The Secret

of the universal success of Brown's Iron Bitters is simply this: It is the best Iron preparation ever made; is compounded on thoroughly scientific, chemical and medicinal principles, and does just what is claimed for it--no more and no less.

By thorough and rapid assimilation with the blood, it reaches every part of the system, healing, purifying and strengthening. Commencing at the foundation it builds up and restores lost health--in no other way can lasting benefit be obtained.

Dearborn Ave., Chicago, Nov. 7. I have been a great sufferer from a very weak stomach, heartburn, and dyspepsia in its worst form. Nearly everything I ate gave me distress, and I could eat but little. I have tried everything recommended, have taken the prescriptions of a dozen physicians, but got no relief until I took Brown's Iron Bitters. I feel none of the old troubles, and am a new man. I am getting much stronger, and feel first-rate. I am a railroad engineer, and now make my trips regularly. I can not say too much in praise of your wonderful medicine. D. C. Mack.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not contain whiskey or alcohol, and will not blacken the teeth, or cause headache and constipation. It will cure dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sleeplessness, dizziness, nervous debility, weakness, &c.

Use only Brown's Iron Bitters made by Brown Chemical Co., Baltimore. Crossed red lines and trade-mark on wrapper.

Fort Worth Republican.

It is reported that the Mexican authorities are going to make a claim at the approaching session of congress on the United States for Galveston island, which includes Galveston city. The Mexican cession of the republic of Texas only took in the southern boundary of Galveston bay, it seems, and the claim appears good. Trouble may be anticipated.

Kansas City is to have a new Glucose manufacturing establishment. Concerning this and other industries lately established there the Price Current says:

"The opening of the Glucose Works here and commencing of active operations promises a new and important factor in our corn market. The company has already commenced the purchase of corn and is stocking up their warehouses. Backed by liberal capital and their works affording facilities for turning out large quantities of both sugar and syrups, their consumption of corn must prove very large during the year and a new and important local demand furnished by them for grain."

Grandeur of Women.

Dr. Talmage in Frank Leslie's Magazine.

When you want to get the grandest idea of a Queen, you do not think of Catherine, of Russia, or of Anne, of England, or of Marie Theresa, of Germany; but when you want to get your grandest idea of a Queen, you think of the plain woman who sat opposite your father at the table, or walked with him arm-in arm down life's pathway; sometimes to the thanksgiving banquet, sometimes to the grave, but always together, soothing your petty griefs, correcting your childish waywardness joining in your infantile sports, listening to your evening prayers, toiling for you with needle, or at the spinning wheel, and on cold nights wrapping you up snug and warm. And then, at last on that day when she lay in the back room dying, and you saw her take those thin hands, with which she had toiled for you so long, and put them together in a dying prayer that commended you to the God whom she had taught you to trust--oh she was a Queen!

The chariots of God went down to fetch her, and as she went in all heaven rose up. You cannot think of her now without a rush of tenderness that stirs the deep foundations of your soul, and you feel as much a child again as when you cried on her lap; and if you could bring her back again to speak just once more your name as tenderly as she used to speak it, you would be willing to throw yourself on the ground and kiss the sod that covers her, crying, "Mother, Mother!" Ah, she was a Queen! To make one such woman as I have described how many thousands would you want of those people who go in the round of fashion and dissipation, distressing their body until in their monstrosities they seem to outdo the dromedary and hippopotamus; going so far towards disgraceful apparel as they dare go, so as not to be arrested by the police, their behavior a sorrow to the good and a caricature to the vicious, and an insult to that God who made them women and not gorgons; and tramping on down through a frivolous, dissipated life, to temporal and eternal damnation.

Pioneer Women.

Youth's Companion.

Sometimes a pioneer settlement in the far West owes its origin to an accident. Thieving Indians may have left the emigrant without a horse or an ox to drag the heavy wagon that is laden with all his worldly goods. He and his wife, adapting themselves to circumstances, may then have felled the nearest trees, hauled the logs and raised the first cabin.

Then other emigrants came along. A broken axle caused delay long enough for them to become interested in the locality, and other log huts were raised.

One of these pioneer settlements, which began in a break-down, was visited once by an English sportsman seeking game. It was a collection of eight or nine huts.

The men were away attending to a distant cattle-drive. Subsequent to their departure, rumors of an Indian outbreak had reached the women and they had retired to a cellar fort, connected by a subterranean passage with the largest log cabin.

Riding a few miles ahead of his companions, the Englishman reached the cabins some hours before they arrived. Long exposure in the mountains had made havoc with his clothes, and his hands were red with the blood of a mountain sheep, whose skin and quarters rested on his saddle.

Not knowing of the Indian news, he was unprepared for the shrill "Halt!" which stopped him a few yards from the fence surrounding the first cabin. Looking he saw a rifle resting on the bar of the fence, and behind it a boy of eleven or twelve years of age.

"Say stranger what are you anyhow? Be you a redskin, half-breed, or a white man?" shouted the boy-sentry.

A laughing answer caused the gun to be lowered. "I am the boss in this yer camp," said the boy, answering the man's question. "Go into the house where mam oughter (ought to be) cooking dinner."

Entering the cabin, he found a woman busy about the stove, against which leaned a Winchester rifle. Her waist was girded by a well-filled cartridge-belt, to which was attached a long six-shooter.

After dinner, the guest made the tour of the cabins under the guidance of the boy, whose place as sentinel was taken by a neighbor's daughter.

The cellar "fort" was twelve feet square and seven high. Where the walls joined the earthwork roof there were loopholes.

The narrow passage connecting the cellar with the log cabin was only four feet high, and sloped upwards. It was so arranged that it could be filled with earth at a moment's notice. A heavy pile of earth which covered the rafter roof, made it impossible for the Indians to fire the structure.

The "English outfit," as the Englishman's party was called, soon arrived and camped near the cabins until the men of the settlement returned. They were grateful, but to the Englishman the incident was one of many illustrations which showed the self-help and self-confidence of the pioneer women, and the readiness with which they adapted themselves to their surroundings.

Life in Northwestern Dakota.

St. Lawrence Tribune.

The white men all have Indian squaws to do their housework; that is, those who are able to afford them, for it costs something to get one. Those young whites that can catch a young Indian woman away from her parents and throw a blanket over her, and run off and secret her a certain length of time, can have her as a wife. Otherwise it will take several ponies or cows or from $100 to $500, according to the rank of the family. Among the fifteen or twenty families, only one white lady was seen. While there, the wife of a rancher died, and was buried according to Indian customs. In the coffin, which was a pine box, the relations of the dead squaw placed every thing that they thought would be of any benefit to the spirit Indian in going to the happy hunting ground. Such things as thimbles, scissors, thread, buttons, needles, smoothing irons and the like, were heaped on the corpse until the lid would scarcely close. The bereaved husband told me the Indians mourned for pay. One squaw, as a recompense for her morning, relived his sugar barrel of twenty-five pounds of sugar. Others took things in accordance. Three hundred cups of coffee a day while the lady was sick was the low estimate of the coffee he dealt out to the Indians.

What becomes of old pianos? That well-known and most adventurous Frenchman, De Tonnant, while in Patagonia, wished to gain the good-will of an old Patagonian chief. He accordingly gave the savage a worn-out grand piano which he had bought for eighty francs.

A few days after making this generous present, De Tonnant went one morning to pay an early visit to the Patagonian. He found him sleeping peacefully with his wife inside the piano, from which he had carefully removed sounding-board, strings, etc., and which, thus transformed, constituted a not uncomfortable bedstead.

This may account for the final resting-place of old "grands," but what is the end of worn-out cottage pianos?

PART I.

It was nearly Christmas Eve. In the valley the light of the brief December day was already fading. Heavy clouds hung low, and shut out the view of the mountain peaks, and hastened the coming of the night. The dying of the day made but little difference to Ruth Rawson, as she gazed her way about her cottage, preparing the evening meal. A heavier darkness than that of the night--as darkness that was appalling--surrounded her, and was slowly shutting out the light. She was blind. At present she was in that state of helplessness where one sense is dying out, and the others are, as yet, unquicken to help supply its place. As she moved about performing her household duties she made many blunders and some of them were grave enough.

"I wish my little boy was here, she said plaintively, as the tears rose to her half sightless eyes.

She gazed her way to the door and listened for his coming, but it was not the light, springing footstep of her child she heard, but the heavy tread of men. Ruth Rawson turned pale as she listened, for she knew it was not friend or neighbor that was approaching. The sound of their feet had grown strange to her. The poor Mormon woman, on whom affliction had laid so heavy a hand, had incurred the displeasure of the church and had become in a manner ostracized. Some instinct within, vague in all but the terror it inspired, warned her of her fate. She retreated from the door, but with her wild eyes and frightened face turned toward it she waited tremulously. The heavy tread came nearer and nearer, came down the narrow garden path that led to the door, crossed the threshold, and entered the room. The men came in without any form of salutation, sternly as officers of justice might, and one of them began reading from a document which he held in his hand, the purport of which in her distraught state, she could but dimly gather. She had gone to a Gentile church, allowed her children, the children of a Mormon elder, to go to a Gentile Sunday-school. Being warned, she had again transgressed. There were many words, but that seemed the basis of the accusation.

Slowly and vaguely she understood that in the eyes of the church her crimes were manifold. She had disobeyed its commands; scorned its institutions, defied its power, and struck hands with its enemies, and for that, according to their righteous creed, the sufferings of her body must make atonement for the sins of her soul; that this was a form of arrest, and she was about to be carried away for punishment.

With her pale face bleached a ghastly white, trembling with terror from head to foot, she supported herself against a table near which she was standing, and listened to it all. She uttered not one word by way of answer. Dazed by her terror she did not move or stir. She looked at them silently when they were reading. The men looked at her, but for a moment, Armed with the dreadful power the represented, they said, "Come."

In instinctive obedience to this command, she moved from where she stood, but she did not go toward them, or for her old hat or shawl. She groped her way to the cradle where her baby lay. She knelt down by the crib, kissed it with a bursting heart. She had not found the God she had been seeking, and in this moment of supreme anguish, all within and without was the blackness of darkness. Kneeling there, she spread out her trembling hands and raised her half sightless eyes to heaven. Her darkened soul went out in a terrible cry, "O, God! if there is a God, have mercy on me!" One of the men whose heart was not all hardened yet, touched by the cry, came to where she knelt, and bending over her, said in a low voice, "The church is pitiful toward your infirmity. You will not be blood-stained. She did not comprehend what he was saying. She looked at him with wild eyes. "You have not hurt my little boy?" she said.

"He is safe and well," said the man. She looked at him with the great mother hunger in her eyes.

"He is my eyes, my feet," she tremulously faltered; he is everything to me. I cannot live without him." Softened still more by her look, the man said to soothe her, what he knew was false. "He shall be brought to see you, sometimes."

In speechless gratitude, as if the hope of heaven had been held out to her, the wretched mother took the hand that had been laid upon her shoulder and kissed it humbly; her tears fell fast and hot upon it. To this one of her captors who had shown himself kinder than the rest, she faltered forth a half formed prayer.

"My little children!" she moaned in an agony of supplication. The man looked away.

"The woman that is coming here," he said significantly, "will take care of them.

The poor woman understood intuitively, that back of the rejection of the Church, was the rejection, the final rejection, of the man she loved; that she had become too much of a drag upon him to be longer endured, and her home was needed for a third wife; but she made no reply. In obedience to a signal given by the man who had held out a hope dearer than life to her, she rose from her knees, donned her old shawl and bonnet, and moved toward the door. The men closed around her.

As she went silently out, she turned and gave one look at the home she was leaving, then the men closed the door upon her, and Ruth Rawson had looked her last upon her home, and the faces of her little children.

Chicago, Dec. 13, 1882.

Dear Mac:

It is some time since I have seen a copy of the News, owing to my migratory habits of late. I long to hear from that little green spot in Northwest Texas, and I long more to be there since the cold weather set in with such severity. Twenty-four degrees below zero is to much for a Texan, and almost drives one frantic.

Chicago is the same giant, busy, astonishing city that it has been so long. One tires of its whirl and if not cautious, becomes bewildered in its mazes. It is a city of churches and criminals; of science and suffering; of piety and prisons; of unmeasured wealth and untold wickedness; where all the languages and learning of the world are represented, and towards which the eyes of the nations are turned. Here one is alone in the throng with thousands. You do not know your next neighbor; indeed you have no neighbor. You are an atom of the mass, an unknown quantity in the problem of society. In this respect, life here and on Texas plains is not so dissimilar. Facilities for getting about the city are good, and the street cars run in every direction all day, and nearly all night. It is rather a cold mode of traveling, just now, but much better than none.

Business of all kinds, so far as I can learn, is prosperous. Every body is in a hurry and each is bound to make the most money.

Farm products are beginning to come to market, and as a consequence money is distributed through the country and the demand for seasonable goods is fair, and on the increase.

The city abounds with public institutions, some of which I will try to describe in my subsequent letters. Some of the ablest Scientific, Literary and Professional men of the age are now to be found in and about Chicago. To some of these I will hereafter allude.

St. Louis, Dec. 13.—An exciting scene occurred to-day during the taking of depositions in the civil suit of Mrs. Slayback, widow of the late Col. Slayback, against Colonel Cocke, of the Post-Dispatch. Frank Bowman, Mrs. Slayback's lawyer, insulted John M. Glover while the latter was testifying, and Glover caught Bowman by the throat. A fight followed, and Bowman was thrown to the ground. The affair caused intense excitement. The attempt to harrass Cocke by a civil action is reacting upon Mrs. Slayback's lawyers, and the quarrel among them has assumed a most disgraceful phase. To-day Bowman, with whom Seward declined to be associated in the civil suit, published a card in which he calls Seward a liar.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The heavy reductions in the estimates made by the House Appropriation Committee, as shown in the Post Office Appropriation bill, is causing much alarm among postal officials. It is said that under the meagre appropriations for star service it will be absolutely impossible to provide for extension, no matter how pressing the demand may be, for at least the first six months of the next fiscal year. The department, it is said, will be more or less at the mercy of the large contractors, who, well knowing the limited means at his disposal, can rest secure in the knowledge that it is impossible to forfeit contracts and award them to the next lowest bidders. Probably through inadvertance an old statute seems to have been taken as a guide for the construction of the bill, with the result of abolishing fourth-class matter and throwing merchandise and other mail matter formerly of that class into the first class at two cents for every half ounce.

Upward of 13,000,000 letters and postal cards are posted daily in the world. 3,418,000,000 letters are annually distributed in Europe, 1,346,000,000 in America, 76,000,000 in Asia, 30,000,000 in Australia, and 11,000,000 in Africa.

Washington Letter.

From Our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, December 12, 1882.

Wonders will never cease. Another Saturday has been devoted by Congress to a diligent days work. Democrats as well as Republicans seem to be possessed of the working mania, and so the two parties, acting together, have made a great stride with the regular business of the session.

A caucus of the Republicans was held Saturday for the purpose of taking counsel upon the civil service reform bill now under consideration in the Senate and it was decided to push the bill in that body. In pursuance of this decision, the Senate proceeded early on Saturday to take up this bill, and considerable discussion followed from senators of both parties. Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, expressed himself as not being a very ardent civil service apostle, and that he had no admiration for the bill. He farther said in was an effort of each party to cheat the other, and the end would be that both would be cheated. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, renewed his attack upon the bill. He said he believed that a change in the offices once in awhile from top to bottom purified the public service; he would not keep any trained band of officials in office, but would muster them out by brigades. He felt confident that the Democratic party contained plenty of men and women competent to fill the offices. He quoted the examples of Presidents Jefferson and Jackson, and contended that they were perfectly right in turning out men from office who would use their positions against the policy of the administration. The remarks of this last gentleman voices the opinions of the majority of his Democratic colleagues; yet seems strange to hear such opinions from gentlemen who were before the election such ardent followers of George William Curtis, the Pioneer Civil Service Reformer. On the Republican side of the question, the subject was tersely stated by Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, when he said he wanted a law that would relieve persons in government service of the necessity of running around every time a change was made in the head of a department or bureau to seek influence in keeping them in office.

The House has had under consideration for several days the Post Office Appropriation Bill, in which the clause relating to the reduction of postage is developing some opposition. But discussion on the bill will be ended to-day, when probably the bill will be passed. Last session the Senate openly blamed the House for the long session for the reason, as it said, that the House purposely held back the appropriation bills, and the speeches made in the Senate on this subject were circulated as campaign documents by the Democrats. So, in view of this accusation, the House has left the subject of civil service reform and reduction of taxat on for the Senate to debate over, and applied themselves to the regular appropriation bills. When the Senate passes the civil service bill, (which will be the early part of this week) that subject will receive elaborate consideration in the House, and a great diversity of opinions and prejudices will be expressed.

There is considerable difference of opinion in the two Halls of Congress relative to the holiday recess question. It has been the custom to adjourn from the 23rd, to the first week in January, but the Senate this year opposes such a long recess, and many Senators say that Congress can adjourn over Christmas and New Year's day, and this will be "enough." But the members of the House and especially those who were "left" at the late elections, and who are consequently now "disinterested spectators," will not consider this "enough" as many of them have made preparations to visit their homes, and if both houses agree to the proposition of the Senate they will be compelled to stay in Washington until they are released by the adjournment of Congress on the 4th of March.

This city without an investigation in progress is like the omission of Hamlet from the play. At present an investigation is being carried on by a citizen's vigilance committee relative to the too close and confidential business relations of thieves and government detectives. A number of citizens who had been robbed by thieves and burglars, and have since recovered their property by paying heavy rewards through the agency of detectives, have asked themselves why these thieves were never heard of or punished. Accordingly an investigation has been instituted to see if policemen and detectives are good for anything but petty go-between the street bandit and the citizen who have been spoiled of their goods. The investigation promises to be rank in developments, and, with the Star Route cases now on second trial, and the Dickson bribery case, to say nothing of Congress, will furnish something to write about.

Homer Mills has moved camp from McClelland Creek to the headquarter camp on Turkey Creek.

The young people engaged in a genteel hop Tuesday night in which all that took part enjoyed greatly.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Warren came in from the ranch on Tuesday in the evening to participate in the entertainment.

Dyspepsia, the insidious foe to health, disappears by using Dr. Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. At druggists.

Geo. A. Perkins, who is driving the Blanco stage, called on the News office and left substantial appreciation of the paper.

Mr. Wm. Leonard, of the Shue Bar Ranch, spent Christmas in Clarendon. We acknowledge a pleasant call from the above named affable gentleman.

The committee on Christmas Trees are to be complimented on their success in finding a nice specimen of tree for Christmas, the decoration of the same is equally deserving of praise.

J. D. Parks, Charly Beverly, L. Brendon, pulled out for camp Wednesday morning well satisfied with the way in which they had spent Christmas, turning with reluctance from the dissipations of the week.

All persons indebted to D. W. Van Horn & Co. at Fort Elliott, Moberly or Clarendon, are requested to call and settle accounts.

We wish to purchase a heavy stock of goods this fall and need our funds for this purpose.

The Sabbath School concert of Sunday night can be reckoned as being successful as any previous one. Owing to the lack of time to be given to its preparation on account of the coming Christmas, it could not be expected to be of extraordinary extent. However, the children supported their parts bravely and well making the meeting of interest to all, and betokens that future concerts will be looked forward to with interest.

To partially atone for our sins during the year now closing we wish to expose a fraud. We refer to the large packs of horse and cattle powders now sold. Sheridan's are absolutely pure and immensely valuable. This statement is true.

The weather is mild and pleasant and stockmen are resting easy with but little trouble from the drift. About an inch of snow fell Tuesday night and was followed by quite a severe cold spell with no wind and cattle remain in the breaks.

Several stockmen report a few cases of range cattle dying this week owing probably to the past severe weather and continued drifting causing weakness, the deaths have generally occurred among the northern strays.

S. V. Barton has been spending a few days in town taking in the Christmas festivities and lending valuable aid in the musical programme of the week.

Mr. I. B. Cartlich has been unacquainted with his stock this season. He has lost four calves this far. It is thought that heavy feeding of dry corn stalks is the cause of it.

"Jo," who is working in the White House, displays remarkable skill in the use of the viol and bow. He is the master of the notes and renders valuable aid in the musical part of our entertainments.

With Dimond Dyes any lady can get as good results as the best practical dyer. Every dye warranted true to name and sample.

Will Trumble was in town for a short stay this week. He came down on the Canadian with the LX on which he was in search of stray saddle horses. The boys have been camped several days on Salt Fork several miles above town.

A rifle match for the supper ticket came off Monday and was won by Geo. Osborn. Another match with six shooters Christmas day was a complete outfit of saddle, leggings, bridle and spurs was won by Charly Beverly.

Every truth has two sides; look at both before committing yourself to either. Kidney Work challenges the closest scrutiny of its ingredients, and its grand results. It has no taint of fear from truth. Doctors may disagree as to the best methods and remedies, for the cure of consumption and disordered liver and kidneys. But those that have used Kidney-Work agree that it is by far the best medicine known. Its action is prompt, thorough and lasting.

W. A. Allen, A. R. Carhart and W. T. Carhart expect to start for Fort Worth by private conveyance on or about the 1st of Jan. Mr. A. will go to Virginia to visit relatives and friends. Mr. A. R. Carhart will buy cattle to put on the Carver range, and W. T. Carhart goes to his home in St. Louis. The time of return is uncertain but is not far distant.

John Vance, Oak Ridge, Tenn., says: "Left prostrate and weak by fever, the only tonic that did me good was Brown's Iron Bitters."

An outfit, consisting of Homer Mills, Jim Ferguson and Ruf Chambers, started out this morning (Thursday) after a load of hay. Judging from the appearance of the outfit as they started out it is barely possible that they will be heard from before next year which fortunately is not far distant. As one of the party is intimately connected with the workings of the News office it is therefore wholly unnecessary to explain why we should be interested in that load of hay. However Ruf is a good rusler and through his individual efforts the boys may get in all right.

Harriet Jackson, Union City, Tenn., says: "I used Brown's Iron Bitters for weakness and loss of appetite and it relieved me."

It was with pleasure that we accepted an invitation to spend an evening with the boys Pemberton and Clarke at their camp at the mouth of Allan Creek, on the Bar O range. We found them located in the snuggest little cabin that we ever saw, and to say the least of the boys they are the neatest pair of old bachelors that it has been our lot to meet. From long experience in the culinary department the boys are enabled to dish up hash in the best of style and ought not to take a back seat for many of the cooks found among the gentler sex. If it is at all doubtful that the last statement is correct let some of the last named persons peep in on the boys. We spent the evening in pleasant chat and found that in that little cabin dwelt two as gentlemanly young men as we ever met, and who were up to the standard in their business. We returned to town by the light of early dawn well satisfied with a visit to the Texas Cow Camp.

Christmas.

The festivities, for which due preparation had been made during the week previous, were consummated Christmas night to the satisfaction and great pleasure of all tending. The Christmas Tree was tastefully and beautifully arranged and was well loaded with presents of every description for young and old. The supper in connection was conducted by the ladies and was given for the purpose of raising money with which to complete the purchase of the new church organ and was successful to that extent as to raise the required amount.

The ladies deserve great credit for carrying through the enterprise and the bonhomous and luxurious tables spoke for themselves. A large number were in attendance, the neighboring churches being well represented and the gentlemanly conduct of all favored the conducting of the exercises without a single accident to mar the proceedings. The exercises were opened with music, then came the supper after which music by children and choir, then came the distribution of the presents. M. J. J. Stanton was appointed to conduct the distributing and employing several assistants they were soon disbursed. Thus ended the most pleasant Christmas festivities that was ever witnessed at Clarendon.

D. W. Van Horn & Co. will close out all summer goods at cost from their stores at Fort Elliott, Moberly and Clarendon—to make room for a large fall and winter stock.

That model humorous paper, the Arkansas Traveler, deserves praise for waging war on pernicious literature of the Police Gazette kind, which is to-day, one of the greatest curses of the South. Says the Arkansas Traveler: Minds are perverted and morals of families are injured by its influence. The workers in the cause of temperance, who claim to have accomplished such great results, should remember that whisky is not so great an evil as pernicious literature. The State of Texas has forbidden its sale within her borders. Arkansas should follow the beneficial example. We can but hope that not only Arkansas, but Mississippi and all the rest of the Southern States will soon follow Texas' example.

A NEAT LITTLE TRICK. "Darling," she said, encircling his neck with a pair of plump arms, "Spring is here, and I want a new bonnet unutterably bad." "New bonnet," replied the brute; "bank the new bonnet—no spring togery this year, I'm expecting a heavy bill, on account of the billiousness of those two children. You'll have to do without a new bonnet." "But, sweetie, I cured Maud and Nellie with two boxes of Swayne's Pills; now can I have the bonnet?" "Oh, you tricky little wife, of course you can."

NERVOUS SIGHT WEAKNESS.—Very seldom has it been the enviable fortune of any medicinal preparation to be so widely noticed by the leading men of the country, as has been Dr. Humphreys' Homoeopathic Specifics for Ophthalmia and weak sight. Merit, rather than accident, has led to its popularity with these gentlemen, all have gained positive knowledge of its efficacy from personal experiment. Now that the season, of short days and long hours, spent under the tedious gas—glare is upon us, it is well for all afflicted with weak eyes to bestow proper attention upon them before it is too late. We quote the following outspoken sentiment from a recent issue of the Boston "Post": "It's of no use said Mr. — to the head of his Dept. 'I cannot collect my thoughts'. 'Nonsense" returned the chief, get Humphreys' Homoeopathic Specific for nervousness and all will be right in a few days. I have tried them—so has he.—You know he suffered several years from weak eyes, the result of previous disease. The ailment was such as to prevent him from attending to business, or even reading for any length of time. Soon he was afflicted with pains in the eyeballs and head—the letters running together and becoming blurred. He had used Old School medicine to no purpose, and had latterly done nothing—despairing of a cure. I persuaded him to try Dr. Humphreys' Homoeopathic Specific for Ophthalmia, No 18, and an immediate change for the better took place. After its use for a few weeks he could use his eyes moderately, and in one month was well as ever."

Stock Notes.

The members of the Kansas City Fat Stock Show Association held a meeting on the evening of the 14th. They have decided upon November 1st 8th, 1883, as the time for holding the next Fat Stock Show, at Kansas City.

The Texas Cattle Trade.

IT'S MAGNITUDE AND IMPORTANCE TO THE "LONE STAR" STATE.

Fort Worth [Texas] Live Stock Journal.

As many of the big cattle companies are publishing their reports of the year's business, and showing what dividends were declared, we will make a rough showing of what the State of Texas has done and what were the profits in growing cattle. We had at the commencement of the year 4,000,000 head of cattle worth $16 per head—$64,000,000.

We will market this year in round numbers 500,000 head of beefs. We drove to Kansas and other northern States 300,000 head of young steers; to New Mexico, Indian Territory and other States 50,000 making a total of $850,000 head of cattle exported, which should go to the credit of the producers as follows:
500,000 beefs sold @ $35 per head $17,500,000
300,000 young steers @ $16 per head 4,800,000
50,000 he and young stock @ $16. 800,000
$26,100,000 head of cattle sold, value $23,100,000
ANOTHER CREDIT.

Difference in value of 500,000 head of cattle in 1883 over value in 1882 16,000,000
Gross profit in 1882.....$39,100,000

Now if we deduct 10 per cent, for losses and expenses of raising cattle, we would be able to declare a net dividend of $57,290,000, of which $23,100,000 would be in cash and the balance in increased value of stock amounting to $4,190,000. This would give us a dividend on the $64,000,000 investment in January 1882, of a little more than 42 3/4 per cent. We reckon the value of stock cattle in January, 1883, at $20 per head, and the number of cattle about the same. As the above figures of cattle sold, show the actual export of the year, their values must show the profits to producers. The total exports of the State only amount for the year to $60,100,000, of which cotton exported is valued at $59,000,000; cattle $23,100,000; sheep and wool $7,000,000; horses, $1,000,000 total value of exports, $90,100,000, of which the live stock trade produced more than one-third. As the wealth of the country can only be determined by the surplus of its productions that can be sold to non residents, we claim that more than one-third of the wealth of the State is derived from its stock interests.

The Digestibility of Oysters.

Scientific American.

Why oysters should be eaten raw is explained by Dr. William Roberts in his lecture on "Digestion." He says that the popular judgment upon matters of diet is usually trustworthy. The fawn colored mass, which is the delicious portion of the fish, is its liver, and is simply a mass of glycogen. Associated with the glycogen, but withheld from actual contact with it during life, is its appropriate digestive ferment—the hepatic diastase. The mere crushing of the oyster between the teeth brings these two bodies together, and the glycogen is at once digested without any other help than the diastase. The raw, or merely warmed, oyster is self-digestive. But the advantage of this provision is wholly lost by cooking; for the heat immediately destroys the associated ferment, and a cooked oyster has to be digested, like any other food, by the eater's own digestive powers.

"My dear sir, do you want to ruin your digestion?" asked Professor Houghton of Trinity College one day of a friend who had ordered brandy and water with his oysters in a Dublin restaurant.

Then he sent for a glass of brandy and a glass of Guinness's XX, and put an oyster in each. In a very short time there lay in the bottom of the glass of brandy a tough, leathery substance resembling the finger of a kid glove, while in the porter there was hardly a trace of the oyster to be found.
