Citibus Drivers Begin Union Push

©1977, West Texas Times

A National Labor Relations Board hearing in Fort Worth May 24 may determine whether drivers in the financially beleaguered Citibus System will vote for unionization.

Citibus driver James Sterling said he started the call for a local transit union and contacted the Meat Cutters and Packing House Workers District Union P-777 to get the wheels in motion.

The meat cutters group filed a petition with the NLRB April 25. An NLRB spokesperson said that 30 percent of the Lubbock Transit Corp. drivers are required to sign for an election.

A hearing is scheduled when labor and management can not agree on the election, the spokesman said, adding that interested parties would meet in Fort Worth May 23 for an informal conference.

Ernie Prenevost, manager of Lubbock Transit Corp. which operates the city bus system refused to comment on the unionization move.

"You write what you damn please," he told a reporter.

Earlier Prenevost had complained about press coverage of the less-than-a-year-old Citibus system. "The emphasis seems to be on the problems, not on the increases in ridership."

The city-owned buses hit the street in December under the management of Lubbock Transit Corp., a subsidiary of American Transit Corp. in St. Louis. The city council budgeted a $404,000 deficit, but in early April it was disclosed that the system would lose $150,000 more than that.

An irritated city council — having already raised taxes once to pay for a record budget — told the city's Transit Advisory Board to find a way to meet the budget. The Transit Board said, in effect, "no way," without cutting service to the bone.

On a 3-2 vote, the council gave the board more time to work on the budget. But with increased fuel costs with air conditioning in the summer, member John Krieger told the board Monday that the deficit could go even higher.

City Manager Larry Cunningham said that the city's contract with Lubbock Transit requires city taxpayers to subsidize the losses. With unionization of citibus drivers "if they're asking for higher wages and Ernie (Prenevost) can't figure out where to cut back, it will cost more" to run the buses, Cunningham said.

"Ultimately that cost could be passed on to the city or to consumers," Cunningham said.

Sterling said that the issue involved in the union move is not so much higher wages as lack of benefits. "We don't get retirement, or holidays and we have to buy our own uniforms. I think that's very poor management."

A 1976 city staff report confirms that drivers get no sick leave or emergency leave and few other benefits.

The report said, "the City of Lubbock offers many more benefits than the Lubbock Transit Corporation. The additional cost

Suntans: Double, double, boil and bubble Too many rays give you trouble

Every summer the ritual begins. Hours spent basking in a burnished golden, glossy with oil, glowing with health. But those bronzed good-looks are deceiving when you consider the tan today will be thick, leathery skin tomorrow.

"Prolonged, excessive exposure to sun not only causes premature aging and thickening of the skin, but can cause skin cancer as well," noted a local dermatologist, who asked not to be identified.

A day in the sun without any protection may result in redness, soreness and tenderness followed by water blisters and peeling, but that sunburn is only the beginning of your problems.

"If you form water blisters between one-fourth and one-half inch in diameter, you've got a serious burn," explained the dermatologist. Although such severe burns occur infrequently, they do require medical attention. A severe sunburn can cause blood vessels under the skin to dilate, giving the skin a bruised look. There is no treatment to remove the discoloration once it's there and often the discoloration is permanent. In addition, the condition is painful and, in some rare cases, infection develops.

Even if you escape the short term effects of the sun, chances are the cumulative effects will catch up with you.

Although skin cancer is usually found in persons over 45 years of age, the condition has been found in people in their thirties. The signs of skin cancer are a thick, red, scaly area or an open wound that doesn't heal. Skin cancer has been directly connected with sun exposure, especially in cases where people spend long hours working outdoors.

Premature wrinkling is another threat the sun worshipper should be aware of. "The 18-year-old who has a beautiful tan now can expect to have excessive wrinkling and by

thickening of the skin where she's 35," said the skin doctor. While using moisturizers may help, the burning rays are a woman's worst enemy when it comes to beauty.

Despite all the hidden dangers in the sun, the majority of people will probably still be working on the perfect tan this summer. If you are one of them, there are some precautions you should take to make the tanning at least safer.

Warns the local physician, "Tan gradually, spending just a few minutes in the sun until you build up a tolerance." You probably know if you tan easily, and take heed to the warning your skin gives you. Sunning at high noon is asking for trouble, no matter how easily you tan.

While you're building up your tanning time, always use a sunscreen. The best are those that contain PABA or Benzophenone. "They give you protection from the sun's harmful burning rays while allowing you to tan gradually," explained the dermatologist. You should apply sunscreens often, and don't wait until you're burnt to start using them. If you're in and out of the water or if you perspire heavily, keep reapplying the sunscreen.

According to dermatologists, "eyelids, ears, sides of the neck are the most sensitive spots," but burns on the ankles, back of knees can be painful.

If you plan to be near water, sand or cement you need double protection. While a wide brim hat will keep the sun off your face, the reflection from the beach will burn you anyway.

If you don't take any precautions during a day in the sun you're likely to wake up with a sunburn the next day. Then the best home treatment you can take is cool baths with baking powder or starch added to the water. That should be followed by soothing lotions and, if necessary, aspirin can be taken to relieve any discomfort.

Once you've done the damage, stay out of the sun. You can burn on top of a burn and even dark skinned beauties can get a sunburn. Of course the darker your skin the higher your tolerance to the sun.

Tanning products available now do an excellent job of giving you a gradual tan, and common sense will tell you when you've had too much. But there are still those who want the richest, darkest tan, despite the many dangers.

For that select group the oils seem to be the favorite. A group of college students named Hawaiian Tropic Lotion as their number one choice. Loaded with coconut, banana and other oils, these products give quick, dark, tans. But be warned they won't give you the safest tan.

Another tanner's secret is keeping wet, via spray water bottles. "You tan darker and even when you spray water regularly," explained one sunbather.

Robbins Riles Republicans Rift Reflects Deeper Splits?

A local Republican public relations campaign backfired this week with reports of a rift between State Rep. Joe Robbins and party leaders, but the "tempest in a teapot," as a state GOP leader described it, may have revealed old political fractures within the party.

Local Republican chairman Mike Stevens Thursday gave members of the press a list of broad, strongly conservative stands adopted by the local executive committee, composed of precinct chairmen in the county. But the press ignored most of the stands concentrating on criticism of Robbins that had been "leaked" earlier in the week. Stevens said Robbins' re-election chances were endangered by his stand on the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution, but emphasized the party would take no stand on a candidate until after the primary.

"Joe doesn't answer to the executive committee. The party doesn't have control over Joe," Stevens said of the freshman legislator.

Stevens said that the public relations campaign was designed to attract conservative — perhaps traditional Southern-wing Democrats — candidates into the Republican fold, but some party leaders privately expressed reservations that the criticism of Robbins might deter some office-seekers.

"Nobody wants to get elected and then have the party tell them

Step Out and Meet Jesus

The title of this editorial comes from a friend who swears that that's what paratroppers say when they hit the silk. You have to jump. But for all the assurances that, yes, the chute is packed right and you've been trained to fall right, you're not all that certain that you shouldn't be prepared for an appointment with Maker & Co.

After laboring this point, we now get around to why we brought it up in the first place. The city bond election. Voters are to decide the fate of $26.4 million in bonds, most of which will be spent for water and sewer projects, notably the development of a third water source for the city.

We urge that you vote FOR passage of all the propositions on the ballot May 21.

Still there are some doubts about the quality of the chutes we're about to buy.

—For one, the $5¼ million dollars included in the development of a third water supply is just the start, and the city may be back soon for more, this time revenue bonds for a project that could run as high as $85 million.

That's a lot of money, but we don't drink sand or run factories or businesses on horned toads. The fact is that the city needs water. The Canadian River won't be enough, and the Bailey County sandhills won't last forever. We must begin development now, but we must be ever watchful for astute stewardship of the project.

—For two, the council proposes to finance this round of bonds from an increase in water and sewer use charges. In a way, that's troubling, because lower and middle-income consumers will be paying off the bonds, while property owners, who will surely be enriched by the continued growth of the city, are immune from a tax increase.

Still, proponents make a good case that water and sewer base rates haven't been raised in 14 years and that the increase will be gradual and not financially devastating. It's only fair that those who use the water and sewer lines pay for them, they argue.

—For three, there's the fire station the city wants to build in Southwest Lubbock. It is planned outside the city limits, although growth in that burgeoning area will have to require annexation so the station can be built (No, the city is not going to build a fire station outside the city limits. The city has to grow there first).

Again, careful parachute packing is required. The city already has a higher percentage of undeveloped land within the existing city limits than many others its size. Further expansion could extend city services unnecessarily thin.

Still, Southwest Lubbock is on the boom, and wise planning requires the city to prepare for its continued growth.

What it amounts to, in city bond elections or parachute jumping, is that the things we buy are ultimately unimportant when compared to how we buy or when we buy, or most important of all, the people that do the buying.

Letter to the Editor

To the editor:

Doesn't the Constitution of the United States Government give us freedom of worship, speech and press?

I am an ordained Minister of the Gospel and not a naturopath as I do not diagnose or prescribe. As a minister, I am commissioned to minister to the sick; Matthew 10:7-8.

Why was Daniel cast into the lions' den and the three Hebrew children cast into the fiery furnace? Because they prayed when laws had been passed saying "don't pray to God". It is against the law now to have prayer in the school room, but it isn't against the laws of God. Jesus said in Luke 18:1, that men were always to pray.

As a citizen of the United States, I have a right to religious freedom and ministering to the sick is part of my religious freedom. When someone tries to stop me from ministering to the sick, they are going against the laws of God and the laws of the United States.

God says that if we keep his commandments, none of these diseases will come upon us. His commandments concerning health is in the eleventh chapter of Leviticus. There are over 600 other scriptures concerning sickness and health in the Bible.

What we eat doesn't affect our salvation, but what we eat does effect our health.

'Safety Sadie'

by Jack Anderson
with Joe Spear

Copyright, 1977, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

WASHINGTON — The Consumer Product Safety Commission has been criticized for failing to protect the public against dozens of dangerous products. So chairman John Byington has hired an advertising agency to improve the commission's image.

The advertising firm, McDonald and Little, is drawing $358,000 from taxpayers to make commercials. In return for this sum, the ad men have created a character called "Safety Sadie." They decided the commission needed a symbol, like Smokey the Bear, to make the public aware of safety.

"Safety Sadie" began making commercials. She would smile prettily and deliver a little safety message. At least $45,000 was spent filming the TV spots.

Then belatedly, Byington decided he didn't like the actress who played the part of "Safety Sadie." The $45,000 worth of commercials were thrown out. And Byington personally directed the search for a new actress. He has now settled on Carol Arthur, the wife of comedian Dom DeLuise.

Faulty Fuel Tanks: The most horrible automobile accidents have been rear-end collisions. The fuel tanks often ruptured, and the gas ignited. Then the cars would explode into an infernal. It has happened to hundreds of cars that were struck from behind.

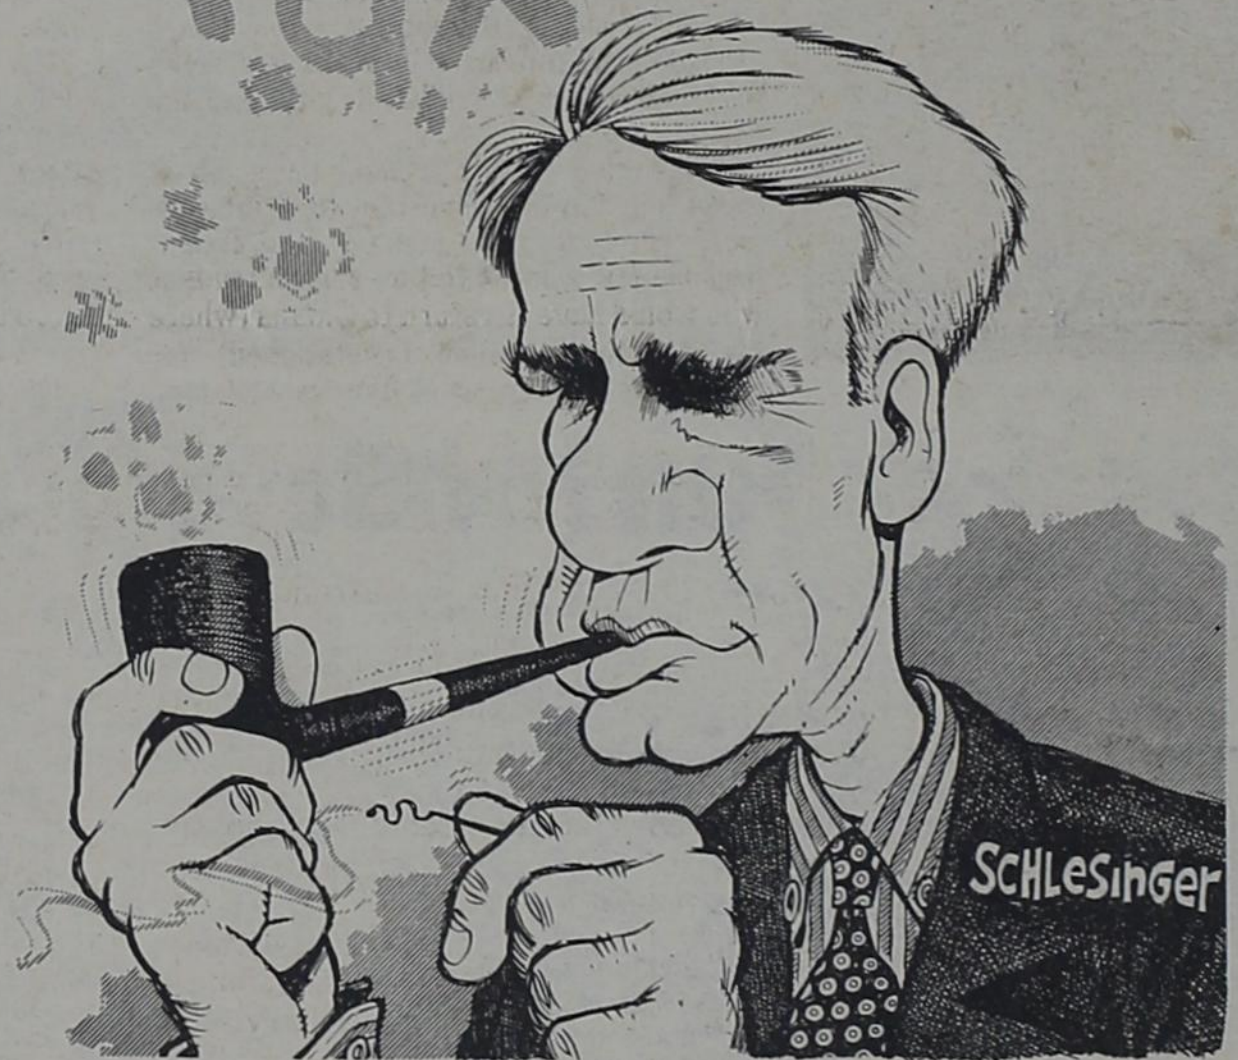

Those who escaped their flaming automobiles suffered horrible burns. Many of them filed lawsuits against the automakers for installing flimsy fuel tanks.

Last year, the federal government finally stepped in. All 1977 models are supposed to have gas tanks that can withstand a 30-mile-an-hour impact from the rear.

We've seen some of the test reports. The Ford Granada's fuel tank survived the rear-end impact without leaking. But fuel gushed out of the tank when the car was tilted. Ford officials claimed the gas leakage was caused by a bent gas cap in the test car.

The rear end of the Chevette, a General Motors model, was crushed by the 30-mile-an-hour impact. The gas tank was punctured, and the inflammable fuel spewed out.

Gas Tax

States the confidential report: "The test was terminated in 10 minutes due to obvious non-compliance."

Yet both Ford and GM insist that the Granada and the Chevette passed their own rear-impact tests. Spokesman for both auto companies also told us that they are studying the government's test results.

Mideast Middleman: Adnan Khashoggi is a mysterious international wheeler-dealer, a Middle Eastern middleman. He rides in Rolls Royces, flies in Lear jets and stays in the best hotels. He knows people in high places. He had a pipeline into the Nixon White House. And he is a favorite of the Saudi Arabian royal family.

Khashoggi has been an intermediary for several big American corporations in the Middle East. By his own confession, he stopped Northrop from paying a $225,000 bribe to a Saudi Arabian general by pocketing the payoff himself. And he once charged Lockheed a $106 million fee.

Both the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Justice Department have been investigating Khashoggi for a long time. The investigation has been hampered by his elusiveness. He has stayed away from the United States and has refused to accept a subpoena.

Here in Washington, U.S. Attorney Earl Silbert has considered bringing criminal or contempt charges against Khashoggi. But Silbert has concluded that there isn't enough evidence to make a case. He has secretly recommended, therefore, against an indictment.

It isn't a popular decision. Many of his subordinates are disappointed. But his decision is expected to stand.

Dress Code: The House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has issued strict new guidelines on a matter of overwhelming importance; dress codes. President Carter may be able to go on TV wearing a sweater; but no such informality is tolerated in the marble halls of Congress.

Apparently, some congressmen got upset when committee aides appeared at hearings without ties, without jackets and—worst of all—with their sleeves rolled up. The committee fired off a stern memo demanding that all staff members be "properly attired" on Capitol Hill. According to the memo, "this means ties and jackets and, of course, no jeans."

The same committee, incidentally, just handed out a thick manual entitled "Staff Operating Procedures." It tells the highly paid, highly educated staff members how to answer the telephone and how to take messages. It even instructs them how to write a letter to House Speaker Tip O'Neill.

But most important of all, the manual warns the staff not to eat any food in the reception room. A spokesman explained that the committee wants its staff to appear "more businesslike."

Auto Lobby: The automobile industry is eager to defeat the clean air act. So the auto lobbyists have carefully divided the country into sections and have recruited people to bring pressure on their congressmen.

Auto dealers have bombarded their congressmen with letters and telegrams. Others have paid personal calls on their congressmen. The automobile lobby flew a group of auto dealers from Texas to Washington, for example, to put the squeeze on Texas congressmen.

The amount of pollution you breathe, in other words, may depend on the skill of the automobile lobby.

Vanishing Breeds ...

By CLIFF AVERY
Staff Writer

It would really help if, while you read this story, you hum "The William Tell Overture." Sure you know it — "The Lone Ranger Theme?" Badalump, badalump, badalumpumpump ...

You with me? Humming? Okay, on your mark ... get set ... go....

7:08. Don Glendening and Mitch Mitchell huddle at the cash register. Mitchell has the pizza. He passes it to Glendening. Glendening takes off, half-running half-walking around the bench chairs in Pizza Express. There are no tables. It's a restaurant without tables. Just take-out and deliver.

Mitchell, in the yellow t-shirt that is the establishment's uniform and topped out with a baby blue porkpie hat, turns to another order. He doesn't have to watch Glendening as the young man displaces the breeze in the doorway. He knows Glendening is one of the fastest drivers on the staff, and has been since he started delivering the pizzas just before Christmas last year. Most of the other drivers have since graduated into the kitchen, but Glendening seems to prefer delivery.

It hasn't been a good night for the delivery people. One car got caught in a mud puddle as its driver pursued a short cut. But Mitchell knows that he doesn't have to worry about Glendening.

Still humming? Badalump, badalump ...

Glendening — an architecture student at Tech by day, a delivery person by night — leaps into his red Volkswagen with the Nebraska plates. He edges the cardboard encased pizza into an oven in the converted back seat. The car holds the heat and the smell of tomato sauce.

Glendening started looking for a job at the end of the fall semester when finances were running a little tight. It was tough, because few wanted to hire a Tech student who would have to return to Omaha (where his Air force father is stationed) for Christmas break a scant five weeks later.

Don Glendening on the run ...

The 'Pizza Guy' Still Gets Around ...

7:10. Glendening rounds the corner at 19th and University on his way to a book store with a pepperoni. He usually delivers about 30 a night and is paid 20 cents per delivery, plus his salary. The big night is Sunday, when the dorms don't serve dinner, and he may deliver as many as five pizzas to the same place.

"It's amazing how many people I see in class or walking across campus. They'll see me and say, 'There's the pizza guy.'"

But students are not his only source of revenue as he winds through his employer's delivery area — 4th to 34th, Q to Quaker. In fact, the biggest tip he ever received — $3.89 — came from a hamburger stand.

The shops are more or less his regular customers. For instance, he will occasionally deliver to a funeral parlor and he's usually greeted by the same attendant.

"How's business?" the attendant asks Glendening.

"Pretty dead," Glendening hides a smile, "How's yours?"

"About the same."

Or as he drives through the city, Glendening will see houses where he has deposited pizzas and knows the inhabitant for their taste in circular dough, and, for some, their taste in parties.

"We're busy every Thursday night. For some reason, the college students in this town party every Thursday night."

"I don't get hassled much, except late at night, people will want to impress their friends by hassling the pizza guy."

But in his travels, Glendening has learned. He has learned how to find his way through the city which takes more, believe it or not, than knowing the alphabet. He has learned the faces who will soon be sinking into the pepperoni. And he has learned about people.

"People who are shy in class or on campus aren't shy when the pizza guy comes."

7:12. Glendening wheels the Volkswagen into a parking space in front of his quarry. Stop humming.

... and in a rare moment of repose.

He approached John and Mark Sorrell, the owners of the restaurant, who hired him. He's stayed on.

"I didn't know anybody at Tech," the long-maned Glendening said, "Until I get out of school, it's kind of like a social life. I'm going out every night and meeting 30 people."

As such, he may be one of the last few delivery persons around. Kids today turn away from their "I Love Lucy" reruns and ask, "Did they really use to deliver groceries?" Mass marketing and inflation and fast-food joints took their toll.

Not only in services, but in legends. Perhaps it's written on dusty scrolls that delivery guys were propositioned by all sorts of wicked women who lured them to the door by ordering a box of Wheaties or a dozen oysters.

The question had to come up. "Naw, not really," Glendening flushed a bit from embarrassment, "There were a couple of times when I thought ... maybe ... if I stayed."

But he didn't, and perhaps it is just as well. Reality pales in comparison to elusive legends.

... But Automated Elevators Don't Get Her Down

In the political dukedom that was Mayor Daley's Chicago, patronage jobs greased the wheels of government.

The precinct captain's nephew or a donor's idiot son could always rely that on the wet his whistle at the public trough, and one of the dippers available was the job of elevator operator at city hall—even though the elevators had long since become automated.

No such luxuries are permitted in the money-tight provinces, and the Courthouse and the City Hall rely on citizen's fingers, not pocketbooks, to glide the formica-lined chambers between halls.

But there is one place—a private building—that relies on a plump, pleasant woman to operate the elevator—an elevator so old that it would use an arrow on each floor to indicate its location, instead of the customary bank of blinking lights. It would use an arrow—but the arrow on the ground floor is missing.

Mrs. Ruth Salinas sits in a sunny office on the fourth floor of the Green—nee Myrick—Building. It used to be an insurance company's office, but now she sits and decorates a blanket for a grandchild born just before Easter. She may sit, sew and, on her portable television, watch the PTA (For "Praise The Lord") Show.

If someone wants to use the elevator on the ground floor, he'll ring, and she will hear the bell where she sits. She'll toddle to her awaiting lift and glide to the ground, ready for her chauffeuring duties. But the elevator is tucked behind the stairs, and there are no offices above the fourth floor, so business isn't too demanding. A sign in her lounge-office reads, "Gone to Lunch—Take the Stairs."

Her daughter originally had the job, hired by Cardinal Insurance that used to own the building. Her daughter applied to Tech and told her mother, "If you want an easy job, apply for mine."

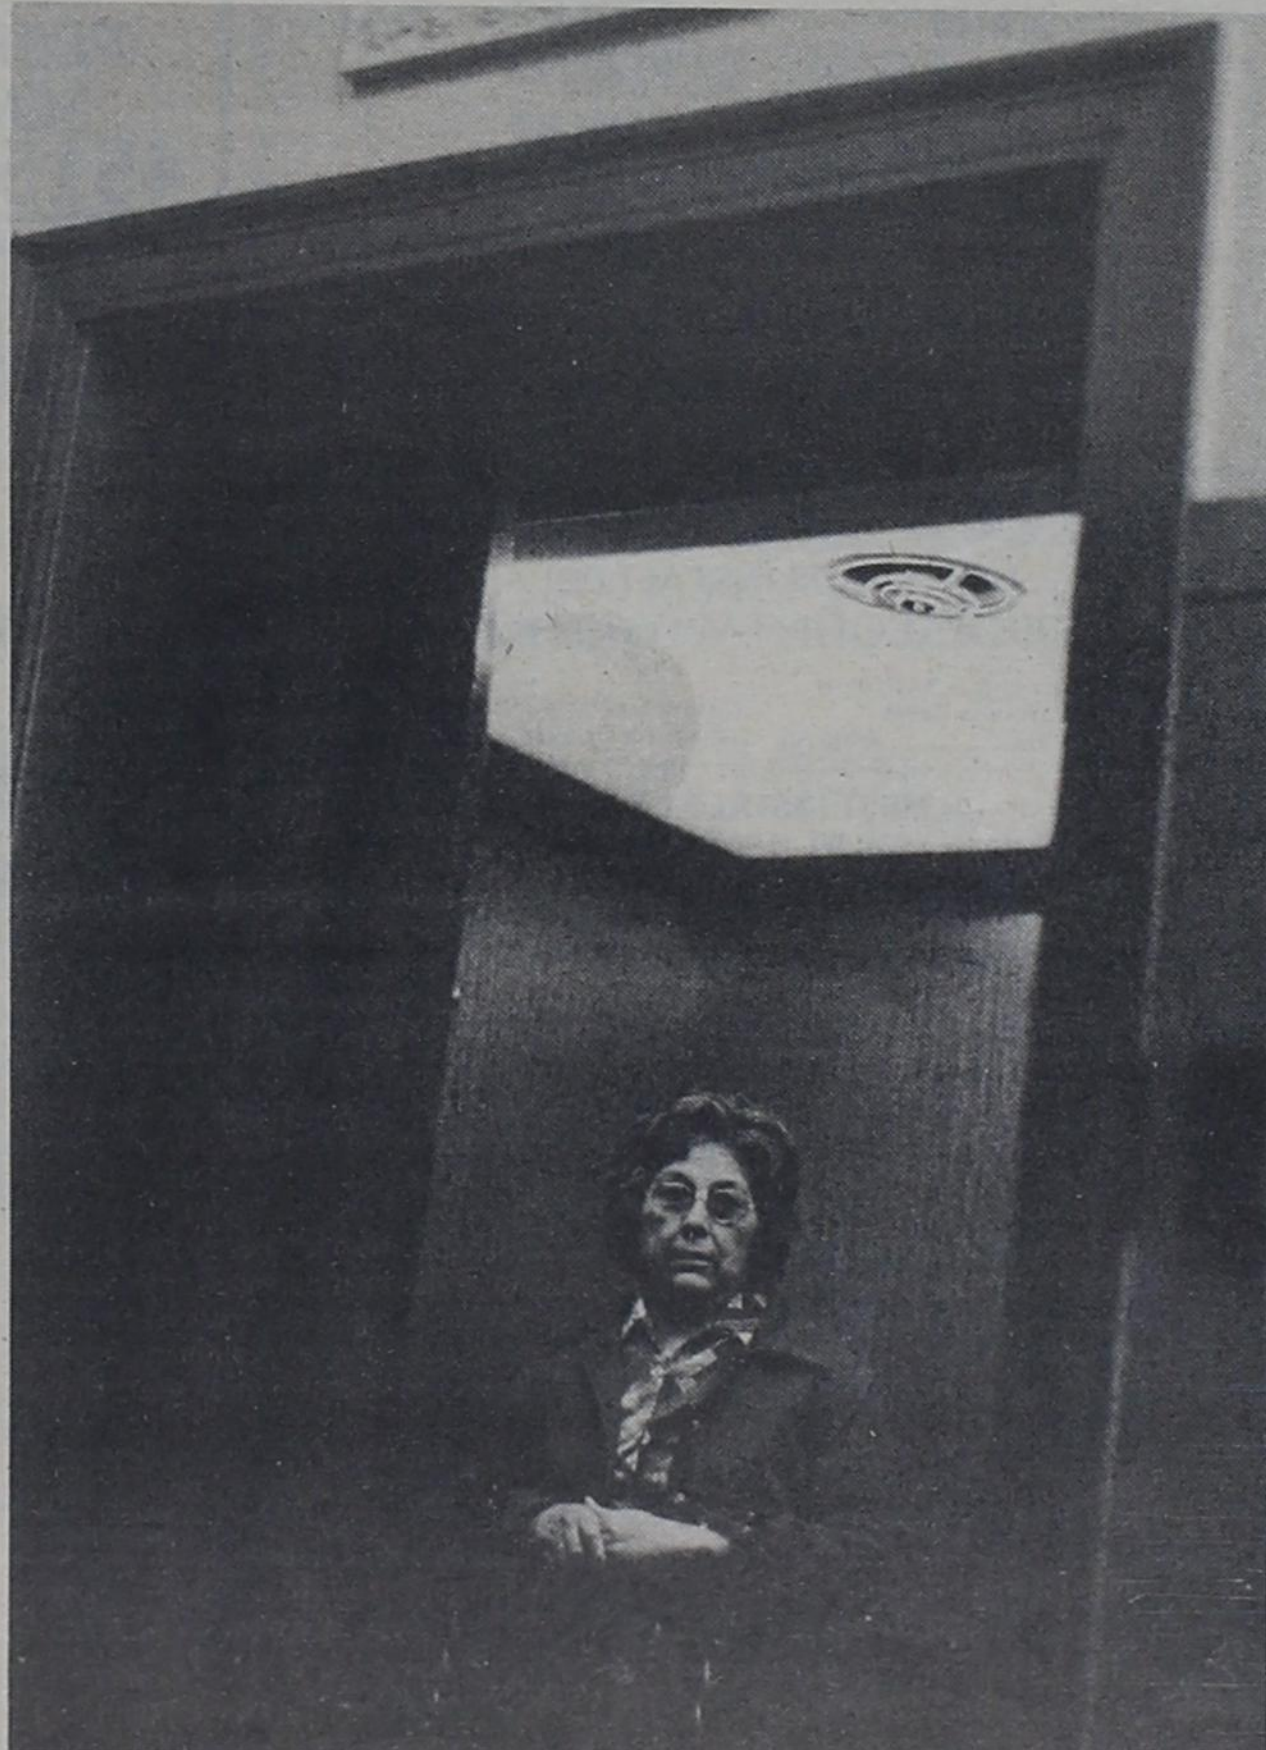

That was four years ago, and except for a year she took off, Mrs. Salinas has been operating the elevator ever since.

Some of the building's tenants prefer to climb the stairs, but the clients of the attorneys officed there may ride with her. And if they're regulars, she may get to know them. "The ones that are coming all the time, they know me," Mrs. Salinas says, "The new ones, they don't know me."

She says that even though the elevator is old, she trusts it. The only near miss came, ironically as a repairman enlisted her aid in unloosing the stuck car. As they tried to move up, something snapped and they fell, but she assures a giant spring underneath the elevator cushioned the fall.

"People ask me all the time how old is the elevator?" she says, avoiding the obvious answer that it is old enough to need an operator on the wind-up-toyish control.

But while the courthouses and the city halls have turned to automated elevators with the formica sides and the blinking lights, the old elevator with Mrs. Salinas at the helm is a reminder of more genteel times, when elevator riders were greeted not with Muzak, but with a polite, if somewhat obsequious, "What floor, please?"

Mrs. Ruth Salinas in an elevator that might be called quaint.

of offering those city benefits to transit personnel is a deciding factor in incorporating the transit system into the city government." Presently, Lubbock Transit hires and pays the drivers, but the city did consider as an alternative to the present system city-owned and operated bus service.

Asked how many of the drivers are supporting the move, Sterling said, "Practically all of them, except for the older guys."

"It's not the idea that we want to get into a hassle," Sterling said of the union drive, "But we need to get some kind of benefits."

The transit board moved Monday to increase its control over the bus budget.

Transit Advisory Board members told Transit Advisor John Wilson and Prenevost that they wanted to see the 1977-78 budget at the next meeting.

"If I'm gonna get called on the phone by people asking if I'm a member of this board, I'm damn sure going to have some input on the budget," board member Bill Dean said.

Krieger echoed Dean's statement, "At bridge club and every place else, I'm getting hit by the taxpayers in this town" about the Citibus problem.

The Monday action came after a discussion of the budget left board members and other observers scratching their heads about Prenevost's accounting methods.

One of the reasons for the budget overrun was an increased expense on driver training. But some board members were upset about Prenevost's explanation where the $30,000 for training went on the books. Driver training was not an item on the budget.

Prenevost explained that the budget drawn up in January, 1976, had lumped driver training in driver salaries and was thrown off by the two-month delay in starting the new service. But the exact accounting process remained unclear.

"I'd hate to have to explain it (the budget deficit) based upon what we heard today," Dean told his colleagues.

Smith then asked Wilson and Prenevost to prepare the numbers on next year's budget. "What we don't want to do is on Sept. 15 find that we're going to have to beg for more money."

Republicans . . .

what to do," one Republican said.

State Republican Executive Director Jack Orr, contacted in Austin Wednesday, tried to minimize the effect of the Robbins rharb.

He called coverage in the press "extraordinarily overblown" and said Robbins was "respected by his colleagues in the legislature."

"As a legislator he is doing well," Orr said, "What problems he has with local constituents are his problems and his constituents' problems."

The controversy centered over Robbins' support of the Equal Rights Amendment, a teacher consultation bill which some right-to-work advocates called threatening and his vote on Texas Medical Association-backed amendments to malpractice legislation.

Orr emphasized that malpractice is not a party issue. On Republican-backed changes in the election code, Robbins "has been with us 100 percent of the time," Orr said.

the state executive director frequently talked with Robbins in Austin as the tempest swirled in its South Plains teapot. Orr was to have been the star attraction at Stevens' airport press conference unveiling the public relations campaign, but foggy weather forced his plane to Amarillo, leaving Stevens to field the questions on Robbins.

Meanwhile, in Austin, Robbins laid the blame for the controversy on the doorsteps of special interests within the party — particularly anit-ERA activists and physicians who have been long-time GOP supporters.

Stevens attempted to explain the legislator's relation to the party's executive committee and said that the public relations campaign had been in the works since the party's Lincoln Day Dinner in February.

But Bill Wilkerson perhaps summed it up best: "It's incumbent that Robbins shape up with us, not us shaping up with Robbins." Stevens noted however that none of the precepts that the party's executive committee adopted Tuesday were passed unanimously, and that the party could tolerate the difference in views.

"We're not going to ask him (Robbins) to resign or start a recall or anything," the local chairman said, "The party has no official censure of Joe."

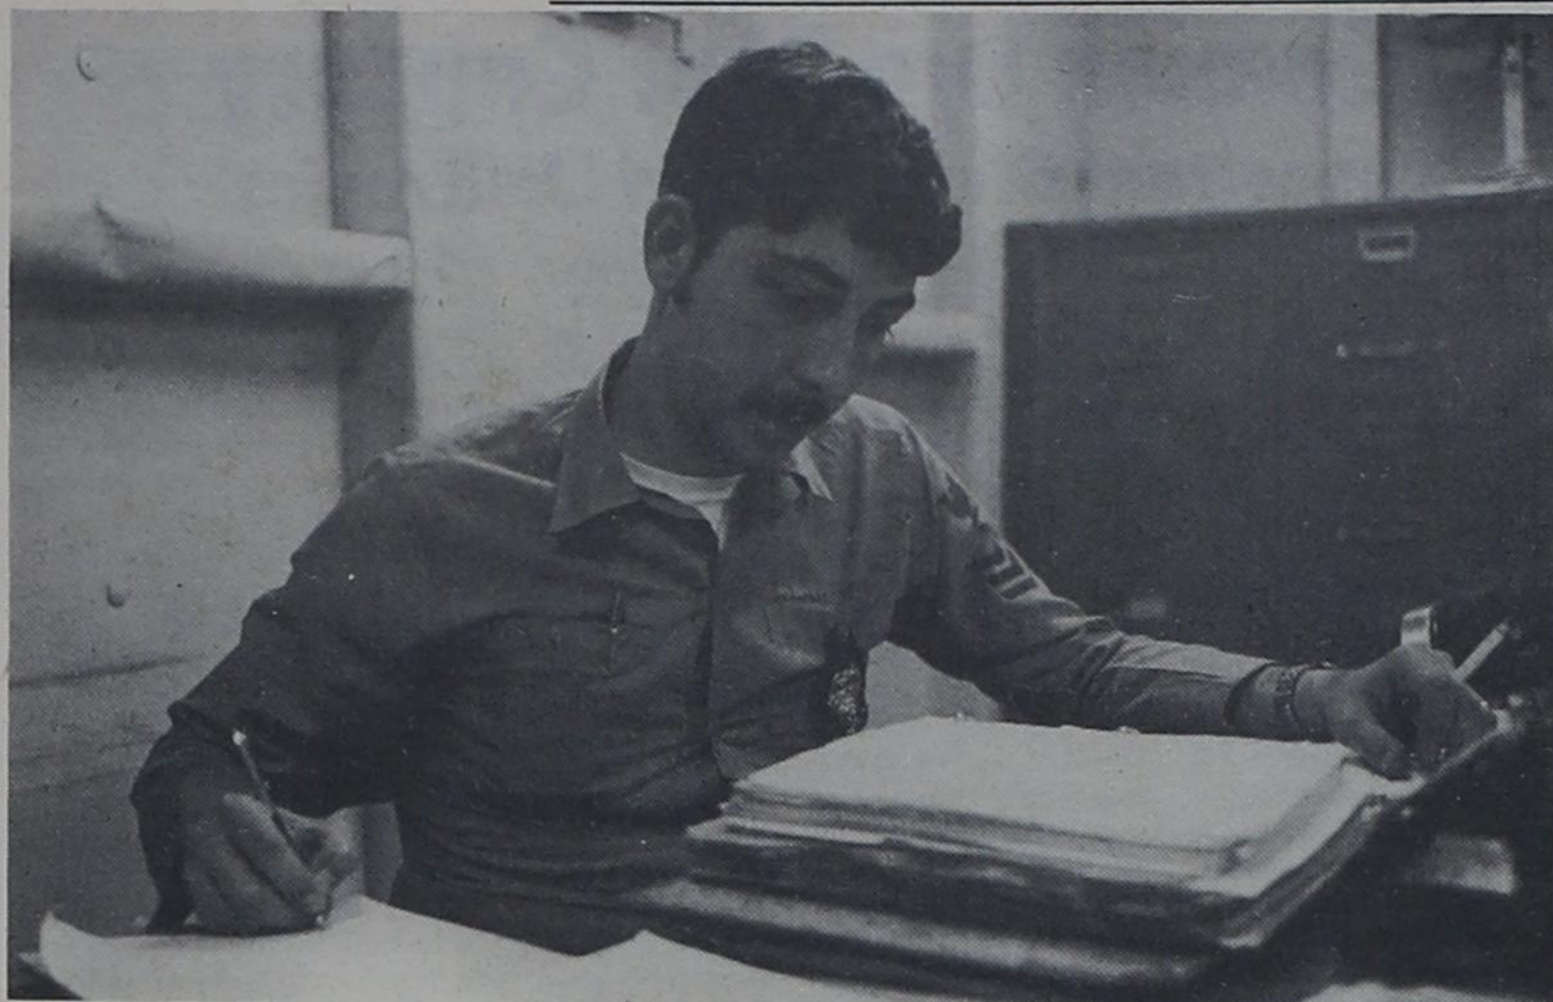

"The Republican umbrella is quite large."

At the root of the matter may be a combination of personality and ideological conflict. The right wing of the local party gained control of the county convention last year on the heels of a Ronald Reagan victory, but soon had to relinquish most of the reigns to Ford supporters after the embattled President won nomination in Kansas City.

Personalities aggravated the local split and seemed to come to a head when pro-Reagan vice chairman John Ryan and Stevens bitterly split, ending in Ryan's resignation.

Some of Reagan's hopes of making the party "ideologically pure" may linger here, and while Robbins (also attacked for his friendship with a liberal local attorney) may have borne the brunt, Stevens was surprised by the revelations in the press. "This has been a great deal of embarrassment to me," he said.

Navyman Keeps Paper Afloat

By TONY R. DeMARCO

ABOARD USS CORONADO — "Paperwork can really be boring at times, but it's a necessary evil that must be taken care of and that's my responsibility," says Lubbock native Russell Wayne Claborn.

As the personnel office supervisor aboard the 16,800-ton amphibious transport dock USS Coronado, Personnelman First Class Claborn knows what he's talking about.

Claborn, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Elliot of Lubbock, explains, "I have sixteen men who work for me and we take care of the personnel records of about four hundred and fifty enlisted men."

The 1968 graduate of Monterey High School (ironically assigned to the Coronado, the name of MHS's cross-town rival) and his personnelmen administer examinations; interview sailors and determine their eligibility for certain job occupations; and counsel personnel in Navy/civilian careers, veterans rights and benefits.

"That's a lot of paperwork, but I enjoy my job," says the 27-year-old Texan who reported to the Norfolk, Va.-based Coronado in November 1974.

Claborn says he joined the Navy to "do some traveling and see a bit of the world."

A nine-year Navy veteran, who saw combat action in Vietnam as a patrol boat gunner near Danang, he earned the Vietnam Gallantry Cross and several other medals for his duty there.

In addition to his Pacific Fleet tour, his sea-going travels on Coronado have brought him to Germany, France, England, Scotland, The Netherlands and a number of countries facing the Mediterranean.

Coronado, one of the Navy's newest amphibious ships, is capable of carrying 860 combat-ready Marine troops and their equipment.

Last July, while on a Mediterranean cruise, the 569-foot Coronado evacuated more than 300 American and foreign national civilians from civil war-torn Beirut, Lebanon to Athens, Greece. For his participation in that effort, Claborn was awarded a letter of commendation from the Commander of the U.S. Sixth Fleet.

Commendations, medals and accountability are nothing new to Claborn, who presently lives in Norfolk with his wife, Joan, and children, Jeffrey Steven, 3, and infant daughter, Amy Beth.

"All I'm waiting for is enough time in the service to apply for more advanced responsibilities such as Warrant Officer or some other commissioned officer program."

'One Pill Makes You Small'

Killers Lurk on Medicine Shelves

By JANICE JARVIS
Staff Writer

Perhaps it is because we are a fast-paced society and fast cures go with the territory, we would rather take an aspirin than a headache, despite the side effects we may set ourselves up for.

Whether you take over-the-counter drugs or prescription drugs, there are hazards involved — hazards that could cost you your life, explained Dr. Alexander Kenny, professor of Pharmacology at Texas Tech School of Medicine. "All chemicals are potentially toxic, depending on the dose," Kenny said.

But that doesn't keep people away from drugs. In fact, we may be becoming a nation with drug-induced diseases, Dr. Bernard Mirkin, professor of Pediatrics and Pharmacology at University of Minnesota College of Medicine said at a recent Tech lecture.

Since most drugs have more than one type of action, most people don't know what they're bargaining for when they take something as seemingly harmless as an aspirin. You may get rid of your headache, but you might also get a ringing in the ear — and you can die from an overdose of aspirin.

The same holds true for prescription drugs. A person allergic to penicillin can die within a matter of minutes, and a tranquilizer taken by a pregnant woman can endanger the fetus.

The risks still don't stop people from popping pills. Studies indicate that the average person on the street is taking five different drugs, according to Mirkin.

The problem is further complicated when you consider the side effects of drugs are usually treated with more drugs. According to a recent study, five per cent of patients admitted into hospitals were suffering from adverse drug reactions, and of that five per cent, 30 per cent had a chance of suffering from the second treatment designed to relieve the side effects of the first treatment, noted Mirkin.

It all begins to sound like a vicious circle. You suffer with drugs or without, and it's easy to start asking just what you can trust.

While the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) sets up very strict guidelines in the production of drugs, there're times when some things slip by. There's apparently no guarantee when it comes to drugs.

The guidelines issued by the FDA for the study of new drugs specifies the number and type of animal to be used in preclinical tests. These tests emphasize toxicity rather than efficacy. In 1906, the FDA was concerned only with purity of drugs but in 1938, it became concerned with the safety of drugs as well. Today it is to say the least, very careful about the drugs on the market.

Because extensive testing is required before drugs can be introduced to the market, some pharmaceutical companies have been caught fudging their data, Kenny said.

As a result the rules have become even stricter and now the FDA requires tests on the fetus, to guard against cases of drugs administered during pregnancy.

Testing of drugs can last as long as 20 years and even if a pharmacologist comes up with the same drug to treat a new illness it must again undergo strict testing.

As a result of this strict enforcement of drug safety, few drugs are introduced to the market each year. While Europe and Mexico may have a lot more drugs to choose from, they serve as a kind of testing grounds for the

It all begins to sound like a vicious circle .. You suffer with drugs or without

U.S. If the drugs have a bad effect on people in Europe, you can bet it's not going to be tried in the U.S. "What is happening in practice in Europe is testing the drugs so the FDA can make an objective evaluation before trying them," said Kenny.

While it may seem that at times the FDA is dragging its feet in approving a drug — they have good reason. In Europe Thalidomine was widely prescribed for pregnant women, but it also was later discovered to produce deformed children. The drug was not approved in this country — saving the country from a tragedy. "Now when the FDA hesitates about approving a drug they always have that incidence to cite," noted Kenny. Although we don't get that many new drugs in the U.S., it may be to our advantage.

Even using tried-and-true drugs is still a gamble, but the real villain behind all this may be the Physician's Desk Reference, Kenny said. The book is commercially sponsored by drug companies and pharmacies and consists of listings of products and all major drug manufacturers.

It is a convenient source of information about products, dosage and side effects. It is so useful that according to a survey, 89 percent of the physicians interviewed cited the source as the most useful drug reference.

Which leads to the catch: it's put out by pharmaceutical companies — businesses that are trying to sell a product.

The chances of suffering side effects from drugs are further increased when you consider the number of trade names issued for a single drug. Sometimes it's hard just to track down what drug you're taking to its original name. "Don't let anyone tell you trade names aren't important," warned Kenny. Morphine, for instance, goes under no other trade name and it's widely used.

From the physician's point of view, cases of drug side effects might be reduced simply by limiting their practice to only a small number of drugs. The doctor who has used penicillin for years knows what kind of reactions to expect, while a new drug may be a gamble for him as well as the patient.

Part of the blame may go to the patient. "If a patient hears a lot about a drug he may be anxious to try it, rather than sticking with what the physician is more experienced with," said Kenny.

Despite all the testing on drugs there is always a risk involved. In addition to the immediate side effects that could result from a drug, there's also the problem of accumulative effects. "Fortunately, most drugs do not accumulate enough to reach a level that could be lethal," said Kenny. Most over-the-counter drugs work fairly fast so that while you're putting drugs in, they're coming out just as fast. Taking a single overdose is usually more harmful than a build-up of drugs.

Mixing drugs are equally as harmful. In fact a tranquilizer mixed with a martini can cause respiration to slow — making it impossible to get enough oxygen.

With these facts in mind, the consumer is at least aware of the hidden dangers behind medications. It is wise, advises Dr. Mirkin, to always ask the physician what drug is being prescribed. You should also tell him any additional medications you may be taking. That includes everything from birth control pills to aspirin because when mixed together the drugs could become dangerous.

For minor ailments it may be best to leave things up to nature. After all, a night without sleep certainly isn't going to do any harm when you consider the effects the wrong drug at the wrong time could have.

On the other hand there is no need to jump to extremes. The hypochondriac who thinks he has every side effect listed for a drug can be just as dangerous as the pill popper.

It's a matter of mixing common sense with your doctor's advice. A higher level of consciousness concerning drugs may not eliminate the problem of drug side effects but it can at least reduce the chances of people suffering from drug-induced diseases.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE

by Jack Sheridan

Another show is opening tonight in town and your attention is directed to an important play to be unveiled at the Lubbock Theatre Centre Playhouse in the first of five scheduled performances.

It is William Inge's commentary on life with an "ordinary" family, "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs." The play, which in its original enjoyed a healthy Broadway run, then set out on a national tour which brought it ultimately to the stage of the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium under the aegis of Civic Lubbock, Inc. It subsequently appeared as a motion picture which met with fair response.

Unlike many plays which have achieved their vintage status with the passing of the years, "Dark at the Top of the Stairs" still has blood, plays well and affords a cast of 12 some compelling characterizations. LTC's production, which, incidentally, is its final presentation of the 1976-77 season, is directed by Linda Giss, who joined LTC as the theater manager last fall and essays her first local directorial chore with this one.

The theme of the play contained in the title is that each one of us has a personal "dark at the top of the stairs" in our life. Inge, who died a few years back, was known, in particular, for his widely-appreciated play and film, "Picnic," among others.

Though the play is LTC's final of the season (it plays through Tuesday, with a Sunday matinee), it is by no means the end of the Lubbock theatrical season. Not by a long shot. For on May 27, in the new Civic Center Theater, we will welcome back veteran Bob Hope and his variety show. Hope is a prime favorite around these parts (and where not?) and his show is certain to be a heavy-drawing entry.

Right behind him will come the first Lubbock Symphony Orchestra's Summer Pops Concert, also set for the new Civic Center, at which the genial and talented man they call "Mr. Piano," Roger Williams, will be star guest. This concert will be unique for it will have cabaret seating (tables, etc.) as well as a general audience seating. It, too, is certain to be a winner and you should contact the Lubbock Symphony Business Office, 1721 Broadway, telephone: 762-4707, right off the bat to secure your reservations.

There used to be a time when summertime was arid land as far as live entertainment was counted in Lubbock. But those days are no more. And the Lubbock Symphony's Pops Nite Summer Concert will trigger off a veritable burst of activity all around.

Musicals are on tap. During the "dog days" you'll have a chance to see live presentations of "Sweet Charity" which, of all things, will be on tap at the Hayloft; a locally-produced version of "West Side Story" at the Civic Center; and the Tech Music Theater doing another Gilbert and Sullivan operetta (which John Gillas handles so well).

So, you see, we keep at it right through the summertime these days. And don't forget that the Tech Speech Department presents its three-play series during summer, too—which will include Neil Simon's comedy, "The Good Doctor," inspired by Chekov, which has never been done here before.

All the further information and the dates, etc., will be touched on in the column as the information becomes available to me.

Now, let's look at some film news. There are moments when one's credulity can be strained with releases from the motion picture factories. We have always had a plethora of re-makes of famous films (that means if they were successful then, it reasons that they will be again). And, in many instances, they come a cropper!

So, now we get startling news at MGM has eyed its famous old film, an award-winner, about the down and out prize fighter and his endearing relationship with a tad of a boy, "The Champ" and decided to go the re-make route. This is the film that starred the late Wallace Beery in probably one of his best roles (aside from the Marie Dressler co-starring films), along with the appealing little Jackie Cooper, now a grown-up active television mogul.

The "Champ" film has been turned over to Franco Zeffereilli, the Italian director-producer, whose previous highs have numbered the delicate, superb "Romeo and Juliet" and "Brother Sun, Sister Moon." Of all the films that are so American in taste and sensitivity it would seem "The Champ" is the least likely Zeffereilli vehicle. Still, who knows—he might just bring it off!

Two films in town that are of more than average interest, one I've seen, the other on my docket this weekend. The latter is "The Last Tycoon" at Showplace 4, based on the unfinished novel of Hollywood in the 1930s by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Among the cast are Robert De Niro, Robert Mitchum and Jack Nicholson and it's been pretty well received, which is more than can be said of such other abortive screen adaptations and treatments such as the awful "The Great Gatsby," form the Fitzgerald pen.

The other film, which I enjoyed very much, is "Islands in the Stream," adapted from an unpublished draft by the late Ernest Hemingway, now at the Fox 4. It is an absorbing, beautifully-photographed and compelling picture, starring George C. Scott, Claire Bloom, David Hemmings and Gilbert Roland (yes, THE Gilbert Roland veteran film actor). Plus, a superb supporting cast that counts three boys, Hart Bochner, Michael-James Wixted and Brad Savage, Susan Tyrrell, Richard Evans and Julius Harris. The unobtrusive score is fitting by Jerry Goldsmith and the direction is canny, wise and sympathetic by Franklin J. Schaffner.

The setting is the just-pre-war Bermudas of the 1940 period (actually filmed so beautifully in Hawaii) and the plot concerns a man's search for his meanings and his life through his association one summer with his three boys from two previous marriages, his troublesome not-dead love for his first wife (Bloom makes a telling brief appearance in this role) and the value of human commitments.

If you appreciate drama of thoughtful content, enacted with authority, against settings of beauty and majesty, then see "Islands in the Stream." I think you'll like it.

NICKELL'S WORTH

by Pat Nickell

One of the more important developments in American culture in recent years has surely been the advent of the salad bar, which no self-respecting restaurant would now be without.

There are, however, salad bars and salad bars. I suppose that it is entirely logical that the salad bars who offer a tempting array of goodies, also offer a five-inch saucer to place them upon. Whereas, the salad bars who offer only lettuce, and perhaps croutons, place for the salads a 15-inch platter.

To see if this phenomenon held true everywhere I have conducted a careful and thorough study of salad bars across the state — in two or three different cities, at least.

The best salad bar I have ever had the good fortune to slide up to is in the Villa Capri Restaurant in Austin. Needless to say, the saucers are doll-size.

In addition to lettuce and croutons, one may dip into cottage cheese, grated or shredded real cheese, potato salad, mushrooms (occasionally), fresh fruit (usually), canned fruit, cucumbers, onions, beets, carrots, bean salads, tomatoes, cauliflower, two varieties of sunflower seeds, bacon bits, hand-ground pepper, and six kinds of salad dressing, in addition to two kinds of soup. Those people know how to put together a salad bar.

However, in order to take advantage of this feast, one must be an engineer without peer. Or at least, skilled in the placing of 20 inches of food in five inches of space. Practice does help, and the last time I loaded my saucer at the Villa Capri, I overheard a remark which made me blush with pride, "If she were to trip and fall, there'd be produce scattered clear to Round Rock."

An odd similarity I have noted about salad bars in general is that they do not cut the lettuce into edible pieces, nor do they chop the tomatoes. Obviously this theory is if a person can get it into his mouth, then it is unattractively prepared.

I have struggled along with salads for years, eating only pieces of lettuce I could gracefully place in my mouth (with minimal overhang). The rest of the time, I stir the salad, trying to locate those two edible pieces.

Since I began my study of salad bars, I have noted that a great many diners simply hold the salad down with their fork, and slice back and forth across it a few times with their knife, held in the other hand. This activity rends the lettuce into more manageable shreds.

This practice also requires practice, I discovered. Unless one is using a 15-inch platter. When I tried it, I had a perfect ring of salad on the table and very little remained on my plate.

It is considered a mark of elegance in many restaurants to chill both the salad plates and the salad forks. I particularly dislike this practice since I hate to begin a meal with half-frozen hands.

Of course, I could wear gloves to protect them. But it takes a careful and delicate hand to build my salads; a manual dexterity not readily available to the hand which is sheathed in a glove.

The best part of the salad bar is that a diner can spread out his salad dressing, instead of getting it all in a big puddle on top, as is always the case with a chef salad. The problem here is that there is too much on top, and not enough underneath.

Of course, we could just eat soup, instead of salad. That would certainly remove us from the horns of this tragic dilemma.

City Garden Clubs Cop Honors

Four City Garden Clubs won awards at the recent Texas Garden Clubs, Inc. convention in Houston.

The Belle Glade Garden club won second place in club history, the honor roll horticulture certificate and a world gardening citation, while the Lubbock Garden Club won an honor roll club rating and a horticulture citation and was cited for its sponsorship of a $500 Texas Tech scholarship.

The Petal Pushers Garden Club won first place in garden therapy for its role in the Green Thumb Junior Garden Club for handicapped children at Ballenger School in Lubbock.

Lubbock Press Officers Elected

Steve Monk, newsroom director for student publications at Texas Tech, was elected president of the Greater Lubbock Press Club at a meeting Tuesday.

Other officers elected are Vaughn Hendrie, first vice president; Barbara Scales, second vice president; Jeff South, secretary; and James Littleton, treasurer.

Serving a second term on the board of directors are Skip Watson, Tom Allen and James Littleton. Jim Watkins will also serve on the board.

A government, administered for the good of all citizens, should recognize no privileged class.

All's Not Fair When Playing the Advertising Game

By WANDA WALSER
Last

Contrary to popular public belief, advertising is not really allowed to run rampant through the latent desires and fattened pocketbooks of an unsuspecting populace. There are now, and have been for some years, laws and regulations governing what advertising can say and how, where it can be placed, and for how long and what it can look like.

These regulations are many and sometimes complicated, so there is not space here to dissect them in depth; however, a general picture can be drawn.

One of the first known cases of advertising regulations was during the time of Charles II of England. It seems signs on shops in narrow London streets were taking up more room than his majesty deemed desirable.

He ordered some of them removed and certain restrictions placed on merchants so the sky could be seen and the air felt. In recent months, Lubbock has experienced its own similar controversy.

At any rate, no reputable advertiser or advertising professional deliberately plans to entrap the public, so advertising regulation actually begins with the advertiser himself and the professional working with him.

One way the media helps to protect the consumer, the advertiser and those within the industry, is through a process known as "recognition". As a general rule, the media do not accord the traditional "15 per cent" to any but recognized agencies.

Each radio and television station or newspaper might have its own criteria for recognition and each agency seeking such must comply with these standards.

On a broad scale, they include a certain amount of money in a bank or established bank credit to insure payment of media bills; a certain number of active accounts for the agency; a certain length of time of establishment within a city or area.

Self-regulation is also practiced within groups such as Lubbock's own Lubbock Advertising Federation. This group seeks to better local advertising and its standards and works closely with Texas Tech University's school of Mass Communications in this effort.

The next area of regulation is within several independent agencies like the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) and the Better Business Bureau (BBB).

Radio and television stations belonging to the former, subscribe to a code of ethics which prohibits airing of misleading commercials and harmful or intimately personal products.

The BBB publishes a Code of Advertising manual which contains information on superlative claims, bait advertising and selling, guarantees, comparisons, sales and other facets of advertising.

Most reputable agencies and professionals are BBB members and subscribe to its principals and codes.

The third area is, of course, federal regulation, the most famous of which is probably the Truth in Advertising Act of 1971.

It is the purpose of this act to ensure that no advertisement can be disseminated if substantiating documentation is not available to the public" and "to ensure that individuals will be able to exercise their right to know and to protect themselves from unsubstantiated claims and to act directly to promote fairness in advertising."

In accordance with this legislation, a professional will discourage his clients from, for instance, promoting products as "the best in town". "Best" must be backed up by proof positive. How can this be done since what is best to one person is merely mediocre to another?

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) regulate advertising in the interest of the consumer and the use of the air waves.

The FTC promotes regulation in the areas of product service and quality. The FCC regulates use of air time, since air waves are considered public domain.

Advertisers must pay for the use of air time. They must buy according to time limit, in general cases, ten to 60 second spots, depending on the medium selected.

Radio and television stations are required to log in commercials and to see that they do not run over the purchased time. That is why the professional advises clients not to try to put too much copy into, for example, a 30 second spot.

Many people think a second or two over won't matter. The FCC thinks it does, and because they issue licenses, the radio and television stations must operate within the law.

Consumers who disagree with advertising claims made by particular individuals have the right to contact the advertiser, his agent, the Better Business Bureau, any one of the above agencies, or the media.

Each of us, whether in the advertising profession or another are affected by advertising every day, whether or not we realize it. And most of us, at one time or another, also have occasion to advertise in some way. Thus, it becomes the responsibility of each of us to practice good taste and fairness in whatever we bring before the public.

Tryouts Set For Musical

By JACK SHERIDAN

Ric Brame, who has been the artistic director of Lubbock Civic Ballet for the past season, has announced that the famous award-winning musical, "West Side Story" will be presented as a dinner theater presentation July 15-16 in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

Tryouts for this brilliant entertainment will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at the Civic Center. They are open to all interested persons and Brame urges a large turnout. The musical has a large cast and there is a chance for actors, actresses, singers and dancers.

The musical will be sponsored by Civic Lubbock, Inc., the city entertainment unit.

Further details will be announced at a later date.

Brame, who will conclude his tenure with Lubbock Civic Ballet this summer, has settled down in Lubbock (he came from Florida a year ago) and intends to be a definite part of the Lubbock entertainment scene. His work with Civic Ballet is widely-recognized and he was both director and participating dancer in the theater and dance program which was a featured entertainment during the Civic Center's opening festivities this spring.

The first and only test of one's religion is the kind of life he leads.
