Shoppers get break from taxes

Texas shoppers get a break from state and local sales taxes this weekend - August 5, 6, and 7 - during the state's sixth annual tax holiday.

Lay-away plans can be used again this year to take advantage of the sales tax holiday.

The law exempts most clothing and footwear priced under $100 from sales and use taxes, which could save shoppers about $8 on every $100 they spend.

The tax holiday occurs every year on the first Friday, Saturday, and Sunday of August. Qualifying items are exempt from state sales taxes, but exemption from local sales tax is up to individual cities. This year, since no cities opted out of the holiday, qualifying items will be fully exempt from tax throughout Texas.

Most clothing and footwear priced at less than $100 will be exempt from sales tax. Customers will receive the break on individual items, regardless of the total amount they buy. For example, sales tax is not due if a customer buys six shirts each priced at $99.99. But full tax is due on a shirt sold for $100; the first $99.99 cannot be exempted.

Clothing and footwear used primarily for athletic activities or for protective wear are not eligible for the exemption. Customers buying golf cleats or football pads, for instance, must pay sales tax. Athletic wear that is also used for participation in other non-athletic activities can qualify for tax exemption. For example, tennis shoes, baseball caps, and jogging suits are worn during everyday activities and thus may be purchased tax-free during the holiday.

Also excluded from the tax holiday are accessories such as jewelry rather than worn, including handbags, briefcases and wallets; clothing rentals, such as formal wear and costumes; and repairs and alterations.

Frist position on stem cells shows courage

Surprise, surprise! Senate Majority Leader Bill "Gomer" Frist has a backbone after all.

The Republican leader, who is generally a disappointment when it comes to leading, made a stunning announcement last Friday. He is now in favor of expanding the use of federal funds for embryonic stem cell

This column has been no fan of Sen. Frist, but the time has come to defend the majority leader against the onslaught of criticism he is unfairly receiving editor's from conservatives across the country First, however, we should review what's at stake. Stem cells are human cells that can be developed into any type of human body cell or system - blood, nerves, you name it. Stem cell research holds the possibility - not a sure thing, but a possibility - of developing treatments or even cures for a number of diseases, including, but not limited to, heart disease, diabetes, Alzheimers, Parkinson's, and paralysis.

The best source of stem cells is human embryos left over after in-vitro fertilization attempts, and that's where things get controversial in some minds. The invitro process results in numerous embryos, the best of which are implanted and hopefully result in a healthy pregnancy and ultimately a happy family. The leftovers are put in cold storage and ultimately destroyed. (Which is to say, they are basically trashed.)

Some folks believe the frozen embryos are human beings - fully alive and fully entitled to the right to live. Embryonic stem cell research, which destroys the source embryos, in their view is therefore immoral and unconscionable. President Bush is one who believes

Others have a more practicable view of the situation. They believe the embryos are frozen cells that are going to be destroyed and ought to be used to help people. Nancy Reagan, Michael J. Fox, the late Christopher Reeve, your humble editor, and, now, Senator Bill Frist are in that group.

Sen. Frist is widely believed to be considering a bid for the Republican nomination for president in 2008. It remains to be seen whether I will support him then, but his pragmatic position on stem cells boosts his standing with this writer. Unfortunately, he is taking a hit from other conservatives, who have more

The Christian Defense Coalition said Frist "should not expect support and endorsement from the pro-life community if he votes for embryonic research funding," and the coalition's director, Rev. Patrick J. Mahoney, said Frist "cannot be pro-life and proembryonic stem cell funding." And the National Pro-Life Action Center said embryonic stem cell research "is never morally acceptable."

What would these groups and their allies prefer happen to the frozen embryos? They would like to see them adopted by childless couples. That's a noble goal, but not every embryo is going to be adopted. Some are still going to be discarded like yesterday's trash. Where is the morality in that?

Opponents of stem cell research need to take a fresh view of the subject, and they should consider the use of these frozen embryos as being similar to organ

At the death of a loved one, families have the opportunity to save or improve several other lives. Eyes, kidneys, hearts, livers, lungs, and other tissues can be harvested and put to good use. Or they can be burned to ashes in a crematorium or allowed to rot in the ground.

It's a personal preference. My grandfather donated his eyes after his death, and I certainly hope the medical community can make some use of my parts after I'm through with them.

Give the biological parents of these embryos the same choice. Let them sign a form and check off whether they want their leftover tissue put up for adoption, thrown out as medical waste, or given over to science to possibly become the basis for miraculous cures in the future.

Earlier last month, another Republican senator, Orrin Hatch, told reporters: "Patients are waiting all across America. It can take 10 to 20 years or longer for this research to bear fruit and we need to start now."

Ten or 20 years is a long time if you or your loved one is suffering. Ask Nancy Reagan.

Senator Frist has shown courage and conviction in breaking with his supporters and in diverging, in this case, from the president. Conservatives around the country should look at the bigger picture of what good can be accomplished by joining with the majority leader on this issue rather than trying to score points splitting hairs at the expense of the pain and suffering of millions of men and women.

Our federal tax dollars are wasted on a lot of stupid programs. But using federal funds for embryonic stem cell research holds the promise of saving lives, of improving lives, and of keeping America at the cutting edge of biological research and advance-

Jumpin' Jiminy! Good morals do prevail

Jiminy Cricket gave this piece of advice to a young Pinocchio, "Always let your conscience be your guide."

There was a time when I thought my conscience, my Jiminy Cricket, had left me entirely. I just want everyone to know that he is back and better than ever. Yes, I still have a conscience.

Yesterday afternoon I went to the mall to sell all my video games (my game system got stolen by someone with a less powerful Jiminy Cricket) and to do a little shopping. I made a grand total of eight bucks off the games, but I figured I should put that cash back into circulation ASAP.

I found this cute dress with a horrible cardigan and a fabulous cardigan with an awful dress. I took both dresses to the fitting room and tried them on.

The awful dress wasn't so awful. It was a flattering shape and a harmless floral pattern, but the cute cardigan just didn't go. With a yellow sweater with a beaded flower, it was too much yellow, too much floral. But it was on sale for $9.99, and you can't beat that with a stick.

The cute dress, a little less on sale at $15, was an understated polka dot. One can never go wrong with understated polka. That is unless you pair it with a frumpy black shrug with fringe.

I took off both outfits and made a pile of things to hang up. It was like that commercial where the chocolate and peanut butter guys run into each other. "You've

I looked at the cute dress and the fabulous cardigan just lying there, looking doubly so for being together. "You've got

I looked at the awful dress and the horrible cardigan, and it occurred to me that this new pairing actually made the ugly dress less ugly. The dress and sweater came in a set, but the price tag was only on the sweater. So I was totally going to put the cute dress with the fabulous cardigan, and it would be I actually had the sweaters switched, and I was walking out of the dressing room when I heard a little voice telling me that there might be an ethical problem with my reasoning.

"Carrie, don't be silly. Those dresses aren't the same price. You're stealing."

"Am not! Who'll know? Who'll care? And you know what? Both dresses look better. Maybe someone else switched the sweaters and I'm really switching them back? I'm righting a wrong. I'm like Superman. Or that guy on that show, The Pretender."

"No, no. You know better. You know it's wrong. It just is."

Respect for rule of law should be guide

Whenever I have visited an emerging democracy, I have noticed consistency on two points: first, everybody easily understands the need for democratic voting and free speech; second, they have a much harder time understanding the rule of law, which is just as essential for a democracy to function.

I once met with members of the Russian Duma and emphasized how eager Americans were for Russia's fledgling democracy to succeed. One member replied, "No you don't. Americans are not investing here." I replied that for American companies to invest, there has to be an independent judiciary and respect for the rule of law, so the state cannot easily confiscate private property. This was extremely difficult for the Russian parliamentarians to under-

We have grown up in the United States in a society of laws, not of men. We take that concept for granted. In most emerging democracies, the rule of law is an alien idea, almost incomprehensible. But if you want democracy to succeed, it must harness the two concepts of individual rights and majority rule - and it can do this only through respect for the rule of law.

The rule of law involves four basic requirements: Equality under the law; a respect for individual rights; an independent and honest judiciary; and transparent court proceedings. This concept was built into our Constitution, which established the judiciary as a co-equal branch with the legislative and the executive. Because of this, the Supreme Court can strike down laws through "judicial review" if it decides the law violates our supreme law, the Constitution.

by sen. kay bailey hutchison

Judicial review provides courts with a great deal of power, which some people believe has been abused. Some believe the courts have taken judicial review so far that some judges are legislating from the bench rather than interpreting and implementing the laws passed by elected representatives. If the public begins to view the courts simply as a different avenue for partisan political contests, instead of a fair arbitrator of legal questions, their faith in the impartial rule of law will erode.

This would be an unhealthy development. Many times in our history, court rulings have been unpopular, but the general respect accorded to the law allowed the public to accept its decisions.

The importance of the courts explains why we must take the replacement of retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor very seriously.

The Senate has a responsibility to examine the president's nominees closely to determine whether they are qualified by experience, knowledge and temperament to sit on the high court.

The Constitution says Congress should ascertain whether the nominee is qualified and fair, not fight to make sure he or she has a certain set of approved views on a laundry list of hot-button political issues. If this process is perceived by people as a partisan contest, it will only serve to diminish the respect the people have for the justice the court is expected to deliver. This could further erode the respect for the

This concept is so important to the stable functioning of representative government that I joined with the Southern Methodist University Dedman School of Law to establish a Rule of Law program to bring jurists and officials from developing countries to the United States.

The hope of all who participate in this program is that our foreign guests will build their understanding of the rule of law, and help this vital principle take root in their countries and foster the growth of strong and stable democracies around the

Can you make a difference? What do our young ladies today need? I hear a lot of conversation about girls not having anything to do, girls don't have the manners they used to have, or girls are doing things and knowing things too young.

The Clarendon Lions Club held their regular Tuesday noon meeting August 2, 2005, with Boss Lion Mark C. White in charge.

We had 15 members and two guests this week. Harlo Burlin was the guest of Lion Judy Burlin, and Ashlee Estlack was the guest of Lion Roger Estlack.

The Pledge of Allegiance was led by Lion Debbie Hamilton, and Lion Monty Hysinger gave the invocation. A slip of the gavel then almost adjourned the meeting early, but the Boss Lion got everyone seated again.

Lion Hysinger reported the public school is nearing completion on their renovations. They hope to be through later this week and have the books back in the library early next week. Teachers report for duty August 15, and students start classes on August 24. Forty-one young men have reported for football workouts.

Lion Tex Buckhalts said the college is getting ready for the fall semester. The livestock judges and the volleyball team will be the first students in the dorms on August 20.

Lion Leonard Haynes said the 4-H Club will hold a new members' night at the Bar H Dude Ranch later this month, and Lion Burlin reported that Kid Fish will be held at Kincaid Park on August 13.

The Boss Lion said plans were still being made for a dove hunt this fall, and a date will soon be announced for the Pancake Supper.

Improvement Noted in Breast Cancer Patient Survival

Cancer researchers interested in the long term survival of breast cancer patients evaluated the combined use of two cancer drugs over a two year period. The results of their evaluation were presented recently at the annual meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology and published in the Journal of Clinical Oncology. The drug combination consisted of Herceptin (trastuzumab) and Taxotere (docetaxel).

Women in the study had metastatic breast cancer (the type that had spread from the breast to other parts of the body). They received either Toxotere alone or a combination of Taxotere and Herceptin. During the study, if anyone experienced progression of the cancer, they were allowed to switch to the drug combination. In the report of the outcome of the study, it was noted that women treated with the combination had a higher response rate that women taking Taxotere alone. It was also noted that the combination produced a longer survival (31.2 months for the drug combination group versus 22.7 months for the Taxotere only group).
