Members of the Lubbock School board are walking a legal tightrope by holding unannounced breakfast sessions before their regular public meetings. The Lubbock Independent School District picks up the check for the breakfasts.

The president of the LISD board—attorney Charles Waters—acknowledges that one misstep and members could fall into violation of the Texas Open Meetings Law.

"It would be easy to be in violation," Waters conceded, but argued that the trustees do not "deliberate," as it is defined in the statute, or vote and therefore are not breaking the law.

"Anytime the whole board gets together, we've got to refrain from deliberating," Waters said, adding that the board members do not discuss school business.

"Somebody might bring up something about schools, but it's not an issue we're going to vote on."

The school board president said that members have met for breakfast before their regular sessions as long as he has been on the board, and that a reporter for the local daily newspaper used to eat with the members.

Harold Glasscock, assistant superintendent for business affairs, said that the school district pays for the breakfasts from money budgeted for "administrative expense."

"We feel like since they give us six years, we can at least buy them breakfasts."

Reporters from West Texas Times and TimesWest magazine attended a breakfast session at the Furr's Cafeteria El Matador Room Tuesday morning at 6:30 a.m. The reporters declined to allow the LISD to pay for their meals.

The reporters were invited to join the breakfast session held in a small meeting room off the main floor of the restaurant. None of the cafeteria's other patrons attempted to enter what seemed to be a private meeting.

In attendance at the meeting were Waters, board vice-president Bob McKelvy, and trustees Harold Harriger, Giles Forbess and Monte Hasie.

School Supt. Ed Irons, Asst Supt. E.C. Leslie, Glasscock, Jay Gordon, assistant supt. of instruction and Dr. Gordor Downum, the schools' public information officer, were present from the school staff.

During the breakfast session discussion remained mostly light hearted banter, as with any breakfast among businessmen.

But topics such as the school's workman's compensation claims a visit by an outside evaluation team to the city's high schools the Texas Association of School Board's statewide convention and an addendum to the agenda for the regular meeting were broached.

During a newspaper article prompted discussion of the workman's compensation claims—which have skyrocketed since the LISD joined the system but which have declined somewhat since the board appointed a safety coordinator—Forbess suggested "I think we ought to fight every case."

Waters responded that the program was necessary and was kidded by members that he had taken a lawyer's approach. Waters made similar statements during the board's discussion during regular session at the school district offices following the breakfast.

Forbess left the breakfast session early to catch a plane for business trip to Las Vegas, Nev.

School Officials Say Mobility Cause of Change

The racial census released last week showed that while there are less whites attending eastside schools, in at least a couple of cases there are also less blacks and more Mexican-American students.

Superintendent Ed Irons said the census is only a preliminary one, and the final one will not be made until the fifth week of school.

Irons attributes the change to the mobility of the families of the district.

"I don't think it is a result of white or black flight—I think it's just because of the mobility," Irons said.

Irons said he did not think the census meant that much, that no pattern could be discerned until each school was studied individually, "which we haven't done yet."

Dr. E.C. Leslie, the assistant superintendent, thought the census revealed the schools to be more integrated, even though the number of blacks and whites was down individually.

The census may be used as evidence by the U.S. Justice Department when it tries in November to get a broader desegregation plan implemented. U.S. District Judge Halbert Woodward set the week of Nov. 14 to hear the Justice Department's argument for broader desegregation. The fewer number of whites in the schools may be used in the government's case, especially the decline in Struggs Junior High and Dunbar High School. Both these schools were all black and were integrated in 1970 when Woodward ordered attendance zone changes.

Roy Roberts, Principal of Dunbar, declined comment on the census until after the court order.

The Lubbock Jaycees has begun OPERATION: MARK IT YOURS, a program where they will mark the personal belongings of the persons requesting this service, using an electric engraving pencil.

To request this service, a person should call 762-0301 and leave their name, address, and phone number.

They will then be contacted by a member of the Lubbock Jaycees to make an appointment, at their convenience, for someone to come to their home to mark their valuables.

Remember, the number to call is 762-0301 to request to have your valuables marked.

Exercise!

One of the often unrecognized killers of our time is lack of exercise.

American males more often die of heart attacks than men of any other country. Many do not get regular exercise.

Experts advise males and females to devote some time every day to exercise. One should not, of course, begin strenuous exercise at middle or advanced age without working up to it. It's best to exercise regularly throughout life.

Who Leads America?

The school child might think the President and a free press lead the nation and mold public opinion. That is becoming increasingly untrue in this television age.

Those who really control and mold public opinion today are the film-makers, those in control of the history and current event documentaries shown to the American people on the four television networks.

This is a far cry from the safety which was afforded by over a thousand daily newspapers and about 10,000 weeklies, when the press was, in effect, the media. No one chain or small group of papers could produce the massive national impact of a few film-makers and television executives can today.

Video media is far more persuasive. Lenin recognized that half a century ago and films today are even more effective. It is vital to realize, before it's too late, that broadcasting should not be lumped together with printed media as identical, entitled to the same freedoms. It is not—though that industry constantly claims it is.

Every broadcaster utilizes the people's airwaves to broadcast, is given a monopoly on one channel in his area by the federal government. Thus the people have every right to expect this licensee to perform according to limited public-interest standards. There is already precedent for this, and the procedure of revoking licenses dates to prewar days.

The growing and often unrealized danger which confronts Congress, the President and people today is that film-makers, utilizing the networks, can shape public opinion, and thus government policy, as they wish—with documentaries. Rightly called docudramas, most of these allegedly factual offerings are slanted or inaccurate, and some have been motivated by those with axes to grind, or by political considerations.

In some way, the American viewing public must be advised, at the beginning, whether television documentaries supposedly reporting U.S. history are factual or fictional. There must be some non-censoring, impartial, historical body or commission to rate them. Unless this is done, the country and its future are increasingly turned over to the whims and prejudices (and limitations) of a few film-makers.

State Abortion Payments

In a major setback for pro-abortion groups, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled last June that cities and states did not have to pay for elective abortions for Medicaid recipients. Although the court stressed that it was not forbidding state and local governments to spend public funds for abortions, more than half the states have eliminated such funding. Ohio will join this list on Saturday. Michigan, New Mexico and the District of Columbia have announced that they will continue reimbursements for abortions provided to Medicaid recipients through Sept. 30, but they have not decided what their policy will be after that date. The Virginia Board of Health voted Sept. 14 to discontinue most abortion funding starting Dec. 1.

According to the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, the states that have discontinued reimbursements for Medicaid abortions—except those necessary to save the woman's life—are Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Main, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah and Vermont. In many of the 22 states where publicly financed abortions still are available legislation to cut off the funds already has been introduced.

The primary reason why so many states are eliminating public funding for abortions is that they can no longer share this expense with the federal government. A ban on federal funding for most abortions for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 took effect Aug. 4. Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare announced the ban after a federal judge lifted a 10-month injunction against the law which barred federal expenditures for abortions except when the mother's life was endangered.

← SUPERSONIC →

"We would have given you the job, but this guy has ten years experience..."

The whole question of federally funded abortions is again before Congress. After months of debate House and Senate conferees still are sharply divided on the abortion provision of the 1978 HEW appropriations bill. The House position is the same as the one adopted last year: no federal funding for abortions except to save the mother's life. The Senate position is that abortions should be funded in cases of rape, incest or "medical necessity," a term opponents say is vague enough to permit abortions under nearly any circumstances. JACK ANDERSON'S WEEKLY SPECIAL Seat Belts or Air Bags?

by Jack Anderson with Joe Spear

Copyright, 1977, United Feature Syndicate Inc. WASHINGTON—The Department of Transportation is trying to settle a multimillion-dollar dispute: should future automobiles be equipped with seat belts or air bags?

Transportation Department officials favor air bags. These would automatically inflate in case of an accident. Safety experts estimate that air bags would save between 9,000 and 12,000 lives every year.

But the safety belt council is fighting to save seat belts. It has a champion on Capitol Hill in the form of Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., who has been attacking air bags and defending seat belts.

We previously reported that air bags might be hazardous because a toxic chemical, called sodium azide, is used to inflate them. We quoted Shuster as warning that the poisonous chemical might leak. We also quoted the head of the Highway Traffic Safety Administration, Joan Claybrook, who said the chemical would be safely sealed.

Now we've uncovered some startling new evidence which raises a question about Shuster's credibility. He has been citing a report by a private research organization, known as Economics and Science Planning. The study claims that seat belts save more lives than air bags would.

But the study may be tainted. The research group, we've learned, has been doing business with the safety belt council. The group has collected at least $15,000 from the seat belt proponents.

Representative Shuster, furthermore, has been claiming the study is supported by the Highway Traffic Administration. But this has been denied by Joan Claybrook.

She has written a private letter to Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., declaring that the study is inaccurate and does not represent the agency's views. "The fact is," wrote Claybrook, "air bags are four times as effective in preventing fatalities as safety belts."

A spokesman for the research firm said the study was not influenced by their relationship with the safety belt council. Shuster also denied that his statements have been misleading. Despite Claybrook's disavowal, he continued to insist that the study was financed by her agency.

Concorde Clamor—The controversial, supersonic Concorde is the world's noisiest airliner. But it is producing more noise on Capitol Hill than in the skies.

The Concorde flies faster than sound. But it takes off and lands with such a roar that environmentalists have fought to keep it out of U.S. airports.

A House subcommittee, headed by Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., is investigating the Concorde's noise problem. Ryan called upon Transportation Secretary Brock Adams for the secret presidential options on the Concorde.

Adams, in turn, spoke to the president's national security advisor, Zbigniew Brzezinski. He agreed that Ryan could see the secret options if he kept the information to himself. Ryan refused the offer.

Instead, the Representative called on two transportation experts to testify before his committee. Neither one appeared. The enraged Ryan shot off a letter to Adams, demanding an explanation. Adams claimed there had been a misunderstanding, and the witnesses later appeared.

We have learned, meanwhile, that federal officials have admitted the Concorde cannot meet U.S. noise abatement standards.

Under The Dome—Age is finally catching up with Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala. The 77-year-old lawmaker recently toddled out of a Capitol Hill elevator on the wrong floor and was on the way down the hall when two of his colleagues called him back. "I'm like an old horse," he sighed. "You open the barn door and out I go."

—Rep. James Jeffords, R-Vt., has come up with a proposal that calls for special solar or wind-powered generators to be installed at American embassies overseas. That way, Jeffords believes, Third World governments would get a chance to see working models of devices that use readily available sources of energy. The plan would cost only $5 million and U.S. embassies would save money now spent for conventional oil and gas-powered heating systems.

Ditch Hitch—Because of a couple of major hitches, the Panama Canal treaty recently signed by President Carter and Panamanian strongman Omar Torrijos may never go into effect.

The biggest barrier to an eventual turnover of the canal to Panama, of course, is the U.S. Senate. Two-thirds of the Senate must agree to the treaty before it will be ratified.

But there's another problem. According to the Panamanian Constitution, the power to enter into international treaties and agreements rests solely with the president of Panama. Torrijos is not the president. He is commander of the national guard and leader of the Panamanian revolution.

According to State Department sources, the Panamanian president delegated the treaty-signing authority to Torrijos. There is still a possibility, however, that the treaty may have violated Panamanian law.

A Black Pictorial History

(EDITOR'S NOTE—The following is reprinted from "A Pictorial History of Lubbock, Texas—1880-1950" published by the Lubbock County Historical Commission and edited by William C. Griggs. The editors of the Times gratefully express their appreciation to the commission—particularly Chairman Bob Nash—for permission to reprint this information.)

Very few Negroes came to Lubbock prior to 1910, but in the decade that followed some were attracted to the area by the labor shortage in the cotton fields. Still, it was not until the twenties that blacks migrated to Lubbock in large numbers. In 1910 there were only five blacks in the city; seven years later this number increased to only sixteen. Even as late as 1920 there were but sixty-three Negroes in Lubbock. The earliest settlers included Will Sedberry, Earl Johnson, Calvin Quigley, Bob Johnson, Andrew and Ida Stafford and the Jamison, Henry, and Green families.

The black pioneers of Lubbock settled an area of the town bordered by 16th and 19th streets on north and south and avenues A and C on the east and west. In the early twenties a number of Negroes bought land on Avenue A. Lee Moore and John Green built the first homes on this street. These early dwellings were of a makeshift nature, constructed of materials ranging from cardboard to scrap wire and lumber.

From its beginnings the black section of Lubbock was isolated from the rest of the city and blacks were restricted as to where they could live. Black-operated businesses, however, were almost non-existent before 1920. It is likely that the only commercial enterprise run by blacks before this date was a barber shop operated by Jack White and Waymon Henry. In 1923 the Sedberry family opened a cafe on 17th Street. Within this time period, most Negroes were employed in the city as cooks, servants, maids, porters and janitors. Many, of course, found work in the cotton fields.

The social life of Lubbock's blacks was organized very early. In the early and mid-twenties various fraternal orders were established. Weekends were devoted to shopping, trading and visiting with friends in town. Bob Johnson's large building at the corner of 18th and A served as a dance hall.

In 1923 the Lubbock city council passed a resolution restricting blacks to the southeast portion of the Old Town addition. The well-defined minority status of the Negroes at the time, however, prevented widespread ill-feelings from developing. Segregation existed in movie houses, restaurants and transportation facilities. Even though the small Lubbock Ku Klux Klan preached a white purity doctrine, very few incidents of racial conflict took place. Interviews with a number of early black residents indicate that racial harmony, rather than discord, characterized the mood of the city in the twenties and thirties. One black man stated, for example, that the cowboys controlled whatever disruptive measures may have been entertained by the K.K.K.

The church proved to be the pivotal social organization of the early Lubbock black community. The original religious organizations encountered severe financial difficulties, however, and door-to-door campaigns were launched to collect money for buildings and compensation for preachers. Ministers had to be brought in from larger cities with considerable additional expense. The first congregations included the Mt.

Gilead Baptist Church (1917), the Methodist Church (1920) and the Messiah Presbyterian Church (1928). Once these religious groups started they experienced continual growth. The churches gave order and permanence to the black community.

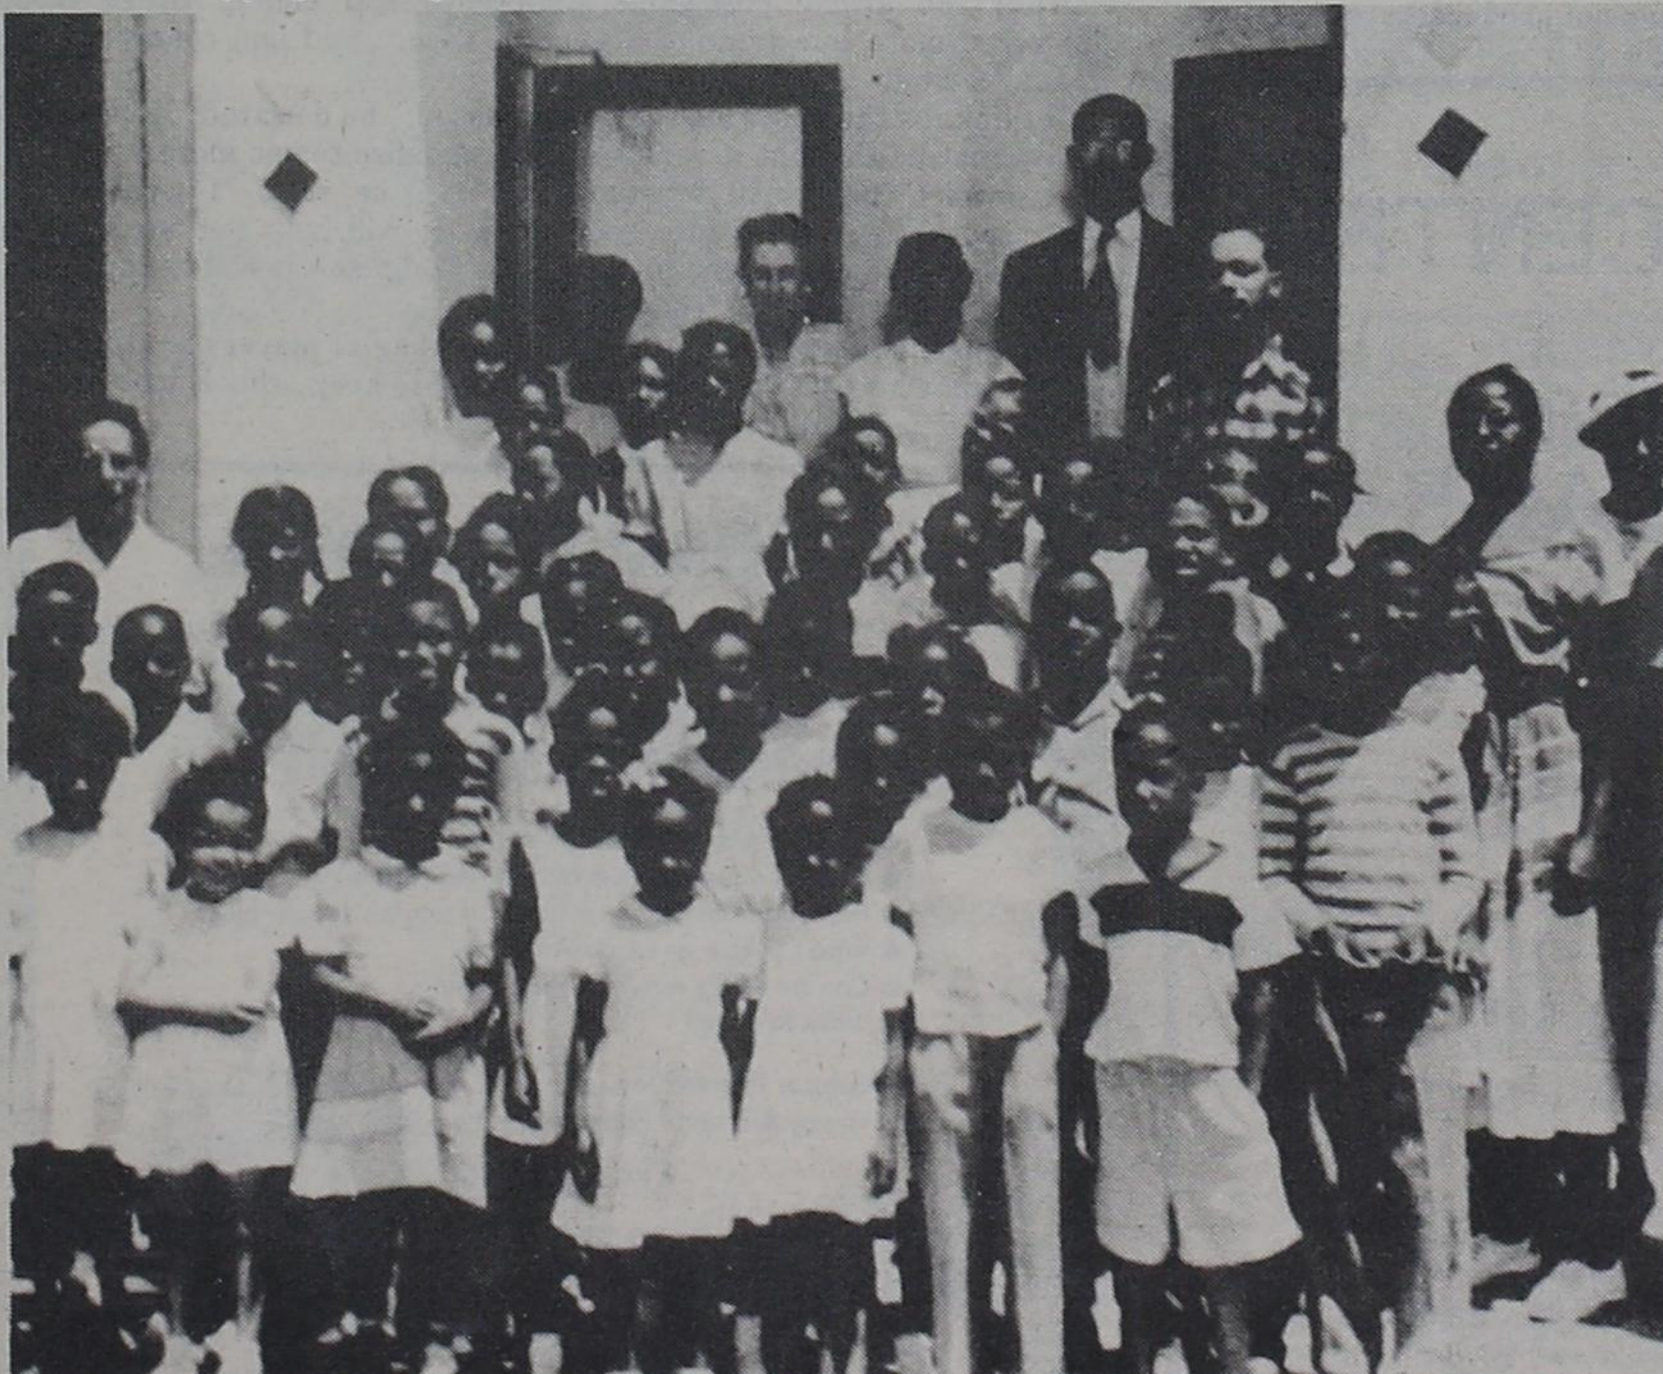

The development of a sound educational system for the blacks was a long, arduous process. The first Negro school sessions were held in servants quarters in 1920. In the following two years a Mrs. Butler taught class in the Mt. Gilead Church. Less than twenty Negro students attended school in Lubbock from 1920 to 1922. In September 1923 Ella Caruthers was hired as teacher for the Negro school at a salary of $80 a month. Later that year a two-room building was provided for the blacks by the Lubbock school board.

In 1925 the population of the school increased to one hundred sixty students and William M.H. Wilson was hired as principal and teacher. In 1927 the students named their school Dunbar after the Negro poet, Paul Lawrence Dunbar. Another room was added to the structure in 1929. Great advances were made in black education in the thirties when Professor E.C. Struggs arrived in Lubbock. Mr. Struggs not only served as a first-rate teacher and community leader, but he was also instrumental in promoting

School Grading Policy Revised

The Lubbock school board revised the grading and promotion policy for elementary schools at its Tuesday morning meeting.

The board approved changing the symbols "H," "S," "I" and "U" to the more accepted "A," "B," "C," "D" and "F." The latter group is used in all grades except the elementary grades.

Superintendent Ed Irons said many of the parents did not know what the symbols meant, and had "expressed confusion."

A report given to the board also said "a grade on the report card at the end of each grade period does not fulfill the teacher's responsibility in reporting a pupil's progress to parents." The report, a recommendation to the board which was approved, stated a teacher needed to have conferences and give informal notes to the parents concerning their child's progress, and the parents should be contacted immediately if the child will have to be retained in a grade.

The board also heard the yearly report on Workman's Compensation from Safety Coordinator Bob Wyatt. Wyatt reported a decrease in both the average amount paid for injuries and the total amount from the 1975-76 school year. He said a more safety conscious atmosphere and safety training accounted for the savings of $11.35 per recipient and a total savings of $31,968 over last year.

Board member Jose Ramirez was named the board delegate to the South Plains Association of Governments General Assembly and absent member Giles Forbess, away on a trip to Las Vegas, was named alternate.

"I think that's a very effective way to handle that," Board president Charles Waters said. "That'll teach him to go off to Las Vegas."

He did not attend the regular session.

"Mr. Chairman," Irons addressed Waters, "We have an addendum to the board agenda." The superintendent explained that a member of the LISD staff had been asked to help develop textbooks with a prominent publisher, and would seek a leave of absence.

Asked if the school district had received any response from a published report that McKelvy would not run for re-election, Irons conceded, "We have had some inquiries."

One member suggested, "We're going to have a half-dozen women running for something this time," referring to the League of Women Voters which has been critical of some board policies.

Trustees Joan Ervin and Jose Ramirez did not attend the Tuesday morning session. Irons explained that Ervin would be out of the city and that Ramirez did not participate in the breakfasts.

But Ramirez told the Times that he attended "about 50 percent of the breakfasts."

"I can't eat breakfasts that early in the morning," he said, "I hope there's no hanky-panky when I'm not there."

The Texas Open Meetings Law requires that every governmental meeting be open to the public unless it comes within a limited number of exceptions — for example, social occasions, personnel matters or discipline of school children.

The law defines a meeting as "any deliberation between a quorum of members of a governmental body at which any public business or public policy over which the governmental body has supervision or control is discussed or considered, or at which any formal action is taken."

Deliberation is "a verbal exchange between a quorum of members of a governmental body attempting to arrive at a decision on any public business."

The law requires notice of date, hour, place and subject of meetings to be furnished to the public, either by posting or, in the case of emergency sessions, by calling the press.

Waters said the law is "typical of the technical things that a public body must comply with."

There are those who deny the greatness of the Bible but they have not produced a greater book.

KELLY'S HEROES

By Joe Kelly

A stranger, walking into Jones Stadium Saturday night, could have been forgiven if, at the half, he had asked, is the team in white the eighth-ranked team in the nation?

It would have been a fair question for, except for two drives, Texas Tech didn't look like a champion. Tech looked more like an ordinary, average, run-of-the-mill team. Meanwhile, the Lobos executed sharply on offense and turned in strong defensive work.

The Raiders were looking ahead to the Aggie game, right? Undoubtedly this entered into it. No matter what anyone says, it had to be on the minds of every football player. That's THE game.

At the same time, don't fault New Mexico. The Lobos came here intent on winning. They picked at weak spots. They probed and struck. They had Tech off-balance. And, defensively, they stopped just about everything Tech did, until late in the half.

Fortunately, a few things were accomplished at the half and it was a different game after that. In fact, just reading the score, anyone could be forgiven for thinking it was a rout all the way.

The Raiders came back to execute offensively much better, while the defense found itself. Tech piled up 316 yards total offense the last half and held the Lobos to only 84. And that pretty well tells the story of Tech's resurgence.

"I don't think I've ever seen such a turnaround game," Coach Steve Sloan said afterwards.

Steve said that even he had doubts about which team was nationally ranked in the first half.

"They came here with a good game plan and they did a good job of executing it," he declared. "We made some adjustments at the half and fortunately we were able to move the ball, as well as getting some breaks."

It was a big win for Tech, because this is New Mexico's annual "bowl" game and the Lobos play above their heads. They played well, but Tech superiority finally asserted itself.

The game did provide some useful information to the Raiders. They found that there is a need to work on the kicking game, particularly kickoff returns, where the Lobos managed to get good field position. And pass defense left quite a lot to be desired.

Fortunately, the game is behind the 2-0 Raiders. They can concentrate now on Texas A&M, which hasn't played up to its potential in the first two games. Indeed, the Aggies may well have toyed with two opponents, looking ahead to this week's battle.

The Aggies haven't had to be too potent to beat Kansas and Virginia Tech. They've had a chance to work on polishing and getting offense and defense ready.

It promises to be a game to remember. The Raiders will have to be a better club than it showed in the first half and, as Sloan said, "we'll have to make the big plays again."

Asked how this Tech team compares with last year's eleven, he opined that he thought they were about the same. He also expressed concern about big George Woodard, all "252 pounds of him."

AP's Mike Cochran said "you're about 30 pounds too light, coach," to which Sloan replied "282? Man alive, I don't know if we've got anyone who can stop him," as he raised his eyebrows.

Overall, the conference had another good week and Texas caused some rumbling with its second consecutive shutout and a big score, 68-0, over Virginia.

Arkansas also created conversation by shutting down Oklahoma State, a good football team, while Penn State's victory over a good Houston team was no major surprise.

"I'm sure it hurt Houston to play on Monday and then have a Saturday game," Sloan declared. "Especially when it was on the road. It might have made a difference to play at home."

The league now is 10-4-0 through two weeks with some top games on tap. The biggest, of course, is the Aggie-Tech clash. Baylor goes to Nebraska, winner over Alabama, while TCU is at Southern Cal.

For a time there was hope that the Tech-Aggie game might be on TV, but it apparently went by the boards. The Raiders may have caught the attention of sports writers, but ABC doesn't seem to have gotten the message. Wait until they get stung Dec. 3.

After the formal post-game conference had ended, Steve Sloan answered more questions of a general nature and one concerned the 30-player limit.

"I think it's the best rule they ever passed," he declared. He went on to say that he thought it would tend to equalize teams more.

"I predict that you'll see more upsets," he said. "I wouldn't be surprised to see 10 or more each week. It will help the weak teams become stronger, it will help the middle group and it will keep the top group from getting too strong."

The limit, of course, will prevent stockpiling of players to stop them going somewhere else and injuries will tend to keep schools more equal. It will be interesting.

Black History . . .

Dunbar's athletic program. By 1930 the black population of Lubbock exceeded one thousand. In the decade that followed the blacks became more urban-oriented and exhibited a more profound communal awareness. Commercial activity increased as a number of black-owned businesses sprang up in east Lubbock. These included restaurants, cleaners, barber shops, grocery stores, a funeral home, a laundry and a hotel. James Craven and Delmus Banks provided a much needed service to the community when they began a taxi service in the mid-thirties. In 1932 the first black doctor, Joel P. Oliver, arrived in Lubbock. He was followed later in the decade by Dr. C.H. Lyons, a dentist, and another physician, Dr. J.A. Chatman. In 1927 M.C. Coleman became the first black police officer in Lubbock.

The biggest annual event in black Lubbock during the thirties and forties was the celebration of Emancipation Day—June 19th. Referred to as "Juneteenth" by both blacks and whites, this holiday was celebrated by picnics, dances, speeches and a baseball game. The local Negro team, known as the "Black Hubbers" was one of the finest squads in the state. The flexible racial barriers of Lubbock was exhibited by the fact that the "Black Hubbers" often played the "White Hubbers". Members of the black team included Charles Sedberry, A.T. Brown, Dr. Oliver, Oscar Iles and James Lewis.

The first Negro Boy Scout Troops were organized in Lubbock in the fall of 1938. Though these organizations—troops eighteen and nineteen—had little financial support, they provided wholesome activities for the black youth of the city. D.C. Fair and Charles Sedberry were key figures in the early Boy Scout program.

Between 1930 and 1940 the black population more than doubled. The 1940 census listed 2,229 blacks in the city of Lubbock. Much of this increase is attributable to the expansion in South Plains agriculture which occurred in the late thirties.

Throughout the thirties and forties the blacks of Lubbock experienced constant and impressive growth. Overcoming innumerable obstacles they established themselves as an integral and distinctive part of the community.

Sheridan's Ride

by Jack Sheridan

If you like pure, unadulterated entertainment, then the current Lubbock Theatre Centre production of "Kiss Me, Kate," the Cole Porter play with music being played at the LTC Playhouse at 25th and Ave. P this coming weekend is right up your alley.

The "little theater," that hardy band of amateurs who give so much of their time and effort every year in their cramped little theater, always open their season with a musical. There have been "Fiddler on the Roof," "The Sound of Music," "George M" and other "big" musicals in the past, but this time the selection fell upon the late Porter's "intimate" musical play and there were some of us who were, frankly, wary. And when newcomer-director Doug Cummins had the nerve to announce in public print in advance that he had "dared" to cut the original show, to streamline it, horror was incipient.

Well, banish the thought. He has cut it but his is a young and canny eye and his knife was sharp and clean. You'd never know the cuts and all the familiar songs, "So In Love," "Wunderbar," "Always True to You, Darling (In My Fashion)," and "Brush Up Your Shakespeare" are intact, as is the wonderful male songs "Were Thine That Special Face" and "Where Is the Life That Late I Led" and the rousing opener, "Another Op'nin, Another Show" are all there.

The staging is superb, the settings slick and adroitly moveable and the costuming rich and opulent as this comedy of a play-within-a-play, "The Taming of the Shrew" paralleling the real-life storms backstage unfolds to glorious effect.

Cummins is either blessed by knack or very lucky. He has a well-nigh impeccable cast to work with. He has the veteran Harlan Reddell in his singing solo star part as Fred Petruccio and Reddell just once again proves he is the stalwart in the musical field. This Monterey High School instructor sings and acts like a tower and what is more he enjoys what he is doing and that means so does the audience. He couldn't be better and you owe it to yourself to see him, to hear him, at your earliest opportunity.

For his temperamental co-star prima donna he has a pert, luscious and gifted lady named Leslie E. Thurman who whaps over such things as "So In Love," "I Hate Men" and the dual Lilli Vanessi/Katherine roles with verve, style and punch. She's just wonderful and she complements Reddell every inch of the way.

Now for the supporting leads. There are a good many of us who can, without too much discomfort, recall a little moppet who made her mark on that same LTC stage during her growing up years in the LTC Children's Theatre productions. Her mother is a dedicated LTC lady and she saw to it that daughter Terri Eoff got all the training possible, plus an infusion of love for the living theater. So, we come to maturity now and here is Terri Eoff playing the night club singer turned actress, Lois Lane, and when she takes over the stage for a rollicking, impudent, superbly done "Always True to You, Darling" she is something to hear, watch and be very proud of. She comes durned close to stealing this show and in moments such as the "Always" number, she does. She's just terrific and you can say I said so.

As her co-supporting lead Mike Morgan is personable and charming and handles his singing and dancing chores with high aplomb. He is a bright, intelligent player and you'll like him very much.

And so on down this remarkable and versatile cast. There Act IV veteran Boots Muehlbrad opening the show as the maid and Joan-Carrol Baron as the befuddled stage manager. The gangster duo, played winningly by Sam Cornelius and Jerry Cantrell and the pompous Harrison Howell played by Vernon Bartley complete the picture. No, one more. Bill Conley is a delight in his dual roles, complete with the most incredible un-Shakespearean accent heard this side of Gray's wearing apparel store right here in town.

So, "Kiss Me, Kate" is the show to see this weekend. Call the Lubbock Theatre Centre Playhouse box office and grab a seat or two. You'll love the show, you'll thank me for the tip.

One minor criticism. Charlotte Greeson conducts a pretty sizeable orchestra in accompaniment and does a masterful job. But the Cole Porter lyrics should be heard for their wit and flavor and too often opening night the orchestra overcame the singer more's the pity. The space is small and the audience sits with the musicians, literally, and that's a problem. But a little pianissimo now and then might help. Those Cole Porter lyrics demand clarity and emphasis for therein lies the extension of the play's dialogue.

See, hear and enjoy "Kiss Me, Kate." It's a winner.

I wish I could say the same for the movie down at Showplace 4, "Between the Lines." This is a "sleeper" in the movie business, directed by a woman and is a tight little comedy-romance set in Boston and the activities of a group engaged in putting out an underground newspaper, the Mainliner. Well, everyone is young and charming and the antics are young and charming but the whole effort seemed to me to be labored and contrived. The advertising says something about the "American Graffiti" of the 1970s, but don't you believe it. Where the famous comedy of a few seasons back had flair and wit, this one has only youth-oriented love and laughs to offer and there is really no comparison at all. No name in the cast save pudgy Michael J. Pollard from "Bonnie and Clyde" and that's about it. I didn't think much of "Between the Lines" as you can gather. Sorehead, me.
