The woman describes carnival living as being the best of travel and the best of having a home. Most of those operating the different components of the carnival have mobile homes or trailers in which they live. In some towns, the visiting "carnies" are even able to hook up to cable television.

Aero-Span coming along

If new ideas provide solutions to said. old problems, the mind of Bill Fly is a virtual breeding ground for potential solutions. Within the next 60 days, Hereford and Deaf Smith County should begin experiencing the benefits of one of Fly's new ideas. Construction is progressing on an innovative cattle feed processing plant being built by Aero-Span Feeders, Ltd. Fly is the managing general partner for Aero-Span.

"If something don't bend or give, we'll be ready (in 60 days)," Fly

The construction and organization of any manufacturing facility is complicated and difficult. This is especially true for Aero-Span Feeders as they construct a newly developed grain processing system.

Although equipment has been built to process samples used in feed commercial cattle feeders. testing, no commercial facility exists. Without a working facility on which to base construction, engineers are frequently designing

When you have to build things to build things, it takes time," Fly

The feed processing system being constructed by Aero-Span is unlike any currently in use. Fly believes that his method will be the long-sought solution allowing widespread use of grain sorghum by "The milo (grain sorghum) situation in our cattle industry has been on and off for 20 years. Maybe this will finally be the way (for wide-spread sorghum use)," said Fred Lookingbill, manager of L.N. Feeders, 11 miles west of Dimmitt.

L.N. Feeders is one of several yards waiting for Aero-Span to begin production. Lookingbill hopes that the new method will solve many of the problems associated with using grain sorghum.

"We'll know after we've fed it awhile," he said.

Steam flaking is currently the most common method of processing feed grain for commercial cattle feeders. This method uses steam to heat and increase the moisture content of the grain and then processes the kernel through a system of rollers.

Corn has proven to be the most practical grain to be processed by steam flaking, limiting the use of cheaper sorghum. As of Thursday afternoon, market price for corn was $4.35 per hundred weight in contrast to $3.85 per hundred weight for grain sorghum.

Cattle feeders hope Fly's innovative system can lead to more widespread use of the cheaper grain

'We've known for 75 years that it's (nutritionally) better to feed mixtures of grains," Fly said.

He advocates that cattle feeders can benefit from feeding both steam flaked corn and Aero-Span milo. Each grain contains different nutritional benefits. Feeding a mixture of the two improves the nutritional range of livestock feed.

Despite its many attributes, including requiring less irrigation water to grow, grain sorghum has its problems as a cattle feed. The tough exterior that makes the tiny grain highly efficient as a seed also makes it difficult to digest as a feed.

According to the National Research Council, corn, when fed as an unprocessed grain, is more efficient than grain sorghum as a Unprocessed corn has 90 (see FLY, Page 2A) percent total digestible nutrients (TDN), and sorghum has only 84 percent TDN. When steam flaked, corn has a 95 percent TDN and milo has 92 percent TDN.

According to a study conducted by Dr. David P. Hutcheson of the Texas A & M Research Center, the Aero-Span processing method increases grain sorghum's TDN to 97.11 percent.

Fly, an accomplished engineer and inventor, has developed a system which increases milo digestibility through a germination process. The closest existing method to Aero-Span's system is that used in the malting of barley for the brewing of beer.

In malting, the germination of the grain is allowed to continue in order to provide the flavor for beer. The Aero-Span method terminates seed germination at the point where grain is at its most digestible.

The creative development of Aero-Span's processing system has benefited from Fly's varied engineering background. A process used to control the pH (acidity or alkalinity level) of the germinating seed is an outgrowth of a method he utilized while mining uranium in Controlling the pH levels cuts approximately 24 hours off the feed processing time, Fly said.

Once initial construction is completed, Aero-Span predicts a production of approximately 200 tons of livestock feed per day. The partnership's plans include an eventual expansion to a production of 3,000 tons per day.

Thanks to whale adoptions, the Massachusetts-based International Wildlife Coalition, which monitors several endangered species, has grown from three employees in 1983 to 22 now. In the past year, the group sent out 86,000 humpback whale adoptions for $15 each, 50,000 of which were Christmas gifts.

"Our files grow faster than we can keep up with," says coalition official Margaret King. "People will send it as a gift to someone else - it's a great stocking stuffer. And it crosses all barriers and countries. We have people in Saudi Arabia, France, Australia who have adopted whales."

Sixty-six humpback whales that migrate yearly to the Cape Cod area can be adopted. Individual whales are identified by unique white and gray marks on their tails, so foster parents receive a photograph of their whale's tail as it breaches the water.

"We really get cute letters from kids wanting to know if the whale will fit in their bathtub or do they have to build a pool," King says. Schoolchildren are a lucrative market for environmental adoptions, and many organizations gear their updates to children, who learn about not only different species of birds and animals but also environmental sensitivity.

For those who have more time than cash, however, there are adoption programs eager to capitalize on sweat equity.

On their 50th wedding anniversary last September, Gregory and Novaes Gregg of Clear Lake, Texas, picked up the garbage on their adopted mile of beach on Padre Island as part of the state's biannual beach cleanup.

"America was beautiful when we got married, and here we are 50 years later just trying to keep it that way,' says Mrs. Gregg, 70.

Within six months after the Texas General Land Office began the program in 1986, all 172 miles of accessible beach in the state were adopted by 30,000 "weekend warriors" who have picked up 1,055 tons of garbage, says official Jeff

Long.

"Our cleanup program is like a virus; it's very infectious," he says. "Some 25 states are now doing beach cleanups of some sort, and many of those are modeled after our program.

The program's real punch has been in determining the source of the garbage. Each piece of trash is cataloged by volunteers, and that information has been used to enact legislation to stop the polluters.

Government agencies may require a person's Social Security number only if there is a law or regulation which either orders or authorizes them to do so. Chew falling out of favor

EDITOR'S NOTE - Unlike the European gentry of another century who put pinches of snuff to their noses to exact refreshing sneezes, people who chew tobacco often suffer social snubs. OWENSBORO, Ky. (AP) Chewing tobacco is like picking the banjo, they say around here, a peculiarly American practice.

So while cigarette manufacturers are battling declining sales in the United States by opening new markets in Asia and the Third World, the producers of smokeless tobacco still must look to the homefolks.

Luther Pittman, executive vice president of operations for Pinkerton Tobacco Co. in Owensboro concedes today's chewing tobacco market is "a mature industry." He should know. He grew up on a tobacco farm in North Carolina and has worked in the tobacco business for 41 years. "The only way we're going to get a lot of growth will be getting business from our competition," says Pittman, whose company for more than 100 years has been producing chewing tobacco with names like Red Man, Spark Plug, Day's Work, Brown's Mule and A Man's Chew.

"Of course, they're trying to do the same thing."

That's not to say everybody has quit chewing and spitting.

Despite the repeated warnings about the dangers of tobacco, Americans still poked more than 64 million pounds of loose-leaf chew into their cheeks last year, not counting the hard plugs of chewing tobacco.

Production of all smokeless tobacco products - which includes snuff declined from 133.7 million pounds in 1985 to 125.5 million pounds in 1986, and slipped another 3.2 percent in 1987, according to figures compiled by John Maxwell of Wheat First Securities in Richmond, Va.

"It goes OK on the playing field, but it doesn't go over too well in the office," he says.

But even that wad in the jaw of a baseball player these days is likely to be bubble gum. And who's seen a spittoon in service lately? Pinkerton's research indicates people who chew are mostly bluecollar males, with use pretty well spread among people 25 to 55 years of age, Pittman says.

'We had always looked at our customers as being farmers, construction people, miners - people who use both hands in working," Pittman says. "It's easier for them to chew tobacco than it is to smoke."

But the market may be changing slightly. Recent company surveys show 20 percent of smokeless tobacco users have household incomes of more than $50,000, he says.

The Pinkerton Tobacco Co. is a privately held subsidiary of The Pinkerton Group of Richmond, which is owned by Swedish Tobacco Co. in Stockholm.

Maxwell's figures indicate Pinkerton's biggest competitor for loose-leaf customers is Conwood Co L.P. based in Memphis, Tenn., which makes Levi Garrett.

Levi Garrett edged slightly ahead of Red Man in 1988, Maxwell says, selling 17.95 million pounds to Red Man's 17.75 million pounds.

Pinkerton employs 520 workers at its plant in western Kentucky, where it makes 14 brands of plug chewing tobacco, seven brands of loose-leaf and nine brands of pipe tobacco.

The fragrant smell of tobacco fills the packing room floor at the Owensboro plant. Even ardent tobacco opponents probably would have to admit the place smells wonderful.

But while the fragrance is allowed to linger, scraps are not. As workers run machinery and oversee packing operations, others sweep up loose pieces of tobacco.

"People who come in here say they're utterly amazed at how clean it is," Pittman says. "But we're manufacturing a product people use orally. We've got to keep it clean."

Heading a company that makes tobacco products isn't a problem for Pittman.

"I've literally been in tobacco all my life," he says.

"I use all forms of tobacco. The One reason for chewing tobacco's only answer I can give is I'm working in an industry that manufactures and sells a perfectly legitimate, legal product supporting consumer demand.

"Tobacco has paid an awful lot of bills since the Revolution and even before."

After the 1980 census, the government estimated that there were 2.57 million people in the United States illegally. There were other guesses, some of them far higher. The government made no attempt to count them out in the redistricting process; indeed, the two previous administrations decided that the Constitution required that the census cover illegal aliens along with citizens.

There is not likely to be any change in that prior to the 1990 census next spring. The Senate has passed an immigration bill including an amendment that would cut illegal aliens from the redistricting numbers, but it is not likely to clear Congress before the next year's national head

Sen. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., proposed, and won, the immigration bill amendment that is supposed to exclude illegal aliens from the redistricting process. It would give Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher the assignment of adjusting the census figures so that illegal aliens don't count for purposes of redistributing House seats. It does not come with instructions, so the department would have to figure out how.

Shelby's amendment says only that the secretary is to "make such counted as a person and who, if adjustments in total population figures anybody, should not. But there's as may be necessary, using such methods and procedures as the secretary determines feasible and in effect, invited the Supreme Court appropriate" to keep illegal aliens to decide whether it was right or from being counted in congressional reapportionment.

That task would be perilous arithmetic of congressional reappor-politically, since it would involve taking House seats away from some states and giving them to others, all on the basis of estimates. With 435 seats The point at issue in Senate debate in the House, every representative gained by a state is a representative

Neither the original article nor the amendment mentions citizenship in connection with apportionment, although the term "citizens" is used in some other provisions. Opponents of the amendment said that showed the authors of both documents wanted everybody counted for purposes of apportionment.

He said it is unfair to count illegal aliens in reapportionment. "It just does not make any sense," Dole said. "It does violate the constitutional principle of one man, one vote."

But opponents of the Shelby measure said apportionment doesn't involve who votes and who doesn't. Women couldn't vote when the Constitution and the 14th Amendment were adopted, but they always were counted. Children can't vote, but they

I am hooked on talk radio. Many stations around the country have gone to 24-hour talk. If they are talking I am listening. I do not know why I listen but I do.

One thing is evident, if people are given the chance to call in and be on the radio they will call. It does not matter what the show is discussing, the calls come. I guess we are all dying to either be heard or at least hear

Radio talk is better than the talk formats on television. T.V. seems to think every talk show should have a group of folks sitting in chairs and interrupting each other. I can stand this stuff just long enough to flip the channel. No one ever gets to finish a sentence, much less make a point.

The worst of this experience in argumentation is the program called Cross Fire. They have a conservative and a liberal who spar a few rounds on a regular basis. Neither of these guys has ever said anything. The only thing to be learned on this show is how to be rude and get paid for it.

After a few months of flipping the channels to get away from the arguments and listening to endless phone-ins on the radio, I have decided we are all mouth. Everyone knows what is wrong with the whole world, but no one seems to be doing anything to correct the situations.

I don't want to hear anymore folks who think they have done something when they figure out who to blame. We don't need any more blamers, we need some solvers.

Early in my pastoring I was one of the great problem mentioners. I knew what was wrong and thought I had done my job when I had told the folks all about it. One Sunday afternoon a very intelligent man came to my office and said, "Preacher, you are right. Now tell me what I need to do to make changes."

Don't pick up hitchhikers! In many states the note that comes with your driver's license warns: "Don't pick up hitchhikers."

For any motorist to pick up any stranger along the way is "highway roulette" and experience teaches the more attractive she is, the more dangerous.

Much of our nation's topheavy government extravagance results from overfat spending legislation.

Because on its way through Congress the most essential bill is likely to pick up an overload of "hitchhikers."

Part of the reason that Americans have tolerated this mischief for so many generations is the fact that the process has never been explained in shirtsleeve English.

Each of the last nine Presidents has pleaded for approval of a "line-item veto" and 99.44 percent of Americans had no idea what they were talking

So vital legislation continues, on its way through Congress, to pick up a bunch of unworthy

"Line-item veto." That would give any president the right to veto any portion of legislation that comes to his desk. He could say no to extravagances a line at a time without vetoing the entire Presently a president has no choice. If he receives from Congress an urgent piece of legislation that must be signed promptly, it's likely the president will also be forced thus to approve a bunch of parasitic extravagances.

Individual self-serving members of Congress are able to sneak aboard money for military trucks the Pentagon does not want and anthracite coal it does not need; money for cranberry research; it wouldn't be too surprising if they approved money for helping people sell wildflowers.

And it's your money they are throwing around on nonessentials

In fiscal year 1990 our federal overnment will take in $83.8 billion in new tax revenues. That is income our government has never had before. And still there is going to be a huge budget deficit.

Former President Reagan has stated repeatedly that we do not have a national deficit because we don't tax our people enough; we have a national deficit be-

we have a national deficit because Congress spends too much.

And much of that spending is fat that hitchhikes through the legislative process.

Mr. Reagan dares any Congress to bring the line-item veto to a vote. No congressman would dare vote against it. Yet not enough members are willing to forgo this sneaky device to bring it to the floor. They prefer to continue to use this play to pay off some favored friends—with your money.

increase would reduce consumption of gasoline and, hence, our need to import foreign oil. Obviously, that would also help reduce our trade

But the best of the "good" reasons they offer for raising the gasoline tax is that it would produce additional revenue which Congress would presumably use to reduce the federal budget deficit.

Of course, the "real" reason Congress wants to raise the gasoline tax is to fund more federal spending programs. The prime directive of Congress is, and has always been, to take money from everybody to spend on a favored few. This spending compulsion is one of the least attractive aspects of democratic government, and one we must be ever vigilant to resist.

To help Congress resist this particular temptation, I hereby offer some "good" reasons why raising the gasoline tax is a bad idea. First, and most obvious, it would be inflationary. It isn't just a matter of socking it to consumers at the pump. Much of what we consume is transported by truck, and transportation costs are factored into the price. A higher gasoline tax would reverberate through our economy like a shotgun blast in Grand Canyon.

In addition, a higher gasoline tax is unlikely to have much impact upon consumption or oil imports. Most driving is essential. People have to go to work every day regardless of what gasoline costs. Very little gasoline use is truly

And of course it should go without saying that additional revenues derived from a higher gasoline tax would not be used for eficit reduction. Since World War II, every dollar in higher taxes has led to $1.58 in additional spending. Ergo, a higher gasoline tax would make the federal deficit larger, not

But those are all good reasons and like I said, elected politicians are more interested in "real" rea-sons. So I suggest the following

"real" reason for Congress to leave the gasoline tax alone. A recent

Australians view cattle operations

Australians view cattle

By ORVILLE HOWARD Special Feature Writer

More cattle will be finished for slaughter in 1989 in a 10-mile radius of Hereford than in the entire country of Australia.

This was the consensus of three livestock marketing agents from Australia during an area tour last week.

David O'Sullivan, Mick Browne and Ron Miller saw more beef cattle on feed in the Deaf Smith County area in one day than will be fed in one year in the Australian cattle country.

"You just don't see anything like that in Australia," said Browne as he looked at a pen of Choice blacks ready for marketing. "Many of our cattle feeding pens are a whole lot like the ones we're seeing here but our cattle don't come out looking or having the quality that we're seeing here."

Browne explained that most of the feedyard cattle in Australia go in at about 2 1/2 years of age. "There was a time a few years ago when the cattle went into the feedlots at all ages, from 3-5 years of age," Browne said. "But now, very few of these older animals are grain fed in the feedlots, but you do see a big feeding of bullocks."

The three marketing agents are all auctioneers for Dalgety Winchcombe FGC, which is the second-largest marketing firm on the continent with markets in 80 locations. The Hereford visit was part of a 30-day worldwide tour of the international beef industry, going to Tokyo after their Texas visit.

When they left Australia their first stop was England, where they were guests in Hereford.

"It's really something to say you've been in two towns by the name of Hereford in different countries on the same trip," said O'Sullivan. "we ate dinner in Hereford, England, just a few days ago and here we are enjoying a fine steak in Hereford, Texas.'

The agents also attended the Calgary Stampede and participated in the annual International Auctioneer Contest. Before coming to Hereford last Wednesday, they viewed some large Limousin cow herds in eastern Colorado and were planning to look at some Santa Gertrudis herds in South

"We're very concerned on what the Japanese are doing," said O'Sullivan, who pointed out that Japanese investors have made big inroads into the Australian meat packing industry in recent years. "You might say we welcomed them with open arms a few years ago when they took over a couple of our larger (packing plants). We were thinking of the increased beef exports to Japan, but now it seems they are marketing more than 50 percent of their Australian beef back to the Australian consumers."

Browne said that, initially, the Japanese wanted only English-breed cattle for better marbling.

"Now, you can go look at what's born in 1626. going into their (plants) and see probably more than 50 percent Brahmas or Brahma-cross," Browne

It's believed that Japanese investors now either own or control at least 10 percent of the Australian fed-beef production at the slaughterhouse level, with some acquisitions believed to have been made at the production

Australia and the United States have been strong contenders for the relatively new, and lucrative, Japanese beef market. While touring Japan a year ago, U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D-Texas) estimated that the oriental market had an annual potential of $3 billion for the U.S. beef industry which is now also supplying live feeder cattle directly to Japanese feedyards. .

Australia now has an estimated cattle population of 22 million, with about 9 million head marketed annually for meat. Of that marketing number, only around 350,000 will be sold as grain-fed cattle. The balance will have eaten nothing but forages since being weaned at about nine months. Most production is ear-marked for exports and sold at auction.

While visiting the Panhandle, the visitors were impressed by the quality and high concentration of feeder cattle. Nelson said there are only four feedyards in Australia with a 30,000hed-or-greater capacity. Capacity then dips to a few with 10,000-15,000 head, and then to those in the 4,000-5,000 head range.

In the Deaf Smith-Castro-Parmer county triangle, there were 1.6 million head of cattle finished in 1988 for a gross value of more than $1.3 billion. More than 6 million head of cattle will be grain-fed for slaughter this year in the High Plains area.

Max Carpenter of Amarillo, a lifelong Texas cattleman, was host for the Australians. Their stops included the Texas Cattle Feeders Association headquarters in Amarillo, stops at the Seven X Cattle Feeders, Cattle Town and Bar-G Feedyard, all in the Hereford area, a drive-by of other feedlots, and the Holly Sugar plant

Dodgers 7, Pirates 3

Fernando Valenzuela overcame early wildness that included four walks in one inning to pitch Los Angeles Dodgers to a split of its doubleheader with Pittsburgh.

Valenzuela, 5-9, checked the Pirates on four hits over seven innings and Jay Howell picked up his 18th save in 20 opportunities. Mike Marshall hit his first home run since April 16th in the second, starting a string of five onerun innings against Neal Heaton, 1-7.

In the opener, John Smiley, 8-5, pitched a five-hitter. He also hit a twoout, three-run double in the bottom of the seventh when Kal Daniels fell down on Smiley's routine fly to left, making the score 4-1. Tim Belcher, 6-9, allowed a leadoff homer to Barry Bonds, his 13th, in the first inning.

Baugh remembers career highlights

ASPERMONT, Texas (AP) -Sammy Baugh has just about every honor he can have now.

Recently he was named first-string quarterback on a 75-year, all-time Southwest Conference Team.

He is in the Pro Football Hall of He is in the College Football Hall of Fame, the Texas Sports Hall of He has been on the All-American team, the all-National Football League

He played for a national college championship team at Texas Christian University and for a world championship professional team, the Washington Redskins. All this from someone who failed to make all-state in high school, or even all-district at Newman High School in Sweetwater.

"Heck, I wasn't even the best player on our team," Baugh said.
"(The late) Red Sheridan was."

Baugh, who was 75 years old March 21, is considered by many as one of the best football players ever. But he insists he liked baseball more than football.

"That was what I really wanted to do when I graduated from college, play professional baseball," he said.

Baugh signed a contract with the St. Louis Cardinals after Rogers Hornsby saw him play in a semipro tournament in Denver in 1937. But he never really got to show his stuff for a couple of reasons: He was playing out of position, and he was still recovering from a football injury.

"I didn't even wait around to see my grades (at Texas Christian University) after my senior year," he recalls. "I went up to Borger to play on a semipro team, and the team went to Denver for the tournament.

"I was a third baseman - I had never played any other position in my life - but our team had just signed a former major league third baseman, so they put me at shortstop."

After the tournament, which Hornsby scouted, "He signed me up and told me to report to Sarasota, Fla. They still had me down as a shortstop, because that's all Hornsby saw me play, and he assumed that was my natural position." There was a problem. In what used Oldsmobile Scramble slated for

Aug. 20 The 1989 Stevens Oldsmobile Scramble has been scheduled at Pitman Municipal Golf Course for Aug. 20 with tee times starting at 9 a.m., it was announced this week by Pro Brent Warner. The winning team for the local event will qualify for the sectional tourney to be held at Lakeridge Country Club in Lubbock Sept. 5. Sectional winners will advance to national final tournaments. Entry fee for the Hereford tourney is $25. Gren fees and carts are additional. A new Oldsmobile is offered for the first hole-in-one

Teams will be formed this year by using the Oldsmobile Scramble handicap system. The new system ranks players from plus 4 to minus four, depending on his home course handicap. A team's handicap may total no less than plus one or no more than plus eight. Only one team member may have a handicap of nine or less.

The handicap system and other entry information is available at the pro shop from Brent Warner; or golfers can contact Jerry Stevens at Stevens Oldsmobile.

It had not healed fully by the next spring baseball training season and Baugh could hardly swing a bat, he

But perhaps the underlying problem was another kid the Cardinals were developing at shortstop - a fellow named Marty Marion, who is now in the Baseball Hall of Fame.

'Marion was a few years younger than I was - he was about 17 -and good. I saw that I would never beat him out, never play for the Cardinals, Baugh laughed.

Neither were the chances good for Baugh switching back to his favorite position, third base. The Cardinals had a pretty fair third baseman named Pepper Martin, and a guy named Whitey Kurowski waiting in the wings. Martin and Kurowski were also stars of that era.

Consequently, the Washington Redskins got themselves a quarterback.

There have been many highs and a few lows in Sammy Baugh's football life, the lows including playing on one of the worst teams he said he ever saw, the 1930 Temple High School Wildcats, which was nearly all-9th-

Another low, perhaps the lowest, was the 1940 NFL championship game, in which the Chicago Bears defeated Baugh's Redskins 73-0, just three weeks after Washington had beaten Chicago, 7-3.

The Redskins got revenge two years later, beating Chicago for the NFL championship.

That was Baugh's second national championship. In 1935, his TCU Horned Frogs and rival Southern Methodist University were undefeated and untied going into their oncetraditional last-game-of-the-season meeting.

"SMU beat us 19-14 and won a trip to the Rose Bowl, and we were invited to the Sugar Bowl. Stanford beat SMU 7-0 in the Rose, and we beat Louisiana State University (which was ranked

When the polls came out after the bowl games, TCU had been voted No. 1 in the nation.

Baugh went to TCU not on a football scholarship but on a baseball scholarship.
"We played all sports in those days," he said, "football, baseball, and basketball. But baseball was always my favorite." He got his start in organized sports in Temple, where he played his first high school football. His family had moved there from the family farm in Bell County when Baugh was 5 or 6 years old.

"I was an end, but our coach, Bill Henderson - you might remember him; later he was basketball coach and athletic director at Baylor - switched me to the backfield. He said I was the only one on the team who could throw a ball." That was in 1930.

Baugh refuted a longstanding piece of Sweetwater football lore that his father had been offered a good job in Sweetwater because he had this tall,

"No, remember that was during the Depression, when things were tough, and a man did whatever he had to do to make a living. My daddy moved from the farm to take a job with Santa Fe (Railroad) in town. Then he got bumped by someone with more seniority. Daddy then bumped someone down in Somerville, and we moved. Then he bumped someone in Sweetwater, and we moved there.'

The Sweetwater (then Newman High School) Mustangs had some pretty good teams in those 1931 and 1932, with Red Sheridan and Baugh teaming up in the backfield and helping tear up some good West Texas teams.

One of those defeated by Baugh, Sheridan and Co. was Big Spring. "You know," said Baugh, "I think that bunch in Big Spring was the best high school football team I ever saw. When we played them, in bi-district, they had scored something like 373 points and given up zero - none.

'I can't remember the exact score -21-14, 14-7, something like that - but we beat them. We won the district championship and played Amarillo the next week and lost 7-0 in a blizzard."

Baugh played halfback on offense and defensive back - everyone played both ways in those days - for the Mustangs, but halfback didn't have quite the same meaning then as it does now.

In the single- and double-wing formations, the tailback and fullback carried the ball more of the time and did most of the passing. The halfback was primarily a blocker, although he did get his hands on the ball now and Thus Baugh's football career appeared to have been over when he headed to TCU on the baseball scholarship.

At Texas Christian, Baugh decided that, as long as he was there he might as well play some football, too. But TCU put him at quarterback, and Baugh was named all-American on both offense and defense.

TCU football was "just hanging on" financially in those days, he said. But good teams and national championships will fill stadium seats and had the pleasant choice between professional baseball and football.

When Washington signed Sammy Baugh, they got a quarterback, defensive back, punter and placekick holder, the latter a story in itself.

Baugh began playing pro football in 1937 and played through the 1952 season, but he thought seriously of giving it up during World War II. He was not drafted by the U.S. Army because of his agricultural deferment by now, he was a rancher - but he thought he had had enough.

After the 1942 season, when the graduated from high school, and he Redskins expunged that 73-0 loss to the Bears in the 1940 and had whipped Chicago for the championship, Baugh came home to his spread, located in Stonewall County virtually at the base of the Double Mountains.

> He set numerous Redskins and NFL passing records, as a T-formation quarterback, all of which have since been broken.

He also set NFL punting records that still stand. He holds the career punting mark of nearly 45 yards a anywhere, and the program survived. try, and the single-season record of

NFL's rebel owners continue Finks hijinks

By DAVE GOLDBERG AP Sports Writer

AP Sports Writer
SCHAUMBURG, Ill. (AP) - If he hasn't demonstrated it before, Jim Finks has now shown he has the stuff to be NFL commissioner.

Having had his life put in limbo two weeks ago by 11 owners who want a larger say in the future of the league, the president of the New Orleans Saints showed up at Tuesday's league meeting in good spirits.

He entered the session - called to discuss the new international football league - with a smile on his face, greeting a few reporters but saying nothing of substance. A couple of hours later, he came out smiling and said to the cameras that clustered around:

"A terse no comment."

Is there any other candidate with a similar sense of satire? Is there any other candidate who can retain his composure while dealing with the anarchy that has beset the NFL?

Consider what the new commissioner faces:

- A dissident "New Guard" which includes Joe Robbie, 73; Hugh Culverhouse, 70; Robert Irsay and Bud Adams, each 66, and Ken Behring, 60. All but Adams, who was absent, were among those who blocked Finks' election two weeks ago, denying him the 19 votes he needs.

- A "New Guard," which appoints as two of its negotiators Behring and Dallas' Jerry Jones, who have each been in the league less than a year. Another is Denver's Patrick Bowlen, who alienated most of the other owners by pushing through an 80-man training camp roster to save money, then making an offer to Buffalo's Bruce Smith a day later for $7.5 million over five years.

- A dissident group whose most ambitious member, San Francisco's Edward DeBartolo Jr., shows up only for a meeting of the antis and leaves before the regular league meeting begins. Another "leader," Norman Braman of Philadelphia, considers the session so important that he is spending the time in the south of Errance

In fact, the existence of the group at all is due in part to personal squabbles.

Tampa's Culverhouse, for example, was one of the most powerful owners in the league until a few months ago, when he surrendered his league chores in a huff. He is angriest at three members of the commissioner search committee - Art Modell of Cleveland, Wellington Mara of the New York Giants and Dan Rooney of Pittsburgh because he thinks they were critical of his role as chairman of the NFL Management Council during the 1987 players strike.

Otherwise, the main gripe of the dissenters - and the most legitimate - is that no new owners were included on the commissioner selection committee that included Modell, Mara, Rooney, Robert Parins of Green Bay, Ralph Wilson of Buffalo and Lamar Hunt of Kansas City.

The most comical aspect of all this may be the emergence of Jones, who made his mark on the NFL his first day in it by firing Tom Landry, the league's most respected coach.

Jones, who has all of three months experience in the NFL, has suddenly become a spokesman for the dissidents. Asked about the chances of Finks, who has spent 30 years turning weak teams into strong ones, he patronizingly replied:

"Mr. Finks is certainly a strong candidate."

In fact, at the meetings the past two days the "New Guard" was a study in confusion.

Ten members met at a downtown Chicago club Monday night and pronounced themselves solid, including as their 11th Victor Kiam of New England. An hour earlier, Kiam had said "I'm not the member of any dissident group."

When they returned, five of the dissidents gave four different versions of what they want, DeBartolo, for example, said they had a position paper to give the search committee; Minnesota's Mike Lynn, the most credible and most experienced of the group, said there was no such paper.

On Tuesday, after some dissidents met with outgoing Commissioner Pete Rozelle to discuss the situation, Lynn and Jones would say there were "ongoing discussions." Of what? They wouldn't say although Jones volunteered the astounding news that "I think we'll elect a new commissioner at some point."

In fact, the most illuminating comment Tuesday may have come from Kiam, who has sold razors from Manhattan to Moscow. During the talks about the international league, he was asked for the reasons to put teams in Europe.

Presently, in terms of planted acreage, Texas ranks third nationally in vegetable crop production. About 260,000 acres of these crops directly contribute an estimated $450 million to the state's annual income, with an economic impact of more than $1 billion.

Historically, Texas has emphasized fresh market vegetable production, with about 90 percent of the state's vegetable acreage allocated to the fresh market. More than 20 vegetables make up this category. Rising production costs, labor shortages, fluctuations in market availability and the perishability of fresh produce help provide incentives for expansion of the state's vegetable-processing industry.

In addition, the nearly year-round production of several vegetable crops and geographical advantages make Texas an attractive area for expansion or relocation of processing facilities. Although geographic and climatic factors encourage yearround vegetable production, these same environmental conditions often create severe production problems, poor quality and low yields. The Texas vegetable industry, as with most other state agricultural industries, has undergone some difficult times in recent years. Consequently, methods to improve overall production efficiency and improved marketing strategies are needed to ensure survival of this vital industry. Current vegetable research by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station concerns improved yield and quality, reduced impacts of environmental and biological stresses, effective marketing strategies, improved production technologies, postharvest handling and processing techniques, decision aids for risk management and alternative vegetable crops.

An expanding population should offer vast new future markets for the vegetable industry if producers capitalize on their advantages and fully use the developing technology.

Engler moving to Amarillo

BY ORVILLE HOWARD

DUMAS--Paul Engler, president of Cactus Feeders, Inc., announced recently that headquarters of his farflung cattle feeding company will be moved from Dumas to Amarillo.

Engler said in making the announcement that the move is expected to be made in September, with the new headquarters to be locted in a recently-purchased office building located at 2209 W. 7th.

Moving notice was given to Cactus corporate employees in early June. The initial move will be in September, Engler said, with the entire corporate headquarters to be moved by January. While reflecting on his cattle feeding operation that has been billed as the largest in the world, Engler said being the largest wasn't everything--"We want to be the best . . . it was imperative to the company's growth to move to a larger metropolitan area." He said that plans for expansion also include the relocation of the Satellite Cattle Exchange from the Wellington Square office complex to the West 7th location. Satellite Cattle Exchange is affiliated with Cactus Feeders through a partnership arrangement.

"Most of our service vendors and support groups, such as law firms, audit and tax firms, consultants, banking facilities, aircraft maintenance and other services are in Amarillo and the advantage of them being closer was a significant factor in our decision to move to Amarillo," said Engler.

Brownfield man runs for ag post

AUSTIN (AP) - Republican agriculture commissioner candidate Gene Duke of West Texas says he has what's needed to do the job: experience in agriculture, willingness to work with all sides and "true grit."

The men, the women, the boys and girls of agriculture ... have true grit, and they want somebody leading their industry that's like the Duke,' he said Thursday in announcing his campaign to replace Agriculture "It will continue to go down as we Commissioner Jim Hightower, a Democrat.

"The Duke had grit. He had true to borrowers who missed paying loan to mailing (the notices), I don't know grit. And that's the kind of person that we need leading agriculture," he said. "So you might say that the Duke has Duke.'

Duke, of Brownfield, has a cotton seed business. Among the areas he said he's been engaged in are feed milling, When the first notices were mailed crop consulting, cotton farming and

However, he said, Hightower has not been engaged in agribusiness. He said such experience is important to the commissioner's post.

producers have a bigger stake than usual in this year's com crop, fearing if it's too much on the skimpy side the costs of feed will rise again and discourage profitable expansion in 1990 and possibly beyond.

Right now, according to Agriculture Department projections, this fall's com harvest could be around 7.45 billion bushels, up sharply from the droughtshriveled 1988 output of 4.92 billion.

But that would barely be enough corn to meet demands in the 1989-90 marketing year that will begin Sept. 1, 10.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Cattle according to the USDA projections. A oducers have a bigger stake than year later, on Sept. 1, 1990, the U.S. corn stockpile would be only slightly > Corn prices, with a harvest of 7.45 billion bushels, would probably average around $1.75 to $2.25 per bushel, down from $2.50 to $2.60 now forecast for the current marketing year.

The projections are based on yield trends and other factors, including weather conditions. The USDA's first corn and soybean estimates based on actual field surveys will be issued Aug.

J. Tom Brink, research analyst for Cattle-Fax, says in the latest newsletter of the National Cattlemen's Association that "a continued small volume of surplus stocks would leave feed grain markets vulnerable to any hint of adverse weather during the 1990 growing season.'

According to Brink's analysis, a corn crop of 8 billion bushels this year would be just what cattle producers need - production large enough to restore corn inventories somewhat and

If the 1989 com crop reaches only 7 billion bushels, we would actually be in a worse situation than last year,' he said. "Corn feed use and exports would have to be reduced. Supply rationing would occur due to higher average prices. Feeder cattle and calf prices would be hurt, while already tight feeding margins could be further squeezed."

a larger number of slaughter of beef cows than had been expected.

Also, in the second quarter, beef production rose more than 4 percent from last winter, largely because of more cattle sold out of feedlots. Most of the increase came in May and June.

With higher feed costs and rising prices of feeder cattle, many feedlot operators had profits wiped out or squeezed tightly. New placements were cut back.

"Short term, the possibility of reducing recent feedlot losses seems minimal because seasonally higher fed cattle slaughter is expected through much of August," says the depart-ment's Economic Research Service. prices of Choice-grade steers will average in the range of $69 to $73 per 100 pounds during the third quarter, compared with nearly $74 per hundredweight in the first and second quarters of this year.

"However, when smaller feedlot placements this spring begin to show up as lower slaughter numbers this fall, weekly slaughter rates should again decline ... and higher prices will result." the report said. "Even lower cow slaughter is possible and could further reduce beef supplies, resulting in even higher slaughter cattle prices."

The report said that rains "have allayed immediate fears of last year" when drought ravaged crop yields and sent prices up. But USDA economists warned that corn and soybean crops and future prices - will be "strongly influenced by weather patterns" over the next few weeks and months.

spiny plant they have cursed, chopped, dug up and tried to get rid of for as long as anyone can remember.

They're looking at the ubiquitous prickly pear as a new way to make money: as a fruit and vegetable crop, as forage for livestock and feed for wildlife on hunting leases.

But growing the range-crowding, leg-stabbing cactus on purpose?

We've tried to get rid of it, and I decided to work with it instead of against it," said Jim Manley, who has a ranch in Webb County near Laredo. "We need to look at any avenues of diversification for a profit.'

A two-year drought that continues D'Arrigo Brothers Co. in Salinas, in some parts of South Texas has Calif., said his company grows the thers of the valuable resource the prickly pear can be. With no grass for grazing, ranchers have resorted to "burning pear," or charring the spines to make the cactus edible for cattle.

Scientists and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service are promoting the idea that there are ways to turn the prickly pear into a permanent, profitable asset. Many ranchers appear ready to listen.

'It's been neglected," said Bill Maltsberger, a rancher from Cotulla. "I think the future of ranching in South Texas will be largely dependent on cultivation of this plant."

More than 100 ranchers turned out July 14 for a conference at Texas A&I University in Kingsville, titled "Developing Prickly Pear as a Forage, Fruit and Vegetable Resource." The idea of such a conference would have drawn laughter 25 years ago, but the importance of economic diversity is catching on in the ranch country.

"We're looking at the prickly pear as something that could be very profitable," said Thomas Martinez, who wants to develop the cactus on his family ranch near Alice. Still, prickly pear has an image

De la Garza, chairman of the House Yes, the prickly pear - the same Agriculture Committee, calls the prickly pear fruit the "Texas kiwi."

Ten years ago, most Americans did not know what kiwi fruit was, but shrewd marketing has created a demand for it, he said. Some see the same potential for the prickly pear fruit, known in Mexico as 'tuna." It varies in color from greenish white to a rich purple, and tastes like a cross between a fig and a

The yuppies are starting to buy," said Ernesto Villalobos, a direct marketing specialist with the Texas Department of Agriculture in San Antonio, who compared prickly pear to other products that have taken off in recent years with the right type of marketing.

"As soon as the yuppies started buying fajitas, I couldn't afford them," Villalobos said. "Corona (beer). When the yuppies started buying it, I couldn't afford it."

Mexican Americans use the cactus as a meat substitute. It is used year-round as a vegetable in Mexico.

Felker and others think nopalitos have potential as a vegetable crop in this country. The taste has been compared to green beans.

The A&I center collected 40 varieties of cactuses of the Opuntia genus, or prickly pear variety. Variations include spineless leaf pads and those with fruit of different colors.

The prickly pear thrives in dry conditions and its leaf pads easily take root and clone new plants when placed in the soil. Ranchers have found that attempts to chop and knock the plants down to clear range land for grass production often end up creating thicker stands of prickly pear after the broken leaves turn into new plants.

Some ranchers who lease their land to hunters also are looking at using the prickly pear as a means of enhancing wildlife habitat, particularly for bobwhite quail, white-tail deer and javelina. The Holly ag department, along with farmers, is checking for leaf spot. Prickly pear accounts for up to onethird of the deer's diet during th and 85 percent of the javelina's annual diet, researchers have found.

Three Rivers rancher Elizabeth Kay said her family operation has tried to eradicate the prickly pear for years.

"Now I'm going to make plans for the (prickly) pear as well as everything else," she said. "You better believe it. There's a place for the pear."

Social Security

Some private firms still try to exploit people by charging for services which the Social Security Administration (SSA) offers for free, Jim Talbot, Social Security manager in Amarillo, said recently.

One of Social Security's services, the "Personalized Earnings and Benefit Estimate Statement," provides an individual's detailed earnings history and estimates of future benefits. A private firm charges $7 to obtain the identical information which Social Security provides for free.

Several private firms sell plastic, or metal Social Security cards which they claim are "safer." If a person's paper Social Security card gets lost, SSA will replace it free, and will verify the number through the computer system ' been heated by lightning.

Other firms charge a fee to help brides change their names on Social Security's records, or to help parents obtain Social Security numbers for their children. These services, like all SSA services, are free with just a phone call.

When the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announces new rules to protect the public, it often means expensive changes at the local level. And such is the cause in some U.S. cities after EPA's June announcement that by December, 1991, all municipal water systems using surface water sources must install filtration systems. The systems will remove disease-causing viruses, bacteria, and protoza drawn from reservoirs, rivers and other open sources.

on Health

Some of the nation's largest cities, including New York, Boston, San Francisco, Seattle and others, face paying large shares of the estimated $3 billion in initial nationwide cost for adding the filtration systems. They also will pay portions of about $500 million in annual operation costs for the new systems.

But according to the Texas Department of Health (TDH), cities in this state will be spared the new expense, because Texas has required surface water filtration since 1945.

James Pope, director of the TDH Division of Water Hygiene, said that the state's 44-year-old water filtration statutes have been one reason why Texas has long had a reputation for the quality of its drinking water. "For years we have been ahead of many other parts of the country in protecting consumers from unsafe municipal drinking water," he said. "But a bonus is that, by requiring filtration systems when we did, cities were able to install their systems at a fraction of today's cost for new systems."

Pope said that the new EPA rules also require drinking water chlorina-tion after filtration. "Again, Texas is ahead of other parts of the country. Chlorination became mandatory in this state in 1970."

The EPA rules further state that cities must regularly submit drinking water samples for bacteriological tests, another long-standing requirement in

Pope said the new rules do not apply to cities using wells as water sources.

TWO WORLDS By Bob Wear

There are two worlds, and we live in both of them. My world is a world within a bigger world, andy our world is a world within a bigger world.

This bigger world concerns us, and some of the happenings in it affect us in our world; however, we must not let it mean too much to us, because so much of the bigger world is beyond our reach. It is unwise and nonproductive to worry about the things beyond our reach and beyond our control, beyond our power to change. In our little world, we may not have all things just exactly as we wish them to be, but we can make it a good world. To a certain extent, we can choose what we want in our world. We, if we wish, can do unto others as we would have them do unto us. We can be honest with our fellowmen, and we can be helpful to each other, if we wish to do so. We can give patriotism whatever place we choose to give it. There can be a place for law and order, with due respect for personal and property rights. Thrift and industry can be just as important as we wish them to be. We can be diligent in doing our work, and conscientious to do it the very best we can. We can respect all rightful authority, and give honor to whom honor is due, and respect to whom respect is due.

In our world, morality and decency can have a prominent place. We can also maintain an understanding attitude, with wholesome tolerance toward others; and live together in peace, in spite of our differences. We can have more gratitude than grumbling, and more appreciation than faultfinding. Our little world will not be perfect, but it can be about what we wish it to be. There will be flaws, but we can continue to find ways of making some improvements.

We live in two worlds, and the better we do with our little world; the more we will be doing to give something worthwhile to the bigger world.

There are quite a few good books going out this week. For those of you who like horror books, there are a few of special interest.

The Drawing of the Three, the Dark fower II by Stephen King. The hero, Roland, pursues his quest for the Dark Tower. Roaming another world that is a nightmarishly distorted mirror of our own, he is drawn through a mysterious door that brings him into 1980's America.

Here he is involved in a savage struggle against underworld evil and otherworldly enemies. With a storytelling skill that is sheer magic, and with breathtaking boldness of imagination, Stephen King has risen to the peak of his power to create a and eyewitness descriptions the police Shadow Dancers by Herbert Lieberman is another horror novel by the author of City of the Dead, Nightbloom, and Crawlspace. Shadow Dancers is about two murderers whose crimes are horrifyingly similar. The female victims are robbed, raped, and viciously murdered. Near the bodies, series of numbers and odd drawings are eerily scrawled in crayon on the walls. She taught her protege to scrounge and steal, but now she is afraid for her life because Warren has grown into something the old lady could never have imagined and can no longer control: a psychotic killer.

When Warren discovers someone is copying his style, matching him murder for murder, he becomes obsessed with the idea of finding his impersonator, the man the television

Another novel by the best-selling author, Irving Wallace, is going out this week. The Guest of Honor is his most compelling and intriguing novel to date. The story of an American president who falls in love with the widowed president of another country.

Make low sodium condiments

By NANCY BYAL Better Homes and Gardens Magazine Food Editor

Ketchup, mustard, soy sauce and barbecue sauce make food taste great but contain lots of sodium. If you need to lower the amount of sodium you consume each day, make your own low-sodium condiments.

LOW-SODIUM KETCHUP: contains 3 mg sodium per tablespoon compared to 156 mg for standard ketchup.

In a blender container or food processor bowl combine 1 cup water; one 6-ounce can tomato paste; 3/4 cup chopped onion; 1/2 cup cider vinegar; 1-3rd cup sugar; 1 tablespoon molasses; 2 teaspoons dry mustard; 1/2 teaspoon celery seed; 1/4 teaspoon each ground cinnamon, cloves, dried basil, dried tarragon and pepper; 1 clove garlic, minced. Cover and blend until smooth.

Pour mixture into a Dutch oven. Stir in 3 cups water and two 6-ounce cans tomato paste. Simmer, uncovered, about 35 minutes or until mixture is reduced to half its original volume, stirring occasionally. Pour into jars and store in refrigerator for up to 1 month. Or pour into 1-cup freezer containers; seal, label and freeze for up to 10 months. Makes 5 cups.

LOW-SODIUM DIJON-STYLE MUSTARD: contains 1 mg sodium per teaspoon compared to 65 mg for standard mustard.

In a 1-quart saucepan combine 1 cup dry white wine; 1/2 cup vinegar; 1/4 cup chopped onion; 1 tablespoon sugar; 1/2 teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed; 5 whole allspice; 2 cloves garlic, minced; 1 bay leaf; dash ground red pepper. Boil, uncovered, over medium-high heat about 20 minutes or until liquid is reduced by half. Meanwhile, in a bowl stir together 1/2 cup dry mustard and 1/4 cup cold water; let stand 10 minutes.

Strain vinegar mixture into mustard mixture, pressing out all liquid; discard solids. Stir mixture; return to saucepan. Cook, uncovered, over medium-low heat about 10 minutes or until the consistency of heavy cream, stirring frequently. Cool; cover and refrigerate. Store in refrigerator for up to 2 months. Makes 3/4 cup.

LOW-SODIUM SOY SAUCE: contains 120 mg sodium per teaspoon compared to 170 mg for commercial low-sodium soy sauce, 440 mg for regular soy sauce. In a small saucepan combine 3/4 cup water, 2 tablespoons instant beef bouillon granules, 2 teaspoons red wine vinegar, 1 teaspoon molasses, 1/8 teaspoon ground ginger, several dashes pepper, and dash garlic powder. Boil gently, uncovered, 5 minutes until reduced to 1/2 cup. Chill to store. Stir before using. Makes 1/2 cup. LOW-SODIUM BARBECUE SAUCE: contains 21 mg sodium per 1/4 cup compared to 510 mg for standard sauce.

In 2-quart saucepan combine one 6-ounce can tomato paste; 1/2 cup chopped onion; 1/2 cup red wine vinegar; 1/4 cup cooking oil; 2 tablespoons sugar; 2 teaspoons celery seed; 2 teaspoons paprika; 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce; 1 teaspoon dried oregano, crushed; 1/2 teaspoon chili powder; 1/8 teaspoon ground cloves; 2 bay leaves; 2 cloves garlic, minced; and 1 1/2 cups water.

Simmer, uncovered, about 30 minutes or until desired consistency, stirring occasionally. Discard bay leaves. Store in covered container in refrigerator for up to 2 weeks. Or pour into 1-cup freezer containers; seal, label and freeze. Makes 2 and 2-3rds

Hints from Heloise

HEART HINT

Dear Heloise: If there is an elderly, incapacitated or young person in your home who often is at a loss for something of interest, I have a sure-fire, tested solution: an outdoor bird bath. It is not a continual expense as is a bird feeder, but it is loved as dearly by our feathered

Place the bird bath near a large window where one can sit and watch the bird bath from inside the home. Note: If you purchase a plastic bird bath, fill the base with water, soil or stones for more stability.

Even nursing homes could place bird baths in the view of sitting room windows and give pleasure to both birds and residents. — C. Peters, Annandale, Va.

I couldn't agree more! We adore watching the birds in our back-yard. Mother Nature really is nazing, isn't she? — Heloise
