important victory for handicapped people all over the country.

The case was returned to Superior Court after the state Supreme Court ruled last July that Carney could not be deprived of custody of his sons solely on the basis of his handicap.

Under Gale's ruling, Carney, who resides in Las Vegas, will have physical custody of the boys, with both parents sharing legal custody. The boys will spend alternate Christmases with their mother in the Buffalo suburb of Tonowanda, N.Y. The Carneys were married in New York in 1968. Shortly after their second son was born, they separated with Carney receiving the boys under a written agreement with his wife.

Ellen Carney's attorney, Lawrence Buchanan, explained that she agreed to that arrangement because, at the time, she was financially unable to care for her sons. Carney moved West and held several jobs before he was severely injured in the accident on military reserve duty.

In May 1977, Carney filed for dissolution of the marriage. Mrs. Carney, who had not seen the boys for almost five years, sought and gained custody of them.

Officials not sure about 'Candy Man'

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Cumberland County's prosecutor doubts whether there really is a "Candy Man," the pseudonym given a drug pusher in a high-school newspaper interview that stirred up a legal battle over the rights of student publications.

Jack Lee, the adviser for the Millville High School Tattler, says he believes the Candy Man does exist, although he has refused to identify the writer of the March 16 newspaper story and admits he can't identify the dealer.

Prosecutor Kenneth Pagliughi said his doubts about the interview were based on "some things that were said to me in confidence."

"I think you will find a general consensus that the guy (Candy Man) doesn't exist," Pagliughi told the Courier-Post of Cherry Hill Wednesday.

"If you examine all the facts logically, Lee never had possession of a taped interview," though a tape reportedly was made, the prosecutor said.

"It is totally illogical that a person who is making money selling drugs would consent to such an interview and expose himself to exposure and, perhaps, prosecution — especially on tape where you would have his voice."

Lee's refusal to reveal the reporter's name attracted widespread publicity.

On Pagliughi's recommendation, a Cumberland County grand jury Tuesday withdrew a subpoena naming Lee. The withdrawal defused a judge's decision ordering Lee to testify or face a contempt-of-court citation and a possible fine or jail sentence.

Lee says he is positive the Candy Man exists.

"There were weeks and weeks of negotiations," he said. "The agreement was: I absolutely would not see the tape; I absolutely would not hear the tape; I absolutely would not know who the pusher was. It took a very, very long time."

After hearing about the Tattler's story, Pagliughi contacted school Principal G. Larry Miller, who was subpoenaed along with Lee.

Superior Court Judge Philip A. Guccio last week ordered Lee to reveal the reporter's name after ruling that the student newspaper was not covered by First Amendment guarantees of press freedom or by the 1977 New Jersey shield law, which protects news organizations from revealing confidential sources.

But the subpoena was withdrawn because of the publicity.

"There is no doubt in my mind that if the Candy Man is real, if he was selling as flagrantly and openly as it said he was, if we had obtained his identity Tuesday morning, we would have had him charged Tuesday afternoon," Pagliughi said.

More drug smugglers are expected in Texas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Drug Enforcement Administration is expecting more drug smugglers to move their operations from Florida to Texas.

An internal DEA report describes the lure that the upper two-thirds of the Texas Gulf Coast holds for drug smugglers, including the large number of remote areas easily accessible by land or by sea.

"The presence of local law enforcement personnel in this area is limited, making it increasingly attractive to Florida-based violators," the report states. "A large number of smugglers are moving their operations into the Texas coastal areas and are buying property in remote areas to avoid enforcement pressure in other areas of the Gulf Coast."

The information, marked "DEA sensitive" but obtained by The Associated Press, was included in a profile of the seven-state South Central region in the agency's quarterly report on intelligence trends.

The report said most of the documented smugglers have moved to the Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston areas to supervise their activities on the Texas Gulf Coast.

"A dispersal of former Florida-based smuggling organizations to other remote areas of the (south central) region can be anticipated in the future," the report said.

Texas is the only state in the region with a coastline. The DEA last year opened an office in Galveston in response to increasing activity by drug smugglers.

The disproportionate popularity of methamphetamine in Texas is described in another portion of the DEA report for last fall, marked "for official use only."

It said that most methamphetamine laboratories seized in the United States in 1979 were in the South Central Region, and a majority of those were in the Dallas-Austin-Houston triangle.

As possible reasons, the report said methamphetamine is the major drug of choice among dangerous drug users in Texas and some heroin users may have turned to methamphetamine because of low heroin availability.

The DEA report also said that cocaine, ranking second behind marijuana as the preferred drug in the area, enters the region primarily from Miami by way of couriers on commercial aircraft.

Mexican land routes for cocaine have been used through the years, the report said, with Laredo as the prime location.

The report added that "a considerable amount" of cocaine enters the South Central Region on commercial and privately-owned vessels.

It said that demand for cocaine is very high in the Houston area, where the drug sells for $2,500 an ounce. A generally less pure product sells in metropolitan areas elsewhere in the region for between $2,000 and $3,000 an ounce, the report said.

The report said methamphetamine sells for between $1,200 to $1,500 an ounce and is "in great demand throughout the region."

Britons support U.S. gun controls

LONDON (AP) — Following the attempt on his life, President Reagan has a golden opportunity to "ride into the jaws of the guns" and initiate tough federal gun controls, the respected British weekly, The Economist, said in an editorial today.

It noted that Reagan opposed gun controls in his election campaign because of the political outcry that would have come from conservative owners of America's estimated 145 million guns.

But the weekly said: "If he is a really great president, he will suddenly see that the only sort of politician who can bring federal gun control to America is a true-to-life John Wayne, against whom many masculine right-wingers will not be able to revolt."

It called on him to "wake the brave" by taking advantage of the popularity his calm physical courage and quick recovery will bring.

OTHER SOURCES OF FIRST MORTGAGES

It is a common misconception that the only place you can get a first mortgage is from a bank. There ARE other possible sources, for example:

If the seller owns his home free and clear, or if the remaining balance on his mortgage is very low, he may wish to provide a first mortgage to the buyer. This can be a workable solution in a tight money market if the seller does not need most or all of his cash out of the sale.

Friends, relatives and employers are other sources of first mortgage funds. Some corporations will provide mortgage to new employees transferring into the area, or to promote executives who are on their way up. And parents may desire to cash in financial instruments or use their savings to provide their children with a mortgage.

Generally speaking, in states with usury laws, private individuals or corporations are subject to the usury interest rate limits, just as are banks.

Aside from that, they can set whatever terms they like regarding interest or timing of payments.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON HARVEY REALTORS, 702 Andrews Hwy. Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! Come in for your free copy of "Home or Living" magazine.

Report says Soviets mounting campaign of disinformation

By BARTON REPERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Veteran journalist Arnaud deBorchgrave says the Soviet bloc is mounting a massive "disinformation" campaign to discredit rebel forces fighting within Angola and block the repeal of a congressional ban on U.S. aid to the anti-communist guerillas.

DeBorchgrave, who recently toured rebel-controlled areas deep inside Angola, contends that despite public endorsement of Luanda's Marxist regime, 10 African countries are secretly funneling aid to the UNITA guerrilla forces led by Jonas Savimbi.

In an interview Thursday, the former Newsweek senior editor said top-ranking European intelligence officials have told him the Soviets are "pulling out all the stops everywhere" in their drive to prevent lifting of restrictions imposed by the 1975 Clark amendment.

"They're seriously worried about a repeal of the Clark amendment because this could lead to a forced evacuation of Cuban troops from Africa," said deBorchgrave. "And what would happen to Cuba itself? Could (Premier Fidel) Castro survive this?"

DeBorchgrave, a resident scholar at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, testified earlier this week before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa.

He told the panel that Savimbi has spent the last 2½ months "visiting friendly African and Middle Eastern leaders."

"There are 10 African regimes today, while officially recognizing the MPLA regime in Luanda, that are covertly helping UNITA, admittedly with very limited means," said deBorchgrave, adding that he had verified this information with "several Western intelligence services."

He did not name the 10 countries, but said they are located "both north and south of the Sahara."

DeBorchgrave also said an 11th African nation, Togo, has openly indicated support for UNITA. "When Savimbi went to Lome in January, not only did he get an official, red-carpet reception, but it was (reported) in the local papers," he said.

In his testimony, deBorchgrave said he had spoken to captured Soviet airmen and Cuban officers when he was with UNITA forces inside Angola late last year.

"There are seven Cuban military defectors now working as scouts for UNITA units," he said. "These Cubans told me that their forces are thoroughly demoralized. As for the MPLA government — now officially a Marxist-Leninist regime — the Cubans told me it would quickly collapse without the Cuban military presence."

DeBorchgrave said the guerrillas' most effective weapons are Soviet-type shoulder-fired SAM-7 anti-aircraft missiles.

"When I was there, they had a total of 17 of these SAM-7s — 13 of them captured from Cuban outposts and four purchased for them by a friendly Middle Eastern country on the international arms black market at $40,000 apiece. More recently, they have received another 20 SAM-7s from the same Middle Eastern source," he testified.

DeBorchgrave said he estimated the Savimbi guerrilla forces at about 10,000 armed men, 80 percent of them "thoroughly trained." They can operate with "total impunity" in about one-third of Angola's territory, he said.

Clayton pushing state property tax

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The only witness to testify against Speaker Bill Clayton's idea to revive the state property tax for college construction money was Rep. Wayne Peveto, who said Clayton's measure would "break faith with the people."

But Clayton said his proposed constitutional amendment would give state-supported colleges a "funding mechanism second-to-none," and the House Constitutional Amendments Committee sent it to a friendly subcommittee.

It was expected to reach the House floor for debate quickly, although Peveto, D-Orange, promised to muster enough votes there to kill it.

Officials from the University of Texas and Texas A&M University systems plus the Council of Presidents of other state colleges backed the proposal and former Gov. Preston Smith, head of the Texas College Coordinating Board, sent a message of support.

Clayton's measure, if approved by the legislature, would go to voters in November.

It contains these key provisions:

—A state property tax of three cents per $100 valuation for land, construction, repair and rehabilitation, equipment and library book expenses for all colleges outside the Texas and A&M systems.

—"Forgive" state property taxes during the past two years. The 1979 legislature, in effect, did away with a 10-cent state tax for college construction by levying it at .001 percent of value. But Midwestern University is challenging that action and Clayton predicts the courts will reinstate the tax and order collection of $400 million in back payments.

"I think we would have a revolution on our hands if that were to occur," he said.

Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:
The fashion these days is dark blue jeans but they don't stay dark for very long. After putting even designer-label jeans into the washing machine a few times, they start to fade.

I hate to not wear those expensive pants, but I don't like to wear faded jeans. What can I do?

Elissa Frieland
The solution to your problem, dear heart, is really very simple. Just purchase a package of navy blue fabric dye and dye the jeans.

You can repeat the process as often as needed — just use the dye according to the directions on the package.

But you will need to follow one very necessary precaution...

Wash only the dark jeans together in a load of clothes in the washing machine after dyeing them, otherwise you will have a mess!

For a minimum of expense and effort, though, you can have nice, dark jeans again. Good luck!

CAR WASH HINTS

DEAR HELOISE:
For ladies who wash their own cars, either from necessity, or by choice, the quickest, most efficient way is to use a clean, soft dust mop — one with no hard surfaces exposed which might scratch the car. Dip the mop in a bucket of sudsy water and give the car the works. The mop head covers a lot of space, and with the long handle, you can do the hood with a few swipes.

Also, if you have short arms, doing the top is a snap.

FOR FLUFFY RUGS

DEAR HELOISE:
For fluffy-looking throw rugs, toss them in your clothes dryer and tumble them on the air cycle for a few minutes.

They'll look great — just remember to clean the lint screen after doing so.

WHISK TO SIFT

When dry ingredients need to be sifted to blend them thoroughly when baking, I just use my wire whisk.

It does an excellent job in just seconds.

PLASTIC BAGS KEEP BOOKS CLEAN

DEAR HELOISE:
To keep my books from getting dirty on the way to school, I get large food storage bags — the clear kind — and put my books in them. Tape or staple the bag to close it.

My books or papers don't get messed up and on rainy days don't get wet.

Kevin R., Age 11

TRY TENTING WITH A SHEET

DEAR HELOISE:
When I was little, I always wanted to build a tent. My mom would say I could if I didn't make a mess.

So, I got a rope, an old sheet and some heavy objects like books, etc., to hold the ends of the sheet down.

I tied the rope on two chairs and put the sheet over the rope. Put a book at each corner, and Wa La, I had a tent!

Cecil Eroy, Age 12

FUN FOR KIDS

DEAR HELOISE:
I was in charge of small children for many years so had a file of many games to play. One of the favorites was, "What Is It?"

I would gather many little items, put them in a box or bag and put a kerchief or scarf across each child's eyes, so he or she couldn't peek.

Some of the things I used were a small potato, orange or apple, etc., a crayon, a small bar of soap, etc. — just common items I had around the house, nothing sharp or breakable.

The objects were passed around to the kids to feel and identify. The one who could correctly name the most items won.

M. Herrold

GOOD IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:
Hang your dust rag on the vacuum cleaner after using. You won't have to look for it the next time around.

Mrs. M.E.S.

LETTER OF LAUGHER

DEAR HELOISE:
When my friend had reached another milestone and I congratulated her by stating, "Well, you're another year older!" she replied...

"Not necessarily! The way I look at it, I'm just one day older than I was yesterday!"

Joan Williams

FRIDGE GAME

DEAR HELOISE:
Put colored tape on the side of the refrigerator in tic-tac-toe lines and let the children play the game with magnets.

Saves on paper and keeps them from being under foot (but in sight) while you cook.

Cynthia Starbird

PRE-PAINTING TIP

DEAR HELOISE:
Before painting walls or woodwork, rub a thin coat of petroleum jelly over metal hardware which cannot be easily removed.

If you splatter paint on the metal, it can just be wiped off.

Debra Leckie

DEAR HELOISE:
To avoid splattering grease as well as a smoked-filled oven while broiling steaks, add one cup of water to the drip pan.
