At this time, Mr. Unit Conservationist, mapped out Mr. and Mrs. Wilson for their in Lavelle Meckel, will present a rangeland.

Mr. Wilson is assisted by his ple. son-in-law, Walter C. Pope, in the operation of this ranch. Their range is lightly stocked at present. He feels more improvement is needed and when a good rainy year does come, he wants some grass there to hold the moisture. He questions the value of brush control and deeply feels the loss of an estimated 75 per cent of his oak trees to drought. He feels his trees and even prickly pear is needed to hold his scanty rainfall; at least until his grass alone can

Bill Rountree and Max Schrader of the Soil Conservation Service conducted the ranchers on the tour of the ranch. The rainfall records of the ranch were discussed and a short demonstration on the value of pitting was held. It was shown that pitted land would store up to four times the moisture that bare land could absorb.

Schrader explained that grazing grass too short causes the roots to cease growth for periods of a month or better. Repeated overgrazing of these plants eventually cause them to die. Especially is this so if this is followed by a short drought. Grazing approximately 50% of the top growth makes the most productive grazing practice. The remainder of the plant provides the necessary soil cover for protection and holding the Louis Lehne of Menard won a jack-knife for guessing the amount of forage produced per acre on two plots of grass. These plots had ! been clipped, leaving a minimum on the soil for cover.

In making the trip over the ranch, the visitors could see what years of overstocking had done to the rangeland and also what a few years of good management

III KI IN ELSIN

One year ago this week I bought out and took charge of the Phillips 66 Station in Eldorado.

I wish at this time to thank everyone in Schleicher County for the patronage which has made my first year a success, and hope that I may merit a continuation of your trade.

I expect to continue to serve you with Phillips products, wholesale and retail-and I have on hand accessories, tires, anti-freeze and other automobile needs for the proper servicing of your car.

Again I thank you and assure you that your continued patronage will be appreciated.
