I'd like to take time to salute our local teachers and staff at Valley. We are very fortunate to have such quality educators in our rural area. We have a beautiful school, and wonderful children to fill the desks. We have an abundance of school spirit, and student participation, and sometime -- a lot of the time -- we forget who is responsible for most of this. So, to all the wonderful staff at Valley, I say Thank You for teaching our children. I apprea ren. I appreaciate your patience, your knowledge, your love, and

Social Security News

By Terry J. Clements If you're a Social Security beneficiary, you should receive a Social Security Benefit Statement (Form SSA-1099) in the mail sometime this month. The form shows the this month. The form shows the amount of Social Security benefits you received or repaid in 1987. You should use the form to help you figure whether any of your Social Security benefits are subject to Federal income tax.

Most Social Security benefit.

Most Social Security beneficiaries do not have to pay any Federal income tax on their Social Security benefits. If your Social Security check is your largest source of income, you probably won't owe any tax on your benefits. But if you have substantial income in addition to your Social Security benefits, up to half of your annual Social Security benefits may be subject to Federal income tax.

Your Social Security benefits may be taxable if your taxable income plus your non-taxable interest plus half of your Social Security benefits exceeds the base amount. The base amounts are $25,000 if you are single; $32,000 if you are married and file a joint return; or $0 if you are married, live

Easy to grow wildflowers

By FRANCES TENENBAUM

By FRANCES TENENBAUM

All the world loves wildflowers, yet relatively few gardeners grow them. There is a three-part theory to account for this apparent discrepancy. The almost universal belief that wildflowers are hard to grow; the myth that you cannot grow wildflowers in anything but an exact duplicate of their natural environment; and the fact that there is very little practical literature on how to grow them.

Although I think that theory is valid, I am tempted to reduce it to one somewhat flippant statement: People don't grow wildflowers because they once planted pink lady slippers—and they died.

But all wildflowers aren't pink lady slippers, or other wild orchids, or rare and temperamental plants. Hundreds of beautiful wildflowers are actually very easy to grow.

Wildflowers are not never good now of and temperamental plants. Hundreds of beautiful wildflowers are actually very easy to grow.

Wildflowers are one very good way of bringing individuality and a new sense of adventure and excitement into gardening, while at the same time encouraging the preservation and propagation of native plants. More and more varieties of bigger, brighter, sturdier zinnias are fine, but not all of us want only zinnias.

Equally important is the fact that native plants, once established, are far less demanding than most hybrids. Since they are usually perennials or self-sowing biennials, they are also a lot less expensive and far less trouble than the annuals we are accustomed to purchasing each year to use as fillers after the first flush of spring bloom has passed.

Here is a sampling of shade-loving wildflowers which you can easily incorporate into your own garden's flower beds. These shade-loving wildflowers will grow in average garden soil under exactly the same conditions that cultivated shade flowers require: Light or moderate shade with some sun and reasonable moisture.

Like cultivated plants, they won't do

Like cultivated plants, they won't do well in dense shade, but they will take quite a bit of sun if the soil isn't hot and dry.

Because this is such a desirable, reliable group of wildflowers, all of them are easily available from wildflower dealers everywhere, as well as from many gen-

Crested Iris (Iris cristata) —A low Crested Iris (Iris cristata) — A low receive more

Crested Iris (Iris cristata)—A low-growing, mat-forming plant, rarely more than six inches tall, but with large, light lavender-blue flowers.

It blooms in early spring, but the leaves remain all summer, making it a neat, attractive plant for the front border of a shady bed.

Because of its spreading nature, it is also useful as a ground cover or a plant for a shady rock garden.

Iris cristata is easily grown and may be divided at any time, or increased by removing a small piece from the mother plant.

The rhizomes should be planted close to the surface and not mulched heavily.

• Wild Geranium (Crane's-bill) (Geranium (Chane S-ohi) (Geranium Meaculatum)—A very pretty pinkish-lavender flower with delicate, deeply notched leaves. The wild gera-nium (no relative of the Pelargonium that we know as the geranium) grows from 12 to 20 inches tall along shady roadsides in late soring.

It is a very easy plant to grow in a variety of shady locations and, if it has any fault, it is that it tends to self-sow rather freely, but no more so than many cultivated plants, and it is easy enough to weed out the seedlings. The flowers wilt mightly if nicked.

ickly if picked.

• Wild Columbine (Aquilegia)—There Wild Columbine (Agutegra)—There are many species of this well-loved native plant, the most commonly sold being the American Columbine, A. canadensis, which has red and yellow flowers with long red spurs.

It grows from two to three feet tall in graceful clumps and self-sows generously.

ously.
You can easily increase your collection by waiting for the tiny seedlings to appear and then moving those, rather than pear and then moving those, rather than digging up the mature plants. It blooms in late spring in most areas.

The biggest difference between easy flowers for shade and easy ones for sun is that some that thrive in sun could actually be too easy if you aren't careful where you use them. In their wild state, they usually grow under somewhat adverse conditions, unfertilized, in competition with other vegetation, and in verse conditions, unfertilized, in compe-cition with other vegetation, and in rather poor, dry land.

If you treat them too well by bringing them into a heavily fertilized, well-wa-tered, sunny flower border, they may re-pay your kindness by turning rank and weedy and then crowd out your speci-men plants.

men plants.

If you have perfect growing conditions in a sunny border, you'll do better to save that bed for your cultivated plants and look elsewhere on your property for places to use wildflowers.

The great virtue of the following sample of wildflowers is that they will do well in less than ideal conditions, where wilding the plants will suffer.

Lance Coreopsis (Coreopsis lanceolata) — You may already have this one in your garden, since it is an accepted "cultivated" plant as well as a wild one. Because it doesn't grow rank and weedy, you can use it in a good sunny border as well as in its native dry, sandy or rocky soil.

It has bright yellow flowers with wide rays and makes a most attractive display throughout the summer.

There are several species of coreopsis.

Three are several species of coreopsis, but this one and the similar C. grand-ifloru, a self-sowing biennial, are the best

There are several species of coreopsis, but this one and the similar C grandfiloru, a self-sowing biennial, are the best for dry, sunny areas.

Lance coreopsis is a perennial; it is easy to transplant from the wild, and may be divided in the spring.

New England Aster (Aster novaeangliae)—Of all the many species of aster, this is the one most often offered for sale and most widely cultivated in home gardens. It is a tall plant and should be used toward the back of a flower bed.

However, since it grows naturally in rather wet soil, given drier conditions it may not tower quite so much, which is fine with most gardeners.

The flower heads are larger than those of most wild asters, and range in color from purple through purple-pink to white. It is easily transplanted and available from all dealers.

If you are collecting from the wild, you'll find many other asters which you may like. One of my favorites is the Heath Aster, I crisiodies, which grows in extremely poor dry soil, rather tall, with lots of small white flowers.

It isn't that it looks very special in the garden, but the flowers make a wonderful substitute in bouquets for baby's breath, a cultivated plant that has never succeeded for me.

Purple Coneflower (Enchinacea purpurea)—Although the purple coneflower.

purea)—Although the purple coneflower will grow very well in poor, dry, gravelly soil, you can safely use this in a good bed too, since it isn't at all weedy. The flower petals are reddish purple and droop downwards from a darker purple center cone downwards from a darker purple center cone.

It is similar in appearance, although certainly not in color, to the black-eyed Susan, but far less common. Seeds and plants are carried by wildflower dealers.

Lastly, please remember that you should give all wildflowers a good start, no matter under what conditions of adversity they naturally grow. Dig a good hole, add peat moss or compost, and water them in well. Don't fertilize.

In the sun, weeds are always a problem. Either weed by hand until the wildflowers take over or use a heavy mulch. Don't worry about the frail little weeds; just go for the big gross ones that might crowd out your flowers. And don't cultivate; that just prepares the soil for a new invasion of weed seeds.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The above is an except from Gardening With Wildflowers (Ballantine Books) by Frances Tenenbaum.

CHILDREN AND READING

Many parents think teaching a child to read is the school's responsibility. However, child development specialists say the foun-dation for learning to read is laid in infancy with the early interac-tion between parent and child. Children know a lot about reading when they enter school because their parents have been teaching them since they were born. Early childhood educators have found that reading with children is an important function for later reading achievement. Reading with a child, rather than to a child, allows talking about the story and answering questions, which are as important as the story itself.

This parent-child interaction applies to the content of the story as well as to the discussions about letters, words, and phrases that help children become familiar with books.

Research tells us that regular reading with children 8 - 10 minutes a day for 4-7 days a week is associated with both high reading achievement and positive attitudes toward reading. The positive feeling that goes along with the shared time between parent and child also influences children's success in learning to Many young children begin their learning - to- read process by "pretend" reading -- turning pages, following lines of print with their fingers and retelling the story as they look at the pictures.

Parents' role in teaching a child to value and appreciate reading is crucial in the development of this lifelong skill. Parents model reading behavior. If you as a par-ent read for pleasure and information, your child is more likely to have positive attitudes and achievement in reading as well.

Some of my earliest remembrances are of my mother's teaching the ABC's as she ironed or cooked; my father's constant reading when he was home; the shelves of books in our home; the newspapers read daily; and my father's explanation of the derivation of words. Because of my parents' value of reading and education, I have been privileged to ex-perience the importance of the parents' role in their children's school achievement.

I would encourage parents of infants and pre-school children to begin now to build the foundation for your child's success in school by communicating and interacting with your children language to develop their appreciation of reading.

Garden beauty: Made in the shade

What if your property doesn't get much sun? Well, that may be a blessing. Many people consider shade gardens to be the most delightful, especially in hot, sunny weather when the cool shelter of a lush shade garden can refresh both mind and body.

The work of the weight shades and small trees. However, the perennials and the annuals are the backbone of your shade garden. Some easily-found perennials that you can enjoy for years in your shady garden are bleeding heart, columbine, coralbells and body.

Shade gardens offer many advantages over their sunny counterparts. Clearly, physical labor is easier in the shade than in the sun. Also, flowers almost always last longer in a shade garden.

Shade-loving plants also require less maintenance. You don't have to water as often, Fertilizing with a liquid plant food, such as Miracle-Gro, can be cut to once a month rather than the usual weekly application.

Many people are surprised at the number of lovely plants suitable for shade. You can choose among annuals, perennials, hardy bulbs, tender bulbs, ground covers, vines, evergreens, deciduous lily-of-the-valley or sweet violet.

Starting a cutting garden

Because a cutting garden is not primarily for outdoor decor, don't be concerned about its overall appearance. Just select a small inconspicuous area that receives six to seven hours of full sun a day.

Flowers for a cutting garden

For a broader selection of flowers, plan to include both annuals and perennials. Plant the annuals and perennials in different sections so that you will not disturb the perennials when you prepare the soil for the annuals each year.

The following annuals and perennials are suggested, because of their prolific production of blooms over a long season and the blooms' lasting power after cutting. Depending on the severity of winter in your area, some plants listed as perennials may be annuals.

Annuals — Aster, cosmos, snap-dragon, carnation (annual or perennial), china aster, marigold.

Perennials — Delphinium, shasta daisy, baby's breath, bellflower (perennial or annual), dahlia, feverfew, gloriosa daisy, yarrow. A type of rose well suited to cutting is floribunda.

Taking care of the garden

A well-watered and well-fed cutting garden will produce more and better looking flowers. Annuals are very sensitive to drying, so be alert for signs of wilting. Annuals should be watered deeply at least once a week, while perennials should be watered every two weeks. Feed your cutting garden with a fiquid plant food such as Miracle-Gro. Apply according to manufacturer's label directions. If your garden is large, use a Miracle-Gro "No-Clog" Feeder which automatically mixes the plant food with water.

Preserving cut flowers

Preserving cut flowers

A few simple procedures can help prolong flower life after cutting. For best results, cut the flowers either in early morning or in early evening. Carry a container of warm water and put the flowers into it immediately.
Re-cut the flowers once you get inside the house. For soft stemmed plants always use a sharp knife or scissors and cut at an angle.

with sharp pruning shears and the ends crushed to maximize water up-take.

1988 Earnings Base-Tax Rate To Increase

The annual earnings base -- the maximum amount of earnings that counts for Social Security will increase to $45,000 for 1988, up from $43,800 for 1987. In addition, the 1988 tax rate for employees will increase to 7.51 percent, up from the 1987 rate of 7.15 percent, Frances Braden, Social Security Representative in Vernon, said recently.

The increase in the wage base is based on the change in average earnings levels from 1986 to 1987. The tax rate increase was already a part of the Social Security law The effective tax rate for selfemployed people will rise from 12.3 percent to 13.02 percent for

The increase in the tax rate will amount to $7.20 a month for a person earning $2,000 a month.

Other Social Security figures are scheduled to increase in 1988 as well Braden said. The annual exempt amount used in the annual earnings test will increase. The annual earnings test is the measure used to determine whether a person who works will receive benefits during the year.

The 1988 annual exempt amount for people 65 through 69 will be $8,400, up from the 1987 amount of $8,160. The 1988 exempt amount for people under 65 all of 1988 will be $6,120 up Three shrubs famous for their shady performances are azalea, hydrangea and rhododendron. exempt amount for people un 65 all of 1988 will be $6,120 from the 1987 amount of $6,000.

REG. OR BUTTER SHORTENING

A person whose earnings do not exceed the annual exempt amount will receive all benefits for the year. A person's benefit is reduced by $1 for each $2 of earnings above the exempt amount. The annual earnings test does not apply once a person reaches 70.

'The amount of earnings needed to earn a quarter of coverage -- the measure of Social Security work credit -- will be $470 in 1988, up from $460 for 1987. In 1988, workers will earn four quarters of coverage if their annual earnings are $1,880 or more.

More information about Social Security taxes and benefits can be obtained at the Vernon Social Security office, located at 1701 Cumberland, Vernon, Texas. The telephone number is 817-552-9346.
