Carcinosis may be found in many areas, but is most often found in Stomach, Rectum, Liver, Uterus, Ovary, Breast, Prostate Gland and Pancrease.

Sarcosis, another form of cancer, apparently is the result of the toxins inflaming the tissue cells until they begin an abnormal growth, which soon breaks down into a pathological state. Some of the toxins spread via the blood and lymph streams to other organs and glands from the original location.

Frequent sites for Sarcosis is small intestines, liver, pancrease, spleen, brain, spinal corn, and the large joints.

Both of these diseases can be detected with the vibratory rate dial measured and localized on the Radioclast

CLEARS UP MYSTERY

This column recently carried a tory of an alligator which inhabits Pecan Bayou, near Brownwood, in West Texas. Alligators are common enough in deep east Texas, but few have ever been seen in west Texas. Now comes word from Mr. L. E. Mannering of Colorado City, Texas, which may clear up the mystery of the Pecan Bayou resident, which, is incidentally, about six feet long. According to Mr. Mannering, a patent medicine manufacturing company sent an uncle of his, Mr. B. G. Lindley, a small alligator. That was twenty-five years ago. Mr. Lindley kept the reptile for several days. Then it escaped. The Lindley drug store was only a few hundred yards from Pecan Bayou. It is entirely possible the 'gator is the same one which is frequently

WARDEN SAVES FISH FROM SNAKE

A fairly big bass may still be alive today and growing to a size where it will give some fisher-man a lot of sport because a game warden came along just after a huge water moccasin caught the fish and started swallowing it.

Working a stream near Temple, the warden came upon a huge snake well up on a bank. The snake had evidently worked itself up on the bank after catching the fish. The warden, unable to reach the snake because of over-hanging branches, shot the reptile twice before it released the fish. The finny one worked its way back to the water and swam off. "That was the only time I ever needed my gun in all the years I have been with the Game Department," the warden said in reporting the affair.

Mrs. J. O. Quattlebaum Jr. re-turned from Galveston Friday where she had been with a daughter and her husband, and whose babe had been ill. It is much improved, she says.
