BASEBALL SEASON OPENS WITH A BANG FRIDAY

Excitement ran high Friday afternoon when teams representing the volunteer fire department and the Fern Allen post of the American Legion met to settle the argument as to which organization has the best ball club. It will be remembered that two teams met several days ago and that the game ended in a tie. Perhaps it was this fact that made competition so keen. At any rate, balls zinged and bats walloped at a great rate, and balls, gloves, players and spectators were all mixed up all over the lot.

Batteries were Tate and Fairley for the hook and ladder brigade, Willis and Minton for the A. E. F. and spectators will vouch for the fact that no man was A. W. O. L. The game ended with a score of 34-14 in favor of the fire boys, but the soldiers were still not satisfied, and another game will be played Friday afternoon at the same place, the cotton yard.

Another game which created quite a bit of amusement and excitement was the one Tuesday afternoon between the soldiers and representatives from Gasoline Alley. Players from the A. E. F., Howard, Young, Hamilton, Curtis, Noble, and McKinley for the big air and water men, and Brock, Street, Bradley Willis, Ash, Minton, Parr, Etter, and Hood for the Legion boys.

The game ended with a score of 18-8 in favor of the Legion.

M SYSTEM AND B O MAKING BIG CHANGES

The M System and B & O stores are making big changes in equipment and arrangement in their stores, and are about to change over to the Red and White Store, which they are planning to change over to within a short while.

All fixtures and equipment in both stores been completely rearranged, and both interiors are receiving the final coat of a glistening white paint, brightened up with just enough red to make the whole effect cheerful and attractive.

The change to the Red and White system is expected to be of material interest to this territory, as the stores will be able to offer substantial savings on all groceries.

PARR BOY INJURED IN STREET FRAY FRIDAY

Lesterine Parr, son of Mrs. J. C. Parr of this place, is confined to his bed with two knife slashes across his abdomen, and R. W. Gary and his son, Pat, prominent farmers of this community, are awaiting trial May 4, as a result of a street fray here Friday afternoon.

The immediate cause of the trouble has not been divulged, but it is rumored that it had been brewing for some time. According to reports, Mr. Gary appeared on the street looking for young Parr. Shortly afterward, they met in front of the old post office building, where the conflict took place. However, it took place and was finished so quickly that no one seems to have a very clear or coherent story to tell.

DR. SHEPARD MOVES OFFICE TO NEW LOCATION

An item which was accidentally omitted last week was news that Dr. O. H. Shepard's office is now located in his business building, just east of Whitsett Drug. It has in the past been in his residence.

The new location is very conveniently arranged, having undergone extensive repairs and alterations, and is fully equipped. The additional space in the residence will also add much to the convenience and comfort.

GODDARD ENTERS CATTLE AT DAIRY SHOW

Jordan Goddard, one of O'Donnell's promising young farmers, last week exhibited two of his Jersey cattle at the Dairy Show at Plainview.

"UNCLE JACK" SMITH DIES HERE SUNDAY NIGHT

R. J. Smith, better known to scores of friends here as "Uncle Jack", passed quietly away Sunday night at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. Wright Edwards, after an illness of several months.

Funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church at Tahoka Monday afternoon, Rev. L. S. Jenkins and Rev. Hull of Tahoka officiating. Pallbearers were members of the Masonic lodge, of which Mr. Smith had been a member for several years. Interment took place in the cemetery at Tahoka.

R. J. Smith was born in Wilson County, Tennessee, Dec. 4, 1856. He was converted and joined a member of the Baptist church in early manhood. He married Miss Minnie Reed Oct. 20, 1881. To this union were born six children, five sons and one daughter. All were present for the funeral except one son, who was unable to be here. The wife and mother preceded her husband in death some three years, she having gone to her reward Feb. 7, 1928.

The family moved to Texas in 1902, and to Lynn county in 1922. Since the death of his wife, Mr. Smith has been living here with his daughter, Mrs. Edwards. Several months ago he sustained a severe fall at the home, breaking a hip, and has been a helpless invalid, confined to his bed. Throughout the lingering and painful illness, his cheerfulness and faith in the inherent goodness of his Master never wavered, and his gratitude for any kindness and care was expressed each day. All that medical aid and loving care could accomplish was done for his comfort, but his time had come.

Quintrell murmured something to Dolores. The girl's startled eyes flashed toward the door. She lost step, her mind distracted, then joined her partner and walked beside him from the door.

The sheriff noticed that she was between him and her lover; that her body protected Quintrell against the chance of gun fire. A quick suspicion shot into his mind. He moved toward the man he wanted, brushing aside those who were in the way, dodging the doctors as he crossed the barn.

O'Hara was too late. He saw the outlaw's teeth flash in an impudent grin, caught a mocking wave of the hand. A streak of color dived through the air. There was a crash of glass, and Quintrell had flung himself through the window head first.

Confusion instantly filled the room, which became vocal with screams, imprecations and the lift of excited Spanish vowels. Men and women pushed this way and that, so that O'Hara found himself caught in the press as he fought his way to the window. The soft bodies of young girls impeded him no less than the muscular ones of lean vaqueros.

From the outside came the sound of shots, staccato reports of battle. The sheriff drew closer to the glass, though in his eagerness to reach the eyes it seemed to take many minutes rather than moments. He found himself flung against a scoria piece that he saw so clearly that her bosom rose and fell against his heart. Dark, liquid, long-lashed eyes lifted to his. The firm brown flesh of bare arms reached his cheeks and fingers faced themselves together back of his neck. Dolores Gomez had found another way to serve her lover.

O'Hara tried to push her away. She dug her heavy as a sack of meat. He reached back, caught her wrists, and dragged at them to break the hold. The girl clung desperately to him. Even after he had freed himself she watched at his coast to detain him.

At last he was at the window. Protecting his face with his arms, he plunged through it to the ground outside.

Some one shouted, "Who is it?"

The voice belonged to Amen Owen. O'Hara called aloud his name. The cowboy ran to him, revolver in hand.

"He got away—that greaser who came through the window. Who was he?"

"Bob Quantrell." The sheriff was already on his feet, his six-shooter out. "Which way did he go?"

"Thataway." Owen waved his hand into the darkness. "He took us by surprise. We didn't know at first but what it was you—not till after he was shooting."

"Anybody hurt?"

"No. Too dark to see. All of us plunging away for general results. The boys followed him a little ways, but I missed 'em back. Figured it might be a trick to draw us off from the barn. Here are the boys."

O'Grogan and Baldy Brown joined them.

The sheriff sketched briefly the situation while he hurried down the street with his men.

"That was Bob Quantrell who made the break through the window. He outgeneraled me. No question of either of us shooting from where we were. Too many women around. So he came out through the window while I watched the door. He knows we're hot on his trail and he'll try to get away at once. Chances are he'll head toward the Delgado stable for the horses. If so, we'll have another brush with him."

A voice hailed them.

"That's Jess," said Baldy Brown. It was Worrall had sent him to find out the cause of the firing.

"Nobody been for the horses yet?" the sheriff asked.

"Not yet. Pankey showed up an' took a look at the horses to see they were all right, then came out again. We didn't even chirp."

"Pankey, eh?"

"There was right sure it was Pankey. Couldn't see his face much, but the fellow limped like Pankey does."

Within five minutes the men joined Worrall and McCarthy, who were hiding behind an adobe wall across the barn from the stable. They held a hurried low-voiced consultation.

"I've a notion to take a scout around the Gomez place," O'Hara said. "Like by the family won't stay at the dance now, and Bob will try to meet Dolores before he leaves town. Steve, you come with me and look around there. We'll be back soon."

Owen rubbed dubiously the unshaven bristles on his chin. "You're kidding that boy considerable, Garrett. I done told you he's got more wile to him than a sidewinder. You better stick around here with the rest of us, don't you reckon?"

"When you call for a showdown with Bob you wanta be sure you have an ace in the hole," Baldy Brown said drawing a plug of chewing tobacco from his pocket. "He can sure make a busted flush go a long way. An' most usually you'll find his cards are all red when they're flipped over. Now my idea is to sit here an'—"

O'Hara cut curly into Baldy's discourse. "Not a debating society we're holding. I'm here to capture Bob Quantrell. The way to get him is to go after him. Come along, Steve."

Worrall grinned at Owen and Brown. "String along with Garrett here an' you'll have lively times, bags, here on you have any. My last words are that if I'd lived a better life I wouldn't of been here. All right, Sheriff. Scratch gravel."

O'Hara and his long lean deputy moved away and were lost in the darkness.

"Sure is a lad, that Garrett O'Hara, who's had more bullheaded luck than a nigger with a rabbit's foot," Baldy drawled, a little resentful. When he was making oration he did not like to be cut off abruptly.

"Luck yore foot!" scoffed Owen. "He makes his own breaks, Garrett does. He's got guts an' horse sense."

"So have you, old-timer, but I ain't heard anybody shouting 'bout what a wonder you are. Couple years ago this O'Hara was a tenderfoot—didn't know sic 'em. You wouldn't of said he would be worth a barrel of shucks as a sheriff. Now he's the white-haired lad of Jefferson county. Tell me why, if it's not luck."

"Sure I'll tell you why, Baldy. It's because he never quits—goes after bad men like the Watsons. Lights on 'em all spriddled out. On top of that he's straight as a string. That's its shape."

Baldy agreed, still grumbling.

Gomez lived in a large one-story adobe house on the outskirts of the town. He was one of the original settlers. He had driven his longhorns up from Mexico and settled on the creek in the days when the Apaches were still troublesome. Within a few years the town had grown up almost at his doorstep. For a Mexican he was well off. His cows and horses had increased in number. More rooms had been added to the house. He entertained hospitably and was a political leader of his race locally. Dark-eyed sons and daughters, eleven all told, were growing up around him and his still handsome wife. They were attractive young people, devoted to their father and their mother. The gods, it was generally felt, had been very good to him.

Don't Neglect It!

It was the last bit of advice a prominent retiring merchant gave to his son and successor, and it guided a sound business enterprise safely through the rough channels of trade.

"Under no circumstances," counseled the merchant, "neglect the protection which sound stock insurance affords. Keep it broad—adequate! It strengthens business credit, invites public confidence, stimulates patronage and encourages consistent progress."

Let us help you review your needs and give you sound, dependable protection.
