Mattox warns rival to stop negative ads

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic attorney general candidate Jim Mattox gave opponent John Cornyn an ultimatum Friday: Stop what Mattox calls negative campaigning or he'll launch his own political air strike.

"He's got about 24 hours to stop this nonsense, and if he doesn't, he's not going to like what hit him," Mattox told a news conference where he accused Cornyn of running a "slimy, guilty-by-association campaign."

Cornyn — a Republican who touts his record as ethical and has an ad calling Mattox "the junkyard dog of Texas politics" — defended his commercials as truthful.

While claiming the title of a junkyard dog who protects average Texans, Mattox has taken offense to an ad in which Cornyn suggests Mattox can't be trusted because he has taken money from people who subsequently had trouble with the law.

New museum director learning on the job

When Paula Edwards took over as director of the Deaf Smith County Museum, she already knew a lot about the job.

After all, she's worked for more than 12 years as a volunteer and as a member of the museum's board of director.

However, Edwards said she rapidly found out there's a lot about the museum she didn't know.

On Oct. 1, Edwards became the museum's fourth director, succeeding Donna Brockman, who was forced to resign because of health problems.

Edwards was born and raised in Hereford and attended West Texas State University (now West Texas A&M) in Canyon.

She is married to Arliss Edwards, who operates a farmer about 22 miles northwest of Hereford. The couple has a son, Hud of Amarillo, and a daughter, Jaci of Hereford, and two grandchildren.

Paula Edwards

Edwards was serving on the museum's Garden Committee when the director's position opened, and she said some of the other committee members urged her to apply for the position.

She said she had an advantage with the museum board because she already was involved, and the directors thought the transition would be made easier.

"I think just being a part of seeing the artifacts of the pioneers, some I knew and some I had heard about all my life" is one of the most exciting aspects of the job, Edwards said. Also, she said she enjoys working with the museum board, which she described as a "group of people who are committed" to preserving the heritage of Hereford and Deaf Smith County.

Although she plans to continue to work on making the museum into a place of education, Edwards said she is still learning all of the rules and regulations — "the detail work" — involved in being the chief administrator of the museum.

"We're associated with the county, so we operate under its rules," she said. "But everyone in the county (government) has been really helpful."

Also, she said she believes the county government is committed to the museum, which she described as "an asset to the community, an asset that needs to be preserved."

A good museum, even a small one in a small community like Hereford, can be a draw, she said, noting recent visitors have been from states as far away as Florida and New York and from Germany, Lebanon and Mexico.

"The people who have come here have been pleased by the museum. They seem to be delighted by its small-town warmth," Edwards said.

Edwards said she has always been interested in the history of the region, especially in the fashions of the different eras.

"It's exciting to see and work with the old clothes. I've learned to appreciate all the history we have here, which is shown in all the wonderful photographs we have on display," she said.

The photographs, which include family portraits, have come from the extensive A.O. Thompson files (many of which were used in the centennial edition published in August by The Hereford Brand) and from families who donated old photographs to the museum.

While Edwards is learning the ins and outs of the museum's day-to-day operations, she also is establishing some goals.

"I would like to continue to make the museum a place of education," she said. "It's important our children learn about their roots. Maybe it would be good to look back and see how our forefathers persevered and know we can do the same thing."

What is Hereford's best-kept secret? The Service Co.

One of Hereford's biggest secrets is located just south of the railroad underpass on U.S. Hwy. 385.

From its complex at 1008 US 385 South, T & G Service Co. provides meals for plant workers at Excel, National Beef and Montford processing facilities in Texas, Kansas and Colorado, as well as contract cleaning of the plants.

T & G Service Co. operates two divisions, Service Café and Service Co., from its base in Hereford.

The company, which was founded about 19 years ago by Grimes Pearson, has experienced tremendous growth in the past year, according to Edward Harvey, operations director for Service Café.

A year ago, Service Café was responsible for providing about 6,000 meals per day for plant workers. The company now provides about 15,000 meals per day, Harvey said.

The rapid growth has been smoothed by the help of Amparo Tarango, director of food service, and Ben Tarango, director of vending, whose help has been described as "invaluable" by Harvey.

As operations director for Service Café, Harvey spends four to five days on the road, coordinating projects at the company's facilities.

While the company maintained its facilities in the three states, Harvey said the corporate headquarters, with all of the accounting and support staff, is based in Hereford.

In addition to the cafeteria/vending machine operations, the corporation's second division, Service Co., contracts with meat processing plants to handle plant sanitation. David Cochran is the operations director for Service Co.

The company operates four or five vehicles, including tractor-trailer rigs, which are based at the sprawling warehouse behind the corporate headquarters. Also, a 10-foot by 40-foot walk-in cooler holds meat, which Service Café buys in bulk for its cafeteria/vending machine operations.

In its 19 years — and especially in the past year — T & G Service Co. has experienced significant growth.

In 1999, Harvey said corporate officials intend to slow the expansion, "although we're always looking for new opportunities."

Although corporate officials' biggest fear is growing too fast, Harvey said they still believe that the recent doubling in size also "means double the opportunities."

And, even with a slowdown in the planned expansion, T & G Service Co. has been quick to take advantage of any opportunity presented — all the while remaining one of Hereford's best-kept secrets.

Ed Harvey is operations director for Service Café, one of two divisions of T & G Service Co.

THE HEREFORD BRAND Local roundup

CSF volunteers

Local charity organizers have begun making preparations for a new fast-approaching holiday season.

Volunteers for one of this community's most prominent charities, the Christmas Stocking Fund, have recently announced they are seeking volunteers for this year's drive.

The charity provides assistance to less fortunate community residents through food boxes, or through expense vouchers which help families defray utility, medical or clothing expenses.

CSF is composed of anonymous volunteers representing a broad cross-section of the community, and is not affiliated with an other charitable organization or government entity.

Applications for assistance are thoroughly screened by an anonymous committee that administers CSF, and are typically prioritized to help the greatest number of needy children and the elderly.

Anyone who is interested in becoming a volunteer for this year's CSF effort may call The Hereford Brand at 364-2030, or stop by the Brand office at 313 N. Lee.

Arafat to brief Europeans

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Seeking European support for a revived peace process, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat expressed hope today the West Bank land-for-peace deal will lead to new talks between Syria and Israel, which broke down two years ago.

Arafat arrived today in the Austrian capital from Washington after signing the West Bank agreement, negotiated after nine grueling days of negotiations with the Israelis at Wye Plantation in Maryland.

After talks here, the Palestinian leader and Austrian Foreign Minister Wolfgang Schuessel headed for the Alpine resort of Poertschach, where Arafat will brief European Union leaders gathered for a summit and appeal for more financial help to reinforce the results of the Wye accord.

"It was very difficult until we were able to achieve the final agreement," Arafat said of the negotiations. "I hope the agreement will open the door for Lebanon and Syria to achieve real progress, real advancement, with Israel as well."

Syrian-Israeli peace talks broke off more than two years ago. Syria and the previous Israeli government had reached an informal agreement on a full withdrawal from the Golan Heights, which Israel captured from Syria in 1967.

But Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government rejected that agreement, saying it was never completed. Lebanon's peace talks with Israel also have been suspended for more than two years pending progress in Syrian-Israeli negotiations.

Before departing for Poertschach, Arafat thanked European governments for their support during the two-year freeze in the Arab-Israeli peace process, which Wye was designed to overcome.

He expressed confidence that the Israelis would live up to their part of the bargain, noting that the agreement on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Hebron had been honored.

The agreement will give the Palestinians 13 percent more of Israeli-held territory on the West Bank of the Jordan River. In return, the Palestinians pledged steps to fight terrorism by Islamic militants and agreed to abolish provisions in their charter calling for destruction of Israel.

Clinton sets date for conference on SS bailout

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton set a date Saturday for a long-planned White House conference on Social Security, saying the December meeting would "help pave the way toward a bipartisan solution early next year."

In one of his last weekly radio addresses before mid-term elections, Clinton reiterated one of the main themes of the Democratic campaign: that the party stopped Republican attempts to squander a budget surplus with tax cuts for the sake of bolstering Social Security.

"We turned back these efforts," Clinton said. "The balanced budget I signed this week protects our hard-won surplus until we save Social Security first."

Rep. Heather Wilson, R-N.M., said Social Security also is a major priority for the Republicans.

"Next year we will save Social Security from insolvency and provide real tax relief for families," she said.

Clinton, who this year held town meetings around the country on Social Security, said the conference would take place Dec. 8-9.

THE HEREFORD BRAND United Way update

The Deaf Smith County United Way's annual fall campaign has achieved 55 percent of its goal, according to UW officials.

Taxes

Republicans pushing cuts as top goal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. John Hostettler, in a message Republicans are taking from Capitol Hill to the campaign hustings, reminds Indiana voters in broadcast ads that tax cuts are the top priority for the GOP majority in Congress.

"Hostettler knows our working families should get to keep more of what they earn," a radio announcer says for the two-term congressman. Last year's GOP cuts, the spot continues, "have created hundreds of thousands of jobs."

Democrats are firing back with ads that stress saving Social Security for the future. Hostettler's Democratic challenger in Indiana's 8th District, Gail Reicken, says the priority should be to "safeguard Social Security" in ads that emphasize her "common sense Hoosier values."

In congressional races across the country, candidates are continuing a battle fought earlier this fall in which President Clinton was able to depict GOP tax cuts as a raid on Social Security because they would have spent part of the projected budget surplus. A Republican-pushed five-year, $80 billion tax cut passed the House but died in the Senate.

"The Democrats have tried to use Social Security as a bludgeon for as long as I've been alive," said Rep. John Linder, R-Ga., chairman of the National Republican Campaign Committee.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., and other GOP leaders have sought to make the estimated $1.6 trillion, 10-year surplus a national campaign issue by repeatedly promising to push for a huge tax cut if voters add to the Republican House and Senate majorities.

Just this week, Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, announced he would seek a 10 percent cut in income tax rates costing $715 billion over 10 years when lawmakers return in January.

"I don't know of any Republicans who aren't committed to tax cuts," Linder said. "Most of our candidates who are running against incumbent Democrats are running against them on tax issues."

The power of the budget surplus as a campaign tool was evident in a recent Pew Research Center poll in which 77 percent of Americans identified the surplus debate as a very important issue.

More than a dozen recent independent polls appear to bolster the Democratic argument, with more voters saying Social Security's future ranks higher than lower taxes. Without reforms, Social Security would become insolvent in about 30 years as the large baby boomer generation retires.

"The Republicans are trying to sort of entice people, and the public is saying they don't want it," said Dan Sallick, spokesman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. "A lot of our candidates are using it as a front-line issue."

The Democrats are getting advertising help from the AFL-CIO, which is running TV ads in districts across the country criticizing House Republicans on this issue.

In Kentucky, a typical AFL-CIO ad slams Republican Rep. Anne Northrup for voting with Gingrich in favor of the plan.

"Call Northrup, and tell her to vote no when the Gingrich plan comes up again," the announcer says. "Tell her this time, put Social Security first."

Republicans contend their own polls show a majority of voters favor a third way: using the surplus for both tax cuts and to ensure Social Security remains solvent. The GOP message is that some of the surplus must be returned to taxpayers or the Democrats will spend it on more government programs.

Edwards

Also, she said it is important for the museum personnel, from the board of directors through the volunteers, to learn more about preserving artifacts so they will not be damaged by age and weather.

The museum recently purchased acid-free paper and workers are wrapping some of the artifacts in the paper to preserve them.

She also wants to expand the computerized museum, which will make it easier for genealogy buffs to trace their family trees, and "look into a program where you can enter artifacts, cross-reference them - where they came from, who donated them and their history."

Although Edwards has just been on the job since the first of the month, she already is working on a fund-raising project.

The historic E.B. Black House will be the setting Nov. 6-7 for family photos, she said. The proceeds from this project will go to the museum. Also, she noted that cookbooks are also still available for sale to benefit the museum.

And, in December, the museum will conduct an open house and Christmas tea.

The Christmas tea, which will be free, will be an old-fashioned holiday event and should also feature some pioneer demonstrations, she said.

"It should be fun, and the museum will be decorated for Christmas," Edwards said.

Outgoing German chancellor gives fish to longtime caretaker

BONN, Germany (AP) — Outgoing German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has given a 63-gallon aquarium and all his fish to a faithful guard who tended it for years.

"I'm very happy about the decision and feel honored," Hans-Jochen Brecht, a police commissioner with the federal border patrol, said Friday.

Brecht has taken care of the aquarium since it was given to Kohl 14 years ago following a visit to the Berlin aquarium.

Franks recalled for possible contamination

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Florida meat processing firm has recalled over 100,000 pounds of franks distributed to Winn Dixie grocery stores for possible listeria contamination.

Dixie Packers Inc. of Madison, Fla., issued the voluntary recall Friday, the Agriculture Department's Food Safety and Inspection Service said.

Officials are concerned the franks may be contaminated with Listeria monocytogenes bacteria.

Consumption of food contaminated with the bacteria can cause listeriosis, an uncommon but potentially serious disease. The most common manifestation of listeriosis is meningitis, which has symptoms of high fever, severe headache, neck stiffness and nausea.

The products were distributed to Winn-Dixie stores in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. Some of the franks were also distributed to the Bahamas.

Student Council officers — Bluebonnet Intermediate School recently elected officers for its student council. The new officers include A.J. Mungia, vice president; Cassandra Pesina, president; Richard Saucedo, Bluebonnet principal; Staci Wilt, secretary; and Cassandra Castillo, historian.

Thailand man emerges as top dog in hometown's annual barking contest

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Some might consider him howling mad, but in his hometown in northeastern Thailand Manop Tummuangkhon is the undisputed top dog.

Manop, 35, beat 34 other canine copycats who barked and howled for judges in Nakhon Ratchasima province, the Bangkok Post reported today. The contest was held to publicize an anti-rabies campaign.

The newspaper said his ability to mimic man's best friend in a variety of moods, including belligerence and amorosness, was honed by 15 days of intense observation of neighborhood dogs.

SPEEDY NIEMAN
The Hereford Brand

Hereford Bull

That feller on Tierra Blanca Creek says the best way to test your memory is to try and recall the things you worried about yesterday.

An editor's prayer: "Dear Lord, let my words be soft and sweet for tomorrow I may have to eat them."

Some of the things I've said and written were not so soft to swallow Thursday night as friends "roasted" me at a party. In truth, however, the night I had dreaded for several weeks was a very special occasion -- a time that Lavon and I will always remember. We can only express our deepest gratitude for those who participated in the program and to all who attended the event.

I hope those who came had as many laughs and as much fun as Lavon and I. From the opening invocation by my pastor, Rev. Terry Cosby, it was easy to tell the direction the program would take. Just in case it sounded sacrilegious, Cosby announced that Baptists don't write prayers, and he proceeded to read a prayer that he blamed on Jeremy Grant, Presbyterian pastor.

The "presenters" were great with their barbs and anecdotes, saying things (hopefully) you wouldn't express at a public gathering unless you were a great friend. Tom Simons, one of the best emcees we know, did a masterful job as the head chef of the roast.

A special note of appreciation to Mayor Bob Josseland and City Mgr. Chester Nolen for the special proclamation, and the other "roasters" -- Don Cumpston, Mike McMannigal, Bill Lyles, Clint Formby, our sons Steve and Craig Nieman, and publishers Lynn Brisendine of Brownfield, and Roy McQueen of Snyder. Add to that the special songs by Steve Horrell and the dinner music by Nancy Denson.

It was a great crowd, and we had a number of people call in regrets because of previous commitments. The event was a tough job for banquet planners. They had a tough time in getting a head-count. We did not want people to feel obligated to attend, but at the same time we apologize to any friends who felt omitted.

I feel privileged to have been chosen as the publisher of The Brand, and fortunate over the years to have so many dedicated and loyal employees. I am humbled by the opportunity to serve and be honored by so many friends, and convinced more than ever that it is the people who make it all worthwhile.

For these things, I am grateful. Thank you, and God bless.

Tips for Yankees who move down South:
--Save all manner of bacon grease. If it can't be fried in bacon grease, it ain't worth cooking, let alone eating.

--Get used to hearing, "You ain't from around here, are you?"
--If you forget a Southerner's name, refer to him as "Bubba."

You have a 75% chance of being right.
--Should you be driving on snow or ice and run your car into a ditch, don't panic. Four men in the cab of a four-wheel drive with a 12-pack of beer and a tow chain will be along shortly. Don't try to help them, just stay out of their way. This is what they live for.
--Remember, Y'all is singular. All y'all is plural, and All y'alls is plural possessive.

--Be advised: The "He-needed-killing" defense is valid here.
--The first Southern expression to creep into a transplanted Northerner's vocabulary is the adjective "Big ol'", as in "big ol' truck" or "big ol' boy." --If you hear a Southerner exclaim, "Hey, y'all watch this!" stay out of his way. These are likely the last words he will ever say.

Spending deal represents failure, not success

WASHINGTON -- The catch-all spending deal that finally sent Congress home drew rival claims of success from the White House and Republican leaders -- who prefer not to mention that it was a product of failure.

It is, after all, a substitute for the appropriations bills Congress couldn't pass, to finance nearly one-third of the federal government.

That played into President Clinton's hands, as he boasted to Democratic campaign donors.

The Republicans argue that appropriations were stalled because their congressional majorities faced Clinton vetoes, one exercised, six others threatened. But GOP policy differences also were a factor.

And explanations aside, this is not the way appropriations are supposed to be handled, as a senior Senate Democrat pointed out.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York said the bargained

WALTER R. MEARS

Washington report

budget was produced in "kind of a bastard parliamentary system" with debate between the parties in Congress, but decisions made by a few negotiators.

"This is not what the Congress is supposed to do," Moynihan said on CNN.

But it is a habit. Appropriations are rarely completed on time; the spending bills were due 20 days ago, so a series of stopgap extensions kept the government going this month while the White House and Republican bargainers made the money deal.

It adds up to $487 billion, covered in nearly 4,000 pages of legislation dumped on Congress for ratification without careful reading. It covers spending that is supposed to be handled in eight separate spending bills. There are 13 appropriations bills each budget year, but Congress and Clinton had settled on only five of them.

When the deal was set Friday, Clinton called it a good day for America, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said it was good package for America and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said it was "the right thing for all Americans."

Despite that chorus, they differed on why. And conservatives complained about the whole deal, frustrated at the Republicans' inability to get a tax cut and at spending increases Clinton won.

Gingrich insisted that it had been "a very good negotiation" from a conservative standpoint, given the Clinton programs that were blocked and items like the extra $9 billion Republicans got for the Pentagon.

The White House handled the Democratic bargaining, and Clinton explained why it worked Friday in a fund-raising speech in Chicago. "There is a reason that this budget looks like we wrote it and passed it, even though our party is in the minority," he said, talking past the concessions he had to accept.

"The Congress has to pass a budget," he said. "... In the end, if you want to go home, you have got to pass a budget." Congress wanted to adjourn to go home and campaign, Republicans didn't want to risk seeing government agencies shut for lack of funds, and Democrats therefore could get some of what they wanted

Reflections

One of the advantages to having access to the Internet is the help you can get when it comes time to writing columns. All you have to do is check your e-mail; one of your friends in a distant city may very well have sent you a column. That's what happened to me -- again. Dennis Byrd, a former college classmate and newspaper colleague, sent me a little item he said was e-mailed to him from an old high school friend. Anyway, this little e-mailing is loaded with a lot of good advice from the next generation.

Sunday School Funnies

A little girl, asked to draw her conception of the Hebrews' flight from Egypt, showed an airplane, with all of the passengers having halos and one person at the front without one.

When asked about it, she explained, "Oh, that's Pontius, the pilot."

Prayers

Prayers also are easy for children to misinterpret. For example, kids have been known to start the Lord's Prayer as "Harold, be Thy name." Two lesser-known prayers have come out as: "Give us this day our jelly bread," and "Lead us not into Penn Station."

The Nativity

Finally, a Sunday school class was asked to draw a picture of the Nativity.

One boy did a good likeness of Joseph, Mary and the infant Jesus, but off to the side was a roly-poly figure.

The teacher, afraid Santa Claus had somehow been worked into the scene, asked who that was.

She didn't know if she were relieved or even more worried when the child said, "Oh, that's Round John Virgin."

Americans' lack of health insurance coverage a quietly growing problem

LAURA MECKLER
The Associated Press

Analysis

WASHINGTON -- There was a lot of talk about health care this year in Washington, most of it about placing new rules on HMOs and improving the quality of care.

But recent news from the Census Bureau offers a reminder that a significant if less-discussed problem remains: access to health care.

The report found that 16.1 percent of Americans -- or 43.4 million people -- had no health insurance for all of 1997, up from 15.6 percent in 1996. It was the steepest increase in five years, and came despite a booming economy that created millions of new jobs.

"It's ironic and frightening," said Edie Rasell, an economist at the labor-backed Economic Policy Institute. "If the uninsured rate is going up during the best economic situation we've had in 30 years, what's going to happen when we have a recession?"

The increase drives home the point that improving the health care system involves a complex set of tradeoffs rarely acknowledged among politicians looking to solve one problem at a time -- whether it be improving quality, expanding access to care or controlling costs.

"It's part of the metaphorical balloon. You press on one side and it pops out on the other side," said Ron Pollack, president of the consumer group Families USA.

For example, opponents of this year's unsuccessful drive for new rules on health maintenance organizations say any such effort will simply drive up health care costs -- and thus lead even more companies to drop insurance coverage for their workers.

Supporters of these HMO rules argue the costs are minimal and worthwhile, and won't lead to more uninsured people.

Complicating the argument is the fact that it's not entirely clear why the number of uninsured Americans increased in 1997.

Economists mostly blame the increase on the prevalence of low-income jobs that offer no health benefits, along with the steep price some workers must pay to use insurance that is offered.

Last year, about 6 million Americans did not take insurance that was offered at work, a government study found. Part-time employees may not be eligible for insurance at all or be able to afford it, said Pat Schoeni of the National Coalition on Health Care.

Although the number of jobs grew, the number of people with company-sponsored coverage stayed relatively steady, with 61.4 percent of Americans getting insurance from the workplace, up from 61.2 percent in 1996.

Experts also point to welfare changes, which place people into low-wage jobs that often don't offer coverage. Indeed, the Medicaid rolls have dropped, and many of these people have not replaced their government-provided coverage with private insurance.

"People are either losing welfare eligibility or just moving off of welfare because the economy is picking up," said Paul Fronstin, of the Employee Benefits Research Institute, a non-partisan group backed by insurance companies, other businesses and consumer and labor groups.

But these explanations cannot fully explain the increase in the number of people without insurance. Census calculations indicate the number of poor Americans without insurance held steady in 1997; thus the increase came among those with higher incomes.

About half the jump was among households earning between $25,000 and $50,000 a year.

"That's the group where the fiscal pressures are the greatest," said Diane Rowland, president of the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured. "Even with an improving economy, health insurance is not becoming more widely available for the people earning in the $25,000 to $35,000 range."

Even when premiums were lower, many small businesses did not offer their workers insurance, and that hasn't changed despite the tight labor market.

The other half of Americans who lost insurance last year were in households earning more than $75,000.

Some of these people could be leaving traditional jobs to work as independent contractors -- or using the good economic times to launch small businesses, analysts suggest.

"They're feeling like they're healthy, they're going to risk it for a year or two," the Economic Policy Institute's Rasell said.

VIEWPOINT

When in doubt, use algebra

There has never been any doubt - by me or anyone who knows me - that I should never enter a classroom presuming to teach anything to anyone.

I'm a little set in my ways and some of the new methods just don't seem to make a lot of sense to me.

Things like the way students are somewhat coaxed into algebra.

You've got to remember, I don't much care for math, but I can normally figure it out.

The other day, my sixth grader asked for some help on a math problem. Her teacher called it something like a guess and check problem.

It ran something like this: Students in some class were supposed make presentation which would take up a minimum amount of time.

The class was 42 minutes long and three students' presentations would take up half the time.

Jeremy's speech was three minutes longer than the minimum; Sarah's was twice as long as Jeremy's and Paul's was the exact minimum. How long was each presentation?

This is not that difficult to figure out - at least not algebraically - but by the guess and check method it would take me forever to figure out.

After about ten minutes of trying to figure out how the teacher wanted it done, I had to revert to basic algebra.

First we needed to figure out the minimum amount of time for each presentation. Because one student used exactly the necessary amount, I set that as X.

Another student's presentation was three minutes longer than the minimum, so I set that as X+3.

The third presentation was twice as long as the previous one, so it became 2(X+3).

Everyone follow so far? The last thing I had to figure out was how much time the three presentations would take.

DIANNA F. DANDRIDGE

The Hereford Brand

The real world

That was easy enough. The class was 42 minutes long and the three students used half the time, so 21 minutes had to be the amount of time used by the three students.

So I showed my daughter how I arrived at these conclusions and the blank stare I received in return told me she didn't understand a thing I told her.

$X + (X+3) + 2(X+3) = 21$ meant less than nothing to her. And, I didn't have the foggiest idea how to reexplain it.

The idea of collecting like terms, clearing parentheses and doing the same thing to both sides of the equations couldn't have been more foreign.

So then, I set the above equation down one problem under the other, thinking she could see it better that way. No such luck. She couldn't understand how come I renamed all the students with such ludicrous names as X, X+3, or 2(X+3).

It didn't get any better the further into the problem.

By the time I got to $4X = 12$ she had forgotten what she was looking for.

She was lost and there was absolutely no hope of explaining it.

Maybe her teacher's idea of guess and check may be much better even if I don't understand it.

Another fun teaching problem for me came when both the sixth grader and the fourth grader decided they wanted me to teach them to dance for an upcoming school dance.

I used to dance, but it's been more than 10 years since I've been on the dance floor. So, that was Problem No. 1.

Problem No. 2 is the simple fact that I used to be an okay dancer - as long as I had a good leader - but I don't lead worth diddly.

Next came the uncoordinated, heavy-footed movements of a nine and 11-year-old.

We'll just leave it at the kids will get through the dance, but I don't think they'll win any contests.

More importantly I think my kids learned the value of teachers who actually have the ability to teach.

Like many things in this old world, teaching is an art and a talent.

I'm pretty sure I was never meant to teach.

Clinton

were the minority then, and they disputed the Democrats on procedures, witnesses and almost everything else.

Nixon biographer Stephen Ambrose wrote that in the early going, Rodino let "the red hot Democrats on his committee investigate for the purposes of embarrassing Nixon."

That is echoed in Democratic complaints about the Clinton case.

Nixon was covering up, of course, and concealing the taped evidence he ultimately had to surrender along with the presidency. Clinton has admitted misconduct in his Lewinsky liaisons, while denying the perjury that is one of the impeachment accusations against him. And evidence against him was sent to Congress at the beginning of the process, not at the end as in Watergate.

After six months of investigations and hearings, the Rodino committee recommended impeachment of Nixon with Democratic unanimity which Ford said "tends to make it a partisan issue." A half-dozen Republicans also voted for impeachment. Nonetheless, Ford complained that Nixon was a victim of "Democratic partisan politics."

Then Nixon had to yield the White House tape the proved his guilt, his fraying support vanished, and Ford announced on

Aug. 5 that he would say no more about impeachment because the vice president "is a party of interest."

Four days later, Nixon resigned. Ford became president.

In this case, one of the most zealous of Clinton foes contended that the president shouldn't have gone to New York on Monday to raise campaign funds for Rep. Charles Schumer, who serves on the judiciary committee and is running for the Senate in New York. Rep. Tom DeLay, the Republican whip in the House, said Clinton's campaigning for Schumer amounted to jury tampering because the New Yorker serves on the panel that will be considering impeachment.

The White House said DeLay was trying to score political points on proceedings that should not be partisan.

It is, on both sides.

Especially in a campaign setting, with no way to tell how the Clinton scandal and impeachment issue will play. There were omens in 1974. The Republicans lost three House seats, including the one Ford resigned to become vice president, in special elections early that year.

Nixon was gone and pardoned before the fall campaign. But the issue wasn't. Republicans lost 48 seats in the House and five in the Senate.

News in brief

Mideast agreement sets stage for tougher talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — A breakthrough Middle East agreement, mediated by President Clinton over nine tortuous days in the seclusion of a Chesapeake Bay retreat, opens the way for Israel and the Palestinians to enter the home stretch of even tougher negotiations for a permanent peace. "This agreement is designed to rebuild trust and a new hope for peace between the parties," Clinton said Friday at a White House ceremony to sign the accord. "Now both sides must build on that hope, carry out their commitments, begin the difficult but urgent journey toward a permanent settlement."

The land-for-peace agreement is known as the "Wye River Memorandum," for the Wye River Conference Center on Maryland's Eastern Shore where Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Chairman Yasser Arafat camped for nine days with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. They were joined on all but two days by Clinton and, on two occasions, by the ailing King Hussein of Jordan.

"Today is a day when Israel and our entire region are more secure," Netanyahu told the audience of exhausted negotiating teams, members of Congress and the Washington diplomatic corps. "Now this has required sacrifice from both sides, and reaching into what Lincoln called the better nature of mankind."

Arafat, who joined Netanyahu in praising Clinton for relentlessly pushing them to overcome their differences, said the Palestinians now had higher hopes for reaping the benefits of peace with Israel.

"We will never leave the peace process and we will never go back to violence and confrontation," Arafat said to a burst of applause.

All three men showed the strain of the marathon negotiations. The talks began Oct. 15 on a brilliantly sunny afternoon in the Wye River woods and ended Friday afternoon after an all-night session that was stretched longer by a last-minute Israeli demand for the release of an American imprisoned for spying for Israel.

Temporary address now turned into classroom

CUERO, Texas (AP) — For 30 years, Jimmy Brown has taught school as if his classroom was his home. Now after the raging Guadalupe River destroyed his house, Brown's temporary address has become the classroom.

"My home was totally moved to another location in a neighbor's yard," Brown said Friday after being comforted by Gov. George W. Bush. "Total shock. That's the first thing that comes to your mind."

Bush and Federal Emergency Management Agency Director James Lee Witt offered hope and advice to Brown and dozens of others at the Cuero High School shelter after viewing their flood-ravaged town by air.

"It's going to get better," Bush said. "We'll recover. The heart of Texans is strong to me and that's the thing people need to hear."

This town of 7,000 people, 80 miles southeast of San Antonio, was among the hardest-hit after torrential rains last weekend triggered record flooding on Texas rivers.

The storms and floods left at least 29 people dead and thousands homeless. Some 60 counties experienced flooding, and preliminary damage estimates reached nearly $500 million.

Five more counties, all in Southeast Texas, will be added to the 20 already declared federal disaster areas, Witt said.

Child's suicide prompts calls for childproof guns

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Apparently upset with a report card, 8-year-old Christopher Parks climbed atop a dresser, pulled down a gun hanging on the wall and shot himself in the head.

The Arkansas third-grader's death Thursday has prompted more calls for the introduction of a high-tech handgun that would put an end to such stories.

Called childproof, personalized or smart guns, the weapons are designed to be used only by the people who buy them.

But developers of the safer guns, led by Colt's Manufacturing Co. Inc. in this Hartford suburb, say it will be years before the weapons are on the market.

Several different versions of the smart gun are in the works. Colt's — with the help of a $500,000 federal research grant — is the closest to production, though company president Stephen Sliwa said Friday they won't be available for at least two years.

Colt's smart guns look like an ordinary weapon, but each contains a tiny radio transmitter. The shooter must wear a transponder, which fits in a ring or bracelet, to operate the trigger.

The gun was developed for police officers. Sixteen percent of officers killed each year are shot with their own guns.

NATO sends generals to press Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — With time running out for Yugoslavia to comply with its peace promises, NATO dispatched its top generals to Belgrade to demand that the government step up troop withdrawals from embattled Kosovo province.

NATO says its jets could still attack Serbian military targets if Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic doesn't back up all his pledges from an Oct. 12 agreement by Tuesday.

Gen. Wesley Clark, the alliance's supreme military commander, and German Gen. Klaus Naumann were traveling to the Yugoslav capital today seeking more pullbacks of police units and equipment from the separatist province, where scattered skirmishes continue.

Bob Dylan, Duluth's favorite son, home

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — If Bob Dylan was excited to perform his first major concert in the town where he was born, he kept it to himself.

The folk-rock poet charged through a mix of classics and new songs Thursday night before a wildly enthusiastic crowd. In typical Dylan fashion, though, he never acknowledged he was in Duluth.

Dylan did bow deeply in response to the cheers and played a five-song encore that included a romping "Highway 61 Revisited," named after a highway that runs through the northern Minnesota city.

That was as close to an emotional coming home as Dylan got. Some in the sold-out crowd at the 7,700-seat Duluth Entertainment Convention Center didn't mind the snub.

"I didn't expect him to," said Lora Lendrum, 42, of Hibbing, the town in northeastern Minnesota where Dylan's family moved when he was 6.

Itkin refers to 'Mexican wetbacks' on talk show
ERIE, Pa. (AP) — Ivan Itkin, the Democratic candidate for governor, made derogatory comments about Mexicans and Chinese while a guest on a radio talk show Friday.

As part of a response to a caller's question about creating jobs in Pennsylvania, Itkin said American workers should not be told that they should receive the same wages as "a Chinese coolie is getting or a Mexican wetback is getting."

"Wetback" is considered a derogatory term for Mexicans, and "coolie" is a term used in the 19th century for low-paid laborers, especially those of Chinese or Indian descent.

Itkin, speaking from a cellular phone in his car, was a guest on WLKK.

Campaign spokesman Mike Dudek said Itkin used "ugly terms" and added that he "intended no harm when invoking those terms."

SkyTalk

by John Gilmore

This installment of Sky Talk will be the first of two parts covering Mars. Since the red planet has been an object of scrutiny through the ages, one column would not do justice to the vast amount of information available. I'm sure many of you will remember the spectacular landing of Pathfinder, July 4, 1997, on the Martian surface. This is just one of the many missions NASA has planned for the near future to explore Mars in greater detail. And, projecting into the future, a manned mission is in the planning stages. This of course is down the pike but at one time so was the first manned mission to the moon.

To begin with, just as we have done with the other planets, we will discover basic information about Mars in the first installment. In the second installment we learn about missions to Mars still on the drawing board and what scientists hope to learn from them.

Mars, the fourth planet from the sun, has attracted the attention of astronomers for nearly four hundred years. It was, you will remember, the early part of the seventeenth century that the telescope came on the scene. This instrument allowed astronomers like Galileo to detect surface markings on the red planet. Galileo's successors recorded their observations of Mars in drawing which, taken sequentially, provide a record of progress identifying surface features of the planet.

Named for the roman God of War, Mars is much like Earth. A day is nearly the same length as on Earth, 24 hours 37 minutes, and its year lasts 1.88 Earth years. Also, just as Earth's axis is tipped 23.5 degrees, the axis of Mars is tipped 24 degrees, so it has seasons. And Mars has two moons named Phobos and Deimos. But they are not like the Earth's moon. Both are small and irregular in shape. Phobos is six miles by nine miles in size and Deimos is four miles by five miles. These resemble asteroids but their true origin is unknown. Phobos is the most heavily cratered of the two (See image at right. Phobos appears above Deimos. Provided by JPL/NASA/GOV) while Deimos has a relatively smooth surface. Such small objects have very small escape velocities. For example, an athletic astronaut who could jump six feet high on the earth could jump over a mile and a half on Phobos. Mark McGuire and Sammy Sossa could literally launch a baseball into orbit around the Martian moon if given the opportunity (this is not one NASA'S planned projects though).

Mars' average distance from the sun is one hundred and forty million (140,000,000) miles and its equatorial diameter is approximately forty two hundred and fifty (4,250) miles. The red planet (so called for the iron rich composition of its surface material) has many distinguishing characteristics but two are of particular importance. First, Mars has possibly the largest volcano in the solar system. Olympus Mons towers 16 miles above the surface. In contrast, the largest volcano on Earth, Mauna Loa in Hawaii, rises only 6 miles above its base in the Pacific Ocean. And Valles Marineris, named for the Mariner spacecraft that first photographed it is a vast system of Martian canyons. The structure stretches nearly twenty-five hundred (2,500) miles along the surface of the planet. At its widest it is one-hundred and twenty (120) miles, and at its deepest it reaches down four (4) miles, four times the depth of the Grand Canyon.

At the present time Mars may be viewed in the east before and during dawn. There are many other characteristics about the Martian surface drawing attention of scientists. Next time we explore some of them.

Readers interested in obtaining further information or copies of astronomy charts may contact John Gilmore at (806) 363-6065, 1408 17th St., Hereford, TX 79045, or by Email at: ASTROX@wrt.net

Home ownership is great American leveraged investment

NEW YORK (AP) -- In spite of what you've heard and witnessed about the dangers of leveraging, there is at least one leveraged investment whose immediate future seems safe and secure.

In fact, based on the latest informed forecast, the potential for this investment seems to be improving, even robustly so, a distinct contrast to what you've been hearing about investments in general.

It is home ownership, especially a home of your own. The vast majority of people tend not to think of home ownership as a leveraged investment, but in the majority of cases it most certainly is. In fact, more highly leveraged than ownership of stocks.

In investing, leverage is getting the biggest bang for the dollar by purchasing with little down, borrowing the rest and hoping for a rising market. In stocks it is called margin, and often associated with risk.

In buying a house it's called a mortgage, and although it may involve a much greater percentage of borrowed money it is less commonly associated with risk. In fact, in most cases, it is the least risky investment of all.

Based on Fred Flick's latest forecast, it might become even less risky, a consequence of what he foresees as a continued decline in borrowing rates to as low as 6.1 percent for a 30-year fixed rate loan.

Five years ago such a forecast would have been thought of as a naive hope or a misprint, but in this instance it is neither. Flick heads economic research for the National Association of Realtors.

Accompanying this decline in borrowing costs is what Flick foresees as a continued rise in the price of housing, along with wage growth and low (but rising) inflation. It is a leveraging ideal.

Flick foresees the 30-year mortgage rate, which has averaged a very low 7 percent for the past three months, falling to 6.5 percent by the end of this year and to the 6.1 percent level by the end of 1999.

During that time, the national median existing-home price, expected to rise 5.8 percent to $131,300 for the year 1998, may tack on another 4.9 percent in 1999. He expects the new home price to rise 8 percent in 1999.

A forecast is nothing more than a projection based on existing data, and when it involves the economy, it means discounting obvious dangers, such as the possibility of recession and world financial turmoil.

Flick is aware of these risks, of course, and he concedes that economic growth is likely to slow, but says calamities are not showing up in the data.

The average gains also don't match those of Wall Street, where common stocks have delivered about 11 percent a year over the past half-century. Housing prices average 1 or 2 percentage points above inflation.

However, those increases disguise the reality. A $100,000 house that rises in one year to $106,000 is viewed as having gained 6 percent.

Election '98

Legislature once again a key battleground

AUSTIN (AP)—It's two years later, but the question is essentially the same. Can Republicans win control of the Texas House?

So far, the predictions are the same, too. Republicans say yes. Democrats say no.

The GOP updated its slogan. Last time it was "76 in '96," reflecting the number of seats needed for a majority in the 150-member House. This year it's "Eight in '98," noting the net increase they need to take control.

GOP chairwoman Susan Weddington is confident the party can pick up at least eight seats from the current 68, and possibly more.

"Every day actually makes a greater number of districts look viable for us," Ms. Weddington says.

Ms. Weddington declined to say which races Republicans considered shoo-ins but added, "It's just clear that we easily have eight."

Democrats are just as sure they don't.

"We're going to keep the House and we have a good shot at taking back the Senate," said Molly Beth Malcolm, chairwoman of the Texas Democratic Party. "The Republicans are doing the usual — they're bragging and they're just wrong."

Republicans took a 17-14 edge in the Texas Senate in 1996, their first majority in either chamber since Reconstruction. They're hoping to do the same in the House this year while retaining their margin in the Senate.

"I'm very confident that it's doable," said Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, head of the GOP's "Eight in '98" effort and chairman of the House Republican Caucus.

Mrs. Malcolm believes the Democratic Party has fielded enough strong candidates to keep control of the House — one of their last bastions of power in state government.

"I am very proud and pleased with all the people we have running," she said.

Democrats currently hold an 82-68 edge in the House. But the party is losing some powerful incumbents to retirement, including: Mark Stiles of Beaumont, Allen Hightower of Huntsville, Keith Oakley of Terrell, Allen Place of Gatesville and Pete Patterson of Brookston.

Republicans are targeting some of those open seats.

For example, with Oakley retiring, House District 4 is considered crucial. There's a good opportunity to pick up a seat in that district, where voters supported Bob Dole in the 1996 presidential election, said GOP spokesman Robert Black.

Democrat Bruce Wood, a retired school superintendent, faces Republican rancher Betty Brown in the race.

Republicans and Democrats also are eyeing Democrat Teddy Boehm's attempt to replace Rep. Dan Kubiak of Rockdale, who died in August. Also a Democrat, he served in the House from 1969 to 1983, then was elected again in 1990. His brother, L.B. Kubiak, served in the interim years.

Mrs. Boehm, a housewife, faces Republican Charles Jones, a Bryan small business owner and rancher, in the election.

For Republicans, keeping control of the Senate also is a major aim of the November elections. Sixteen of the 31 Senate seats are up, but nine incumbents are unopposed.

In the seven contested races, six incumbents are being challenged. But incumbent senators traditionally are considered difficult to unseat.

The seventh race is for an open seat currently held by Jerry Patterson, R-Houston, who lost a GOP primary bid for land commissioner. Republican Rep. Mike Jackson of La Porte faces Democrat Edward Wesley of Texas City in that race.

Mrs. Malcolm sees Senate District 4 as an opportunity for Democrats to regain some seats.

In that district, which runs along the northern Gulf Coast, Republican incumbent Mike Galloway of The Woodlands is battling Democrat David Bernsen of Beaumont.

Considered one of the closest Senate races, Bernsen, a former chairman of the Texas Transportation Commission, has good community and business support in his bid to recapture the seat which was once held by Democrats, Mrs. Malcolm said.

GOP spokesman Robert Black acknowledged that it's a tough race, but he said Republicans are confident.

"He's sticking to the issues and has a good chance," Black said.

Republican Gov. George W. Bush also may be buoying party hopes, though Ms. Weddington said the candidates are not counting on riding his popularity to victory.

"They're running on the issues of continuing the reforms started by Gov. Bush that the people of Texas want to talk about," she said.

Mrs. Malcolm concedes that Bush is a popular governor. "But we have strong candidates that aren't trying to run on anyone's coattails," she said.

Panel: Health care providers should undergo reevaluation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors and other health care providers should be periodically reviewed to make sure they are still competent, an expert commission says in a report contending that the interests of professionals too often outweigh consumer protection.

Most states require continuing education, but health care professionals should have their competence evaluated periodically after they are initially licensed to practice, the Pew Health Professions Commission recommends.

The commission also recommends more public representation on the boards that discipline doctors and other providers and a better way of resolving conflicts among providers about who is qualified to perform what service.

Groups representing doctors were cool to the recommendations, saying the current system works pretty well. Periodically testing doctor competence may sound good, but it would be expensive and complicated to do in a meaningful way, they said.

Overall, the report concludes, consumer protection often conflicts with the economic interests of health care professionals, including doctors, nurses, pharmacists, dentists and other providers.

The nation has only minimal standards governing health care workers, said former Sen. George Mitchell, chairman of the commission.

"Quite frankly, these minimal standards have served only to make certain that the most egregiously incompetent health professionals are prohibited from practicing," he said. "This is not enough."

The report recommends that professional boards charged with disciplining health professionals should have at least one-third of their members from the public, to make sure boards are not just protecting their own.

But the problem is not just in removing the worst people; it's making sure everyone else meets at least minimal standards.

Once a doctor, nurse or other provider is licensed to practice, he or she rarely faces another test of competence. States may require ongoing education, but there is no guarantee that anything was actually learned or that the appropriate courses were taken.

At the same time, medicine is constantly producing information about new techniques, drugs and practices, and it is hard for patients to know which doctors are up to date.

The report comes as lawmakers and consumers are looking more carefully at the quality of care.

Congress debated a "patients' bill of rights" this year that sought to ensure that health maintenance organizations were delivering quality care, and there are stepped-up efforts in the private sector to get more information about the quality of doctors, hospitals and health plans.

The commission hopes that this new focus gives doctors and other providers an interest in proving they are good at what they do, said its executive director, Edward H. O'Neil, director of the San Francisco-based Center for the Health Professions.

"Now there's really something in it for the doctor, for the nurse, to be able to say on a regular basis, 'I have demonstrated competence. I remain up to date on things,'" he said. "It should make them feel more secure in their own jobs."

Some specialty boards require competency reviews when doctors get recertified, and all of them have pledged to add reviews for newly certified doctors.

Bob Jones University: Gay alumni, stay away

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Bob Jones University has a message for gay alumni: Stay away or be arrested.

The Christian fundamentalist school threatened Thursday to arrest all gay graduates who return to campus. But the university then partially backed down, permitting gays to visit its art museum since a ban could affect the gallery's tax-exempt status.

Wayne Mouritzen, a retired minister and Bob Jones graduate, got a letter banning him from campus because officials discovered he is gay.

The letter, signed by Bob Jones' dean of students, said: "With grief we must tell you that as long as you are living as a homosexual, you, of course, would not be welcome on the campus and would be arrested for trespassing if you did visit."

Mouritzen, 60, who said he came to grips with being gay only six months ago, was shocked to read the letter.

Running scoreboard provides operator way to get best seat

By Richard Tijerina
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

BEDFORD — Bill Curtis hasn't gone anywhere. After finishing his 27-year tour of duty with the Hurst-Eules-Bedford school district four years ago, the longtime area coach and administrator hardly has faded from the spotlight.

Curtis, 65, is right where he wants to be — at Pennington Field on crisp fall Friday nights. Soon, as an inductee into the H-E-B Sports Hall of Fame, he will be there forever.

For 10 years, Curtis has lit up the scoreboard at Pennington more than any running back at Trinity High School or quarterback from L.D. B all ever has.

Tommy Maddox has nothing on Curtis. This year's Trinity twosome of Robert Lolohea and Brent Ingram cannot touch him.

Lightning-quick reflexes that help him scoot past defensive linemen? Not anymore. A cannon arm that rockets footballs past defensive backs? No — although maybe Curtis can do some long-range damage with his 6-iron.

Curtis has been the scoreboard operator at Pennington Field for 10 years. And nobody does it better.

How many Friday nights has he worked the board? How many playoff games, key district showdowns and memorable nights? One hundred? One hundred and fifty?

"I have always enjoyed football and I wanted a good seat," Curtis said.

He could hardly have a better one: high atop Pennington, hidden from the crowds in the haven of the press box, keeping track of the time, referees, timeouts and scores.

Working the clock was a natural progression for Curtis, who stood the test of time in the H-E-B school district. He spent seven years as a coach there, including stints as head football coach at Central Junior High and Hurst Junior High, and assistant football coach and track coach at Trinity High School.

Curtis also worked off the sidelines. He spent five years as an assistant principal at Harwood Junior High and L.D. Bell High School and was principal of Eules Junior High for 15 years.

All that may or may not work its way onto Curtis' plaque, which in February will find a home at Pennington next to the other legends of the H-E-B Sports Hall of Fame, from Tim Edwards to John Reddell. Curtis will be there, too.

But if not for a twist of fate, Curtis' life may have taken a much different path.

After an outstanding high school track career in Oklahoma, Curtis went to TCU, where he was a standout in football and track. Though his specialty was hurdling, the San Francisco 49ers thought enough of Curtis' speed and ability to catch a football to draft him in 1957.

A 24-year-old Curtis arrived, wide-eyed, at 49ers training camp that summer at St.

"I have always enjoyed football, and I wanted a good seat."

-- Bill Curtis

Mary's College in California. Quarterback John Brodie was tossing the football on one end of the practice field and Y.A. Tittle was next to him.

Curtis, however, never caught an NFL pass from either Brodie or Tittle.

During camp, Curtis sustained a torn Achilles' tendon. Red Hickey, the 49ers coach who later became a scout for the Cowboys, had a team rule that all players must walk the 250 yards from the practice field to the dressing rooms.

That included Curtis, crumpled on the field like a folded Kleenex.

But trainers rescued him. They loaded him into a station wagon and drove the injured tight end in, past Hickey and the veterans.

"Hickey wanted me to be fined," Curtis said. "And when they were taking me in on the station wagon, all those linemen started hollering, 'Hey! Look at that rookie riding!'"

Curtis knew he was hurt. He just didn't know how badly. And he certainly didn't know it would mean the end of his playing days.

"I thought I was hit by a ball behind my leg," he said. "The receivers had to run more than anyone else. They started us from a standup position for the sprints, then shouted for us to go. When I snapped my foot back, the doctor said it was like holding a string loose in your hand, then popping it."

"It popped real loud like a rifle shot," he said. "The trainer thought I had broken my leg at first from the sound."

Curtis underwent surgery to have the heel repaired. But he never played again.

After that day at St. Mary's, the closest Curtis would come to football was from the sidelines.

He landed in Graham as an assistant coach the next year, then moved to Fort Worth as an assistant at North Side High School for seven years before coming to H-E-B to stay.

Curtis rarely thinks back to his brief days as a 49er. He spends most of his retirement playing golf at his favorite course, Rolling Hills Country Club in Arlington.

"I've had no regrets, some disappointments, but the good Lord has been good to me," Curtis said. "I feel what I'm doing is important. People don't realize what we have to do."

HARVESTED

Curtis, Pampa defense shut down Hereford's district-leading offense in 13-3 district victory

By Bob Varnette
Hereford Brand Sports Writer

Hereford's Eddie Lacey didn't get quite the welcome he would have liked.

Pampa senior defensive tackle Tyson Curtis made sure of it.

Lacey — making his first varsity start at quarterback for the Whitefaces in the absence of Cody Hodges — was sacked five times by Curtis, and the Harvesters held the district's top offense to only 94 yards in beating Hereford 13-3 Friday night at Harvester Stadium in District 3-4A football.

"We felt like our backs were to the wall tonight," Curtis said. "We knew especially after last week that we had to give everything."

The win moves Pampa back into the race for the district title with two games remaining. Pampa upped its record to 6-2 overall and 2-1 in district; Hereford fell to 6-2 and 2-1.

Curtis was everywhere giving everything. In addition to the five sacks, Curtis had several quarterback pressures and also partially blocked a Jose Martinez punt, and contributed about a dozen tackles.

"Obviously, it was several things that won us the game," Pampa coach Dennis Cavalier said. "But Tyson Curtis making a lot of hits was a big factor. He had lots of penetration tonight keeping pressure on them. It was great pressure on his part."

Adding to the Whitefaces' woes — namely Curtis — was a lack of intensity, particularly on the offensive line.

After that first drive, Lacey spent much of the rest of the game running for his life, contantly having to tuck the ball away and run after dropping back to pass.

"We had some pass protection problems," Hereford coach Craig Yenser said. "I think it all goes back to intensity level. They weren't doing anything different than what we've seen all year. It wasn't really the plan as much as how it was executed."

Hereford's execution looked great — for one play. Slade Hodges — who had been shut out in the last two district games — hauled in a perfectly thrown deep sideline pass from Lacey for a 29-yard gain to the Harvester 38.

But the Pampa defense, which was the top-ranked unit in District 3-4A entering the contest, stiffened. The Harvesters turned Hereford away on a fourth-and-one at the Pampa 29 when Curtis sacked Lacey for a six-yard loss.

"We wanted to put pressure on them, especially after we didn't get much pressure on Dumas last week," Curtis said. "We practiced all week on getting pressure on the quarterback. We wanted to rattle him because he was a backup quarterback to get him off his guard."

Hereford quarterback Eddie Lacey gets it high and low Friday night as Pampa's Tyson Curtis (66) and Jared White (32) get to Lacey during a District 3-4A game at Harvester Stadium. Pampa won 13-3.

Talking about collarbone not Aikman favorite activity

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Troy Aikman took three quick steps and zinged a 15-yard out route to Michael Irvin. It was like old times again at the Dallas Cowboys practice field.

This once familiar scene was replayed several times during the Dallas Cowboys bye week, providing a preview of coming attractions for a team that has survived five weeks without its leader.

"Jason Garrett did a great job and my hat's off to him but we've got our quarterback back again,"

Irvin said.

Aikman, who stoically stalked the sidelines while Garrett went 3-2 as a starter, should have a collarbone that's nearly healed when the Cowboys take the field Nov. 2 in Philadelphia.

"The bone is healed, I feel fine, and I'm a little tired of talking about it," said Aikman. "It's been hard to watch from the sidelines regardless of whether the team was struggling or doing well."

Aikman will be expected to inject some consistency into new coach Chan Gailey's team, which has been like watching a roller coaster in an up-down-up-down 4-3 start.

"I'd like to think we will play well but I'm not naive enough to think all the problems will be solved just because I'm back," Aikman said.

The bye week came at a perfect time for the Cowboys who cratered in Chicago in Garrett's final game. Dallas converted on only 2 of 12 third-down situations and had to settle for two field goals on three visits inside the Bears 10-yard line, leading to a 13-10 loss.

"We have a lot of things to work on," said guard Nate Newton. "We've got to pick it up if we want to be where we want to be at the end of the season. We've got to fix all the mistakes we've been making. Nobody is satisfied with our 4-3 start. We could have won 'em all. Show me somebody satisfied with our losses and I don't want him around me."

Aikman is worried about being rusty when he comes back. So, he has worked hard to get back in the groove.

"I'm taking all the snaps because I need all the work I can get," said Aikman, who was injured in the Cowboys second game of the season against Denver. "Jason has been taking the snaps for five weeks so he doesn't need any work."

Aikman said the Cowboys offensive problems are easy to spot.

"It's a game of third downs and we've been in too many third and 10s. If you don't do well on first and second down, it's hard to convert on third down," Aikman said.

The Dallas defense needs fixing, too.

Cornerback Kevin Smith, who was beaten on a touchdown pass in the Chicago game, has become a frequent target of quarterbacks trying to avoid Deion Sanders. In the past, Smith has handled himself well. This year he's been responsible for critical lapses.

Dallas coach Chan Gailey said Smith may have lost his confidence.

"We're going to take a good, hard look at the cornerback situation," Gailey said. "The problem may be Smith's confidence. I don't see it as being a physical problem at all."

Assistant coach Mike Zimmer said Smith, who hasn't had an interception in 19 games, is still capable of coming out of his funk.

"I'm concerned but I told Kevin to keep his head up and that I believe in him 100 percent," Zimmer said.

Barrett honored by SAC

From staff reports
LUBBOCK - A pair of former District 1-4A volleyball standouts were the recipients of Sooner Athletic Conference honors this week.

The Lubbock Christian University teammates were honored by the conference for the second time this year.

Barrett - a 5-6 sophomore from Hereford - was named league setter of the week for recording 80 assists, eight kills and three aces in the Lady Chaps' two wins last week. For the season, Barrett has 1,062 assists, 103 kills and 28 aces.

Ratliff - a 6-1 sophomore middle blocker from Dumas - was named SAC player of the week for recording 29 kills, eight blocks assists and three solo blocks in two matches.

Hereford wins frosh contest

From staff reports
AMARILLO - Barry Kriegshauser scored a pair of touchdowns Thursday night as Hereford defeated Amarillo Palo Duro 28-20 in freshman football.

Kriegshauser scored on two one-yard touchdown runs.

Jeffrey Marquez caught a 48-yard scoring pass from Kriegshauser in the second quarter as the Whitefaces rallied from a 14-point first-quarter deficit.

Hereford will host Amarillo Caprock in a freshman game Thursday. Kickoff will be at 5 p.m.

the night. The Harvesters took over on the Hereford 27 and on the first play quarterback Justin Roark found Joel Barker for a touchdown pass and a 13-0 advantage.

After that, Pampa's offense went the conservative route.

"We certainly didn't want to jeopardize the outcome of the game," Cavalier said. "But Hereford played great defense. We just weren't able to sustain drives after the first quarter. It was a little bit of both."

After that shaky two-minute span in the first quarter, the Hereford defense was equally stout. Pampa generated only 221 yards of total offense.

But Curtis and the Harvester defense made sure the lead would stand up. Despite frequent double teams and occasional triple teams, Curtis still managed to wreak havoc on the Hereford offensive game plan,

"I don't like the triple teams," Curtis said. "You can't easily get through a triple team, but it makes me feel good. I'm freeing up my teammates to make plays."

The Harvester defense was stifling. On seven of their first 10 plays, Hereford lost yardage.

"It wasn't only the pressure," Lacey said. "We didn't execute well anywhere. They brought guys through the middle and we couldn't pick them up."

Greg Ewing was looking to get back on track after Amarillo Palo Duro had broken his string of 100-yard games. He got one yard on seven carries.

"They came out in a five-man front, they had lost the linebacker (Brent Phelps)," Yenser said. "They pretty much got in the gaps and came at us. We struggled with that early and made some adjustments."

"We're going to have to keep working and trying to get better."

Alkman

Smith said he's been close to making a big play.

"It's a game of making plays and I haven't done it," Smith said. "But I think I will."

Despite losing Alkman for five games, the Cowboys still lead the NFC East by a game over the New York Giants, a team Dallas defeated 31-7 with Garrett at quarterback.

Fullback Daryl Johnston said the bye week will be a perfect retraining time for the Cowboys.

"We're still trying to find ourselves as a team," Johnston said. "But we could be a good team because we've improved in a lot of categories offensively. We're running the ball much better than last year."

Galley said the team is still a mystery to him.

"We're potentially a good team," he said. "We just don't have an identity yet. I think we have a chance if we can just find the right ingredients to put everything together."

Auburn's Bowden resigns as coach

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) - In the end, Terry Bowden just couldn't take the whispering anymore.

Amid constant speculation that his job as Auburn's football coach was in jeopardy, Bowden resigned Friday, a day before he was supposed to lead his team against Louisiana Tech.

The sudden resignation ended a highly successful 5 1/2-year tenure that was tarnished this season by the team's worst start in 52 years.

"There continues to be a very serious and divisive public debate about the certainty of my status at Auburn University," Bowden said in a statement. "It is because of my love for these players and of Auburn University that I cannot allow this painful controversy to continue."

"Someone must be willing to step up to the plate and put closure to this endless debate if Auburn is going to move forward. I believe that someone must now be me."

Defensive coordinator Bill Oliver was named interim coach for the rest of the season.

Oliver, speaking from the team's hotel in Lanett, said the players' reaction to the news was as expected.

"Any time anything is sudden and shocking, and you're dealing with kids 18, 19 and 20 years old, it tends to be emotional," he said.

Oliver said athletic director David Housel asked him to take the interim job Friday afternoon, but "I think there had been some speculation that Terry was trying to work some things out about three days ago."

Bowden's father, Florida State coach Bobby Bowden, said his son discussed the decision with him earlier this week.

"Evidently, he's gone ahead and resigned," the elder Bowden said Friday from Atlanta. "I think it was a 'leave now or get fired at the end of the year' situation."

"The only thing I did was give him everything that could possibly happen - every scenario I could think of. I just told him to be sure he was doing the right thing."

Auburn is 1-5, a sharp decline from Bowden's first five seasons, which were unmatched in Auburn history. He won his first 20 games at the school, the most consecutive victories at the start of a Division I-A career.

Three share Disney lead

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) - John Huston, Davis Love III and Glen Day were among those who survived a scary day on the greens to lead at 137, which tied the Disney record for highest 36-hole score set in 1973 by John Mahaffey.

You won't see 7 under very often after the first couple of days," said Huston, who won the 1992 event with a Disney-record 26-under 262 total.

And with 49 players at 2-under 142 or better, it set the stage for what could be a wild weekend.

A "true blue" adventure with Beau the wonder-Labrador

Peters Ammunition has run an ad through the years that is bound to be one of their most effective. It features a photo of a big anvil-headed black Labrador retriever with a mallard logo-adorned box of Peters shotshells gripped in his mouth. The ad copy reads simply: "True Blues."

This is a heart-tugging picture for anybody who has ever been owned by a black Lab... We think about lots of good days wrapped around those familiar old blue Peters shells, and captured in the expression of that Lab in the photo is the no-quit heart of these magic dogs that live to please you.

Beau and I are coming up on our fourth season of pheasant hunting together in December. We are still trying to train one another. Though we are not exactly calm, yet, one or the other of us seems to be getting a little better at this...I figure it's him.

We are not field trial material...no points for style or flawless obedience on our walks in town or visits to Rhonda the vet, but we have a decent grasp of what's expected in this bird hunting business.

My arms almost drag the ground some days from the black dog stretching them as he strains at the leash on our "walk the dog" excursions. Beau is not much on polished manners on these walks. We have sort-of learned to accommodate one another so neither of us gets hurt, but the dog mostly walks me.

Something amazing happens, though, when we go to the grain fields and the woolly stretches of overgrown pastures in the countryside. A way from traffic worries, I can unsnap the leash and cast the dog ahead of me. I like to watch the black dog run. Somehow, he has learned the extent of shotgun range, and doesn't roam beyond it. He works fast, snooting around clusters of kochia and smartweed, tangles of grass, and through corn and sorghum stalks, his nose locking like radar on the trails of pheasants scurrying ahead of us. Beau windshield-wipers back and forth in gun range in front of me, working rows of stalks to either side. He will look back over his shoulder, stop and turn to me from time to time, or even come back to my side, checking to ensure that I am dutifully trailing him in this enterprise. Satisfied, he grins and bounds ahead again, nose to the ground, tail high. The great rudder of a tail moves constantly, a metronome measuring his enthusiasm for this sport of "snooting around."

I'm not sure just how we learned to work together like this. It sort of just happened. A Lab's instinct is a powerful thing. I try to point it in the right direction and keep out of the way.

Beau does his birdy hunker at the edge of a willow cluster, pokes his nose in some shoots, and a rooster cackles and bursts from the tangle. The dog leaps skyward, runs after the rooster a few steps, and stops to give me a puzzled look. Decembers have taught him that gunfire should follow his flushes of long-tailed birds. This is a practice run. No shooting. Sorry, Beau Boy. He shrugs off my inaction and bounds away, seeking more scent-filled adventure.

How does a dog know what you are saying to him, and what you want? I call his name and he turns to look and listen. There is incredible intensity in his gaze as he awaits my bidding. I signal him to work stalks to my right. He watches my arm, something clicks in his head, and he is off to that side, snooting and slathering. Beau did his first pheasant work for me at just eight months old. He learned from walking in the line of hunters and watching older, more experienced dogs. I saw a rooster in his row and got him to run ahead. He bumped into the bird by accident. The rooster's cackling rise and the shot that soon followed left him unperturbed. It took him a few seconds to puzzle it out, but once he found the "handle," he fetched-back the downed bird, just as he was born to do.

We got into a frenzied flurry of rising roosters and booming shotguns at the end of a sorghum field on one of his early hunts. So many ringnecks were flushing, so many shots going off, that even the veteran dogs were circling in confusion in an impossible effort to mark the nearly-constant drops.

With eight roosters down, hunters hustled into the maize stalks to help the dogs sort-out the fallen game. I dropped Beau's leash and he bounded in there.

Making repeated sweeps, the older dogs started bringing birds to hand. Beau gamely fetched one to me and headed back in. The retrievers added up--five, six, seven...One left that we couldn't find. All hands and the two older dogs waded in, making circles and searching where we had marked the rooster down.

We couldn't find the bird. I couldn't find Beau. We retreated to the turnrow, circled, and looked again for the bird. I called for Beau again, then happened to look down to my left.

Beau had come, unnoticed, to my side from somewhere in the sorghum stubble. There he sat, the promising rookie, with the eighth rooster in his mouth...Gosh, was I proud! It was one of those "true blue" moments that make Lab people all mushy...

Armey: no backlash on impeachment

GRAY, Tenn. (AP) — House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said Friday he expects no backlash against Republicans Nov. 3 over possible impeachment of President Clinton.

Armey said Democrats are trying to get people to believe that because they are concerned about the Monica Lewinsky scandal.

"They're just a very desperate group of people right now," Armey said. "They're making projections that are a little silly."

Republicans will pick up seats in Congress, he predicted.

Armey, who has relatives in Washington County, ate lunch with U.S. Rep. Bill Jenkins, R-Tenn., and several members of Gov. Don Sundquist's staff at the Sit-N-Bull Restaurant.

Jenkins, who is considered the favorite on Nov. 3 over Democrat Kay White, shook hands with a few of the diners.

Jenkins, a Judiciary Committee member, promised later he will be fair in looking at the impeachment evidence, as will others in Congress.

"I think ultimately both sides will have to treat it outside the realm of politics," Jenkins said.

Armey agreed.

"In the end, everybody is going to cast a vote of duty and conscience," he said. "This is a sad responsibility none of us want."

But Richard Gilbert of Gray, a restaurant patron, was skeptical.

"Politics always plays a big role. It's a sign of the times," said Gilbert after he had finished lunch.

"The only issue I've got with Clinton is whether he lied under oath."

Charles Nave of Gray, another diner, said he likes Jenkins, but he likes Clinton too.

"I think he just got caught up in something all of them they've been doing all along," Nave said. "I think he should go ahead and run the country like he's been doing."

Armey said most people he talks to are embarrassed about the discussion of Clinton's sexual relationship with former intern Lewinsky.

He also said people are glad that the budget emphasized the national defense.

"There's a lot of concern about defense readiness," he said.

Quality performers goal of HCCA board

Hereford Community Concert Association board met recently to plan for the 1999-2000 season.

A New York Community Concert representative was in attendance and gave details on each artist, group and attraction. The budget for Hereford Community Concert Association is set as a result of the annual membership campaign which is ongoing throughout the season.

There are many talented professional artists that tour with the Community Concert Association. Some are not available because of expense or staging requirements and others do not tour in the West Texas area.

"There is still a vast selection that is available for Hereford and the surrounding area and the board is careful to select performances that would hopefully be enjoyed for the coming season," Betty Wolle, HCCA board member, said.

In choosing the concerts for a season, Wolle explained, the HCCA board evaluates such things as local audience appeal, staging requirements (stage size, lighting, sound), dressing room facilities, electrical requirements, set-up and rehearsal and cost.

The selections that are most attractive often do not meet one or more of the criteria.

The end result generally reflects what the board feels will be an entertaining evening of quality performers at a reasonable price and just a fit for Hereford, Wolle said.

Concerts chosen for the 1999-2000 season were The Brothers Four (internationally known as America's Musical Ambassadors to the World), The Cassidys (five Irish brothers who are all medical doctors that present the sound of traditional and 20th century Ireland), and Robert Trentham (tenor who brings alive stories and songs of the Civil War in a dramatic, musical setting).

The concert season will also include a performance by the Amarillo Little Theatre.

The first concert of the current season is The Side Street Strutters at 7:30 p.m. on Nov. 5 in Hereford High School auditorium. This is jazz and pop in the tradition of New Orleans Dixieland and the Blues.

Season memberships may be purchased at the door of this concert. Memberships are $20 for adult, $50 for family and $10 for students. These prices include four concerts for the season.

Roberts stresses record importance at meeting of genealogical society

Cleon Roberts, speaker at this month's meeting of the Deaf Smith County Genealogy Society, urged members to be alert for genealogical information to be gleaned from business records and livestock brand records.

He stated that such records, especially business records, are often found stored in museums and libraries, and are often uncatalogued. Their genealogical value is often underestimated by the staff as well as by family members, and they may be in danger of being destroyed.

However, they provide definite evidence of the presence of the person or family in the area, and may indicate whether they planned to stay in the area or move on. Mail orders, for example, would indicate more permanent plans. Sometimes account books even have entered in them important events such as births or deaths of family or close friends.

Persons arriving in an area registered stock brands within a few days to protect their investment. Therefore, brands help establish time of arrival of the family in a given area. Brands frequently underwent minor changes with each succeeding generation of the family, and thus help establish familial relationships.

In the business session, Miles Caudle, chairman of the nominating committee, reported the nomination of the following slate of officers for the new year:

President, L.J. Clark; first vice-president and program chairman, Donita Rule; secretary, Wilma Clark; and treasurer, Nolan Grady. These officers were unanimously elected.

A request had been received for information about a John Decker who died in Hereford on Dec. 14, 1965. Anyone having information about him may contact L.J. Clark.

Members voted to place a book in the genealogical room of the library as a memorial to Mildred Sheffy, long-time member of the society.

The final meeting of 1998 for the Deaf Smith County Genealogical Society will be Nov. 16 at K-Bob's. Spouses and other guests are invited to the dutch-treat dinner. New officers will be installed.

Members present were Nolan Grady, Norma McKee, Nell Norvell, Jean Beene, Dorothy Sanders, L.J. Clark, Wilma Clark, Donita Rule, Roberts and Caudle.

"Those who bring sunshine to the lives of others cannot keep it from themselves."

American history students taught by Dr. Drake have been involved in a study of the European Feudal System. This system was one reason for the immigration to America by many Europeans. After becoming acquainted with the terms of the period and viewing the film "First Knight," students wrote creative papers that depicted life during that period of time.

Yellow Team science classes are studying the scientific method. As part of this study, they will build and test fly paper airplanes and correctly put together a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. (You are a brave soul, Mrs. Hendrickson!)

Yellow Team Texas history and English classes have completed a joint project about specific subregions of Texas. This project included making a miniposter and a writing assignment.

Reading teachers are introducing novels to students and after reading these, the students take accelerated reading tests on computers. These students also spend two days each week in the computer lab to work on specific reading skills.

Yellow Team math students who completed 200 math problems collected money from their sponsors and then donated the money to the St. Jude Math-A-Thon event. Students who met this goal included: Vanessa Campos, Analisa Fernandez, Tiffany Fixsen, Michelle Galvan, Ayllsa Garcia, Kali Gerber, Angel Granada, Thomas Hammerbeck, Maria Hernandez, Sarah Lawlis, Landry Loyd, Crystal Lopez, Jeremy Maldonado, Amber Meyer, Drew Middleton, Jose Pacheco, Crystal Velasco, and Gina Zamora.

Geography Bee students will be receiving study booklets this week. We hope to have a very serious group this year and we have 22 students signed up to participate. Meeting times and places will also be announced very soon.

Few responses are being made to progress reports. If parents will respond to these reports, teachers will be able to help the child even more. When students know that the parents and teachers are working together, their work and attitude usually improve.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I'm writing to respond to Lt. Gen. Quinn (U.S. Army, Ret.), who implied in his letter that our country is on the brink of collapse because of the "recent epidemic of immorality." What's his definition of immorality? Did he say?

In my opinion, immorality is slavery, child labor, Jim Crow laws and the subjugation of half the population -- women -- by refusing to allow them to vote or have control over their own bodies. We have rectified most of these injustices, but we must remain vigilant to make sure they don't resurface. As I see it, we are on the ascendancy as a society, not the decline.

If Lt. Gen. Quinn defines "immorality" as violence and promiscuity, there actually has been no increase. The REPORTING of violence and promiscuity, however, is definitely on the rise, thanks to the miracle of TV, combined with ruthless competition between news outlets to get the story out first. If doomsayers keep looking at our world as crumbling, eventually, it will. -- Diana in Santa Clarita, Calif.

Dear Diane: I agree wholeheartedly. Keep reading for more:

From Portland, Ore.: I'm writing about Lt. Gen. Quinn's statement that every great civilization has a 200-year cycle. If that is so, many people would say we, as a nation, are somewhere between "complacency" and "apathy."

As the mother of two young sons, I cannot buy into the inevitability of this historical progression. I have met too many wonderful teachers, health-care workers, business people and parents to believe there is no hope for our country. Without optimism, we might as well cut to the chase and go right to the last stage -- bondage.

Napa, Calif.: I agree with Lt. Gen. Quinn. In all of recorded history, there have been only two democracies that survived longer than 200 years -- the ancient Athenian republic and the United States. The Athenians didn't last much beyond that, and I doubt that we will, either.

Hagerstown, Md.: The quote about civilization sent to you by Lt. Gen. Quinn was written by Alexander Fraser Tytler (1748-1813) and appeared in "The Decline and Fall of the Athenian Republic." Tytler also said a democracy exists only until the voters start selecting the candidates who promise the most financial benefits. Then, the democracy collapses and is followed by a dictatorship.

Pensacola, Fla.: Once our society reached the "abundance" stage, everyone became selfish. Professional athletes who make millions are striking for more money, and everyone sues at the drop of a hat.

Salt Lake City: Lt. Gen. Quinn sees an epidemic of immorality. Georges Clemenceau, prime minister of France during World War I, said, "America is the only nation in history which miraculously has gone directly from barbarism to degeneration without the usual interval of civilization." Excuse me, gentlemen. I have traveled all over the world and witnessed squalor, hunger, corruption and savagery. People don't know how lucky they are to live in the United States of America.

New York: Cheating on your spouse is not exactly a "recent" development. The difference is the media goes into everything these days because sex sells -- the consequences be damned.

Alta Loma, Calif.: I fear Lt. Gen. Quinn may be so preoccupied with sexual morality that he fails to recognize that America is actually the most moral nation in the world. Franklin Roosevelt initiated Social Security. They called him a "socialist" and a "communist." Medicare became law in 1966 and saved millions of lives. Our country was one of the first to outlaw spousal abuse. Two hundred years ago, an unfaithful wife could be whipped publicly, but a man who worked 9-year-olds in a factory 12 hours a day was considered "shrewd." Where's the justice, please?

Dear Alta Loma: You had the last word. I'm with you! Bravo! To find out more about Ann Landers and read her past columns, visit the Creators Syndicate web page at www.creators.com. ANN LANDERS (R) COPYRIGHT 1998 CREATORS SYNDICATE, INC.

— YOUR EYES —

Are you at risk for Glaucoma?

In the United States, chronic glaucoma is one of the leading causes of blindness. If detected and treated early, it need not cause blindness or even severe loss of vision. Unfortunately, most people do not notice any symptoms (a gradual loss of peripheral vision is the biggest sign) or chronic glaucoma until there is permanent damage. For this reason, it's important to be aware of the following risk factors.

- Age. After the age 40, your chances of developing glaucoma increase.
- Family History. Glaucoma runs in families.
- Diabetes. Diabetes are at greater risk of developing glaucoma.
- Ethnicity. Certain ethnic groups have a greater chance of developing glaucoma. Be sure to check.

If you have any or several of these risk factors, be sure to get an annual eye exam after the age of 35.

Couple exchanges vows in Lewisville ceremony

Kara Ida Lenore Ford of Dallas and Derek Vincent Mason of Dallas exchanged marriage vows Oct. 17 at First United Methodist Church in Lewisville.

The bride is the daughter of Ken and Noreen Ford of Wylie. Parents of the bridegroom are Paul and Reni Mason of Hereford.

Rev. John Mollet officiated. Maid of honor was Katrina Elkins, sister of the bride. Michael Campos was best man. Bridesmaids were Kelley Perkins, Sharia Miller, Jennifer Jorns and Marisa Cotresi.

Serving as groomsmen were Andy Kalka, Mike Mason, Hunter Carmichael and Michael Brandon.

Guests were seated by Brandon Kolb, Kyle Hansen and Tab Hathaway.

The flower girl was Kyli Mason, the niece of the groom and daughter of Mike and Jana Mason.

Mason Luallen, nephew of the groom and son of Kevin and Paula Luallen, was ring bearer. Music was provided by Margo Dillard for vocalist Curtis Elkins.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a white satin and tulle gown of embroidered lace and pearls. The full-length skirt was edged in embroidery and pearls, accented by a chapel-length train.

She carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies.

Bridal attendants wore periwinkle blue evening dresses.

Guests attended the ceremony from Hereford, Lubbock, Houston, Austin, Oklahoma, Arizona and Canada.

The couple was honored with a reception at Sneaky Pete's Resort in Lewisville.

After a wedding trip to Cozumel, Mexico, they will be residing in Dallas.

The bride attended Texas Tech University and is employed by Teligent Communications as an account manager.

The groom graduated from Hereford High School, attended Texas Tech University and is employed by AT&T as a computer programmer.

Studying the chart—Ford Family Community Education Club members, from left, Rhonda Urbanczyk, Mary Brorman and Mona Gee, study a chart entitled "What Difference Does Early Detection Make?" This material will be shared in next week's Extension News column. County Extension Agent Beverly Harder has presented programs for each of the FCE clubs during October on the importance of accepting responsibility for breast health. Life-like models of breasts have assisted women in learning what breast lumps feel like as well as the difficulty in detecting lumps in fibrous breast tissue. This program can be booked by groups in the county by calling 364-3573.

Pink ribbons have graced the appearance of many people during the month of October. The ribbons signify Breast Cancer Awareness Month. It is a special time to focus on the concerns and responsibilities of women as they begin or continue to monitor their breast health.

Risk factors for breast cancer include:

Age: As women reach the age of 50, chances for breast cancer increase significantly. However, younger women also have a risk in breast cancer as well.

Genetic Predisposition: Family history of breast cancer does seem to increase a woman's risk. However, 80% of women who get breast cancer do not have a family history of breast cancer.

Race: Caucasian women have the highest incidence of breast cancer in Texas, followed by African American, Hispanic and Asian women.

Personal History: Other cancers, particularly endometrial or ovarian cancers, increase the risk of breast cancer. Early onset of menstrual cycle or late menopause is associated with higher risk and birth of a first child after the age of 30 seems to indicate higher rates.

Diet: Diet and particularly the association of diets high in fat appear to indicate a significantly higher risk in breast cancer.

There are three steps for detecting breast cancer at its earliest stage:

Regular mammogram according to the American Cancer Society guidelines.

Breast examination (BE) by a physician during regular medical checkups.

Breast Self Examination (BSE) monthly or more often as directed by a woman's physician.

There is no reason for a woman to put herself at risk of breast cancer. Women must address their own personal risk factors and what can be done to reduce them.

Red Cross Update

American Red Cross expects this hurricane season to be the costliest ever due to Hurricane Georges and recent tropical storms that have ravaged Texas' coast, approximately one-fourth of the state, and around the nation.

Steve Crisman, executive director of the American Red Cross of Central Texas, says, "The recent tornadoes and the wide-spread flooding throughout much of Texas has not only taken its toll in Texas, but on the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund as well. This Fund is made up of donations from the American people and is used to help families with emergency and long-term needs. Community support is needed to begin rebuilding this Fund."

This hurricane season the American Red Cross has responded to more than 14 major disasters including Hurricane Georges and Tropical Storms Charley and Frances. The severity and extent of these disasters as well as local emergencies, have overburdened the fund used by the Red Cross to provide disaster relief assistance.

In response to the unprecedented number of hurricane and tropical storm disasters this year, American Red Cross President Elizabeth Dole has launched a $50 million Hurricane Season Fund to ensure the organization's tradition of assistance to disaster victims.

All American Red Cross disaster assistance is free, made possible by voluntary donations of time and money from the American people. Contributions can be made to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund by calling 1-800-HELP-NOW or 1-800-257-7575 (Spanish). Contributions to the Disaster Relief Fund may also be sent to your local Red Cross Chapter at P.O. Box 1371, Hereford, or brought by our office at 224 North Main or call 364-3761.

Red Cross workers continue to provide emergency shelter, meals, emergency health services and emotional support for victims of the Central Texas tornadoes and floods. Last night, the Red Cross sheltered 1,455 men, women and children, at 33 shelters located throughout the central and southeastern parts of Texas.

The Greater Amarillo Chapter will host a Disaster Training Days on Oct. 24 and 25 for individuals from the community who are interested in going to South Texas to assist in the Red Cross Relief activities. This training will include Intro to Disaster Services, Mass Care as Overview, Shelter Operations, and Standard First Aid. There are only 15 slots available in disaster training if you have anyone who is interested in signing up. Advanced registration is required.

Water Safety Instructors Classes: All classes will be held in Amarillo on Nov. 6 from 6:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. and Nov. 7 from 9:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Cost for the class is $120.

Ten years ago: First lady Nancy Reagan, addressing a U.N. committee, said the United States was responsible for its own drug problem, and charged that every American drug user was "an accomplice to every criminal act" committed by drug barons.

Five years ago: Canada's Liberal Party ended nine years of rule by the Progressive Conservatives in national elections; Liberal leader Jean Chretien became prime minister, succeeding Kim Campbell. Actor Vincent Price died in Los Angeles at age 82.

Doing Whatever It Takes The Successful Family

HOW TO USE VERBAL AND PHYSICAL REDIRECTION TOGETHER

Using verbal and physical redirection together, the child quickly learns that a particular behavior is unacceptable to his parents. Use the following steps to redirect your child:

1. In a firm voice, let the child know he is performing or is about to perform an unacceptable behavior. The firm voice indicates this is not a game. The NO indicates he is to stop the behavior immediately. Yelling or screaming only makes you look foolish.
2. Approach the child, stoop down, make eye contact, and hold his hands.
3. Tell the child his behavior is unacceptable. Use words like "icky," "ouch," or "hot" if he is near something that could injure him like an electric socket or hot oven. Use other words if the child has something in his hand or is touching something you prefer him not touching. Words like "NO," "This is Mommy's, not for Billy," or "Sorry, this is not for little boys," convey the message. Used consistently, a child will begin to associate these words with certain behaviors.
4. Attempt to let the child reestablish the original setting. That is, if he has taken something, physically and verbally redirect him to return the object to where it belongs. If he has turned on an appliance, have him turn the appliance off. In this instance, you are encouraging the child to perform behaviors that are pleasing to you.

5. The next step is the use of physical and verbal redirection. The goal is not to inhibit a child's natural curiosity, but to foster it through more appropriate activity. Engage the child in play. Some things young children like are: keys and locks, putting anything smaller into something bigger, puzzles, or coloring/scrubbing paper.

6. Praise the child for cooperating. Tell him he is a good listener. Praise for doing will reinforce future encounters. After all, you want your child to listen and cooperate.

7. If the child chooses to perform the inappropriate behavior again, repeat steps one through six. A child is likely to repeat the behavior for two reasons: young children are too young to remember what was bad or good; and, some preschool children are likely to test you and the rule for inconsistency.

Keeping Fit

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have had bronchitis for seven months. Will you explain the difference between bronchitis, emphysema and asthma? I'm so sick of using inhalers. Is there anything else? I blame my troubles on El Niño. What do you think? — E.M.

ANSWER: Chronic bronchitis is a cough that lingers for at least three months in two consecutive years. Along with the cough, chronic bronchitis produces copious amounts of thick, sticky mucus. "Chronic" is used to distinguish this cough from the transient, two-week cough of acute bronchitis.

The tenacious mucus of chronic bronchitis plugs airways, setting patients up for repeated infection. Bronchitis makes a patient short of breath when up and about.

Emphysema is permanent destruction of the delicate air sacs through which oxygen passes into the blood. Emphysema doesn't usually cause a cough nor does it produce gobs of mucus. The emphysema patient becomes very breathless on taking even a few steps.

El Niño bears no blame for either. Chronic bronchitis and emphysema often are evil twins, both present at the same time. Drugs — both oral and inhaled — that open clogged airways are time-proven standbys. The doctor might prescribe one of the corticosteroid drugs to soothe irritated airways. Often a patient must resort to supplemental oxygen.

In asthma, airways are supersensitive. The slightest provocation causes them to narrow. An asthma attack feels much like being strangled. Sprays, inhaled through the mouth, and oral medicines can release the strangling airway constriction. A new group of drugs, ones that sedate asthma's twitchy airways, has become a welcome addition to asthma treatments. Two such drugs are Accolate and Zylfo.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible.

America's greatest president—in size—was William Howard Taft, six feet tall and more than 300 pounds.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Winning the War: Battlefield Strategies for Managers

Management, by casual definition, is the act, art or manner of planning, directing and controlling events. In business, management is also a term used to describe those in charge of planning, directing and controlling an organization.

The modern business environment is often described as a war; a battlefield with the rewards (profits) going to the victor. I can't disagree too much with this analogy, for businesses are engaged in do-or-die competition for customers, markets and profit.

I've spent some time in the command post and some time at the front. I believe you can learn from watching the battle and from being in it. Here are some lessons I've learned as a 30-year veteran of small-business wars.

Winning Strategies

- Gather good intelligence. Know your market and customers as well as you know your own company. Know your present customer and your potential customer. Know your enemy. The competition wants to capture your customer, take your territory and tempt your best troops to desert you. Know their tactics and don't lose ground or personnel to a surprise attack.

- Layout clear objectives. Plan your battles carefully and thoroughly. Set goals and present them plainly to your troops. Prioritize your agenda and don't let little skirmishes distract you from your initial plan. Stay focused on your objectives and keep moving forward.

- Select a secure position. In battles, the ultimate winner is often determined by which side seizes the high ground first. In business, your positions are the areas where you give your customers advantages and benefits they can't get anywhere else. When you occupy strong positions, you make it difficult for an enemy to take market share away from you.

- Stay on the offensive. More often than not, the best defense is a strong offense. Take the initiative. Be bold in your customer focus. Dare to take the battle to a higher plain. Let the customer know that you're willing to commit your resources to serving them effectively. Escalate the battle. Take it to a higher level and make your enemy commit more resources or concede ground

- Keep the troops motivated. Let your associates know exactly where they stand. Employee problems seldom solve themselves. However, when the troops know the objectives, and that you are committed to them, they will often perform at very high levels. Though death and dishonor may not be the result of losing, motivated folks do want to win. Train them well, let them know what to expect and lead them with self-discipline and character.

- Be a leader with integrity. Truth is a wonderful tool for a leader. Liars lose their credibility and their ability to lead. Volunteer troops will only follow leaders they respect. A leader with integrity can take command, inspire respect and build a loyal and faithful following.

- Keep it simple. Even simple plans are difficult to execute correctly. A simple plan guarantees less confusion and faster response. But, even simple plans may need modification. The best plan is not just clear and concise, but also flexible. Embrace change, expect change and try to prepare for the unexpected.

- Concentrate your resources. Once you establish your objectives, focus your efforts toward those goals. Decide what you're going to do then throw everything you have into the fight.

- Do what is right. General Norman Schwarzkopf said, "The truth of the matter is that you always know the right thing to do. The hard part is doing it." Some how, some way, good managers usually manage to do both.

Some Books Worth Reading

Between the covers

By REBECCA WALLS

All parents have a fear that someone or something may cause grave injury to their children. As good parents, we try to teach our children how to stay safe. Still, what happens when you do everything correctly and your child disappears into thin air?

John Walsh, the host of TV's America's Most Wanted program, knows exactly how it feels and the frustrations of not being able to control what happens. John's six-year-old son, Adam, was abducted and murdered.

In the book Tears of Rage, John tells the story of the abduction and search for his son. Fueled with a relentless hunger for justice, John and others developed the program "America's Most Wanted." This TV program has formed a unique partnership between the media, the public, and law enforcement agencies. In ten years, they have imprisoned more than 500 fugitives.

Now, in the book No Mercy, John tells the whole story of some cases that America's Most Wanted has helped to solve, and the 23 missing children that have been returned safely to their homes. John Walsh has given helpless parents and families another means to further protect their children.

John continues to fight the battle, along with many other citizens, to gain control over the criminal element. Laws have been changed and search techniques have been improved, because of one man's efforts to do something.

The Face of Deception by Iris Johansen is a novel about a forensic sculptor. Eve Duncan has a rare talent and gift. She can reconstruct the identity of the long dead from the skulls.

Eve developed her skills following the abduction and murder of her own daughter.

When they brought the latest skull to her, Eve agreed to do another sculpture. However, someone insists the identity must remain unknown and they do not care how many others they must bury to keep the identity a secret.

Shadows of Doubt by Terri Blackstock is the sequel to Private Justice in the New Pointe 911 series. Blackstock is a writer of Christian fiction. Terri has written a great story of suspense, mystery and intrigue.

Stan and Celia Shepherd are relatively newcomers to the community. When Stan becomes ill and shows signs of arsenic poisoning, the total law enforcement and rescue community come to the aid of a fellow officer.

At the hospital, lab tests confirm arsenic poisoning. Celia recognized the symptoms in Stan as being the same symptoms her first husband, Noah, had before he died. Celia is taken in for questioning, but no one who saw her and the concern she had for Stan could ever think Celia was responsible for such an act.

Tell Me Your Dreams by Sidney Sheldon begins: "Someone was following her. She had read about stalkers, but they belonged in a different, violent world. She had no idea who it could be, who would want to harm her."

Ashley Patterson thought maybe there was not a stalker, maybe it was stress, or maybe her overgrown imagination, but her every instinct told her it was real. Ashley used the rain as an excuse to run into the building where she worked.

During the course of the morning, Dennis Tibble payed her a visit. Tibble, known as "the Fixer," was the company's computer genius. In his early thirties, Tibble was not Ashley's idea of Prince Charming. However, Tibble was taken with Ashley and continued to ask her out.

Today after Ashley refused another of Tibble's invitations, his reply was, "There is something you're going to learn about me, honey. I don't ever give up. Ever!" Ashley begins to wonder if Tibble could be the stalker. Could he become violent? Is Ashley in immediate danger?

Hints From Heloise

Dear Readers: I recently printed a hint about how we fixed the doggie door that our miniature schnauzer, Savvi, uses so J.D., one of our outside dogs, couldn't wiggle through. Well, several readers have taken me to task for allegedly treating J.D. badly.

Mary H. from Hagerstown, Md.: Why is J.D. kept out if he wants in? S.J. Brazelton of Texas wrote: It seems so wrong to me that you treat one dog like royalty, with all the air-conditioned comforts of home, and the other one like a junkyard dog, making him stay outside in all this heat. For shame, Heloise.

And, finally, S. Scher of Maryland: I was dumbfounded and absolutely appalled by your letter to the readers suggesting how to keep a large dog out of the house while allowing a smaller dog free access. You've created a jealousy, an animosity between them and against you. It's unfair, inhumane and unconscionable, especially to allow access to one pet and deny the other. You shouldn't have either one.

Well, may I inform all of you who care that our beloved J.D. (a golden retriever mix) is not ignored or alone. He is joined outside by his buddy, Black Jack (a black Lab/greyhound), who was adopted from the Animal Defense League, the largest no-kill shelter in the Southwest. J.D. was dumped at our house and we happily welcomed him into our family with his own doghouse and a large covered patio with a ceiling fan. In winter, both dogs have their own pup tent with heating pads and lots of warm bedding. They both adore Savvi and all three run through the yard chasing squirrels and barking at the deer that nibble on my roses.

So, if you think the "boys," who are both neutered, feel left out, I can assure you they are happy as any two buddies could be.

P.S. Want to see J.D., Black Jack and Savvi? Visit my Web site www.heloise.com and click on the

STREET ADDRESS

Dear Heloise: It is essential that one's house number be clearly visible from the street, night and day. I had a problem with my house numbers showing up clearly on the rock exterior of my house.

I had three large potted plants on my front porch, and it dawned on me that those pots could solve my problem. I purchased house numbers at the hardware store, the kind of numbers that reflect light and have adhesive on the back. Presto! The numbers look great from the street, night or day, and you would be amazed how many people have asked me if they could copy my idea. — Colegate Wotton, San Angelo, Texas

Extension service vice chancellor announces state plans

Chester P. Fehlis
TAES Vice Chancellor

AMARILLO - One of the first priorities for Texas Agricultural Extension Services' new chief administrative officer is to oversee a statewide planning effort for the agency's educational outreach.

"Tapping into grassroots concerns is the most important thing we will do in the coming year in terms of directing the future of this agency," said Dr. Chester P. Fehlis, who became associate vice chancellor and deputy director of Extension Service on Aug. 1.

At the top of Fehlis' agenda as head of the agency's day-to-day operations is touring the state and meeting with Extension professionals about plans for the upcoming community forums.

"We will hold local forums in every county during January and February," he said. "Each county will complete a four-year action plan next fall for implementation in January 2000."

Priority issues identified in all the counties will form the basis for the Extension's statewide education plan for 2000 through 2003.

Fehlis said the agency will reach out to local residents and communities to discuss their concerns for the present and the future.

"Beginning in January, we in Extension will be listening and learning from local residents, who will be invited to come together to discuss what issues are impacting their lives and communities now and in the years ahead."

Dr. Chester P. Fehlis

"This process is not new," he said. "We have successfully conducted long-range Extension program planning with local people since 1995."

"What is different this time is that we seek to broaden our planning process with other groups to deliver the greatest possible value to all Texans. We are calling this statewide effort the Texas Community Futures Forum."

Like the Extension Service,

Fehlis explained, many other agencies and organizations want ideas and advice from local residents to better focus their activities and resources.

These groups often can address needs important to the community that may be outside Extension's educational mission.

Working together to conduct these local Community Futures Forums will enable groups to plan for individual, joint or coordinated action to effectively address identified priority needs in a community.

"By serving as a catalyst for the local planning efforts, we hope to mold new partnerships with other agencies and organizations to address common issues," Fehlis said.

"And we hope to nurture existing partnerships to better serve the people."

We know these partnerships work because through them we have had tremendous impacts in helping people improve their health and nutrition, in providing leadership training in organizing and training volunteer groups, and in offering an array of agricultural and consumer-oriented demonstrations and programs."

Garlic as feed additive destroys manure odors

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Garlic is valued for its flavor, health benefits and in some places, its power to stave off the devil. But in the quest for a less foul fowl, can garlic make chicken manure smell better?

So far, so good. Clemson University animal and veterinary researchers have been putting garlic powder in chicken feed and smelling the results.

"It makes the poultry house smell like a pizzeria instead of manure," professor Glenn Birrenkott said.

As the suburbs have spread into farming areas, animal odors have become a political issue. The state Legislature even has set aside money in the search for agricultural deodorants.

In Birrenkott's research, some chickens were fed about 3 percent of their diet in garlic powder.

After about three weeks, the poultry house odor was less offensive, compared with the smell from a control group of hens.

Researchers have noticed an added benefit: In Clemson's taste tests, the garlic-diet eggs came out on top. Garlic makes them taste milder, perhaps by reducing their sulfur content, Birrenkott said.

"It is certainly something that a livestock producer would want to look at," said Frank Fitz-Simons, a county extension agent in Berkeley County. "Anything would be positive in terms of odor reduction in any kind of livestock operation. Growers are continually looking for new ideas and research that will work, ... whether it be garlic or any other option."

The big question now for poultry producers is cost.

Gene codes unlock soybean enigmas

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — The researchers use words like maps, codes and sequences, but they're not talking about a search for buried treasure or ways to crack a safe.

They are discussing the genetic mysteries of the soybean plant — mysteries that a new four-year, $4.4 million project hopes to partially unravel.

The University of Illinois is the lead institution for the project, which seeks to map some of the soybean genetic code, or genome. The information could then be used by other researchers to help increase soybean yields, develop disease resistance or make soybeans more nutritious.

It is somewhat similar to the national human genome project, a 15-year, $3 billion effort to piece together the human genetic pattern.

The soybean project is more limited in scope, however, because it will only focus on determining the "expression" of thousands of soybean genes. That means where the genes actually show up in the plant — in roots, shoots, leaves, flowers and seeds — which then gives researchers a clue to what factors the gene actually influences.

For instance, the way genetic material is arranged or "sequenced" could help determine how a soybean plant handles stress or whether it flowers early or late in the season.

"Obviously we're not going to determine the function of all 80,000 or 100,000 genes in the plant. But we're providing a set of information that will be useful for other researchers," said Lila Vodkin, a professor of soybean genetics at the University of Illinois and the leader of the study.

Early support came from the soybean check-off system for a soybean genome program housed at Iowa State, Vodkin said.

The project will also benefit from all the technology developed for the human genome project, she said.

"The human genome project has changed a lot of the way research is done and it's now possible to work with thousands of genes at a time, get that DNA sequence information, and then, by using computers and other robotics and other technology, to begin to get a handle on the function of the genes," Vodkin said.

A similar effort is also being funded by the NSF to map corn's genetic code. "The goal is to help develop, or speed technology development, for these economically important crops," she said. "This is such fundamental information for two major crops."

The project is part of the National Science Foundation's Plant Genome Program, and the other researchers involved are based at Iowa State University, Northern Arizona University, the University of Missouri and the University of Minnesota.

Pelleted manure limits nutrient runoff, waste

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — State agriculture and environmental officials have expressed cautious interest in a Texas company's proposal to process poultry manure into time-release fertilizer pellets that could limit the amount of nutrients running off into waterways.

Houston-based Ag Org Texas Co. officials made presentations to the Maryland Department of Agriculture, the Chesapeake Bay Foundation and a large poultry processor this week in hopes of winning support for the proposal.

Martin A. Reiner, one of the four partners of Ag Org, which stands for Agriculture Organic, invited state officials to tour the company's plant in Bentonville, Ark., or visit the rice fields in Texas where the fertilizer is applied.

Reiner said the technology involves mixing poultry manure with three other organic ingredients and baking the mix into time-release pellets about the size of raisins.

The mix is 80 percent insoluble, he said. The 20 percent in nitrogen and phosphorus that leaches out of the fertilizer is absorbed by plants as they grow. It would take five years before all the nutrients are released into the soil and absorbed by

Some scientists have said they suspected that manure runoff was associated with outbreaks of Pfiesteria piscicida in three rivers. The toxic microorganism apparently caused short-term memory loss in some humans, killed thousands of fish and ravaged the Chesapeake Bay seafood industry.

"It's an interesting concept that has great potential," Bradley Powers, assistant secretary of the Maryland Department of Agriculture, said of Ag Org's proposal to build a factory on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

"If they can do what they say they can do — pay farmers for their manure, produce a value-added product that has no environmental impact on the bay, that would be great," added George Chmael, staff attorney for the Chesapeake Bay Foundation. "I couldn't tell if I was smelling snake oil or not, but we were intrigued by what they proposed."

Writing Want Ads that really sell!

Unsure how to write a Classified Ad that will get results? Follow these pointers and you'll soon have an empty space in your storage room and cash in your pocket.

For starters, look at ads which offer the same item/products. Get a sense of going rates and ideas for how to make your ad stand out. Once you're ready to write, begin with exactly what you're selling: "Dining room set, maple, six chairs." Then, remember these hints:

- Give the price. A newspaper consultant says 70 percent of classified readers won't respond to an ad with no price.
- Use key words to describe what you're selling. The key words for a car are make, model, year, body style, color, mileage and price. If it's a house, key words are location, type of construction, number of bedrooms and baths, and condition.
- Don't use abbreviations. It's tempting to abbreviate and save money if ads are billed by the line. Brand ads are billed by the words, so spell them out so readers won't be confused trying to figure out abbreviations.
- Don't be misleading. Think accurate and factual when you write. Be sure to include a phone number and the best times to reach you.

Brimstone makes light of bad situation

By Suzanne Gill
©TVData Features Syndicate

"The truth is, nobody knows. Nobody knows for sure what happens when you die," Peter Horton observes.

To an ordinary mortal those words sound like a profound mystery. But to a television producer, they sound like a series concept.

Case in point: Brimstone, a spooky new cop show debuting Tuesday, Oct. 27, on Fox. Horton stars as Ezekiel Stone, a police officer killed in the line of duty who was brought back from the underworld by his boss and jailer, the Devil (John Glover), to track down 113 escaped souls after a daring breakout from hell.

Stone's mortal sin was murder, which he committed after catching the man who raped his wife. It was a crime of passion in an otherwise honorable life. His incentive now is Satan's teasing suggestion that he may be able to wipe his own slate clean in the process of reclaiming the lost souls. To help Stone keep track of his progress, the Devil has put 113 hieroglyphic tattoos on his body; one of them will fade with each capture.

Brimstone was created by writing partners Cyrus Voris and Ethan Reiff (collaborators on Tales From the Crypt Presents Demon Knight).

"It actually was a feature idea a number of years ago," Reiff says. "But the bottom fell out of the horror market for a while there ... and it just languished."

The pair dusted off the idea when the horror market rebounded "in the landscape of post-Scream Hollywood" and took it to Fox, which was already airing the supernatural dramas The X-Files and Millennium.

The series pilot is dark to look at and darker to contemplate: Stone's first target is a 19th-century priest planning the sacrificial murders of four altar boys. To stop him, Stone must shoot the cleric through not one, but both eyes.

Remarkably, the show's creators see this as a positive message.

"We have dark trappings," Voris admits, "but the show comes from a core of hope."

Reiff agrees, adding, "The show, at its heart, at its soul and spine ... says,

'The universe works. If you live a good life, you go to heaven. If you live a bad life, you go to hell.'

"That alone makes it pretty life-affirming, you know. Jesse Helms would be happy with that description of faith, you know."

While the North Carolina senator hasn't actually weighed in with an opinion on the series, Fox executive Peter Roth reportedly has quipped that the show might be titled Touched by a Devil.

Such gallows humor will be a standard element in Brimstone, as a way of "breaking the tension," Voris says.

"There (are) a lot of little one-liners and little things Peter did so well (in the pilot), and we're going to keep pushing that (in future episodes)."

For instance, Stone spots a Red Sox-Yankees baseball game on TV and assumes it's the World Series. Told that interleague play began two years ago, he's asked, "Where have you been?"

"Out of the country," Stone hedges.

"Where?"

"Down Under."

This and other throw-away moments do not register guffaws on the laugh meter, but the banter plays more to Horton's strength than the brawls. It probably helps get the writers' through their day, too.

Asked whether the series will ever take Stone or his quarry back whence they came, Voris rejoins, "I don't think we can afford to go to hell."

Peter Horton (thirtysomething) stars as Ezekiel Stone, a slain police officer who returns to Earth to track down 113 escaped souls from hell in Brimstone. Premiering Tuesday on Fox, the horror series plans to use humor to lighten up the show's dark theme.

TV PIPELINE

By Taylor Michaels

©TVData Features Syndicate.

Q: Is it true that the actor who played Matt Fielding on Melrose Place died in real life? What is his real name? --Heidi via e-mail.

A: Doug Savant, who played Matt, is alive and well.

Q: The recent Planet of the Apes marathon on American Movie Classics made me wonder whatever happened to James Franciscus. Didn't he once star with Dean Jagger in a TV series about a teacher? --Eddie via e-mail.

A: Franciscus, who died of emphysema in 1991, became dissatisfied in the mid-1980s with the kind of roles he was being offered and abandoned acting in favor of writing and producing. He devoted time to his production company, which presented a number of new adaptations of family fare including Kidnapped and The Red Pony. An avid tennis player, Franciscus also founded the James Franciscus Celebrity Tennis Tournament to raise money for research into multiple sclerosis. His mother, Loraine, had succumbed to the disease.

A highlight of his career was playing the title English teacher in Mr. Novak, a 1963-65 NBC high-school drama that co-starred Jagger as the principal for the first part of the run. Burgess Meredith took over as a new principal for the final half-season.

Q: Did Sam Melville of The Rookies die? The ending of one of his movies contained a note in his memory, which shocked me. He couldn't have been very old. --Fawn Gayle DePriest via e-mail.

A: Melville, who played Officer Mike Danko on The Rookies, was only 52 when he unexpectedly died of heart failure on March 6, 1989.

Q: The last Emmys telecast included a tribute to actress Diana Hyland of Eight Is Enough. How did she die? --Saul via e-mail.

Doug Savant

A: What you saw on the Emmys was '70s footage of Hyland's young lover John Travolta, who accepted the posthumous Emmy for her performance in the 1976 TV movie The Boy in the Plastic Bubble, in which they had co-starred. Hyland died of cancer on March 27, 1977.

Q: With all the reruns of recent shows turning up in syndication, I don't understand why everyone keeps forgetting Twin Peaks. Will it show up anywhere? --Steve T., Plattsburgh, N.Y.

A: The cable channel Bravo has aired Peaks in heavy rotation, and the series is available on videocassette. When you factor that in, along with the fact that there aren't many episodes to schedule, you can see why David Lynch's critically acclaimed series isn't likely to turn up on a local channel soon.

HIGHLIGHTS

Leonard Bernstein: Reaching for the Note profiles the famous composer-conductor. The intimate two-hour special premieres Wednesday on PBS (check local listings).

American Masters remembers Bernstein the man and artist

By John Crook
©TVData Features Syndicate

When he was 10 years old, Leonard Bernstein and his family received a piano from a relative. The first time the boy put his fingers on the keys, he liked to say later, "I touched God."

It's a typically extravagant statement from an extravagant person who stands as an American musical titan of the 20th century.

Leonard Bernstein: Reaching for the Note, an American Masters presentation premiering Wednesday, Oct. 28, on PBS (check local listings), shows Bernstein as both the hallowed artist and the flesh-and-blood person.

"More than any composer between 1955 and the '70s, I think Lenny will be viewed as the composer who captured America in that period, the way Gershwin and Aaron Copland captured America (in earlier decades)," says conductor John Mauceri, a longtime associate who has edited many of Bernstein's compositions.

And certainly much of the two-hour special is given over to friends and colleagues sharing their appreciation for Bernstein in his roles as conductor, composer and teacher, with some extremely rare performance footage illustrating their points.

Yet the real joy of this special comes from the reflections of Bernstein's three children, who offer unparalleled insight into Lenny the man. Jamie Bernstein-Thomas, for example, recalls that she knew her father's last Broadway musical, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, was doomed when he started talking about how "important" it would be, and son Alexander Bernstein quietly recalls the day his father finally "decided he was an old man."

No moment is more treasurable, though, than Nina Bernstein's affectionate mimicking of their father at his most grandiose when on concert nights he returned home stammering that he had completely lost himself in the music, murmuring, "I was Mahler! I was Beethoven!"

"We would look at one another, (roll our eyes) and say, 'He moved himself again,'" she says with a laugh.

THE ROADS OF TEXAS

Now newly revised and better than ever!

Shearer Publishing is pleased to announce its new edition of THE ROADS OF TEXAS. We have added dozens of country roads, lanes, cowtrails, and put new names or numbers on hundreds of others, names like Good Luck Road (Guadalupe County), Seven Sisters Drive (Kendall County), and Lone Star Alley (Menard County). Altogether, the new edition identifies more than 25,000 state and county highways and byways, and the bright new cover features current scenic photographs from around the state. THE ROADS OF TEXAS is different from any other road atlas, with more detail, more historical travel information, more heart. It has proven especially popular with the curious traveler inclined toward a little adventure, who doesn't mind getting to Aunt Martha's house just a bit late.

Senior Scene

Supplement to The Hereford Brand

Margie's Notes

By Margie Daniels, HSCA Executive Director

"Festival of Trees" time is here again. We hope all of you can endure the changes it makes around the center. It is our major annual fund-raiser and there is no way we could make it financially without it or some other project equal to it. We enjoy this particular project because of the involvement with the community. The interaction with the school children is a great challenge and we enjoy them so much. Without them, our festival wouldn't be the same.

The Henson's will again have the Lionel train display. They will leave it up longer for us to enjoy. The train display is very important to our Festival. It would be very dull around here without it; we would really be missing a treat.

We have three Festival of Trees committee meetings in November. Please read the activity schedule in this issue of the Scene. All volunteers please attend. A lot of work has been going on but we need to report to see if we are on schedule.

Clara Reinart and Alice Koenig, co-chairmen of the bazaar, have a lot of baskets, wreaths, swags and small trees ready. If you have any hand-made crafts to donate, we would appreciate them. The ceramic class is working hard to complete a variety of pretty items. The dolls are about ready with a Dutch Boy and Girl ready for the auction. The quilting ladies have their quilt ready to be given away on Nov. 22. You will need to get your tickets for the drawing. It only cost $1 donation per ticket.

We need items for the bake sale. Please sign up so we know what will be donated. Also if you can work at the booth, please register. We always have delicious items.

The center will decorate a tree and call it "Christmas Memories." We are asking you to bring a pretty ornament or one that has special memories. We want this tree to be extra special. The trees will be set up Nov. 6 after lunch. If decorators need to work on weekends to decorate trees, we will be open.

If for any reason you cannot attend the auction and would like to buy a tree or any item, please let us know and we will have someone bid for you.

We need volunteers in all areas. Please let us know if you can help!

See you at the Festival of Trees Nov. 18-22.

Decorated trees to delight all on view during annual festival

The annual Festival of Trees will be Nov. 18-22 at the Hereford Senior Citizens Center, 426 Ranger.

The Festival of Trees marks the beginning of the holiday season at the center.

The main feature of the event is the display of beautifully decorated trees for the residents of the community and visitors to the area to enjoy during five days of entertainment and activities for people of all ages.

This display, within a festival setting, is a major community involvement and fund-raising project for the Hereford Senior Citizens Association.

The event is made possible by business organizations, institutions and individuals through advertising, sponsorship of tree display and festival cost, voluntary tree designing and decoration, and donated entertainment and time.

The decorated trees are sold at auction during the festival and delivered to the buyers the week following Thanksgiving.

The proceeds of the auction and other festival activities are used by the center to provide services to senior citizens during the following year.

Activities which are continuous throughout the festival include Herd Restaurant, Bake Shop, tree display, children's crafts, Memorial Tree, Holiday Bazaar, Lionel train display, children's programs and best tree selection.

These activities begin at 8:30 a.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 18. The Preview of Trees is from 5 p.m.-8 p.m. that same day.

There is no admission charge for the continuous festival activities, the preview or the tree auction.

For festival activities which include refreshments or a meal, there is a charge and reservations are required.

One popular activity of the festival is the Lionel train display provided by the Nolon Henson family of Happy. Youngsters from Hereford area schools are eager to see the display and the changes made in it from year to year.

The community is encouraged to view the trees and enjoy all the activities of the Festival of Trees.

Nutrition Update

Charlotte R. Clark
MS RD/LD

Energy is defined as the capacity to do work or to produce a change in matter. When used in nutrition, the term energy deals with the chemical energy locked in foodstuffs because of the chemical bonding present in the nutrients. It also deals with the human body's requirement for energy to maintain life and work.

"What is a gram? How is it measured?" These questions have been ASKED several times during the past month.

The total caloric content (total energy) available from a food can be measured by means of a device called a "bomb calorimeter," which consists of a closed container in which the food is burned while the container is immersed in a known volume of water. The weighed food sample is burned in an oxygen atmosphere by igniting it with an electric spark.

The rise in temperature of the water after ignition of food can be used to calculate the heat energy or calories generated. Each food has a specific caloric value: that is, a given amount of food will yield a certain number of calories when it is burned or when it is metabolized in the body, and the caloric yield depends on the composition of the food in terms of protein, fat, carbohydrate and alcohol.

The amount of heat produced per gram of purified samples of protein, fat, carbohydrate and alcohol burned in the bomb calorimeter is as follows:

1 gm. of protein = 5.65 kcalories (value given for practical purposes = 4)

1 gm. of fat = 9.45 kcalories (value given for practical purposes = 9)

1 gm. of carbohydrate = 4.10 kcalories (value given for practical purposes = 4)

1 gm. of alcohol = 7.10 kcalories (value given for practical purposes = 7)

Since the body is not completely efficient in the process of digestion and absorption, the extent to which the ingested nutrient is available to the cells, or its digestibility, is of importance. Normally about 98% of carbohydrate, 95% of fat and 92% of protein is absorbed.

A gram is a unit of weight or mass; 28 grams weigh about 1 ounce avoirdupois. The avoirdupois weight system uses a pound containing 16 ounces. It is important that one realizes that a gram, which can be measured in a laboratory on specific scales, cannot be measured in the home.

In other words, a gram cannot be measured in the usual circumstances like one would measure an ingredient in a recipe. It cannot be defined as unit of cup or spoon measurement.

The basal metabolic rate (BMR) is the minimum amount of energy needed by the body at rest in the fasting state. It indicates the amount of energy needed to sustain the life processes: respiration, cellular metabolism, circulation, glandular activity and the maintenance of body temperature. Basal metabolic rate may range between 0.8 and 1.43 kcal/min depending upon many factors.

The resting metabolic rate (RMR) is the energy expenditure under similar conditions except after eating or exercise. Because the conditions for measurement are not as strict as with BMR, the RMR is more frequently measured and used. A person's RMR is greater than the BMR and would include one or more of the many factors that raise BMR.

Factors that affect Basal Metabolic Rate: surface area, sex, age, body composition, endocrine glands, and pregnancy. Secondary factors that affect BMR: nutritional status, sleep, fever, muscle tonus, and exercise.

An adequate diet is composed of the various nutrients that the body needs for maintenance, repair, the living processes, and growth or development. It is a diet that meets in full all the nutritional needs of the person. There is no ideal diet, since such a diet is a matter of individual requirement.

Besides nutrition principles, the adequate diet will also reflect the availability of foods, socio-economic conditions, taste preferences, food habits, age of the family members, storage and preparation facilities, and cooking skills.

Holiday Bazaar Items will include a variety ceramic figurines, being inspected here by Carolyn Hutcheson and Helen Spinks, crafted by members of the Senior Center. The bazaar is held annually in conjunction with the Festival of Trees and features a selection of baskets, small decorated trees, porcelain dolls and other craft items.

President's Corner

By Truman Thurston, HSCA President

October sees the last service to the board of three good members. The by-laws only allow three years of service to the board.

November we see three new members of the board. At the October meeting Truman Thurston, Audrey Powell and Tow Mims were elected to serve on the board. These three join the other good members of the board in guiding the center and will need the help of all the members of the center this year.

Expenses continue to increase and some new activities are being planned to increase funding so that all of the activities of the center will continue.

The center is fortunate that we do not have to depend on the whims of government entities for all of the center activities.

The Hereford Senior Center stands alone and the new year will surely have some expensive surprises for us.

I hope that the new year will be good for us and I look forward to serving as your new president with your continued help.

The display, set up by the Nolon Henson family of Happy, has proved to be as popular with adults as it has with the school children who view it each year.

Committee will meet 3 times

With the Festival of Trees fast approaching, Nov. 18-22, three meetings of the Festival of Trees committee have been scheduled for early November. Meeting dates are Nov. 2, 9 and 16 at 9:30 a.m. at the Senior Center. Details will be finalized for the coming festival. Every committee member is needed to complete the tasks at hand. Please be here.

Light refreshments will be served. A donation of $5 per person is requested. As always, games will be held in conjunction with the dance.

New board elected for HSCA

Hereford Senior Citizens Association members elected a board of directors to serve from Oct. 1, 1998, to Sept. 30, 1999. Truman Thurston is president, along with Alvin (Swede) Schmucker, vice president; Carole McGilvary, secretary; and Bill Davis, treasurer. Other board members include Lester Wagner, Audrey Powell, Trow Mims, Mildred Betzen and Betty Jo Carlson. This dedicated group of individuals is greatly appreciated.

'Goodies' needed for bake sale

Can you bring goodies for the bake sale? If you can, would you please let us know. We can sell cakes, cookies, pies, rolls, muffins, candies, coffee cakes or anything else good to eat. People look forward to this sale to stock their freezers for the holidays. Thank you for your help. We always have a great bake sale.

We Can Explain Why You Need An IRA In Two Words:

Social Security.

If you're going up the hump, not over the hill, then you've probably realized by now that Social Security isn't going to be quite as secure as you once believed.

An Individual Retirement Account at Hereford State Bank is a very smart investment toward your future because it's a personal savings plan that provides a substantial retirement fund, and also allows you to defer taxes on the principal as well as the accrued interest each year.

Because your earnings on an IRA investment are tax-deferred, they build much faster than many comparable investments.

Of course, the sooner you start the better off you'll be. After all, you're getting close enough to see the top of the hill. Which leads us to our final two words.

Don't delay.

Worker honored for 'extraordinary' 65 years in Missouri government

By PAUL SLOCA
Associated Press Writer
When Frank Blankenship started as a $125-a-month income tax clerk for the state of Missouri in 1933, eggs cost 15 cents a dozen, cigarettes were a dime a pack and Babe Ruth led the World Series champion New York Yankees.

Recently, Blankenship, now 91, marked his 65th continuous year on the state payroll by receiving a proclamation and an elegant fountain pen from Gov. Mel Carnahan.

Blankenship was working for the state a year before Carnahan was born, and he has worked for 11 other chief executives during his career. When he arrived for his first day of work at age 26, he thought the job might last four years because of changes in governors.

He now works 20 hours a week as executive secretary to the Missouri Board of Fund Commissioners. He took the $10,000-a-year part-time post after retiring from full-time work in 1974.

Blankenship said he plans to continue working "as long as I'm physically able to get to the of-ice and as long as they want me to work."

The board issues and cancels the state's general obligation bonds and directs payments of interest and principal on bonds issued by the board.

Gene Rose, a spokesman for the National Conference of State Legislatures in Denver, said Blankenship's record is a national standout.

"This is an unparalleled example of public service that is unlikely to be equaled," said Rose, coincidentally a former communications chief for the Missouri House.

Carnahan, a Democrat, called Blankenship's service "extraordinary" during a ceremony honoring state employees. Blankenship received a standing ovation from more than 100 other government workers.

Blankenship was hired by the state two years after he was laid off by Union Pacific Railroad in Nevada, Mo., during the Depression. He said he was lucky to land the job because of hard economic times, adding that he had a little help from influential political friends in Vernon County.

To prove his longevity,

Blankenship still has a 1933 photo of the auditor's staff hanging above his desk. Except for a few state jobs, such as judge-ships and Highway Patrol troopers, Missouri doesn't have a mandatory retirement age for its employees.

A Democrat, Blankenship said one of his favorite governors was Democrat Forrest Smith, who was state auditor when Blankenship was hired.

Blankenship, who works four-hour days five days a week, credits his longevity to hard work and liking what he does.

"I liked the jobs that I had and when my wife died in 1992 I just continued working because I had nothing else to do," he said. "I'm just very glad that I have half a day's job to do."

Dick Hanson, commissioner of the Missouri Office of Administration, said he was confident that Blankenship's tenure was a record for the state, adding, "I'm sure that it's a record that will stand forever."

And Blankenship's advice for people who want to keep working as they grow older?

"Like your work, do the best you can and be loyal to your superiors."

Wreaths with a Texas theme will be available at the Holiday Bazaar held Nov. 18-22 during the Festival of Trees at Hereford Senior Citizens Center. Margie Daniels, executive director, admires a wreath adorned with a barnyard scene complete with windmill, water trough and Hereford cattle.

The major league baseball pitcher with the most no-hit games in his career is Nolan Ryan, who threw seven no-hitters between 1973 and 1991. Second on the all-time list is Sandy Koufax, who threw four.

Grandparents caring for young children face more health woes

By PATRICIA J. MAY

Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP)—Trying to quell her 16-month-old grandson's cries, Mary Lamar hoists him up in her arms. Gently patting his back, she walks around her small two-bedroom apartment, searching out a spot to rest.

"Hush baby, hush. Shhhh. It's gonna be all right," she says, carefully sitting down. "I'm too old for this."

The simple task of walking the toddler leaves Ms. Lamar, 60, out of breath. Her heart is weak and her blood pressure high. While caring for little Matthew and his 2½-year-old brother, Jacob, she must remember her blood pressure pills and two daily insulin injections.

"A lot of days I forget about taking my medicine. I just go till the next day," said Ms. Lamar, who has custody of the boys.

Like many grandparents faced with being parents all over again, Ms. Lamar sometimes neglects her own health because her primary concern is for her grandsons.

A Georgia State University program, Project Healthy Grandparents, is helping grandparents improve their health and reduce the stresses associated with child-rearing.

High blood pressure, diabetes, hypertension, arthritis, lack of exercise and poor nutrition are just some of the age-related illnesses plaguing grandparents, said Aaron Thomas, a nursing coordinator for the program.

In many cases, the added burden of taking care of young children makes the problems worse.

"They're not eating, not taking their medications; they forget," Thomas said. "They're worried about the children; they have a lot of other things going on and they have to be reminded."

Ms. Lamar took custody of her grandsons last year because their drug-addicted mother was no longer able to care for them. The boys' father, Ms. Lamar's 36-year-old son, is in prison.

Raising the boys means Ms. Lamar, a self-described shopaholic, can't enjoy a leisurely retirement at malls and flea markets. The children have slowed her down more than a triple bypass in 1986 and a heart attack in July.

"It might have been for my own good," she said. "God has a way of doing things, so you never know. I just pray and do the best I can with them."

Such grandparents are "both heroes and saints," said Margaret Hollidge, coordinator of the Grandparent Information Center run by the American Association of Retired Persons. "They take on this huge job and they sacrifice financially, they sacrifice their health, they sacrifice their time. Sometimes I think they honestly don't realize the stress involved in doing what they are doing."

Between 1990 and 1997, grandparent-headed households increased 19 percent to more than 2.4 million - 6.7 percent of all U.S. households with children under 18, according to the Census Bureau.

Drug abuse is the primary reason most of the children are in the care of their grandparent social workers to check on the grandparents at home. Among other things, the nurses check weight and blood pressure and monitor glucose levels for diabetics like Ms. Lamar.

In addition to increased health problems, many grandparents raising children also suffer from psychological distress and social isolation.

"It has a dramatic effect on their own lifestyle," Ms. Kelley said. "They often become socially isolated because they don't have time ... to see friends and they don't have as much in common as other mothers of young children because of the age difference."

Grandparents in Georgia State's program attend parenting and support group meetings. Counselors also help them find day care and housing, enroll children in school and handle legal issues such as adoption and welfare.
